Let us here take notice that no intermediate consideration comes between the earthly house and house from heaven. The vacuum is passed over from the one to the other as all uncounted nonentities must be. Mortality swallows up life in the night of non-existence, till the house which is from heaven arrives to receive restored existence; that mortality may be swallowed up of life. Mortality destroys life, life destroys mortality.

Peter like Paul, calls the present state of things "this tabernacle;" and anticipates shortly putting it "off" by dying out of it. "This tabernacle" and "this my tabernacle" of Peter, and "our earthly house of this tabernacle," of Paul; express alike the general personal relations of all Christians to present temporal things.

What is the thought of Peter which stands in close and unseparable relation to the putting off of this tabernacle? It is, "an abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ."

Where, and by what opportunity? By "the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." See these three things all put into close relation; 2 Pet. i. 11, 13, 16. Paul leaves a blank between the earthly house, and the house which is from heaven. And Peter leaves all vacant and waiting, between putting off this tabernacle, and an entrance into the everlasting kingdom at the coming of Jesus Christ in power.

Paul anticipates this earthly tent being dissolved, as of the things temporal, and a building of God, without hands, taking its place. Peter uses the same word, viz: "Seeing that all these things shall be dissolved, etc." 2 Pet. iii. 11, and expects the new heaven and new earth, as John foresaw, Rev. xxi., wherein will dwell righteousness, 2 Pet. iii. 13. With some degree of confidence, most respectfully submitted.

ASA W. BUTTON.

Behold a Sower Went Forth to Sow.

Left home with my wife on the first of this inst. Commenced meeting on Saturday night, the second, in Pleasant Valley, Md., which continued with an increased interest until Monday night. We showed that the gospel or word of the kingdom, was, and is, God's plan for salvation; moreover, brethren, I declare unto you the gospel which I preached unto you, by which also ye are saved, etc. We hope that some seed fell into good ground and may bring forth to the glory of God.

Preached the word two nights at what is best known as Fogney's Church near Mount Pleasant, Md., to quite respectable congregations. Here met with brother Mackey. Had two Dunker preachers to hear.

We endeavored to show first to first preach Christ according to the popular manner, was not preaching the word that Jesus and the apostles preached, and that faith in such preaching was, nor is not, the faith once delivered to the saints, and within it which it is impossible to please God, one of the Dunker preachers said in my presence, to one of his brethren: that he makes it very plain, and if it is the truth, we can't not fight against it; rest with the eye built on the second sunday at Bunker Hill's, where I preached the word again, and it was like apples of gold upon pictures of silver, to meet with the few names as it were in Sardis, in that part of the habitable globe, who have not defiled their garments, and to find them earnestly in the faith once delivered to the saints. On Monday set out, with hearts full of gratitude to God for his good, ess and the kindness bestowed on us and the love manifested by our very worthy Brother Berklite and family, and his very dear old mother, who we have learned to love,) for Frederick City; stopped at 4:30 o'clock at Catoctin Furnaces, where I have often been invited to preach, but on expressing my thoughts that it was too late for an appointment, a no, was the reply: we can get you a full house, which was done. We spoke on the state of man in death. I told the people there that we were called no epithets, but that I would prove beyond a doubt, right to the contrary; that when any one was looked upon as a clever man it was a very common expression that he was a whole soul fellow, and if there were any whole soul fellows in the world, I was one; that we believed the whole man was a soul, which we proved I believe, to the satisfaction of the congregation. I shewed that [redacted] the immortality of no souls, for there was no such soul spoken of in the Bible, but we could and would give ocular demonstration of the soul that we believe in, by the true sayings of God; which we did, and at the close of the meeting several came up and gave us their hands, and the word was, we have often heard of you and wished much to hear you, and now don't let it be long until you come to see us again.

Tuesday evening we arrived in Frederick City, where we had the pleasure of the society of Brother and Sister Beck and family two nights and a day and truly it was as a cluster of pleasant grapes to the weary pilgrim. for here were two precious souls, like the man at the pool of Bethesda, who, when the little pool was troubled, (by an angel, or the angelic message the gospel of the kingdom, by which they have, like Timothy, who knew the holy Scriptures from a child, been made wise unto salvation,) had no one to put them in, so by the request of the dear ones, in imitation of an apostolic example, we took two of Brother Beck's daughters, the same hour of the night, accompanied by Brother and Sister Beck, and upon their hearty confession of faith in the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ, and baptised them in the all-saving name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins.

We then returned to the house, and continued to talk and sing about the glowing promises made of God to the fathers, until near midnight ready to depart on the morrow, accordingly we took our leave for home, (although our very souls seemed to be like David and Jonathan's of old; knit together in love, for the truth as it is in Jesus,) in the fond hope of meeting again soon and have another refreshing from the presence of the Lord.

N. J. MORGAN.

Winchester, Va.

O, what a blessed example here,
For parents in the Lord;
To teach their children while they may,
To know the Holy Word:

That they, like Timothy of old,
Unto salvation wise,
May join the race with courage bold,
And win the heaven of [illegible]

[illegible] J. Mo[illegible]

NEWS ITEMS.

SHIPWRECKS.

LONDON, Oct. 30.—In the terrific storm of Thursday and yesterday, fifty vessels were wrecked between Spurn Point and Furnace. Twelve vessels are stranded near Withernsea. A vessel under bare pole drove through the new pier at Withernsea and carried away fifty yards of the structure. At Hornsea a brig crashed with the new pier and damaged it to the extent of £2,000. There has been a large number of shipwrecks, attended with great loss of life, on various parts of the coast.

VESUVIUS IN ACTION.

NAPLES, Oct. 30.—Mount Vesuvius continues in active eruption and streams of lava are flowing down the western side.

PARIS, Oct. 31.—There were seven hours' continuous rain yesterday in the city of Reggio di Calabria, Italy. Seventeen persons were killed in two neighboring villages by the collapse of houses.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Oct. 29.—One hundred vessels of different sizes were destroyed by the late storm.

PARIS, Oct. 29.—A dispatch from Ragusa says the Inhabitants of Dulcigno have declared their determination to resist even the Turkish regulars, and have occupied St. George's Bridge over the Bojana river, in order to oppose the advance of the regulars.

THE MISUNDERSTANDING WITH ENGLAND.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Oct. 30.—The Sultan stated in a recent conversation that he thought the misunderstanding between the Porte and England was purely transitory, and hoped friendly relations would soon be restored.

DULCIGNO.

LONDON, Oct. 30.—A dispatch from Castel Nuovo says Essad Montenegrins are preparing to collect at a camp near Antivari by Sunday night, and an attack on Dulcigno is again considered possible.

A dispatch from Rome states that the Porte has begun to build 400 houses near Scutari for the inhabitants of Dulcigno who may prefer to leave that place after its cession is accomplished.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Oct. 30.—Dervish Pasha has been authorized by the Porte to arrest the Albanian chiefs opposed to the transfer of Dulcigno, and to remove from the district those who refuse to become Montenegrin subjects.

A careful recapitulation of the ravages of the great storm of October 18th on the lakes, when the Alpena was lost, shows that upwards of $500,000 damage was done to vessels and cargoes, and that ninety-three persons perished. There were seventeen total wrecks, involving a loss of $152,900, and in all sixty-six vessels were damaged to a greater or less extent.

TEHERAN, Oct. 31.—It is officially announced that the garrison of Urumiah has been relieved by 3,000 Persian troops. The Kurds retreated southward. Only seven villages in Selmos district escaped devastation. Four hundred Kurds pillaged the country to within twenty miles of Tabriz.

[The Christian.]

The Tearless World.

When the godly Haldane stood by the dying bed of his beloved wife, as he closed her eyes in death's slumber a single tear gushed out from her eyelid, and ran down upon her pallid face. He tenderly wiped it away, saying, "It is the last one, for God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes."

We live in a world of tears. Around us hearts are breaking and hopes are blighting, homes are made desolate, and souls are filled with unutterable grief. About us there are temptations, trials, conflicts, "breathings of deaths and hells; trials severe, and joys sublime."

But beyond the tossing turmoil of this mortal life, there comes a day of peace. The darkness which shades us here shall be past, and the light for which we have longed and waited shall break upon us. Our eyes shall gaze upon the King in his beauty; and he who came down from heaven to share our sorrows, shall lift us up to share in his everlasting joy.

As truly as Jesus wept with a lost and dying race, so surely God shall wipe away tears from all faces, and bring us into that land of pure delight over which shall fall no shadow, and in which shall be known no tears. Blessed are they who mourn now, for they shall rejoice then. Blessed are they who walk the path of affliction here, with eyes fixed upon that heavenly home. Courage, ye mourning ones, ye tread the path marked out by him who was made perfect through sufferings; ye follow in the steps of those whose tears have been their meat day and night; but as ye have shared their sorrows ye shall finally taste their joys.

[illegible]

POETRY.

Walking By Faith.

E. ELLIOT.

We cannot see, when in the bush of some dark sorrow,
How shadows of the night,
With the glad coming of the happier morrow,
Grow radiant into light.

We do not know how unseen hands are guiding
In dangerous paths our feet,
Nor how the shadow of the rock is hiding
Us from the noontide heat.

We do not know of snares and pitfalls lying
Where our short sight would lead,
Nor how the land is all unsafe-lying
On which our souls would feed.

But up alone, where threads of life are woven,
Without direct- ourlotry
And God's own hand will guide us to the haven,
By ways which we know not.

SELECTIONS.

For the Faith.

Israel's Restoration.

And Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled.—Luke xxi. 24.

Before the ascension of Christ from the Mount of Olives, when questioned about the time of the re-establishment of the kingdom of Israel, the answer given was, that the times and the seasons are reserved in the secrets of God.

Take for instance, the times and the seasons of great events through which the world and mankind, as well as the church have passed:

1. The time of the flood, which happened at the end of 120 years, the finishing of the ark.

2. The 430 years of Israel's bondage in Egypt, and its deliverance in the very night ending the predicted era.

3. The sojourning in the wilderness for 40 years, before the inheritance could be obtained.

4. The settlement of the twelve tribes, and the subsequent captivity for 70 years in Babylon.

5. The subsequent return to Jerusalem, and the 69 weeks of Daniel's prophecy, with reference to the death of Messiah.

6. The siege of Jerusalem by the Romans, the destruction of the city and temple, the final dispersion of the Jews, to continue until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled.

Again, Daniel's prophecy with reference to the temporal power of the Popes, and its destruction, which took place in 1866, precisely 1260 years from the edict of Phocas, 606.

And, lastly, Daniel's seven times seven, or the 2520 years for the removal of the throne of David to Babylon, and the duration of the great image rulers, from whatever period we commence to reckon, is to be the Gentile supremacy, termed by our Lord Jesus Christ, the times of the Gentiles; and must cease with the restoration of the tents of Judah, first; the glorious appearing of Jesus with his saints; the rising of Jerusalem and the close of the gospel dispensation. And now the Lord shall set his hand "again," the second time, to recover the remnant of his people which shall be left, and he shall set up an ensign for the nations and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth, Isaiah xi. 11-12, and they shall be one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel. Ezekiel xxxvii. 22.

The Jews have, unquestionably, a fee-simple title to Palestine against the world, hence it is called in the Bible, emphatically, "Their Land." They inherit it from the father of the faithful, and he received it directly from the Creator and Proprietor of the universe. The deed of gift is recorded with the pen of inspiration in the seventeenth chapter of the book of Genesis, in these remarkable words: "I am the Almighty God; walk before me and be thou perfect. Thy name shall be Abraham, for a father of many nations have I made thee. And I will give unto thee, and to thy seed after thee, the land wherein thou art a stranger, "All the land of Canaan for an everlasting possession." This promise of the unchangeable Jehovah is constantly styled an everlasting covenant; the word which he commanded to a thousand generations, which covenant in the language of the 105th Psalm, he made with Abraham, and his oath unto Isaac, and confirmed the same unto Jacob for a law, and to Israel as an everlasting covenant, saying: "Unto thee will I give the land of Canaan, the lot of your inheritance."

We are well aware that many good men are opposed to all expositions of the sacred writings which indicate the literal return of the Jews to Canaan. They suppose that the passages relating to Jerusalem, returning to Zion, the salvation of Israel, dwelling in the land, etc., are to be understood spiritually, and that they teach the conversion of the Jews in their dispersed state; and their union with gospel churches among the Gentiles, and that all the promise of restoration to the land of their fathers and to the favor of the God of Abraham, will be fully accomplished when the Jews shall be made willing to renounce Judaism, and embrace Christianity. But such explanations are entirely inconsistent with the uniform conduct of Jehovah towards them. God promised Abraham a son when he was about a hundred years old, he promised to put his descendants in possession of the land of Canaan when he was a solitary stranger there; God brought Israel back after seventy years captivity, he promised that Messiah should be born of a virgin; and all these and many other promises were literally fulfilled, and why should not their return to Judea, described in language equally precise and strong be also literally fulfilled?

Look at their miraculous preservation, scattered among all nations, the Jews remained a distinct people, the wonder of the world, the observed of all observers. They stand alone like a rock in the ocean unmixed with the surrounding waters, reserved by Divine Providence, to display the glory of Israel's God in the restoration of his favored nation.

As to the extent of the territory, we appeal to Deut. xi. 24. From the wilderness and Lebanon, from the river Euphrates even unto the uttermost sea, shall your coast be. Now since Israel never possessed the half of the boundaries, even in the palmiest days of David and Solomon, the promise is yet to be fulfilled in all its glorious amplitude. Not one jot or tittle of all that is recorded upon the page of inspiration, touching his people, shall fail, for the mouth of God hath spoken it. And by comparing Deut. xl. 24; Dan. xii. 1; Rom. xi. 25-27; Jeremiah li. 5; Rev. xviii. 4; Rev. xvi. 12, with the parallel passages, it will appear, that as the Sixth Vial has been pouring out upon the Turkish Empire since 1822, its end is near at hand, to give up the sick man to die and be buried; and we confidently hope that Michael, the great Prince, shall soon stand for the children of Israel, Daniel's people, and the Jews shall be delivered.

The way of the kings of the East shall be opened: India and Burmah and Siam and China and Africa shall come to the brightness of Jerusalem's rising. Mohammedanism and Popery are to be rooted up out of the earth, and the Jews shall rise to the full extent of Messiah's exaltation and national glory.

Correct views of great importance to the mind from false views and fanaticism, and from building theories upon single texts of Scripture, to the exclusion of the great system of prophecy, and the general analogy of faith.

One of the great errors, so common in these latter days, chargeable to the ministry and the heads of the foreign mission work, is this: from Romans xi. 25, they infer that Israel is to be saved only when the fulness of the Gentiles is come in, and that all the Gentiles are to be converted before the Jews can be saved: now James in Acts xv. 13-18, informs us to the contrary, when he declares: that only an election of Gentiles is to be saved during the gospel dispensation, while Paul, in Romans ii., declares that the fulness spoken of by him means nothing more or less than the Pleroma, i. e., Gentile election; not only so, but in his argument with reference to the Jews, he says the same thing, that only an election of them will be saved during the gospel dispensation, and not before the personal pre-millennial coming of Christ will the Jews be saved as a nation, Rom. xi. 25-27, which is corroborated by Isaiah lix. 20-21, and with the rising of Jerusalem. Isaiah lx.

In concluding this article, we wish to say that the allegorical interpreters are palpably inconsistent with themselves. With regard to all the prophecies concerning Israel, already fulfilled or now fulfilling, these brethren, are just as great literalists as their neighbors. They cannot produce, so far as we know, they do not even make the attempt, to point us to a single announcement respecting the Jews, that to this hour has received any other than a literal accomplishment. Of all that the Holy Spirit moved holy men of God to speak under his strong inspiration, everything down to the present date is acknowledged to have meant precisely what it did say.

The gospel is only to be a witness to the nations, and the Jews are to continue to be dispersed during this gospel witness, and Jerusalem to be trodden down of the Gentiles, the precise termination of this state of things we do not pretend to know, yet we believe chronological prophecy founded in Daniel leads us firmly to anticipate it to be very near at hand.—S. Bonhamme.

[Christian Herald.]

Growing Revolutionary Lawlessness a Prophetic Sign.

The assassination of Lord Mountmorres, on the night of September 25th, at Rusheen, Ireland, because of some fancied grievance against him as a landlord, is one out of many evidences of an increase of a lawless spirit among the masses in Ireland—the same spirit which stalks abroad in Russia in Nihilism, in Germany in Socialism, and in France in Communism.

Prophetic expositors have repeatedly shown that Daniel's "Time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation, even to that same time" (xii. 1), may be expected about the present period, and that it will be a repetition of the terrors of the French Revolution of 1793, on a larger scale. It is instructive to bear in mind how France, in 1789, gradually drifted from a state of peace and prosperity into a condition of anarchy, after beheading its king and queen.

The great French Revolution, as recorded in Alison's Europe, shows what men will do after that, by general consent, the barriers of religion and law are thrown down. The briefest allusion to them will serve to show into what depths of abominable wickedness human nature can sink under the influence of infuriate passions quite uncontrolled.

"Fifty thousand revolutionary committees were in operation, from Calais to Bayonne. Five hundred thousand persons, drawn from the dregs of society, disposed, in these committees, of the lives and liberties of every man in France." Alison, vol. iii. p. 8. "Pache, Hebert, and Chaumette, the leaders of the municipality, publicly expressed their determination to "dethrone the King of heaven, as well as the monarchs of the earth." To accomplish this design, they prevailed on Gobel, the apostate constitutional Bishop of Paris, to appear at the bar of the Convention, accompanied by some of the clergy of his diocese, and there abjure the Christian faith.... The churches were stripped of all their ornaments. .... Their plate and valuable contents were sent to the mint to be melted down."

"During several weeks, daily abjurations by the constitutional clergy took place at the bar of the Convention." It was openly declared that "God did not exist, and that the worship of Reason was to be instituted in his stead." The services of religion were universally abandoned. The pulpits were deserted throughout all the revolutionized districts; baptisms ceased; the burial service was no longer heard; the sick received no communion, the dying no consolation.

A heavier anathema than that of Papal Power pressed upon the peopled realm of France—the anathema of heaven, inflicted by the madness of her own inhabitants. The village bells were silent. Sunday was obliterated. In lieu of the services of the church, the licentious fetes of the new system were performed by the most abandoned females; it appeared as if the Christian worship had been succeeded by the orgies of the Babylonian priests, or the grossness of the Hindoo theocracy.

On every tenth day a revolutionary leader ascended the pulpit and preached atheism to the bewildered audience. Marat was universally deified, and even the instrument of death was called the holy guillotine. On all the public cemeteries was placed the inscription: "Death is an eternal sleep." God was openly challenged and defied in one of the churches in Paris.

The foregoing is a picture of what will be the state of things all through the world in a few years' time, when the Seventh Vial brings "the political earthquake, so mighty and so great as was not since men were upon the earth." Rev. xvi. We are living now just at the close of the Sixth Vial, which dries up the mystic Euphrates or Turkish Empire. It is well, therefore, for us to know that things will grow worse and not better during the next few years, until the second advent of Christ takes place, and then, the millennium will dawn on the earth.—Rev. M. Baxter.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A Brief Review of a Pamphlet, Entitled, "The Bible Sabbath Defended," by A. P. Dugger.

Bro. Dugger has given a very able defence of the Sabbath question from his standpoint and with a Christian courtesy truly commendable. If the question was simply, whether the seventh, or the first day of the week was to be kept as it was first instituted, and only to commemorate the creation of the world, then his arguments are conclusive, and to the point. I freely admit, that many of the advocates of the first day, as a Sabbath, and having the same binding force, and incurring the same penalties for the breach of the same, make a signal failure, and they render themselves still more ridiculous, when they attempt to hide under the flimsy subterfuge that the day has been changed, I. e., what we now call the first day of the week, was formerly the seventh—that the time cannot be determined at this late day, and that it is immaterial what day is to be kept, and so on to the end of the chapter of absurdities.

The Sabbath day was instituted for specific objects, viz., to commemorate the creation, but more particularly the deliverance of the children of Israel from Egyptian bondage; this was oft repeated, and they were commanded not to oppress the poor and the stranger, for they were once strangers in the land of Egypt, and a signal victory over their oppressors was achieved by Jehovah for their deliverance. Were the Gentiles ever in such bondage, and thus signally delivered? If not, then they could not celebrate it with the same object, as the children of Israel did.

I think that an undue prominence is often given by our Sabbatarian friends, to the ten commandments over the other laws, by ignoring it entirely as a covenant. There is a twofold design inhering in the ten commandments, which will readily appear by consulting Deut. iv. 13. "And he declared unto you his covenant, which he commanded you to perform even ten commandments, and he wrote them upon two tables of stone."

An effort is made by Bro. D. to show that the ten commandments are not a covenant in the sense of an agreement, for (says he) there is no contract in the ten commandments themselves, but the terms of agreement. (Page 34). But when the people said, "all that the Lord hath said we will do," makes a covenant to all intents and purposes; all of his great distinction is, I think, without a dif, ference. Our brother frequently uses the term, "moral law," as exclusively applicable to the decalogue. I cannot suppose that he uses the term to disparage the other laws, to call them immoral, but that they are arbitrary, but even in that sense, the fourth commandment is entirely arbitrary, for the "Gentiles which have not the law, are a law unto themselves," and do the things contained in the law, guided by their conscience. Without an express law, or instruction, would any one recognize any peculiar phenomena, or mark on the seventh day, by which he could recognize it as a Sabbath, and a purpose for which it was instituted? Circumcision was no more arbitrary than the Sabbath law, and both were instituted for a specific purpose.

Our Sabbatarian friends accuse us of twisting and turning every way to get the fourth commandment expunged from the decalogue. But we would tell our friends, that all of God's laws are equally binding upon his people; to set any of them aside is to set at naught the law given. I know of no warrant from the Bible to give any greater prominence to the decalogue than to the book of the law; the tables of the law, the law of God, the law of Moses, are used interchangeably. All were emanations from Jehovah, and sanctioned by him. Our friends contend very strongly for the perpetuity of the ten commandments, from the facts that they were written, or engraven on tables of stone. But where is any such authority? not from the Bible, surely; then it must be sheer speculation, nothing more. It is worse than speculation, however, from the fact that it is ignoring or what is worse still, denying the testimony that the ten commandments—the covenant is to be superceded by one that is more glorious. For proof, see 2 Cor. iii. Space forbids an elaborate exposition of this chapter, nor is it necessary, from the fact that it speaks for itself, if words are the signs of ideas.

This covenant, or decalogue, was national, and at most, secured only temporal blessings; for instance, the commandment to honor thy father and thy mother, secured long life in the land of their sojourn. This was indeed glorious. But the apostle says, in the chapter cited, that the glory which shown so conspicuous in the Sinaitic covenant, had no glory, by reason of the glory that ex-celleth; agreeing in every feature with Jeremiah's prophecy. See Jer. xxxi. 31-37 compared with Heb. vii. 7-13.

The old covenant (the apostle argues) must give place to the new one, which is based on better promises. The old, sustaining the same relation to the new, as type and anti-type. I know that our friends tell us, allowing even our version of it to be true, it is incumbent on us to celebrate the seventh day as a Sabbath, until it meets its anti-type. If our good friends lay down this rule for us, then we say to them, (to be consistent) they ought to observe every seventh year—"the tenth day of the seventh month—the jubilee," etc., for they have not yet met their anti-type.

From the year 1853 to 1857 I kept the seventh day as a Sabbath, as I then supposed, according to the commandment. But in order to arrive at this conclusion, or to be converted to that belief, I had to ignore the fourth commandment as a type, or an integral part of the old covenant.

According to the premises which both the old parties, the seventh and first day, so far as regards the binding force, or the law is concerned, the former have a decided advantage, the arguments (if such they can be called) are, to use no stronger expression, flat and insipid. But as for myself I can find no Bible authority to discard, what Bro. D. is pleased to term the ceremonial law, and the moral law of the decalogue to be perpetuated. The moral law is not biblical, nor ceremonial law: the terms are inadmissible as well as Jewish, or Christian Sabbath. I think that Paul's testimony is conclusive, as regards the abrogation of the whole Israelitish code of laws including the decalogue, and to be superceded by one more glorious, and if so, Bro. D's version of the ministration of death, and of the spirit, is, I think, erroneous. See pages 92 and 95. And on page 91 he says that all religious societies are fully satisfied with nine of the precepts and dissatisfied with only the fourth. This may be true to some extent, but with many it is not so. The Law, without using any discrimination, was our schoolmaster to bring us to Christ, but we are not now under the schoolmaster. If the Sabbath law is in force now, the penalty annexed to it is or ought to be enforced so. Law and penalty are inseparable in all law, physical, mental, moral or statute law. The penalty annexed to any law is its true measurement; a law without a penalty is a misnomer.

M. I. LEWIS.

Lewisdale, Wis.

Translations From Martin Luther's Letters.

"When Christ shall cause the trumpet to peal at the last day, then all will spring forth and arise; as the flies who lie dead in winter, but towards summer, when the sun shines, start to life again; as the birds, who lie dead (dormant) all the winter in nests, or in clefts of the rocks and trees, or under the hollow banks of streams, as the cuckoo, the swallow, and others, and towards spring come to life again. I shall rise again, and once more be able to converse with you. This corrupt and feeble body cannot continue as it is. Therefore it is best that the potter should take the vessel, break it in pieces, make it mere clay again, and then make it altogether new. This finger, on which this ring is, I shall have again. All must be restored. For it is written, "God will create new heavens and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness." That will be no empty nor idle kingdom. There will be pure joy and rapture; for those heavens and that earth will be no dry, barren sand. When a man is happy, a green tree, a fair flower, or nosegay can make him glad; but when he is sad he can scarcely bear to look at the trees, or at anything beautiful. Heaven and earth shall be renewed, and we who believe shall be together, one company. If we were all one here on earth there would be great peace; but God makes it otherwise, and suffers this world to be so strangely entangled and confused that we may long and sigh for the future restoration, and be weary of this toilsome life. It is a great thing to believe that, then, the weak and burdensome body shall be so vigorous, and swift, and full of life and activity. We shall recognize one another and say, "Lo! verily, do we meet again thus? Who would have foreseen this wonderful, blessed transformation? On earth we were the most miserable, the least esteemed, and sorely tried; were called heretics, and those who turned the world upside down, were scorned and mocked, trampled under foot, hunted down, cast into dungeons, slain by torture, sword and fire. We bore the cross a little while, yea, but for a moment, compared with this great glory which is now revealed to us! and, now, behold, we live with Christ in unspeakable eternal joy, and praise him, the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Spirit with all the angels and saints. Then we shall keep eternal Holy Day, ever joyful, secure, and free from all suffering! ever satisfied in God. By these fires in the sky I judge the Last Day to be at the doors. The empire is falling, kings are falling, priests are falling, the whole world everywhere is falling even as a great house, when about to fall, is wont first to begin its ruin with little cracks."

E. N. HARDIS...

(To be Continued.)

The Jewish population of Jerusalem has increased fifty per cent. from 10,000 to 15,000 since 1873.

BREVITIES.

Bend Lake, in California, is peculiar in having no visible outlet, though a large stream runs into it. The Indians believe that it is bottomless and marks the spot where a wicked tribe once sank into the ground. No Indian can be induced to go near it.

A Greek evangile, written in silver ink on a purple parchment, and illustrated with a series of eighteen miniatures of scenes from the New Testament and forty portraits of prophets, has been discovered in Calabria. It has been attributed to the end of the fifteenth or the commencement of the sixteenth century, and is the oldest illustrated manuscript of the kind known.

The United States expedition engaged in making scientific investigations in regard to the Gulf Stream has recently discovered in the course of its work in the Western Carribean Sea an immense submarine valley 700 miles long and 80 miles broad. It extends from between the islands of Cuba and Jamaica to the Bay of Honduras, and its depth is stated to vary from two miles to three miles and a half.

The operation of volcanoes as safety-valves for earthquakes, was illustrated in the manifestations attending the recent eruption of the Fuego Volcano in Guatamala. The eruption was preceded by earthquake shocks of such violence that the inhabitants of several towns left their homes for some hours. The earthquake stopped, however, when the eruption began, and the people were able to witness the spectacle in tranquility.

[N. Y. Times.]

CHANGES IN JERUSALEM.

A wonderful change has taken place in Jerusalem of late years, and it is probably now a more comfortable residence than ever before in its history. Mr. Schick, who holds the appointment of Surveyor of Buildings in the holy city, has lately issued a very instructive report. He tells us that ruined houses have been restored or rebuilt by individuals or companies, and buildings on the Peabody plan have been erected by associations. The streets are now lighted, kept, for an Eastern city, most exceptionally clean, and the aqueduct from the Pools of Solomon has been restored, and water brought thence to the city. Tanneries and slaughter-houses have been removed outside of town. The Sanitary Department is under the control of a German physician. Bethlehem and Nazareth are eagerly emulating the progress of the capital. In the latter place windows are becoming quite frequent. It is asserted that there is a fixed resolution on the part of thousands in Prussia to make that country as hot as possible for Jews, and it is not unlikely that this may in a measure increase the already considerable number now returning to Palestine, more especially as the German Jews already are a power in Jerusalem. The improvements are further, likely to lead to many Europeans wintering there.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

I will state for the benefit of friends and brethren who may desire to attend, that I will be at Adaline, Ogle county, Ill., for the purpose of holding meetings from Nov. 30 to Dec. 7; and at Avon, six miles south of Rockford, Iowa, from Dec. 11 to 21, and at Indian Creek, near Nevada, Story county, Dec. 22 and 24. G. M. MYERS.

The quarterly assembly of the church of God will, if the Lord will, commence on Friday night before the second Sunday in November, 1880, at brother Daniel Wickline's in Frederick county, Md., to Mount Zion neighborhood. All of the precious faith, and the people in general, are invited to attend. All from a distance will be cared for during the meeting. N. J. MORGAN.

I will preach at brother Finly, residing near Frankford, Ind., may appoint, commencing Friday night before the second Sunday in Nov. And at Brother I. H. Close of Michigan, may appoint commencing Friday night before the third Sunday in Nov. In hope. J. M. STEPHENSON.

A NEW TRACT.

Christ's Kingdom!

Where is it? What is it?

Being a discourse delivered at Berwick, Pa., by Jos. Lister, of Mauch Chunk, Pa. This is a 32 page tract, neatly printed and should have a wide circulation. Send to this office for it. Price 10c.

Something New!

GOD ESTABLISHED,

—AND—

The Bible Vindicated!

—BY—

A. J. EYCHANER.

The above is the title of a new tract, just out, and should be placed in the hands of every infidel in the land. Those who live in infidel neighborhoods will do well to get this work, as it will aid you in combatting this enemy. 20 pages. Price 5c each; 15 for 50c, or 30 for $1. Send to this office for it.

SECOND EDITION.

THE GOSPEL OF THE KINGDOM

Advocated in a Series of

TEN DISCOURSES,

—BY—

WILEY JONES.

This edition is elegantly printed and bound by Lippincott & Co., size 7 by 9, good paper. 278 pages. Sent by mail at the following prices: Plain cloth binding $1.00; cloth gilt edge $1.25; leather marbled edge $1.50. You think this a valuable work, send the price to Publishing House, Elkhart, Ind., and I will forward it to you by return mail.

WILEY JONES,

Scottville, Va.

POETRY.

The Lord's Coming.

B. GRATTAN GUINNESS.

The world is growing gray and old,
And readers at the judgment hold,
And yet thou art not here.
Thy chariot-wheels, oh, when shall they appear?
We only know, as days roll evil year,
Thy coming draweth near!

Some in thine absence watch and weep,
Most of the would-be watchers sleep;
Few hearts there are that yearn,
Oh, Lord, for thee! few loving hearts that burn
And break for thy return!

The pale and clouded light of day
Still shows the wretched same array
Of glorious vanity!
The painted hues which hide deformity,
The hollow smile of secret misery,
The rival joys which men would have to be,
Oh, Lord, in lieu of thee.

Some hazy eyes are looking for a time
Of peace and righteousness in every clime;
Some ears are listening for a universal chime
Which shall precede thy coming—but the wait
Still flies to a gale,
And pity weeps, and purity turns pale,
While moans of suffering, songs of revelry,
Clangor of war, and shouts of idolatry,
Alone, with their delightsome melody,
Answer these heedless hopes in bitter mockery.

The darkness deepens; through the ten-fold gloom
Strain on earth's millions to the day of doom;
While ever and anon the fearful cry
Of human passion tells the struggle nigh,
The last uplifting of the ocean swell,
The last proud effort of triumphant hell,
The last defiant roar
Of all thy haters, who the light before
Of thine appearing, Lord! with horror sore
Shall, overwhelmed, sink to the no more!

It is the midnight hour; the careless lie
Wrapped in the slumbers of security.
Oh, blinding light!
Oh, rending sky!
Oh, form of swift ascending majesty!
Oh, shout of joy!
Oh, horrid cry!
Oh, thrilling shriek of wildest agony!
Oh, angel legions, dazzling white!
Oh, dead, arising at the sight!
Oh, voice above the loudest trumpet blown!
Oh, Christ, thy thunder tones!
Calling thy myriad saints from the grave.
We rise, we soar, we cleave
The clouds beneath thy feet,
And, mounting, greet
With rapture
And hallelujahs sweet,
Oh, Savior, thee!

From every voice, with one accord,
It is the Lord! It is the Lord!
And full in every raptured eye
His image shines resplendently!
Oh, long-believed-in, seen at length,
Outshining in thy sunlike strength,
Thy glory mingling with thy grace,
We see thee, Jesus, face to face!
With all the armies of the sky
We shout thy glad epiphany!
Thrice welcome, earth-rejected King!
From every lip thy praises ring!
Thrice welcome to thy rightful throne;
For thou art worthy, Lord alone!
For thou art he who once was slain,
And we are now to share thy reign;
For thou hast washed us in thy blood,
And made us kings and priests to God!
Oh, all ye angel-trumpets clear,
Uplift the joy from sphere to sphere!
Oh, saintly voices, sweet and strong,
Roll through eternity along
The thunder of redemption-song!

COMMUNICATIONS.

The Lord's Day.

J. M. STEPHENSON.

In looking over THE RESTITUTION, issued Oct. 6th, the above language attracted my attention. Without any desire of intrenching on the forthcoming articles of Brother Chaplin on the Sabbath question, I would like to notice a few points in the article of B. B. Nordyke, under the above heading, "The Lord's Day." He says, "The commandments of God refer primarily to the ten commandments." In proof of this declaration, he refers to Eccl. xii. 13, 14; Matt. v. 17-19; xix. 19; xvii. 49; 1 Cor. vii. 7, 19; 1 John v. 3; Rev. xiv. 12; xxii. 14; Rom. xiii. 9, 10; James ii. 8-12. In the first text referred to, no reference is made to one of the ten commandments. In the second reference Christ speaks of all the law in just as unlimited a sense as he speaks of all the prophets.

1. I might, with equal propriety claim that all the prophets included only ten of the prophets, as that all the law includes only ten of the commandments.

2. Christ teaches that all the law having been fulfilled, will pass away just as literally and in the same sense that all the prophets ceased. Being superseded by a new constitution they passed away the same as English law was superseded by the constitution of these United States. All the commandments adapted to the genius of the Christian constitution were incorporated into the law of Christ. The fourth commandment not being adapted to the genius of the law of Christ is left out to perish with all other ceremonial and purely positive precepts in the old order of things. And, though Christ commanded his apostles to teach all things whatsoever he had commanded them, they never taught, enforced, reproved even Gentile Christians of Sabbath breaking, or warned them of danger of breaking the fourth commandment. It is too much for credulity to believe, that all Christians, Jew and Gentile, would voluntarily and perpetually keep the Seventh Day as holy time, without ever needing a single note of warning against Sabbath breaking, or commandment to observe, as holy time, any day. How, in the name of Christ could the apostles obey Christ and not teach in plain, unmistakable language, that all men must either obey the fourth commandment and keep the holy, the Seventh Day Sabbath, or be damned. Surely it would not be just to hinge the everlasting fates of all responsible men upon a mere inference, without one thus saith the Lord in the whole constitution of Christ, and all the teachings of his apostles.

3. In drawing out in detail samples of the greatest and least of these commandments, Christ quoted more largely from commandments written exclusively in the Book, than from those written upon tables of stone. The demonstrative adjective "these" in (Matt. v. 19,) refers back to the law spoken of in the previous verse as any tyro in grammar must admit.

Thus, the least as well as the greatest commandments quoted by Christ were parts of the same great law system. Thus, the same parity of reasoning which will prove the perpetuity of the ten commandments will prove the perpetuity of the hundreds of commandments in the Book as well as those upon the tables. There is no avoiding this conclusion. The same is true of the young man referred to in Matt. xvii. 19. If the fact that Christ quoted from the ten commandments proves the perpetuity of those commandments with which they were associated through the Christian dispensation, then the fact that he quoted a commandment—never numbered with the ten,—(never written on either table) but written exclusively in the Book, proves with equal force the perpetuity of the hundreds of commandments with which it was associated. The same law which will give force or authority to one commandment will give equal force or authority to every commandment in the whole law, whether written on the tables or in the Book. The phrase "the commandments of God," referred to in 1 Cor. vii. 19, does not distinguish between the commandments of God, any more than the phrase all the law in Matt. v. 17. The asseveration that "the commandments of God" refer to the ten commandments assumes the point at issue between Sabbatarians and their opponents—it is, therefore, begging the question.

In the first proof text all the commandments in the whole Mosaical system are referred to as clearly demonstrated, by Christ having drawn therefrom in his conclusion more copiously than from those commandments written exclusively in the Book than from those written upon tables of stone. Unless, therefore, our brother was unfortunate in collating his proof texts, Paul, in the second text referred to, must have referred to the great law system, or the commandments of God revealed through Christ instead of Moses. This point will be noticed more fully hereafter. At this point I wish to meet and confute the assumption of Sabbatarians that the law of God, or commandments of God, always relate to the ten commandments. If these phrases do not uniformly refer to the ten commandments, how are we to determine when they do or do not refer to them? The law of God, the law of Moses, the Book of the law of God, and the Book of the law of Moses, the commandments of God and the commandments of Moses, are used synonymously and interchangeably in both Testaments.

I will select a few from the many texts I might adduce in proof of this asseveration. We read in Nehemiah viii. 1: "And all the people gathered themselves together as one man into the street that is before the water gate; and they spake unto Ezra the scribe to bring the Book of the law of Moses, which the Lord had commanded to Israel. And Ezra the priest brought the law, etc. So they read in the Book of the law of God. And they found written in the law which the Lord commanded Moses, that the children of Israel should dwell in booths," etc. Neh. i. 1, 8, 14. "And they stood up in their place, and read in the Book of the law of the Lord their God. But they and our fathers dealt proudly, and hardened their necks, and hearkened not to thy commandments. Neither have our kings, our princes, our priests nor our fathers, kept thy law, nor hearkened unto thy commandments." Neh. ix. 3, 13, 16, 26, 29, 34,

Thus, the law of God, and commandments of God, and the law and commandments of Moses are used synonymously and interchangeably. Ezra read out of "the Book of the law of Moses" (Neh. viii. 1, 3,) or "the Book of the law of the Lord" (Neh. ix. 3,) six solid hours. Surely it would not require six hours to read the ten commandments, if they are the law of God! Again, we read, "on that day they read in the Book of Moses, and now it came to pass when they heard the law," etc. Neh. xiii. 1, 4. Thus, again, the Book of Moses, is used interchangeably and synonymously with the "Book of the law of God, the law and commandments of God." This accords perfectly with the following declarations in the New Testament. We read: "And when the days of her purification according to the law of Moses were accomplished, they brought him to present him to the Lord; (as it is written in the law of the Lord, every male that openeth the womb shall be called holy to the Lord;) and to offer a sacrifice according to that which is said in the law of the Lord, a pair of turtle doves, or two young pigeons. Luke ii. 21-25.

Thus, in the New Testament as well as the Old, the law of God and the law of Moses are used synonymously and interchangeably. In which of the ten commandments is anything said about offering turtle doves or young pigeons? The foregoing is sufficient to demonstrate that the Bible makes no such discrimination between the law of God and the law of Moses, as our Sabbatarian friends do.

In the text referred to us, 1 Cor. vii. 19, it is assumed that the commandments of God are the ten commandments. The basis of this assumption is the declaration that "the commandments of God are the ten commandments." This is begging the question by assuming the things to be proved. The ten commandments are never called a law abstract from the great law system.

The foregoing testimony proves beyond all controversy, that the law of God and the law of Moses, the commandments of God and the commandments of Moses are used synonymously and interchangeably in both Testaments. The law of God and the law of Christ, the commandments of God and the commandments of Christ are the same law and the same commandments. God was the author and Christ his legate, through whom his law was fulfilled.

According to the above quotation from Luke the commandment requiring circumcision was written in the law of God and in full force when Christ was eight days old. See Luke ii. 21-23. Thus, it must be the commandments of God in the Christian constitution which Paul places in contrast with the absolute law of circumcision in 1 Cor. vii. 17. Circumcision was one of the commandments of God in his old constitution, but having perished with that constitution, and not having been incorporated into the new constitution, it is nothing in this dispensation, but the commandments of God through Jesus Christ (not Moses) are something.

The effort of our brother to discriminate between the commandments of God and the commandments of Christ is as great a mistake as the vain effort to discriminate between the law of God and the law of Moses. It is a discrimination never made by any Bible writer. B. B. N. wishes to to know if the Lord's day is yet future, how John was in spirit on that day? I answer in the same sense that he was in the kingdom, to-wit: in spirit of vision, the same as he was "carried away in spirit, (or vision,) into the wilderness and saw a woman sit upon a scarlet-colored beast"—the same also as in Rev. xxi. 10, where John says, "And he carried me away in spirit to a great and high mountain and showed me that great city, the holy Jerusalem," &c. In every one of these occurrences in which John was in spirit, he was carried forward in vision to future events. In vision he was in the day of the Lord and the kingdom of Christ. In spirit or vision he saw the holy city—the capital of the kingdom—with the throne of King Jesus within it. In spirit or vision he and all the saints reigned with Christ one thousand years. The Lord's day and day of the Lord are one and the same day. No day of the week is ever called the Lord's day. The phrase, the day of the Lord, occurs fifteen times in the Old Testament and four times in the New Testament. And in these nineteen occurrences of this phrase there is not the remotest reference to the seventh day Sabbath. In almost every occurrence it refers to the great day when Christ shall come to judge and rule the world according to Zech. xiv. 1: "The day of the Lord is ushered in by the gathering of all nations, the coming of Christ, the last great battle of God Almighty, and the overthrow of the assembled nations.

At the fourth verse we read, "And his (Christ's) feet shall stand in that day upon the Mount of Olives."

Thus the day of the Lord will be ushered in by the second advent of Christ.

In Zechariah xiv. 7, we read, "And the Lord shall be king over all the earth. In that day shall there be one Lord, and his name one." Thus, the day of the Lord and the day of the reign of Christ are one and the same day. This corresponds perfectly with the Lord's day in Rev. i. 10: xx. 1-6; 2 Peter iii. 8, 10,—to wit: the thousand years' reign of Christ.

Both these prophets argue that Christ will be king and reign during "the Lord's day" or the thousand years. John has furnished a measuring line to determine the duration of the day of the Lord. Paul, the same as Zechariah, commences the day of the Lord with the coming of Christ and the resurrection of the dead,—the difference being that one represents the saints subsequently to their resurrection as ascending to meet Christ, who is descending to earth; and the other represents the saints as returning from the place of meeting to the Mount of Olives. In Zech. xiv. 7, we read, "But it shall be one day which shall be known to the Lord." This declaration of Zechariah finds its counterpart in the following language of Peter:

He says, "But beloved, be not ignorant of this one thing, that one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day." This would be perfectly indefinite if Peter had stopped there. But when he adds, "But the day of the Lord will come," he makes it a definite day. "One day with the Lord," and "the day of the Lord," are used synonymously and interchangeably. The definite article "the" designates this "one day" as "the day of the Lord." Thus Peter and John agree in reference to the duration of the day of the Lord.

Peter, in the foregoing passage, the same as Paul and twelve Old Testament writers, ushers in the day of the Lord with the passing away of the old order of things and overwhelming judgments upon the ungodly. The day of the Lord, according to all these prophets and apostles, is a day of judgment upon the ungodly, and a day of salvation to the godly—a day of national judgment or national salvation.

Again, we read in Zech. xiv. 16, "And it shall come to pass that every one that is left of all the nations which come against Jerusalem shall even go up from year to year to worship the King, Lord of hosts," etc. We read in Revelations in reference to the preparation of the nations for the day of the Lord, and their obedience to the decree recorded by Zechariah. We also read in Revelations of the binding of their great adversary during that day, and the loyalty of the nations. He says, "And I saw an angel come down from heaven, having the key of the bottomless pit, and a great chain in his hand. And he laid hold on the dragon that old serpent, which is the devil, and Satan, and bound him a thousand years. And cast him in the bottomless pit, and shut him up, and set a seal upon him, that he should deceive the nations no more, till the thousand years should be fulfilled."

Thus Zechariah and John agree that "the day of the Lord" will be a day of mercy for the nations. That this mercy will bring forth the peaceable fruit of obedience is evident from both these prophets.

In Zechariah we read as the glorious result of Christ's reign as king over all the earth that "In that day there shall be holiness unto the Lord; and the pots in the Lord's house shall be like the bowls before the altar. Yea every pot in Jerusalem and in Judah shall be holiness unto the Lord of hosts; and all they that sacrifice shall come and take of them, and seethe therein; and in that day there shall be no more the Canaanite in the house of the Lord of hosts." Zech. xiv. 16-21.

In Rev. xxi. 24 we read in John's corresponding description of the work to be accomplished during the thousand year-day of the Lord, as foretold by these two prophets. John says, "And the nations of them that are saved shall walk in the light of it; and the kings of the earth do bring their glory and honor unto it." Rev. xxi. 24.

Another point of analogy between these two prophets in reference to the nature of the work to be accomplished in this thousand year-day of the Lord, will be the restoration of the site and capital of Messiah's kingdom and empire, so that Jerusalem shall be the metropolitan city of the world, will be clearly seen by comparing Zech. xiv, and Rev. xxi. and xxii.

I propose writing another article on the Sabbath question.

SELECTIONS.

[Golden Days.]

Ancient Book-Making.

The first mention of a book in the Bible is in Genesis v. 1, where it is implied that some kind of records was kept from the very days of Adam. Some think that the book of Job was written earlier than the books of Moses. Without doubt, it belongs to the time of the patriarchs.

Books in the early ages were written on the leaves of papyrus, on skins, on cloth, on tablets of stone, of wood, of lead and of brass. Among the Hebrews, the sacred books were usually written on skins prepared like the parchment of modern times. To form even one principal section of the Bible, many skins had to be sewed together. When written upon, the connected skin or volume was rolled upon a round piece of wood, or if long, upon two pieces from the two ends. The reader therefore unrolled the book to the place he wanted, and rolled it up again when he ceased to read. See Luke iv. 17-20. The volume thus rolled upon the pieces of wood could be easily tied and sealed. See Isa. xxxix. 11; Dan. xii. 4.

The labor of making, copying and multiplying books by hand was very great. Many persons spent their whole lives in this toilsome work. As the copying of the sacred writings required great care, in order to avoid errors and to make the books readable, persons had to be trained to the task. Indeed the copying of the Scriptures came to be a second art. In this way arose the profession, and as may be said, the learned caste of the Scribes. As they had the care of the rolls of volumes of the law, they were sometimes called lawyers. Not only did they make copies of the sacred text, but they claimed to explain it, and thus acquired great influence with the people. From our Lord's reproofs to the Scribes of his day, we learn that they did not always use their influence for good.

The chief Scribes among the Jews were teachers. In the outer court of the temple were many chambers, in which they sat on elevated platforms and overlooked their pupils, who sat on lower platforms, and thus at their feet.

When we remember the wars, the captivities and the persecutions of the Jews, we may well consider the safe keeping and handing-down of the sacred records to modern times as among the wonders of Divine Providence.

[Syracuse Daily Union.]

The Eastern Question.

President Washburn, of Robert College, Constantinople, now in this county, has within a few days favored a company of gentlemen with an hour's explanation of the present attitude of the Turkish government toward the parties to the Berlin treaty. The reigning Sultan is absolutely resolved not to comply with the demands made on him by that settlement of the Eastern question. The ground of his determination is this: As no one expected, when [illegible] cation, that he ever [illegible] be raised to the head of the empire, his training was strictly ecclesiastical and religious, the consequence of which is that he is a genuine bigot in his faith and spirit. When created Sultan he assumed at once the role of a propagandist, and has devoted himself unceasingly and efficiently to the fostering of a fanatical temper among the Mohammedans. The especial spur to this policy, so consonant to his feelings, is the ambition to make the head of the Turkish empire the real spiritual head of Islamism throughout the east. In itself he cares little for his political and secular power. But as an essential to the carrying out of his scheme of sacred and sacerdotal headship, he will cling to it to the last grasp. This supremacy has been conceded to the Sultans since the taking of Constantinople, but for fifty years past the concession has been more nominal than effective, owing to the increasing feebleness of the government of these rulers.

A plan has been on foot among the Arabian Moslems to transfer the spiritual supreme power of that religion to Mecca. If the Turk fails to sustain himself against the demands of the European courts now pressing him closely, that movement will be effected, and Constantinople will permanently lose its position as the centre of the Mohammedan faith and authority. Hence the fresh outcrop of intolerant, persecuting zeal under the eye and furtherance of the Sultan, which has caused the murder of thousands of Christians within a few years; and if this plan of his is successful, Christianity will be exterminated so far as bloody persecution can effect this catastrophe.

Emissaries have been sent from the Bosphorus throughout the Moslem world to assure these religionists that the Sublime Porte is able as it is determined to hold its own against the provisions of the treaty of Berlin, in proof of which they are pointed to the fact that Turkey has already held those parties at bay for over two years. The Arabs, Hindoos, and other Moslems, are waiting with intense interest to see the result, as the last probation they will give to the Sultan's claim of spiritual headship over them. If they shall be convinced that he can make good [illegible] ance of Western Europe, they will raise the green banner of their prophet and rush to his support by millions. It will be a religious war with a vengeance. But, on the other hand, the combined powers seem to be in earnest to enforce their demands upon the Porte; at any rate, England is and she will do it, in Dr. Washburn's belief, if she has to do it alone. Mr. Gladstone says that his party did not help make that Berlin settlement, but as it is made, Great Britain will see it executed, be the outcome what it may. The outcome will be the transfer of the spiritual headquarters of Islamism from Seraglio Point to Mecca, and the not distant partition and subversion of the Turkish empire. This is the issue now pending, as it is first siege of trial, at Unkiar.

LETTER DRAWER.

Editor Restitution:—Your card in answer to my inquiry concerning brethren of like faith in Buffalo, N. Y., was duly received, and in reply will state, that by a little effort myself and Bro. George Cook, and Bro. T. C. Allerton, have found out a few of those that are looking for Israel's King; and we hear of more of the same faith and hope. But I am quite sorry to say, that they appear to be like sheep having no shepherd. Why? you will say. Well, so far as I can learn, there has been a little difference of opinion existing between them—in more ways than one—hence, these are in this scattered condition. But we have made up our mind to try and gather them up so far as it lies in our power—and by the Lord's help; and as I told them, that this would never do to go on in this way, for we are plainly told in Heb. x. to hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering (for he is faithful that promised); and let us consider one another, to provoke unto love and to good works; and not to forsake the assembling of ourselves together as the manner of some is; but to exhort one another; and so much the more as we see the day approaching.

And here let me state, that we found in Brother and Sister Elliott quite a noble Christian spirit extended towards us, and also the same spirit of kindness was received from their family of sons and daughters, most of them, as I understand, having a knowledge of the truth. All being well, we intend to visit them again this week, and also some others, and make a united effort to start a meeting again in the city of Buffalo. I had at one time almost came to the conclusion that this great city contained none of those of the Abrahamic faith and hope. Am glad this is not so. But on the other hand, we find that there is quite a number, only they are in a scattered condition. We do pray that—if the Lord's will—we may be enabled to get together quite a number by the next first day, and if possible, to break bread, in order to show forth the Lord's death till he comes.

Oh what a great privilege it is to be enabled to meet with those of like faith, for as iron sharpeneth iron, so doth the countenance of a man's face his friend. Even if we have never met him before, for as soon as we find him to be of the faith of Abraham he is at once our friend and brother.

I must close now, lest I weary you; so please find enclosed $2.00 for THE RESTITUTION for one year from the first of October, 1880,—if you can send the back numbers—and if not, start with this week, and please give Bro. Elliott credit for the amount ($2.00); and believe me to be, as ever, a friend of THE RESTITUTION.

L. G. CATTELL.

Rose, N. Y.

Editor Restitution:—I have the privilege of presenting THE RESTITUTION three new subscribers to its list, with the renewal of others. Brother Poore has paid us another visit and preached three sermons as follows: Saturday night, Sunday and Sunday night, to a fair audience, and it seemed to us all like old times, as this is the first time Brother Poore has been with us since last December. It seemed to refresh or stir up our minds by way of remembrance. He expects to visit us again the last Sunday in this month, preaching Saturday before at the Freed School House, after which he expects to visit the people of Indiana.

ROBERT BAKER.

Girard, Kan.

ANOTHER MASTODON.

The remains of a large animal, probably a mastodon, were discovered in an old swamp near Hopestown, Ill., September 18. The tusks are nine feet long, twenty-six inches in circumference at the base, and weigh 175 pounds each. The lower jaw with teeth is well preserved. The teeth are perfect, though somewhat worn. One weighs eight pounds, and is twenty-one inches in circumference. Several of the leg bones are in good condition. The thigh bone is two and a half feet long, and the tibia three feet. The ribs and backbone are in bad condition as the back of the animal was only three feet below the surface of the ground.

THE RESTITUTION.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

WHOLE NO. 686. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, NOVEMBER 10, 1880 VOL. XXIX, NO. 43.

THE RESTITUTION
IS ISSUED
EVERY WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON,
By the Christian Publishing Association.

OFFICERS OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS.
E. E. DWIGGINS.....PRESIDENT.
CHARLES PALMER.....VICE PRESIDENT.
E. E. BARNHILL.....SECRETARY.
S. A. CHAPLIN.....TREASURER.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.
CHARLES PALMER, WM. HAILSBACK,
ISRAEL O. ROBERTS.

S. A. CHAPLIN, : : : : : : : Editor.

APPROVED CONTRIBUTORS.
J. M. STEPHENSON, A. R. MAGRUDER, J. P. WESTHEK, JOEL A. SIMONDS, BENJ. WILSON, O. M. MYERS, WILEY JONES,

TERMS:—$2.00 PER YEAR,
Payable invariably in Advance. Subscriptions received for three months or more at the same rate.

Address all Letters and Communications to
THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates, as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on this earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

COMMUNICATIONS.

COL. ROBERT INGERSOLL'S LECTURES AGAINST THE BIBLE.

His Challenge Accepted.

The press of the country trumpets forth almost daily some note of the reckless audacity of Col. Robert Ingersoll, in denouncing the Bible as false; in which he speaks, it seems, not for himself alone, but as the representative of a large class of infidels in our country. He boldly assails the truth of the Bible and seeks by public lectures to bring the Holy Book into contempt and to undermine and subvert the faith and hope of the Christian.

One of the leading journals of the day—the Philadelphia Weekly Times—in a recent issue, gives expression to the current opinion of a large number as to the proper method of dealing with the daring "blasphemer" in the following terms:

"Twelve of the leading ministers of Chicago preached on Sunday last in answer to Colonel Ingersoll's recent lecture entitled, 'What Shall I do to be Saved?' They thus gave an importance to the blatant unbelief of Ingersoll that he could not have commanded for either himself or his cause, and the eloquent blasphemer will vanquish the eminent ministers all the time on the forum. He will not logically and conclusively refute their doctrine, but he will sway the multitude and put the clergy at a disadvantage. Colonel Ingersoll is not the most formidable antagonist of religion in our midst. He comes with his banner unfurled and with his shocking unbelief to put all thinkers on their guard; but the subtle infidelity that is now diffused among our intelligent people is the most dangerous foe of Christianity."

Now, there are some, at least, who differ widely from this paper in its opinion and advice that contemptuous silence is the best reply to Col. Ingersoll's anti-Bible lectures. If Col. Ingersoll be as this statement asserts, "the eloquent blasphemer who will vanquish the eminent ministers all the time on the forum," and who "will sway the multitude and put the clergy at a disadvantage," surely he is not a mere vain and empty declaimer and fanatic, but is sufficiently "formidable" to be arrested in his pernicious career by an open and manly refutation of his errors and a bold contention for the truth, in opposition to them. May not "the subtle infidelity" now so generally "diffused among our intelligent people" complained of, as "the most dangerous foe to Christianity," be due to this supine policy of silent contempt which this editor still recommends? If past indifference and impunity have failed to arrest his career or to check the flood-tide of "subtle infidelity now diffused" throughout the land, is it not timely wisdom to change the tactics and confront the enemy by more effectual weapons? It is, therefore, not easy to see in the facts recited in the Times any ground to condemn the "twelve ministers of Chicago" confessing the Christian faith, for attempting to refute the bold blasphemer and for defending what they may have considered the fortress of their faith. The wonder is that they have not spoken sooner. It is to be regretted, however, that they should have undertaken their work of reply behind the back of their assailant and not in open opposition to his presence, and before the same audience that witnessed his assaults, so that the antidote might have followed the poison. Such would have been a nobler and a wiser valor.

It is certain that our forefathers in laying in the fabric of our government, the foundations of our civil and religious freedom did not adopt or recommend the timid and serpent-like policy of weak toleration or contemptuous silence in respect to such social Catalines as Col. Ingersoll. On the contrary, while they forbid the sword of persecution or the fires of martyrdom as a remedy for such disorders, they have distinctly pointed to the weapons of fair argument and free public discussion as the only legitimate and the best means of arresting pernicious errors in political and religious doctrine, and protecting society from the consequences. One of the most eminent of these, Thomas Jefferson, in the act of "Establishing Religious Freedom in Virginia," of which he was the author, boldly proclaimed that "truth is the proper and sufficient antagonist to error, and has nothing to fear from the conflict, unless by human interposition disarmed of her natural weapons, free argument and debate; errors ceasing to be dangerous when it is permitted freely to contradict them." Such, too, is, undoubtedly, the teaching of Holy Writ—the Christian's highest authority,—for this enjoins the precepts:

"He that hath ears to hear, let him hear."

"Come, let us reason together."

"To the law and to the testimony; if they speak not according to this word it is because there is no light in them."

"Prove all things and hold fast that which is good."

"Believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God, for many false prophets are gone out into the world."

"Earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered to the saints."

The examples recorded in Scripture are to the same effect. Witness the public contention between David and Goliath of Geth—of Elijah with the prophets of Baal—of Jesus of Nazareth with the scribes, Scribes, Pharisees and chief priests of Israel—of the apostles with the Jews at Jerusalem—of Paul with the Gentile rulers at Ephesus, and Thessalonica, and with the stoic and Epicurean Philosophers at Athens and before King Agrippa, and even in the palace of the Cæsars at Rome. This same apostle warns us that there should arise "many unruly and vain talkers, deceivers and gainsayers—whose mouths must be stopped .... teaching things which they ought not, for filthy lucre's sake."

Inspired and instructed by such precepts and examples and learning that Mr. Ingersoll boldly challenges all who maintain and publicly teach the divine origin, authenticity and binding obligation of the Bible—as the revealed will and word of God—to meet him in fair, public discussion, and to answer and refute his assaults on the credibility of the Book, received among Christians as the Word of God, the undersigned adopts this method of announcing to Mr. Ingersoll that he will, and doth hereby accept his challenge to such an oral debate on such terms of fair and equal rights of discussion, and at such time and place, and under such reasonable preliminary arrangements as may be mutually agreed.

It is proper to say that I undertake the task of responding to and repelling Col. Ingersoll's assaults on the credibility of the Holy Scriptures in no vain confidence in my own strength or wisdom. Far otherwise. I bow to the truth of the divine lessons, "Man at his best estate is altogether vanity." "Cease ye from man whose breath is in his nostrils, for wherein is he to be accounted of?" My reliance to defend the truth of the Bible and to justify the ways of God to man, rests solely in the power of the divine word and in my earnest conviction of the absolute verity and authenticity of that word, and which cannot be successfully gain-sayed and overthrown by the puny weapons of human invention, however vauntingly and skillfully wielded. The smooth stone of the brook, hurled from little David's sling, was, when directed in its course by the Divine Power, and on that account more than a match for the uncircumcised Philistine champion "who defied the armies of the living God," though he was of the enormous stature of twelve feet, was clad in a helmet of brass and a coat of mail, with greaves of brass on his legs and a target of the same metal between his shoulders and the staff of whose spear was like a weaver's beam." It is the same God that Col. Ingersoll now has the temerity to defy in denying and denouncing "the Record that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son." In such a conflict a pigmy is more than a match for a giant, seeing that it is God and not man that defends the right and gives the victory.

For the rest, suffice it to say that the undersigned is, like Col. Ingersoll, a layman, a lawyer and a lecturer on the Bible—that he readily accords to him what is accredited to him by common report, viz.: That he is a gentleman of intelligence and education, and of proper social rank and consideration. Claiming nothing more for himself, the undersigned submits that they will meet, in this earnest but not unfriendly contention for the discovery of the truth, on fair and equal terms.

Learning that Col. Ingersoll's residence is in Quincy, Illinois, I forward a copy of this paper to him at that address for such answer as he may give, which I shall feel at liberty to make public.

My address is Stephens City, P. O., (near Winchester,) Frederick county, Virginia.

Respectfully submitted,
ALLAN R. MAGRUDER,
A servant of God and a Disciple of Christ.

Will the Philadelphia Weekly Times and the press of that city, and of New York, Boston, Baltimore, Washington, Richmond, Chicago, Cleveland, Cincinnati, and of Quincy, Illinois, and all other papers friendly to a free, open and manly discussion for the truth's sake, and for the public good, please insert the foregoing card, or otherwise note its contents and publication to their readers?

Coming Age—Its Proximity—Supplementary Remarks on the Signs Continued—When May a Sign be Said to be Fulfilled?—Are we Living in the Age of the Advent Signs?—Closing Remarks on all the Signs Named by Christ,—No. 41.

J. P. WESTHEK.

1. When May a Sign be Said to be Fulfilled?—We hear it often said, such an event fulfills such a sign: Such and such signs are yet to be accomplished. We have already noted this subject; but it is one of very grave importance, since, upon their due consideration, life and death are often suspended. Coming events cast their shadows before them; not behind them. When we enter the shadow of a thing, we have the sign that the thing itself is somewhere about. When we enter the earth's shadow we have the sign that night; or, an eclipse is coming on, when we pass into the shadow of the moon. These are physical signs and shadow forth night i., the one case, and an eclipse of the sun in the other. Various seasons have their signs, changes of weather also. Wise observers are familiar with the signs of nature. Their interests are involved. The barometer is a valuable indicator of weather change. It has saved many lives on the ocean. A sea captain, sailing on a quiet ocean, beneath an unclouded sky, suddenly ran on deck, and, under deep excitement cried: Furl the sails—prepare for a storm; and in about fifteen minutes the ship was struck with one of the most furious tempests ever known in those seas. Who warned the captain of that coming storm? His faithful barometer, that never deceived him, gave him a sign. The mercury had suddenly fallen nearly three-fourths of an inch. They were then, when the mercury fell, within the outward storm-wave. Signs are so intimately associated with the events signified, that they may be regarded as their drapery. The surroundings of a city are its drapery. Certain improvements, —land-culture, the roads, and the multitudes passing to and fro, are the city's outer garment—a sure sign of its proximity. Sea-ports have land and ocean signs.

Whoever drew near the city of London without witnessing its innumerable signs? Its influence is felt both on land and sea. Its mantle covers the entire island. Its surroundings are densely populated, and the land cultivated as the garden of Eden. It throws around itself another atmosphere. You breathe the city before you enter it. It gives notice in every possible manner of its proximity, long before it is seen. No one can reach the city without first passing through its signs or drapery, and without being sensible of the fact, unless he shuts his eyes and ears, and every other avenue of intelligence. The signs must be passed before you enter the city. You cannot reverse the order. You can as soon puncture the kernel of a nut before you pierce its shell, as to enter London without first passing through its surroundings.

2. Take another example—the discovery of the West India Islands by Columbus. He had sailed, a long time, due west, and no land is seen. The ships crew are about to mutiny, since the long, and, as yet, fruitless voyage had demoralized them. Columbus, however, saw signs of land ahead, and not very distant. 1. Sea-grass began to thicken as it does when approaching land. 2. The flight of land-fowls indicated the same thing. 3. Pieces of timber floating past showed their proximity to land, whence it came. These were some of the land surroundings. 4. Their soundings indicated that the depth of the sea was diminishing. So well persuaded was Columbus, that he was in the vicinity of land, that he pledged his crew that, unless it was discovered within a given time, he would return. He immediately placed a watch, and the cry of land ahead, was soon given. These signs were the drapery of those distant shores, emanating from them, connected with them, extending to them, and through which Columbus had to pass before he could enter the desired haven. Nor was there any possibility of reversing the order; first the signs; then the thing signified.

3. First Advent—Its Signs.—The proposition under consideration, is this: Every great event, place, or person has its signs, drapery, or surroundings, as its attribute, and from which it cannot be severed, and which must be passed, before the person or place is reached. When the Jewish Nation drew near the predicted time for the birth of their predicted Messiah, what are the surroundings of that predicted event? What drapery or signs appear? Such as had been predicted by their divinely inspired prophets. The Prince of Peace was about to be born. The temple of Janus, the great war temple, was closed. Universal peace reigned throughout the Roman world. The Jews were expecting their Messiah. Matt. ii. 1-10; Mark xv, 43; Luke ii. 25, 38; John i. 19 45. Suetonius and Tacitus confirm the fulfillment of the prediction, as to the expectation of the Gentiles.—See Horn's Introduction and Dr. Lardner's Works. The wise men saw a star (which they must have seen before Christ's birth) which led them to the manger, where they found him that was born to be King of the Jews. These were the drapery of this remarkable personage, through which the world was forced to pass before the incarnation could be reached.

4. Overthrow of Jerusalem.—The same great principle is further illustrated by the fall of Jerusalem, by Titus. The signs of that great event were given by Christ to his four disciples, in the introductory part of the same discourse in which he very minutely narrates the surroundings of his second coming. It will be seen here, that the surroundings partake very intimately of the character of the event itself. So in the other illustrations. Jesus stood in one of the outward siege-waves, as he wept over the city forty years before the execution. See how numerous were the storm-waves before the siege commenced. Some of its surroundings are the following:

First Sign, or Outer Wave.—False Christs. Commencing soon after Christ's death, and increasing with the national calamities; Dositheus the Samaritan; Simon Magus, Theudas. Many others appeared.

Second Sign—Wars and Commotions.—These formed the second wave. They were "as the distant thunder, that foreboded approaching storms." Four emperors, Nero, Galba, Otho, and Vitellius, suffered violent deaths within the short space of eighteen months.

Third Sign—Famines and Pestilences.—These constituted the third wave, becoming more severe, as their limits diminish and the great event predicted, draws near. These were in the days of Claudius Cæsar. Acts xi. 28.

Fourth Sign—Earthquakes.—One in Crete in the reign of Claudius; others at Smyrna, Miletus, Chios, Samos, where Jews resided. Tacitus mentions one at Rome, in the same reign, and says, that in the reign of Nero, the cities of Laodicea, Hierapolis and Colosse were overthrown, and that the celebrated city of Pompeii in Campania was overthrown." In the reign of Galba, there was another earthquake at Rome.

Fifth Sign—Fearful Sights and Great Signs from Heaven.—These constitute the fifth wave, and are the inner surface of the drapery that touch the event itself. These are called signs by the Savior since they would grow out of the city's elements of destruction, and would point more directly to him that was about to inflict summary vengeance. Josephus enumerates these sights as follows:

1. A star hung over the city like a sword, and the comet continued a whole year.

2. At the feast of unleavened bread, at the ninth hour of night, there shone so great a light about the altar and the temple, that it seemed to be bright day, and this continued for half an hour.

3. At the same feast, a cow, led by the priest to sacrifice, brought forth a lamb in the middle of the temple.

4. The eastern gate of the temple, which was of solid brass and very heavy, and was scarcely shut in the evening by twenty men, and was fastened by strong bars and bolts, was seen at the sixth hour of night opened of its own accord, and could hardly be shut again.

5. Before the setting of the sun there were seen over all the country chariots and armies fighting in the clouds, and besieging cities.

6. At the feast of Pentecost, as the priests were going into the inner temple by night as usual to attend their service, they heard first a motion and noise, and then a voice as of a multitude, saying, Let us depart hence.

7. What Josephus reckons the most terrible of all, one Jesus, an ordinary country fellow, four years before the war began, and when the city was in peace and plenty, came to the feast of tabernacles, and ran crying up and down the streets day and night, "A voice from the east, a voice from the west, a voice from the four winds, a voice against Jerusalem and the temple, a voice against the bridgrooms and the brides, a voice against all the people." The magistrates endeavored by stripes and torture to restrain him; but he still cried with a mournful voice, 'Woe, woe to Jerusalem!' This he continued to do for seven years and five months together, and especially at the great festivals; and he neither grew hoarse, nor was tired; but went about the walls and cried with a loud voice, 'Woe, woe to the city, and to the people, and to the temple;' and as he added at last, 'Woe, woe, also to myself,' it happened that a stone from a sling or engine immediately struck him dead.

Tacitus, the Roman historian, also gives a summary account of the same occurrences. He says, that there happened several prodigies, armies were seen engaging in the heavens, arms were seen glittering, and the temple shone with sudden fire of the clouds, the doors of the temple opened suddenly, and a voice greater than human was heard, that the gods were departing."—Horn's Int.

Relative to these signs, it may be said: 1. Christ said, there would be fearful sights, and great signs; and Josephus and Tacitus say that there were such. 2. They went before the event, and clustered around it as bees around their hive. 3. They were, the shadows, the drapery of the event itself. 4. They went before that event—extended to the event—and photographed the character of the coming event. 5. None of this list is found in the list given by Christ as the surroundings of his return. 6. It is here distinctly seen that the signs thicken as you approach the event, and extend to the event itself as its drapery. 7. Christ, in this part of his narration, follows the order of the signs; it is reasonable, therefore, that he does the same in the remainder of his sketch.

6. Second Advent—Its Signs.—We have given familiar illustrations of the character and use of signs; they are the foreshadowings of coming events; by them we are warned of approaching events, and are taught their nature. They are the surroundings of coming events,—their drapery. You cannot reach the event without passing through its suburbs. Shall the surroundings of the second advent, the greatest of all events form an exception? Have they not the same office to fill? Are they not governed by the same great laws? So we conclude, and thus we interpret them. What we have aimed to make plain is this: We have advanced into the age of the second advent signs, and that they will transpire in the order named; and that they extend to the advent, not beyond it; that they are designed for the Christian household, and, if they watch they cannot pass through them without seeing them, and giving them due attention. The wise virgins will not sleep without first putting their lamps in order. The foolish virgins will sleep when passing the sign waves. They will not see the signs, considering them as such, and, consequently, on such they will not have their designed effect. We think that the sign of anything is an attribute or part of the thing or event signified; thus, the signs of a storm are phenomena on its outward storm waves, as tested by the barometer, the signs of a city are its suburbs. Jesus throws around him an atmosphere peculiar to his vicinity. His long delay will produce certain effects upon the physical and moral worlds. When he is so near as to induce such changes, we know the fact of his proximity. The evidence, when seen and examined, is conclusive. We are as sure as that the sun is about to rise. When his beams, his messengers, gild the eastern sky.

According to a Viennese statistical journal Austria is better provided with public libraries than any other country in Europe. There are altogether 527 libraries in Austria, containing collectively 5,475,793 volumes, exclusive of maps and manuscripts; this is an average of 28.8 volumes per 100 inhabitants. The 500 libraries of France possess 4,595,000 volumes, and 135,000 manuscripts, or 12.5 volumes per 100 of the population; Italy has 493 libraries, 4,340,281 volumes, and 330,570 manuscripts, equal to 12.2 per 100 inhabitants; Prussia has 398 libraries, 2,040,450 volumes, and 58,000 manuscripts, equal to 11 volumes per 100. Great Britain has 200 libraries, 2,871,493 volumes, and 26,000 manuscripts; Bavaria has 169 libraries, with 1,308,500 volumes, and 24,000 manuscripts, a number which places that country next to Austria as regards the number of volumes per head of population; Russia has 145 libraries, 953,000 books, and 24,500 manuscripts, equal to 1.3 volumes per 100 persons. Of separate institutions the National French Library is the largest, containing 2,018,000, or nearly half the total contents of the 500 libraries of the country; the British Museum comes next with 1,000,000 volumes, then the Royal Munich Library, 800,000; the Berlin Library, 700,000; that at Dresden 600,000; at Vienna, 420,000. The Oxford University Library (300,000) outnumbers the National Belgian Library by 90,000 volumes; the Heidelberg University Library has also 300,000; so has the Hamburg town library, and that at Stuttgart. The library of the Vatican at Rome is small comparatively having only 50,000 volumes; but it is rich in manuscripts, which number 25,000.

New islands were sometimes formed was seen by Captain Huntington, of the United States steamer Alert. Commander Huntington, of the United States steamer Alert, in a report to the Navy Department says that while on a surveying cruise in the Pacific, south of Fortelzio and the Bonin Islands, on approaching the island of San Alessandro, his attention was called to a strange appearance on the water, apparently ten miles distant. A volume of vapor was rising as though some vessel was blowing off steam. This was followed by an appearance of breakers, and while some of the officers were discussing the probable cause, some thinking it was the blowing and breaching of a school of whales, the question was definitely settled by the upheaval of an immense black mass. Mud and fishes were thrown up. As the ship approached the submarine volcano the black masses thrown up were distinguished as mud and ashes. The upheavals were accompanied by all reports, like those from submarine mines, and an odor of sulphur. A reef or island is in process of formation. Soundings were obtained in from five to twenty-nine fathoms. The water was full of ashes and mud, and some of this and one specimen of the bottom were brought on board. At night flames were noticed issuing from the volcano.

THE RESTITUTION.

S. S. CHAPLIN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, NOV. 10, 1880.

BROTHER A. J. EYCHANER has donated 1000 of his tracts on "God and the Bible" to THE RESTITUTION fund. Let there be a rapid sale of them. They are cheap and just the thing to read and lend to your neighbor. Who will aid THE RESTITUTION by scattering them broadcast? See the advertisement in another column.

WE will occupy, to some extent editorially, this week, as absence from home, necessary preparations for the coming winter, and other cares and responsibilities have absorbed our time. Next week we hope to write on some themes that have been deferred. We hope to respond to some queries and notice some of our exchanges soon. Meanwhile let us bear in mind that this dispensation is just closing, and live accordingly. We shall give a stirring piece next week from The Rainbow, on the theme—"Like Men that Wait." The Lord is at the door.

SELECTIONS.

Conversion of the World.

What are the present prospects of a church that has set out in all confidence to convert the world? How many of those now putting on the harness boast of greater expected success than is warranted by the experience of those who have put it off after having fought the good fight? The prophets could not convert the world; are we mightier than they? The apostles could not convert the world; are we stronger than they? The martyrs could not convert the world; can we do more than they? The church for eighteen hundred years could not convert the world; can we do it? They have preached the gospel of Christ, so can we. They have gone to earth's remotest bounds, so can we. They have saved "some," so can we. They have wept as so few believed their report, so can we. They have finished their course with joy, and the ministry they have received to testify of the gospel of the grace of God; we can do the same. Can we reasonably expect to do more? "It would take all eternity to bring the Millennium at the rate that modern revivals progress," said the venerable Dr. Lyman Beecher, before a ministerial convention, held close to Plymouth Rock. And what hope is there that they will progress more rapidly? Is it in the word of God? Glad would we be to find it there. Sadly we read that "evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived."

Has God a mightier Savior—a more powerful Spirit? Has he another gospel which will save the world? Where is it? Is there any way to the kingdom other than that which leads through much tribulation? Is there another way to the crown besides the way of crosses? Can we reign with him unless we first suffer in his cause? No doubt the world might be converted if they desired to know the Lord. And so, had all who heard received with gladness the word of God, the world might have been converted within twenty years of the day of Pentecost. If each Christian had brought one single soul to God with each successive year, the calm splendors of the Millennial era might have shown upon the declining years of the apostles of Jesus Christ. But instead of this, ages of darkness came on. The world did not repent, but the church apostatized. If the gospel were to convert the world, we should have seen tokens of it ere this. But where are such omens to be found? Shall we look at Judson, who labored ten long years before one sinner yielded to the claims of the gospel? Shall we look at the dense darkness of the heathen world? Shall we look at the formalism of the professed church? Shall we look at the wide extension of infidelity? Shall we look at the abounding of iniquity and the waxing cold of love? Shall we look at the world, where eighteen hundred years of toil and tears have not brought one-twentieth part of mankind even to a profession of true Christianity; and where not more than one-fifth can claim for themselves the dubious title of Christian nation? Shall we look over a world in which we cannot find one nation of Christians, nor one tribe of Christians, nor one city of Christians, nor one town of Christians, nor one village of Christians, nor one hamlet of Christians, save here and there where a questionable faith has led a few, with hypocrites even in their midst, to withdraw themselves from the world and cherish the untried virtues of secluded life? Surely, after eighteen hundred years of experiment with that system which was to convert the world, men might point to some country, to some province, to some nation, and say, Behold the commencement of a converted world.

But will not the gospel then prove a failure? That depends upon what is expected of it. If the gospel was to effect the eternal salvation of all mankind, then failing to accomplish that work is a failure of the gospel. If the gospel was to convert the world, then if it is not done it will prove a failure. But if the gospel was preached "to take out of the Gentiles a people for His name," then it is not a failure. If it was given that God might in infinite mercy and love "save some," then it is not a failure. If it was given that every repentant sinner might have eternal life, and that every good soldier might receive a crown of glory, then it is not a failure. If it were given that an innumerable company might be redeemed out of every nation and kindred, and tongue under heaven, then it is not a failure. If it was given that the vales and hills of Paradise restored might teem with a holy throng who shall be "equal to the angels, and be the children of God, being the children of the resurrection," then it is not a failure. If it was given that the elect might be brought into one great family of holy ones, then it is not a failure. And was this its object, rather than the exaltation of a worldly church to the splendors of earthly prosperity, while beneath the theatre of their easy triumph there slumbers the ashes of prophets and the dust of the apostles? Are they to hold jubilee a thousand years, while the martyr's unceasing cry "How long, O Lord," goes up to God? Are they to have their songs of triumph, while the whole creation groaneth for deliverance, and while that longed-for day of the redemption of our body is postponed? Nay, verily, the hope of the one body is one hope. The hope of the church stops not at death. It sweeps beyond earth's scenes of tempest and of storm, and reposes in the calm beamings of that Sun of righteousness which shall glow above the bosom of Paradise regained.

Thus teaches the way of the Lord. Thus responds the universal church. There are I know, with regard to the details, differences of opinion. But this only strengthens the argument. It shows that the church was not led by blind reverence for the tradition of their fathers. But on the leading features they all agree. Wide apart as the poles in their theological opinions, they all agree in one point, that the coming of Jesus and the scenes of judgment must precede the rest of the church of God. They all agree that the church shall never reign till she reigns complete in the presence of her Lord. They all agree that the earth is not her rest until renewed by the power of God. They all agree that the world will not be converted, but that the Judge of quick and dead men must come upon a race not ready for the harvest of glory, but ripe for the sickle of wrath. And is not this the voice of the prophets and apostles? If we read that God will comfort all who mourn in Zion, is it not at "the day of vengeance of our God?" If Christ is to have the heathen for his inheritance, will he not "break them with a rod of iron, and dash them in pieces as a potter's vessel?" If the kingdoms of this world become the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ, is it not when "the nations are angry and God's wrath is come?" If the new covenant be made with men, is it not beyond preaching and teaching, when they shall not any more teach his neighbor or his brother, saying, Know ye the Lord, for all shall know him from the least unto the greatest? If Jerusalem is to be comforted by the blessings of God, will he not make her an eternal excellency? If God create new heavens and a new earth, shall not God's saints "be glad and rejoice forever in that which he creates?" If the "righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father," will not the tares be first gathered in bundles and cast into "the furnace of fire?" So of the whole Scripture. The old earth must be dissolved ere the new one can appear—Satan must be dethroned ere Christ can reign, and death must be swallowed up in victory ere the saints can sing the victor's song.

Toward those scenes we hasten. The coming of the Lord draweth nigh. The rest is before us, the toil is very brief. But alas for the world. Woe to an earth that will not repent. The deluge and the Dead Sea tell us what God has done. The Scriptures tell us what he will do. The sword shall not always sleep in the scabbard—even now it is about to be unsheathed. Watchman, set the trumpet to thy lips! Sound in the ears of the world the dread alarm—"But if the watchman see the sword come, and blow not the trumpet, and the people be not warned; if the sword come and take away any person from among them, he is taken away in his iniquity; but his blood will I require at the watchman's hand!"—H. L. Hastings.

From Man's Only Hope—Immortality. Neither Can They Die Any More. Luke xx. 36.

How are we to interpret "die" here? Exactly as the Sadducees understood it. With them death was the opposite of conscious life, as when they narrated the fact, that "the woman died also." Then the death that believers can never be subjected to again is identical in kind with that under whose dominion the Patriarchs, for instance, were held at the hour of the interview, and long before it occurred. They were unconscious in Sheol—the grave, their souls, the men themselves, were there. They, not a part of them merely, had seen corruption. For the present, they were as if they had never been. But to that state of desolation and oblivion they can by no possibility return after the resurrecting fiat has summoned them to newness of life in their eternal home, "there shall be no more death." Rev. xxi. 4. Now they rest in hope of a revival to conscious being, and that hope is one to which the infidelity of Heaven's power, and the inviolability of Heaven's promise, are pledged.

"These all, having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promise;" they died not at death ascend heavenward to enter on the possession; "God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect." Heb. xi. 39, 40.

Death is death—not lie; and when our Lord affirmed resurrected saints can die no more, we are elevated to the contemplation of an unspeakable assurance. It is a promise from Him who "cannot lie" of being instead of non-being; it is light instead of the blackness of Hades, it is immortality, not by nature but the gift of God imparted to those who, on the awakening morn, are to be constituted equal to the heavenly messengers.

Let it be added, the words, "neither can they die anymore," are far stronger than even an assertion that they are to live" for ever" since "for ever" is used in Scripture, as with ourselves, in a varying, and indeed often in a very limited acceptation. Thank God, once more, there is something to fix the meaning of the phrase "everlasting life," and the words now engaging our attention leave its import beyond all controversy. They cannot die! Founded on that, and on other testimonies of Jesus, such as, "They shall never perish"—John x. 28—and "Because I live, ye shall live also"—John xiv. 10—the believer's hope is built upon a rock solid and immovavable as the throne of God. Uncertainty is absolutely debarred. The thought is overwhelming, the vision into the future indescribably glorious. In that paradisical scene there is light that will not grow dim; joy subject to no access of decay; inquiries that will not be arrested; love that the revolution of ceaseless cycles will not quench; songs that will not cease; youth that cannot be weakened by age, and mental vigor that no activity may enfeeble, no catastrophe overthrow. That is immortality, and immortality through Jesus, "the resurrection and the life," "who died for for us that whether we wake or sleep, we should"—at last in glory—"live together with Him." 1 Thess. v. 10.

W. G. MONCRIEFF.

[New York Ledger]

MAHOMET'S MIGHT.

Graphic Account of His Siege of Constantinople in 1453.

The city was more than eleven miles in circumference. On the side of the sea it was defended by a simple wall; the other sides were covered by regular fortifications, towers, and bastions. The Turkish army was immense, numbering probably 200,000 or 250,000 men; the imagination of the Greek historians extended this number to 300,000, and even 400,000. The regular army was probably under 200,000. The Greeks had lost entirely the use of arms, and depended upon their mercenaries. The Emperor would not arm more than 15,000; his chief lieutenant was an Italian Giustiniani, who had with him many Venetians and Genoese. The legate, Isidore, did his duty bravely as a soldier. The city had 101 guns, and among the number was one gigantic for the time, which could only fire six or seven times a day and had to be cooled each time after it had been fired. The art of siege was still in its infancy. Mahomet used all the old machines which were made for approaches and assaults. He had guns also. Arrows, molten lead, and boiling oil were used against the assailants, as well as the famous Greek fire, the secret of which was still preserved in the Greek Empire. The investment of Constantinople began on the 6th of April, 1453. The siege went on methodically, and various assaults were repulsed by the Greeks. Mahomet was surprised to find so much resistance. The Turkish ships succeeded in forcing the entrance of the Golden Horn, and the city from that moment began to show all the terrible symptoms of discontent and discord which are noticed in all sieges of populous capitals. While the soldiers were on the ramparts the city was convulsed with theological discussions. Even on the eve of the ruin of their cause, the fanatical Greeks showed more abhorrence for the dogmas and rites of the Latin Church than for the enemies who were before the gates. Constantinople was like Jerusalem when it was besieged by the Romans. The monks inflamed the multitude, but did not turn their wrath against the real enemy. "I would prefer a hundred Turks," said one, "to see in Constantinople the turban of the Turks rather than the Hat of the Pope." The crowds rushed to the shrines where the miracle-working virgins were kept, but did not rush to the ramparts. All sorts of prophecies were made; the Greeks became the pitiable victims of what was called during the last siege of Paris "obsidional" madness.

Constantinople did not surrender because it was starved; it was regularly taken by storm. While the mob accused the Emperor of treason Mahomet kept firing his 150 guns against the walls and making a breach. He promised his followers the plunder of a city which was then, after Rome, the richest in the world. The last attack was preceded by a solemn fasting and by prayers. It began on the 29th of May in the middle of the day, to the sound of "La ilah illah Allah." The resistance of the Greeks and Italians, who were fighting one against twenty, was truly heroic. Constantine was among his troops, and showed the greatest bravery. Giustiniani was mortally wounded. In the evening the Italians, having lost their chief, took to their ships and abandoned the unfortunate Emperor. The battle began again the next day; the Emperor fought like a common soldier, "like a new Samson." The fight was hand-to-hand. Constantine fell in the carnage, and the confusion was such that his loss was not noticed at first. His body was found afterwards in a mass of corpses. The Turks were at last within the city. They had been promised three days of plunder; they sacked the magnificent Capital unmercifully. The pen of Victor Hugo could hardly describe the scenes of horror of which Byzantium became the theatre. Blood ran in torrents in the streets. An Italian witness says that "corpses were floating on the Dardanelles like spoiled melons on the canals of Venice." Some historians speak of 40,000, some of 60,000 victims. The most noble ladies were given up to a barbarous soldiery; 50,000 prisoners were made, only of the richest class, in the hope of ransom. Gold, silver, bronze, precious stones, ornaments, were seized everywhere. What could not be taken was destroyed. The convents and churches were especially marked for plunder. Saint Sophia became the scene of a horrible orgy. Mahomet made his entry among the corpses, and went on horseback to Saint Sophia. This church from that moment became a mosque, and the crescent took the place of the cross. It is better to throw a veil over the excesses of Mahomet and of his lieutenants. The Turks showed no mercy, no generosity; they trampled upon their unhappy victims like so many wild beasts.

Europe learned with horror the details of the fall of Constantinople. There was a call from many sides for a new crusade. In the year 1680 the crusade had not yet begun; and when lately the Russians, encamped before Constantinople, saw in the distance the dome of Saint Sophia, they had the singular courage to remain within their lines and recross the Danube without having avenged the Emperor Constantine.

[Providence Journal]

A Storm on the Sun.

Observers of the sun found indications of intense commotion on the 11th, 12th and 13th of August. The sun spots were many, large and active, and protuberances shot up their rose-colored tongues with increased force and velocity from the surface. The earth made instantaneous response to the solar storm. A magnetic disturbance suddenly began, accompanied by an unusual exhibition of earth's currents. The magnetic variations were frequent and large, and the earth currents continuous and strong. It is years since the Greenwich Observatory has recorded magnetic disturbances of equal magnitude, and it sends forth a timely warning to telegraph engineers, and especially to those concerned in laying submarine cables, that earth currents may now become frequent as compared with the quietness of recent years. A superb exhibition of aurora accompanied the magnetic disturbance. An observer at the Stonyhurst Observatory describes it as recalling the magnificent displays of 1859 and 1870, and 1871, while the play of the magnets was one of the most violent ever recorded at that observatory. The auroral display was extensively observed in England and Scotland. One observer describes it as an outburst of streamers appearing like wavy, swaying curtains from the zenith to near the horizon, with the loveliest green tints near the zenith. Another writes that streamers extended from horizon to horizon, the color being principally pale rose with a reddish tinge. Another speaks the display as a brilliant band of white light followed by streamers, each streamer fading away before the succeeding one became very bright. Still another records a glowing crimson picture of the northern horizon, succeeded by a bright white haze, terminating in an illuminated arch, from which sprang a large number of brilliant streamers, streaking toward the zenith.

The same phenomenon was seen by American observers, although it did not receive the attention bestowed upon it by European observers. It is evident, however, that the epoch of grand auroras and meteoric storms has returned, and that our northern skies for months to come will probably be lighted with auroral flames. More earnestly than ever arises the question of the cause of the sun-spot cycle and its intimate connection with electric and magnetic phenomena. No one doubts that the commotion in the solar orb is reflected on the earth in the flashes of auroral light and the erratic movements of the magnetic needle. We can see the cause and note the effect. But no one, if the theory of the disturbing influence of the great planets is rejected, has found the clew to the secret of sun-spots. We can only grope in darkness while we wait for persistent searchers to solve the problem, and admire with mingled reverence and awe the mighty power with which the sun sways his routine of worlds, and the strength of the sympathetic chord by which each planet in the system reflects in auroral light and disturbed magnetism the abnormal condition of the great central orb.

NEWS ITEMS.

TEHERAN, Nov. 7.—Sheik Abdullah advanced against Urumiah, Persia, with 5,000 Kurds, but was repulsed with great loss. The Kurds are now encamped eight miles from Urumiah.

Sheik Abdullah crucified thirty Kurds for committing excesses.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Nov. 7.—England, at the instance of Persia, has requested the Porte to station a guard on the frontier, in order to prevent the incursions of Kurds into Persia.

At the council of ministers yesterday it was proposed to the Sultan that he should order Dervisch Pasha to surrender Dulcigno at any cost. The Sultan first sent an aid-de-camp to Dulcigno with sealed orders for Dervisch Pasha.

DUBLIN, Nov. 7.—The announcement that the Channel fleet has been ordered to the Irish coast has caused indescribable excitement.

CAPE TOWN, South Africa, Nov. 6.—On the 31st of October the mountain stronghold of the Basuto Chief Moteesane was successfully stormed by Colonel Clarke's forces. During this operation 5,000 Basutos attacked the colonial detachment holding Chief Lerotholi's village, and before reinforcements could arrive a small body of them were surrounded, and five were killed. The enemy advanced in great numbers, compelling the colonials to retreat.

YOKOHAMA, Japan, Oct. 21.—Reports continue to be received from various parts of the Empire of disastrous results of the recent typhoon. In Tokio alone over 3,000 houses were totally demolished, while the lives of hundreds of fishermen were lost in the bay.

The American steamer Courier, which arrived at Hokodadi from the north on the 12th of October, reported the arrival at Petropaulovski of a steam-whaler which announced that, according to information received from the natives, the Jeannette and some whalers had been lost with all hands, the vessels having been crushed in the ice.

SHANGHAI, China, Oct. 13.—Advices from Peking state that there will be no war; that China is utterly unprepared for any contest.

A series of terrific hurricanes swept over portions of Lakes Huron, Erie and Ontario, and portions of the States of New York and Pennsylvania and the Province of Ontario, on Sunday. There was great destruction and damage of property.

A London paper states that the sale of the Penny Testament, the cheapest edition ever published, has already reached nearly 400,000, and that the publisher, Mr. Elliot Stock, confidently expects that a million copies will be disseminated in the course of twelve months.

BREVITIES.

The Bohemia, of Prague, says that the "Burial Brotherhood" of the Jewish Bohemian community has been engaged for the last five years in deciphering some of the oldest inscriptions in Jewish burial grounds. It appears that the "Israelitische Friedhof" in the Josefstadt contains memorials reaching back for twelve centuries. The scholars employed in deciphering the epitaphs have already collected about three thousand, many of great value, biographically and historically. The oldest is dated the year 4332 after the creation of the world, which answers to the year 572 of the Christian era. Thus the Jews were a settled community in Josefstadt when the Angles, Jutes, and Saxons were a new immigrant population in Britain.

DIVISION OF HOURS AND MINUTES.

Why is one hour divided into sixty minutes, and each minute again into sixty seconds? This question is often asked by intelligent children; and the answer is this: we have sixty divisions on the dials of our clocks and watches, because the old Greek astronomer, Hipparchus, who lived in the second century before Christ, accepted the Babylonian system of reckoning time, that system being sexagesimal. The Babylonians were acquainted with the decimal system; but for common or practical purposes, they counted by soss and sari; the soss, representing sixty, and the saros, sixty times sixty, is thirty-six hundred. From Hipparchus, that mode of reckoning found its way into the works of Ptolemy, about 150 A. D., and hence was carried down the stream of science and civilization, and found the way to the dial-plates of our clocks and watches.

THE REVISED NEW TESTAMENT.

The American Bible Revision Committee have completed the revision of the English Version of the New Testament, and transmitted the result of their labors to England. The British committee will meet in November for final action, and the University presses of Oxford and Cambridge are expected to issue the revised New Testament in February, 1881. The Old Testament will be published two or three years after. The Rev. Dr. Philip Schaff says that the American revisers have given their time and labor for eight years without compensation, and that any person who will contribute toward the expenses $10 or more before February next will receive a memorial copy of the first University edition of the revised New Testament.

The Paris Temps gives the following account of Dulcigno: "The town is composed of two parts separated from each other by the port—the old town, containing the citadel, and the new town, in which the population is almost entirely concentrated, and which comprises about 400 houses. It is evident that if the squadron had opened fire it would have directed it solely against the citadel, where there are not eighty houses. The inhabitants would not have had to suffer from the bombardment. The certainty of not being in danger, even in cases of military action, has, perhaps, had something to do with the obstinate resistance the inhabitants of Dulcigno have made to the cession of their town to the Montenegrins. The chief reason, however, is that they are nearly all Mussulmans; they number from 2,800 to 3,000, and it is said that till 1858 no Christian was allowed to choose his residence at Dulcigno. Lastly, it is said that the Mussulmans are a race of pirates, who have only given up piracy since 1815—that is, since Austria has had possession of Dalmatia and has created a navy.

Correction.

In THE RESTITUTION of Oct. 20, in Bro. Ramsey's letter a mistake occurs. It should read, "De Smeit, Kingsbury county, D. T."

Bro. Ramsey and family are in a hard spot, and need the assistance and sympathy of the brotherhood. I hope the brethren will respond liberally to his call for help.

R. J. HILL.

Captain Eads' Ship Railway.

The Scientific American of this week contains a full page illustration of Captain Eads' proposed railway for transporting ships with their cargo across continents.

Captain Eads claims by his plan to be able to take loaded ships of the largest tonnage from one ocean to the other across the Isthmus of Panama, as readily excavation is done by a canal after the Lesseps plan, and at a much less cost for engineering construction.

The project is certainly bold and ingenious, and the projector anticipates no serious difficulties in carrying forward his enterprise. The engravings referred to in the Scientific American show the proposed construction of not only the railroad, but the appliances for transferring the ships from the water to the rail.

In addition to the large number of engravings, illustrative of engineering works, inventions and new discoveries which appear weekly, the Scientific American has, during the past year, devoted considerable space to illustrating and describing leading establishments devoted to different manufacturing industries.

This feature has added very much to the attractiveness of the columns of the paper. More than fifty of the most important establishments of our country have been illustrated, and the processes of the different manufactures described in its columns. The Scientific American has been published for more than thirty-three years by Munn & Co., 37 Park Row, N. Y., and has attained a larger weekly circulation than any other paper published in the country. The publishers have in preparation a series of [illegible] which will appear during the coming year.

POETRY.

Buy The Truth.

Go thou in life's fair morning.
Go in thy bloom of youth,
And buy, for thine adorning,
The precious book of truth.
Secure this heavenly treasure,
And bind it on thy heart,
And let no worldly pleasure
E'er cause it to depart.

Go, while the day-star shineth,
Go, while thy heart is light,
Go, ere thy strength declineth,
While every sense is bright.
Sell all thou hast, and buy it;
'Tis worth all earthly things,—
Rubies, and gold, and diamonds,
Sceptres and crowns of kings.

Go, ere the cloud of sorrow
Shall o'er the bloom of youth
Before not till to-morrow,
Go now and buy the truth;
Go, seek thy great Creator,
Learn early to be wise;
Go place upon the altar
A morning sacrifice!

SELECTIONS.

Prophetic Times.]

The End of the World.

This expression, from Matt. xxviii. 20, is the same in the original with that in xxiv. 3, What shall be the sign of thy coming, and the end of the world? They are both understood by the generality of Christians and the churches with reference to the final catastrophe of this earthly scene, and the translation of the church to its eternal and unchangeable state.

The validity of this interpretation will now be considered. Whether such be the plain and full meaning of the words in the literal and grammatical sense is a matter well deserving a sober and judicious inquiry, considering how many passages of Scripture are made to turn on the above construction as their cardinal point. No other consequence will necessarily result from this discussion than a more distinct anticipation of an event in which all mankind are implicated, and which all believers are agreed in expecting at some period of time or other, while no one can by any possibility be assured of its day and hour. When some depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and others turn away their ears from the truth; when scoffers, walking after their own lusts, and saying, where is the sign of his coming? are systematically carrying on the mystery of iniquity towards its entire consummation; when damnable heresies, and especially that of denying the Lord, (the proper deity of Christ) are privily brought into, and are widely spreading in the church, it is high time to consider whether the last days of Peter, and the perilous times of Paul, II. Tim. iii. 1. 5., be not actually in progress, and, if so, the coming of the Lord draweth nigh, and the time of the end cannot be far distant. The signs of the times in which we live exhibit the very characteristics of the period immediately preceding the appearance of the Son of Man, and the manifestation of the sons of God, the children of the resurrection, who shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world, (αιωνος εκεινου) which, of course will not commence (whatever it be) till the end of the world (αιωνος τουτου) become. Luke xx. 34.

A general expectation has existed in all ages concerning a future state of retribution, of which the merit or demerit of man as a moral agent is the standard and criterion of judgment as to punishment and reward. When life and immortality were brought to light by the Gospel, this distinct apprehension was cleared up: the gates of heaven were opened to all believers, and final condemnation denounced only on the impenitent. Under a general concurrence of expectation on this momentous subject, diversities of opinion existed in the church as to the circumstances under which it will be realized; and the prevailing idea is that a great extension of the spiritual kingdom of Christ will take place before the close of the Christian dispensation; at the end of which Christ will appear in person, as the judge of the quick and the dead; when the general resurrection, the dissolution of the material world or universe, the condemnation of the wicked, and the translation of the church to the glories of heaven, will take place together—and these things are, perhaps, invariably viewed in connection with such expressions in Sacred Scriptures as, the end of the world—the world to come—the day of judgment—the kingdom of heaven.

A review and comparison of the different passages of sacred Scripture which have a direct application to these subjects, may suggest a somewhat different expectation, which is termed scriptural, as being exclusively derived from the positive declarations of Holy Writ, taken from the original in their most obvious and literal sense, the scope of which will be nearly as follows: That the present system, secular and ecclesiastical (as far, at least, as Christendom, and the Roman and Mohammedan empires are concerned) will pass away at the close of a certain period of the world, fixed in the determinate counsel of God: and as far as revealed in his written word, that its near approach may be anticipated, from specific and infallible tokens contained therein; whenever their real application shall be manifested by existing circumstances, and the palpable fulfillment of the sure word of prophecy concerning the end of the times of the Gentiles, the end of the present dispensation of the Gospel Witness; that a new order of things, and a distinct period of the world will then commence, to which all preceding dispensations have only been preparatory and subordinate, and which is the perfection and consummation of them all; that the change thus effected in the physical, and moral, secular and spiritual state of the world will be so complete, in general, so extraordinary as to correspond with the nature and significancy of the expressions by which it is exhibited in Scripture, such as, a new creation, a new earth, making all things new.

It will be readily admitted that a new era commenced at the first appearance of Christ, and the promulgation of the gospel throughout the Roman Empire, the scriptural designation of which is the fulness of time. This expression refers distinctly to the mission and personal office of our Lord himself, and the period which then commenced appears to be confined without any marked interruption to his second coming; the whole era being spoken of in this way by himself, and characterized by His apostles under the general title of the last days, in distinction from sundry other times, as the Paradisaical, Patriarchal or Mosaic dispensations. But another era seems to be expressly noticed, and is specifically entitled, "The dispensation (or economy) of the fulness of times;" under which scattered parts will be gathered together; disjointed parts united in one great recapitulation of the whole mystery of God; when the scattered and manifold gradations of the system hitherto in action will appear to have been working together towards one determinate issue—the final development of the glorious scheme of man's redemption in body and soul, as originally conceived and planned in the eternal counsels of Jehovah; when the whole creation, so long groaning and travailing in pain together, under the corruption introduced by the fall, shall be delivered by the power, and subjected to the dominion of the Son of Man, the Second Adam; when the earth, once cursed for the sake of man, shall be blessed again, renewed and fitted for the habitation of the righteous; when the typical theocracy of the people of God shall be realized in the kingdom of Israel restored and given to the risen saints of the Most High; when the Lord shall reign in Mount Zion, and before his ancients gloriously, "during the time appointed of the Father. Then cometh the end, properly so called, (το τελος) thus clearly to be distinguished from the consummation of the age," (συντελεια του αιωνος.)

The detail of this subject, and the scriptural evidences in its support, will appear for the purpose of the present critical examination of the expression in Matthew, which is rendered in our version, "the end of the world;" but, really, the end of the good dispensation, or the end of the age, αιων. The greatest respect is unquestionably due to the authorized English translation; but the original must ever remain the standard of doctrine and interpretation to persons in any degree qualified by education to search after the mind of the Spirit, through the medium of that language in which it is primarily expressed. The indiscriminate usage of the term world as a common rendering of κοσμος and αιων, each of which appear to have a distinct signification—must necessarily occasion some ambiguity in those passages wherein any two of them are used in connection; and if this ambiguity should in any degree be removed by the simple substitution of more appropriate and analagous expressions, some light may be thrown upon subjects of the greatest concern and moment. Take, for instance, a passage in the same Evangelist, where κοσμος and αιων are used in the same connection, and both translated "world." Matt. xiii. 18. "The field is the world, the harvest is the end of the world." On perusing the passage in which these words appear, any plain mind must draw the inference, that at the destruction of this material globe, the procedure, represented under the figure of a harvest, would take place; but when it appears in the original that different words are used, that the world, which is the field, is κοσμος, mundus, globe; and the world which is then to end, is αιων, seculum, age, dispensation or economy; and that "this world" refers to the word signifying age, and not to that which signifies globe; the natural and obvious inference would be, "when this age or dispensation of the world shall end, then shall the harvest come."

That this age is not the proper end of the world, and, therefore, that the harvest is not the end of all things here below, may appear from a passage where our Lord is also the speaker, "This world" is contrasted with "that world," which, on any construction, will be allowed to be still future; and as the word is there also, αιων, it "that world," means eternity, then "this world" must mean eternity also, for it is the same expression precisely.

This world, used for the earth, may be opposed in an English translation to that world, as heaven; but, if αιων be age, and not world, then this age and that age have both a reference to times and seasons, and are periods distinguished from each other. The children of this world marry and are given in marriage; but they which shall be accounted worthy to obtain that world and the resurrection of the dead neither marry nor are given in marriage," (Luke xx. 34,) that is one to another, for they are now betrothed, and then will be married to Christ; for, at his glorious appearance and kingdom, and the first resurrection of the just, the marriage of the Lamb is come. The bridegroom is absent in this age, and the church mourneth; but in that he will be present, and the church of the firstborn will rejoice. "Lo! I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." (αιων, age.) This presence will be allowed to be spiritual, not personal: but it will be personal then as well as spiritual. The Lord's supper was instituted for this dispensation, in the dispensation to come it seems that it will cease: "Ye shew forth the Lord's death till he come;" but when Christ, who is our life, shall appear, we shall appear with him in glory, and enjoy the fulness of that intermediate pledge, in the marriage supper of the Lamb.

In the parable of the tares, he that soweth the good seed is the Son of Man; (Matt. xiii. 37,) and when the harvest of the earth is ripe (Rev. xiv. 15,) the chief reaper is the Son of Man, having on his head a golden crown, and in his hand a sharp sickle. Thus the sower and the reaper will rejoice together, not in the destruction of the kosmos, but of the wicked on the face of it; not in the end of the kosmos, but in the termination of the ages of the reign of Antichrist, and in the fall of mystical Babylon. Rejoice over her, thou heaven and ye holy apostles and prophets. Rev. xviii. 20. Let us be glad and rejoice, for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready. It is thus manifest, that if the harvest in Matt. xiii. 39 be the end of the world, literally, it is not so in Rev. xiv. 14–16; for many things succeed the harvest on the face of it till it is renewed—not destroyed.

The heavens and the earth shall perish, that is in their present form, they shall wax old as a garment, and be folded up as a vesture; and they shall be changed for a more beautiful garment, a kosmos, a restored universe, from its fall and curse, to a perfect Eden, as before the fall of Adam, i. e., what we Scripturally call, "the restitution of all things," it is not a new creation, but merely a restoration of all things living and inanimate. If the promise to Abraham that he should be heir of the world, κοσμος, (Romans iv. 13) is to be fulfilled, it is to be in another age and state thereof; for neither he nor his posterity have enjoyed that inheritance as yet, though for about 1500 years the Jews did hold Canaan, it could in no wise be regarded as the fulfillment of the promise made to Abraham. If it should be limited to his spiritual seed, if the meek are to inherit the earth, γην, (Matthew v. 5) it must be the coming age or dispensation in which God will shew the exceeding riches of his grace in his kindness towards us through Christ Jesus, (Eph. ii. 7,) when Satan will be bound for one thousand years in the bottomless pit, at the close of the present age. There is another passage, where the same indiscriminate use is made of the term world as used for κοσμος and αιων. Hebrews ix. 26. "Then must he often have suffered since the foundation of the world, (κοσμου) but now, once, in the end of the world, (αιων) hath he appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself." And then follows: "To them that look for him, shall he appear the second time, without sin, unto salvation." If he appeared in the end of the world to put away sin, and he is to appear again without sin, and promises, after he had put away sin by sacrifices of himself, to be with his disciples to the end of the world, these expressions cannot refer to the end of the world, properly so called, for of that kind there can only be one; and these are clearly as distinct as the first and second advent, or the dispensations of the fulness of time; when God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, (Gal. iv. 4) and the dispensation of the fulness of times, when he will gather together all things in Christ, (Eph. i. 10) or when he shall send Jesus Christ, which before was preached unto you, whom the heavens must receive until the times of the restitution of all things. Acts iii. 20–26. Therefore, neither of these expressions properly signify the end of the world, κοσμος, but the termination of an age, dispensation or economy; αιων, respectively.

That the gospel dispensation is denominated by the apostle to the Hebrews "the last days" in reference to anterior periods, as that thus the first advent of Christ was the consummation of all preceding ages—συντελεια των αιωνων, and in this sense only the end of the world, in which he appeared; and of all these ages past, present and to come, he is the sovereign disposer. (συντελεια των αιωνων.) 1 Timothy i. 17; Heb. i. 2. They were all constructed and respectively adapted to successive dispensations under each, by the word and wisdom of God, as the Creator and Redeemer of man the Savior of the world—ως Προφητ, Priest and King. And thus the passage in Hebrews ii. 5, through faith we understand that the worlds (τους αιωνας) were formed by the word of God, is translated best by the Vulgate; "Fide intelligimus aptata esse secula verbo Dei," and by Tremellius: "Per fidem intelligimus quod constructa fuerint secula sermone Dei." And if αιων in this passage be properly rendered seculum, (age) it may be questioned whether there be any in which it may not, with equal propriety, or rather with advantage to the sense, be so translated. It has already been shown that αιων thus understood as age, is to be distinguished from kosmos, which must be properly translated, the material world. And the same remarks may be applied, it is presumed, with equal justice to the propriety of this translation of αιων when used in connection with the word κοσμος, habitable earth; and it is conceived that much light will thus be thrown upon the whole doctrine and argument contained in the first and second chapters of the Hebrews, where the expression now to be considered occurs, "the world to come."

The unlearned consider these terms with reference to the eternal state; and the learned have labored to show that in this passage, and perhaps in others, they relate to the present state, and in the gospel; but if the suggestions already read; offered have any foundation, the reference may be neither to the one nor the other, but to that yet intermediate state between the two, which will take place at the consummation of the present age or economy.

The Apostle sets out with distinguishing sundry parts and divers manners, in which God has revealed himself to man; and then says, that in these last days, avowedly the time of the gospel, he has spoken by his Son, by whom also he constituted (appointed, decreed, arranged) the ages, in one of which he sends his Son into the world; and in another of which he will bring him again (Heb. i. 6) into the world, οικουμενην which world to come, it appears by ii. v. He hath not put in subjection to angels, neither are they to be any longer ministering spirits, as at present, i. 14, for them who shall be heirs of salvation; for the heirs of salvation are in that world, as has been abundantly evinced, already entered upon their inheritance, even the redemption of the body, and the angels are there employed in paying adoration, with the rest of the elect, to the First Begotten, then sitting on his mediatorial throne in the glory of his heavenly Father, who says to the Son, "Thy throne, O, God, is for ever and ever (εις τον αιωνα του αιωνος) in seculum seculi, the Vulgate "for the age of the age," not in secula seculorum, for ages of ages, or all eternity, sit thou on my right hand, until I make thine enemies thy footstool. But now, we see not yet all things put under him. But when Antichrist is destroyed, and Satan bound for a thousand years, and Babylon sinks like a millstone, Rev. xviii. 21, and the beast and false prophet are cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, and the man of sin is destroyed by the brightness of his coming, then, his enemies being made his footstool, all things will indeed be made subject. And God will bring his Son again, and during the age to come, succeeding the present gospel age his saints will live again and reign on the earth. Rev. v. 10.

Thus heaven and earth, which are now, must fall away, but the Word of God will not, "for unto the Eternal King of the ages" there remaineth honor and glory for ever and ever, ages of ages, throughout eternity.

S. BONHOMME.

"By faith we understand the ages were adjusted by the Word of God.

"Through faith we understand the ages were disposed by the Word of God.—Ed.

MISTAKES of INGERSOLL,

Being a review of Col. R. G. Ingersoll's lecture entitled "Mistakes of Moses."

By J. M. STEPHENSON.

This is a pamphlet, 8 page tract, printed on fine tinted paper. Price 10c per copy or $1.00 per dozen.

For sale at this Office.

DIED.

McGOVERN—At Mayfield, Pa., Oct. 13, 1880, Elder Malcolm McGovern, aged 59 years, 7 months and 6 days, of long-acting chill.

Elder McGovern was a native of Scotland and came to this country about forty years ago and has resided in Mayfield ever since that time. He embraced the faith about twenty years ago, and was baptized by the writer into the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins. So was a leader of the Church at that time and a friend of the same, believing in the complete mortality of man, the doctrine of the age to come, with a strong faith and hope of having immortality conferred upon him at the first resurrection. Our sister was a faithful wife, and her loss will be felt by all who knew her. A kind husband and two children are left to mourn her departure. The funeral services were conducted by the writer, who addressed a large congregation of sympathizing friends from Gen. iii. 3, proving by the scriptures and other passages that man was made of dust, and as such shall return again to the dust, but by death not to the faith of the gospel, and a patient resignation to well doing, we might be partakers of immortality at the appearing of our Lord and his Kingdom.

PETER ISCARET.

Mayfield, Pa.

MARRIED,

GRIGG—SILLIMPHS—At the residence of Rev. I. J. Kimball, Rockford, Ill., Oct. 27, 1880, by I. dec. H. S. Rice, Mr. C. S. Grigg, of Madison, Ohio, and Miss Emma B. Sillimphs, of Rockford.

LOMAN—KANARR—At the residence of the bride's father, in Marshall county, Indiana, Nov. 7, 1880, by Elder S. C. Hopkins, Mr. Marshall Loman and Miss Mary Kanarr, both of said county and state.

HALSTEAD—SHARPE—On Nov. 3, 1880, in New Albany, Ind., Mr. L. T. Halstead, of Beaucoup, Ind., and Mrs. F. R. Sharpe of New Albany.

We congratulate our much esteemed brother and sister in their new relation of life, and earnestly implore the divine blessing to attend them through life's journey together.—Ed.

LETTER RECEIPTS.

SUBSCRIPTIONS.

E H Williams	1 00	A White	1 00
Jas Elliott	2 00	H Mosher	3 00
G H Rosler	2 00	W A Fewett	3 00
G Cotton	1 00	J Arnold	1 00
Rev C W Jaspers	2 00	D F Miller	2 00
W Tollison	2 00	C E Cobb	1 00
Mrs J Corbett	1 00	F C Wing	2 00
S C Gould	00	J Sayers	1 00
J S Palmer	2 00	J S Abare	2 00
S Trowbridge	1 00	H H Chamberlain	2 00
J H Thaine	1 50	J G Brighby	00
Mrs C W Rosella	2 00	J Sayers	1 50
Sarah J Stull	2 00	John Owens	2 00
J T Townsend	1 00	N Hall	2 00
J Hoak	1 00	H S Farnsworth	2 00
John Temple	1 00	I P Welch	1 00
Samuel Stone	1 00

BOOKS AND TRACTS

Mattie Blackwell	5	F G Gray	65
J M Castle		J Sayers	1 00
Loyal Bunch	35	R Barkley	1 00
H S Bowers	60	Jas Lawrence	15
J Roper	1 00	W J Curry	2 50
C C King	01	Mrs Martha Slaker	60
P W Cotton	50	G B Willett	30
S Murphy	10

RESTITUTION FUND.

Amount paid bro' previous to this $157 39
Mrs. Jacques 2 10
J Roper 10

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

I will meet the brethren and friends and brethren who may desire to attend, that I will be at Adaline, Ogle county, Ill., for the purpose of holding meetings from Nov. 20 to Dec. 5, and at Iron, six miles south of De Kalb, Iowa, from Dec. 11 to 21, and at Indian Creek, near Nevada, Story county, Dec. 23 and 25.

N. J. MORRIS.

I will speak in Dunbar Body, Fayette county, Pennsylvania, Lord, and expect to commence Friday night before the second Sunday in Nov., and at Brashear, Ill. Chase of Michigan, and expect to commence Friday night before the third Sunday in Nov.

In hope,

J. M. STEPHENSON.

A NEW TRACT.

Christ's Kingdom!

Where is it? What is it?

Being a discourse delivered at Berwick, Pa., by Jos. Seiler, of Mauch Chunk, Pa. This is a 32 page tract, neatly printed and should have a wide circulation. Send to this office for it. Price 10c.

Something New!

GOD ESTABLISHED,

—AND—

The Bible Vindicated!

—BY—

A. J. EYCHANER.

The above is the title of a new tract, just out, and should be placed in the hands of every infidel in the land. Those who live in infidel neighborhoods will do well to get this work, as it will aid you in combatting their theory. 32 pages. Price 5c each; 12 for 50c, or 30 for $1. Send to the office for it.

SECOND EDITION.

THE GOSPEL OF THE KINGDOM

Advocated in a Series of

TEN DISCOURSES,

—BY—

WILEY JONES.

This edition is elegantly printed and bound by Lippincott & Co., clear type, good paper, 352 pages, sent by mail at the following prices: Plain cloth binding, $1.00; cloth gilt edges, $1.25; leather marbled edges $1.50. To obtain this valuable work, send the price by Postoffice order or registered letter to

WILEY JONES,
Norfolk, Va.

Astronomical Etiology, or

STAR PROPHECIES

Concerning coming disasters on the earth from 1881 to 1885. By M. L. Knapp, D. D., and others. Published by Thomas Wilson. Also contains an appendix by the publisher. 72 pages. 25 cents a copy.

HYMNS OF THE ADVENT

Is the name of a new Hymn Book, just out, compiled by Chas. C. Burgett—compiler of the "Hymns of the Morning"—and published by W. N. Pile, Springfield, Mass.

Mr. Burgett combines in this new work the "Hymns of the Morning" and a fresh and rare selection of gems. As an appendix he adds a selection of "Favorite Hymns" (words only) whose music is familiar as a household word. Those of any churches who have been asking for "Hymns of the Morning" for years past, can now be supplied with this new book, which is superior to the old one in that it embraces all of it and many new and beautiful songs. Those having the "Christian Psalmist" and no music book will find this exactly what they want.

Send to this office for them. Price only 40 cents.

NEW EDITION.

A LETTER TO A FRIEND.

By MRS. C. C. WOODRUFF.

This little book is so well known that the announcement of a new edition has been deemed should not be without it. [illegible]

32 PAGES. PRICE 10 CENTS

Send for a Copy to this Office.

BOOK LIST.

The following publications are kept constantly on hand and will be sent promptly to any address in the United States and Canada, upon receipt of published price. Address all orders to

THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Ind.

The Proverbs. A book of 367 hymns suited to all occasions. Cloth, embossed, Palm, Morocco, Calf, etc.

Bible Tracts. Suitable for wide distribution. No. 1. The Gospel. 2. The Coming and Kingdom of Christ, by Wm. Miller, in Isaiah. 3. Immortality. 4. The Kingdom of God. 5. Nature of Man and Theories of Thinkers. 6. The Two Advents. 7. What is Religion. 8. The Restitution Age. 9. Destiny of the Wicked. 10. Baptism. Ten Cents, or assorted packages of 100, 50c.

FOUR PAGE TRACTS.

25 for 20c; 50 for 35c; 100 for 60c.

Do We Believe? By H. V. Reed. A series of Bible Questions on Life and Death.

The Saints' Meat in Death. Contains an abundance of proof texts.

Life and Death. A concise statement and contrast of the two ages of these terms, with the texts elegantly set Bible new.

Does a Government a Believe. By A. R. Harpster.

Resurrection. By Austin Curtis. A careful examination of the query—"If a man die, shall he live again?" Job xiv. 14.

Is it True? By H. V. Reed. An examination of testimony as to who are subjects of salvation.

What is Death? By H. V. Reed. An excellent contrast of the Bible teaching and modern theory. Should have a wide circulation.

The Improved Parable. The Rich Man and Lazarus, by W. Ealing.

EIGHT PAGE TRACTS.

5c each; $2 for 50c.

Is it Essential to Believe in the Kingship of Jesus? By Benj. Wilson.

Signs of the Times. By Horatio Bonar, of Scotland.

The Soul-sleeping and Soul-reviving. By H. V. Reed. Contemplates the future threefold gathering of the Saints, Israel and the Nations. In Christ.

TWELVE PAGE TRACTS.

5c each; 25c per dozen.

Christian Union. By Joel A. Simonds.

Regeneration and the Kingdom of God. By S. Hopkins. Well suited to inquiring minds.

Immortality Every Man's Right. The grand reality of redemption. By J. H. Cook.

SIXTEEN-PAGE TRACTS.

Five cents each, 15 for 50c; 35 for $1.

The New Birth. By Enoch Pottor.

The Hope for the World. By Joel A. Simonds.

The Kingdom of Messiah. By Alexander Keith, D. D. Set forth in beautiful language and apt Bible quotations.

Which is Right? By T. Wilson. Showing the Bible teaching on the question as to whether Christ's Kingdom is to be on the earth or in heaven.

The Seed of Abraham. By Joel A. Simonds. The promise made to Abraham, renewed to Isaac and Jacob, and so frequently referred to by Prophets and Apostles.

The Way to Rid Sunday. By H. V. Reed. Just the tables to circulate everywhere.

TWENTY-FOUR PAGE TRACTS.

Ten cents each; 6 for 50c; 12 for $1.

Das Evangelium des Reiches Gottes. Teaches the true nature of God's Kingdom.

Shall the Earth be Burned Up? By T. Wilson. An argument from the Scriptures showing that the earth will not be annihilated, as many suppose, but will be the everlasting inheritance of the saints.

Witchcraft Cherished; or, the Voice of God Against Spiritualism. By H. V. Reed. Cannot be too widely circulated.

The Scriptures. By Joel A. Simonds.

THIRTY-TWO PAGE TRACTS.

Ten cents each; 6 for 50c; 12 for $1.

Evangelium concerning the reign of Christ over Israel and the Nations, or a brief statement of the things concerning the Kingdom of God and the Name of Jesus Christ. By Wiley Jones.

The Restitution of the World restored to its Primeval State, and able to its everlasting condition. By E. Miller. A careful and satisfactory examination of Acts iii. 21.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS.

The Rich Man and Lazarus. By Thomas Wilson. The exposition throughout is in harmony with Bible teaching. Thirty-six pages, price 15c.

Primitive Christian Faith. Being a concise history of the Primitive Christian Faith, or the Gospel as held by the Apostolic and Primitive Fathers, as set forth in many of their own words. By C. F. Sweet, of Attica, N. Y. Price 15 cents.

Bible Echo. Vol. I. May 1 to Dec. 1878. A semi-monthly English weekly, edited by W. Ealing. Contains important papers and discussions on Bible matters. Not now published. 7 volumes. Originally $3.50, now offered at $2.

Bible Echo. Vol. II. January to June, 1879. 7 volumes, formerly $3.50, now $1.

Bible Echo. Vol. III. July to September, 1879. 3 volumes. Completes the Bible Echo as a weekly. Former price $1.75, now 75 cents.

The Bible Opened by the most irrefutable evidences relating to the authenticity and credibility of the Holy Scriptures. By W. H. Wilcox. Just the thing for General Circulation, as it points and exposes in a clear, emphatic manner their fallacies of the day, and is a plain defence of the Bible. 48 pp. Price 25 cents.

The Doctrine of Immortality. By James H. Whitmore. 80 pages. 20 cents postpaid. Everybody should have it.

The Doctrine of Baptism as taught in the Holy Scriptures, together with a collection of evidence upon this subject, from the most learned theologians, critics, lexicographers and ecclesiastical historians. 84 pages, on heavy paper, price 20 cents.

Four Books upon all Subjects. A book bulging enough to weigh 2 lbs. 320 pp. Cloth bound. Worth 60 cents. Sent postpaid for 30 cents. Only 40 cents.

Future Punishment. Its nature and duration. By Henry Constis, Presbyter of Geneva. 250 pp. Exactly the book for the times. Cloth $1.25.

The Destiny of Russia, as foretold by Ezekiel Prophecy, together with an outline of the future movements and destiny of England, Germany, Persia, Africa, and the Jews. Contains a map of England and Asia. A work invaluable to every student of prophecy, and of intense present interest. 118 pages, cloth, 35c.

The Rich Man and Lazarus. By C. F. Sweet, 1878. 64 pp., price 15c. A careful unfolding of Luke xvi. and xvi., with an examination of Psalm xlix. and xxiv.

God's Plan of Salvation. By J. M. Stephenson. Over three hundred pp. For a long time our brethren have desired a work which would embody the leading points and arguments of our faith and hope. Brother Stephenson's work is a long, comprehensive and able statement of the leading phases of Bible theology. Our brethren will find this just the thing to read and circulate. The nature of man, the kingdom of God, and the obedience of faith, are ably and clearly set forth. Cloth binding $1.

New English Books.

Bible Triumphant. By Mrs. H. V. Reed. Paper, 50c. A reply to "16 self-contradictions of the Bible," by A. J. Davis. An able refutation of Infidelity.

Fitting Words for Honest Scripts. By Mrs. H. V. Reed. Cloth 50c. Many of our friends are familiar with the nature of this book, but the heedless of the several chapters will show its value. Chap. 1. Origin of the Bible; chap. 2. Sacred books of other nations; chap. 3. Science and the Bible; chap. 4. Need of the Bible; chap. 5. Testimony of the Spirit; chap. 6. Early progress of Truth; chap. 7. Miracles; chap. 8. Prophecies of Christ; chap. 9. Religious; chap. 10. Manners; chap. 11. Heathen Oracles; chap. 12. Objections answered; chap. 13. The Story of the Scriptures.

Hades, or the Intermediate State of the Dead. By Henry Constable, A. M. Cloth, $1.50. Presents the Bible doctrine of the state of man between death and the resurrection.

Discussion on the State of the Dead. Between the Rev. W. C. Brannan, Congregational minister, and W. Kelloway, editor of Signs, Rule, and minister of the Gospel. Both of England. The propositions discussed were: 1. That the dead exist in a living, conscious state after their decease. Affirmed by W. C. B. 2. That the Scripture teach that man in death are wholly unconscious, inanimate, and unable to perform any act whatever? not that they rest in darkness, silence and the dust. Cloth, 400 pages, etc.

THE NEW TESTAMENT IN GREEK AND ENGLISH,

INTERLINED WITH

EMPHATIC DIAGLOTT,

Containing the original Greek text of the New Testament, with an interlinear word-for-word English translation, based on the readings of eminent critics, and on the various readings of the Vatican Manuscripts, together with illustrations and explanatory foot notes, and a copious selection of references by Benjamin Wilson.

The literal translations of various passages in the New Testament are the foundations on which most of the saints of Christians have been built up; with this work each reader may judge for himself whether the words there literally translated are so wrongly in the common version as to express the exact meaning of the New Testament. A three-fold edition on finer paper: One vol., 481 pages. Price, when sent, $4.00; Library binding, $5.00 postpaid. For sale at this office.

Address, THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth Ind.

POETRY.

Home.

Home's not merely roof and room;
It needs something to endear it.
Home is where the heart can bloom;
Where there's some kind lip to cheer it.

What if care with none to meet,
None to welcome, none to greet us?
Home is sweet—and only sweet—
Where there's one we love to meet us.

Home's not merely four square walls,
Though with pictures hung and gilded;
Home is where affection calls,
Filled with shrines the heart hath builded.

Home! go watch the faithful dove
Sailing 'neath the heaven above us;
Home is where there's one to love,
Home is where there's one to love us.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Reasons For Encouragement.

G. H. MYERS.

When we come to contemplate our own efforts, and our slow work in the way of increase in numbers, in the establishment of permanent congregations, in effectual concentrative work, in the spread of the truth, we become almost discouraged. And further, when we exercise our best talents and energies to build up and to establish congregations permanently, and then in a few years by deaths, by removals, and sometimes by internal troubles see them torn asunder and scattered as it were to the four winds, we feel almost as Elijah did when meditating upon Israel's apostasy, "I alone am left." But the reply to Elijah by the Lord was: "Yet I have left me seven thousand in Israel, all the knees which have not bowed unto Baal." And so at the present time when we come to turn our minds to the outside picture and to look upon the world around us we are led to conclude that the truth still has its power and is accomplishing its work. We are not to conclude that we are as a body of people the embodiment of all wisdom; that we have all the truth, and everybody else is in error, that we dwell completely under the full orb of light, and everybody else is in total darkness. We find that God's grand truths are shining into the hearts of others, and are from these as well as from us radiating to the world. We find these truths in their various types coming up in Councils, in Presbyteries, in Synods, and in Conferences almost constantly, and demanding the unloosening of the bonds of creeds, and asking for more room and greater range of thought and liberty of expression.

But a few years ago Dr. True stirred the very foundations of the Methodist Conference in New York on the "Life and Death" question. Prof. Swing's proposed reward of $50,000, for plain and positive Bible proof of the soul's inherent immortality has never been met by any one yet. Three years ago, led on by H. W. Beecher, the sacred desk was made to sound out in opposition to the doctrine of eternal misery. Elder Spurgeon, London's noted and world-wide famed minister, has spoken unmistakably in favor of a fifth monarchy, i. e. of the restoration and millennialization of Israel in their long promised land, and the reign of Christ and the saints over the nations. Two years ago, in New York, was assembled a large body of men, than whom brighter intellects this continent does not afford, in prophetic conference in which "the things pertaining to the kingdom" were discussed and their lectures to the extent of 200,000 copies were distributed to the world before they went into book form. And lastly and recently is the stormy scene through which the Illinois Conference has just passed in trying to dispose of Dr. Thomas for his departure from the old lines and creed bound articles of faith of Methodism upon the questions of eternal misery and atonement. And next in line comes the following letter written in reference to Dr. Thomas' case, and published in the Chicago Times of Sunday, Oct. 24:

METHODISTS ON DR. THOMAS.

The following is an extract from a private letter from Rev. S. L. M. Conner, a Methodist clergyman of Baltimore:

"There is a tendency to a narrow bigotry in all churches. Clerical automatons, who, like parrots, preach by rote, always have a majority, and are necessarily intolerant. It is much easier to memorize other men's ideas and to preach them than it is to originate ideas. I deeply sympathize with Dr. Thomas, though I may differ from him. He who believes in the angelic idea of an immortal soul superadded to man, has an elephant on his hands. Being immortal, the soul cannot die, and hence the penalty of death predicated of the supposed undying soul must mean something else than death when spoken of the body, and, as Christ suffered for the soul as well as the body, that suffering must mean something else than death, and what else? The Bible does not say, and nobody knows. No wonder the doctor, as well as all believers in natural immortality, has some ideas of the atonement. Christ assumed our responsibility, and that amounted to perpetual torment, according to orthodox ideas. Did he pay the debt or suffer the supposed penalty? The thought is blasphemous. No. Christ never suffered eternal torment, and if that is the wages of sin (which it is not), then the penalty of sin is still unpaid, and the atonement incomplete. All thinking minds must and do break away from Calvinistic or rather Platonic orthodoxy on this subject, though all are not as candid as Dr. Thomas to express their convictions. The difficulty about the atonement grew out of the horrible idea of eternal torment being the wages of sin. Let us once understand that God only hath immortality per se, and that human immortality is a gift promised them that continue in well-doing, and that the wages of sin is death (Gen. iii. 19), and there can be no trouble in believing that Christ died the just for the unjust to bring us to God, and the atonement is rational and complete. For Christ really died; voluntarily submitted to the penalty, 'In' (or rather as the Hebrew reads) 'after the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die.' After his expiration on the cross, Christ was as truly and really dead until his resurrection as though he had never existed. He lived before his crucifixion and after his resurrection, but the interregnum between his death and resurrection is shrouded in the blackness of darkness. His soul (or body) for the Hebrew is the same, descended into hell (sheol Hebrew, hades Greek), which Charles Wesley describes:

> A land of deepest shades,
> Unpierced by human thought,
> The dreary regions of the dead
> Where all things are forgot.

"All this is natural and explicable if, as Job says, man is mortal, but upon the Platonic idea of man's natural immortality it is senseless jargon. I do most assuredly believe that the wages of sin is death and that Christ died according to the Scriptures, and so made a complete atonement for all men, 'but especially those who believe so that God may be just as the justifier of them that believe.' In other words Christ has made salvation possible for all men but absolute only to His disciples, hence 'He that believeth and is baptized (or obeys my precepts) shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be damned,' or unsaved, i. e., shall not share in the advantages of the atonement, and hence remain just where he would have been had Christ never died. And that is in the dominion of death which is the normal condition of all things excluded from God's favor. For his favor giveth life. Well may God say: 'I call heaven and earth to record that I set before you life and death. Choose life that ye may live.' But some will choose death in the error of their ways.

"E. Beecher has published a volume on 'Retribution' which is a bomb-shell in the camp of the orthodox, and which you will do well to study. I agree with Dr. Thomas that where there is sincere repentance, whether here or hereafter, there may be forgiveness, but will there be such repentance? Who dare say it? The idea of penitential pardon in the beyond the grave does not relieve the difficulty, as that must be contingent. Who dare say otherwise? All is a baseless fabric of a vision, but then the undying soul must be disposed of in some way.

"Give up that heathenish idea and there remains of the impenitent, after death, nothing to repent and nothing to be pardoned; no ghosts or ghouls, no spooks or grave-yard specters, no purgatories where God shall burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire and gather the wheat into his garner."

Here is the true ring all the way through. Here is courage and manliness in expression. Evidently this man has studied his Bible well, and has learned how to successfully dispose of every difficulty which confronts the immortal soulist.

One more reference before we close this article. A late number of a Congregational paper published in Chicago contains a letter from a Congregational minister in Cincinnati, who says he "feels compelled to reject and strongly condemn real, consistent Calvinism," and he quotes approvingly the printed language of two other Congregational ministers, one of whom says:

"The churches call themselves Calvinistic, but they are not Calvinistic; while many of the clergy have done what one of the most eminent and evangelical of their number said to the writer he had done—'laid it upon the shelf long ago.'"

The other says:

"If the Westminster confession is not the exponent of a system of bald and unrelieved fatalism; if it does not represent God as unjust and cruel, grinding men to a sad end, and then blaming and punishing him for having it, and sending him to hell for not accepting a salvation never provided, then much of its language is unfortunate and misleading, and should be discarded."

Let us not become discouraged, brethren; if we grow cold, if we become inactive, if we refuse organic and co-operative work for the spread of the truth, if we close our purse strings and thereby drive our men from the field, God will, and is raising up others to become instrumental in the dissemination of his truths. As he has prepared a Rest, and they to whom it was first preached could not enter in because of unbelief, so he has prepared the crown, and if we will not as humble instruments, and overgenerous stewards labor for it he will give it to those who will. It is encouraging to see the narrow bands of creeds broken, the dishonoring old stereotyped interpretations of the middle centuries laid aside, the marks or characteristics of the Paganistic beast rejected and the clearer light breaking forth from almost all quarters. Truly "the world moves."

SELECTIONS.

Prophecy and the Eastern Question.

There is an element in this question which imparts a peculiar solemnity to the crisis which is now engaging the thoughts of men; it is the feeling that is abroad that these events have something to do with prophecy—that programme of divine operations on earth revealed ages ago to the prophets of Israel. This feeling is a vague feeling in a majority of cases. Few people could give a reasonable account of it. It is a something they have caught up from a popular hear-say in a form they could scarcely define, and a something in which they place very little faith, but which at times of public peril, recurs to them with a discomfort as a something in which there may be a foundation of truth somewhere if they could get at it. Educated people regard the whole matter as a popular delusion, and, therefore, beneath their attention. But even they have occasional qualms of apprehension that there may lurk some truth inside this popular tradition.

What is the foundation of this vague association of prophecy with the public events of these times? On what does the tradition rest? Is it possible to get an accurate and satisfactory knowledge of the subject? Can it be shown, on the one hand, that it is possible rationally to trace the finger of God in these events, and to anticipate with clear reason, unusual and momentous issues from their culmination? Or, on the other hand, can it be demonstrated that such a view is the mere fantasy of superstition? An interesting inquiry all will agree, at the present crisis, and one which it would be satisfactory to prosecute to one or other of these definite results. No man can be acquainted with the Bible without perceiving that its prophecies are of a very exalted order. They are not the mere foretelling of events in the idle sense of telling beforehand what is going to happen: they are the outlinings of the leading events in history in so far only as they are related to the divine purpose on earth. They do not include all histories or all the events of any history. They are intended to throw light on God's purpose alone, and, therefore, are found clustered around one people on earth whom he has chosen as the basis of his plan, in the past and future—the Jews, of whom it is said, "you only have I known of all the families of the earth," Amos iii. 2; and again, "Salvation is of the Jews," John. iv. 22. The perception of this simple fact relieves the subject of many perplexities.

That in this channel, the events of the future have been foreshown is a demonstrable and important fact. The evidence is too extensive even to look at here. Meanwhile, it may not be without advantage to quote one or two express statements on the point: "Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret to his servants the prophets." Amos iii. 7. "There is a God in heaven that revealeth secrets and maketh known to the king Nebuchadnezzar what shall come to pass in the latter days." Dan. ii. 28. "The revelation of Jesus Christ which God gave unto him to show unto his servants things which must shortly come to pass, and he sent and signified it by his angel unto his servant John." Rev. i. 1. If these statements are true, we ought to be able to find recognizable and measurable light in the Scriptures on the leading events of history, and, therefore, on such a gigantic affair as the Eastern Question, which so radically effects and imperils great national interests, and involves the destiny of the land of Jehovah itself—now a pachalic of the threatened empire of Turkey.

But it may be objected that the affairs in question are perfectly human in their character. It may be said their origin can be so exactly traced to natural causes as to exclude the possible operation of occult influences. The Turks, it may be said, being a brutal race, have for centuries brutally treated the races that have been brought under their subjection by conquest, and that as a result, their empire is weak; and that Russia, by the operation of a perfectly natural ambition, desires possession of a desirable territory, so evidently destined to fall out of Turkish hands by and bye: that, therefore, it is absurd to seek for a divine view of the case, or to regard the consequent events as forming any part of a divine programme.

The answer is obvious to those who accept the Bible and have made themselves familiar with its contents. We find a discover that the springs of human action are accessible to divine control, and that men under the influence of feelings perfectly natural to themselves are often made use of to accomplish things that God has purposed without their being in the least aware of it. Let two illustrations suffice where there are hundreds. Israel revolted from the law of God. In punishment for their revolt, God sent upon them the king of Assyria to desolate the land and subject the inhabitants to the horrors of invasion. The fact is stated thus: "O Assyrian, the rod of mine anger. . . . I will send him against a hypocritical nation, and against the people my wrath will give I him a charge." At first sight, it would seem from this as if a direct and personal commission were sent by messenger to the Assyrian court, and that the Assyrian monarch acted in consequence as the willing and willing agent of Jehovah in the punishment of Israel. But this view is expressly excluded by what follows: we are given to understand that the Assyrian acted out his own view without even being aware that God was using him. It is added: "Howbeit, he meaneth not so, neither does his heart think so; but it is in his heart to destroy and to cut off nations not a few. For he saith, are not my princes altogether kings. . . . He saith, by the strength of my hand I have done it, and by my wisdom, for I am prudent." The divine comment on the Assyrian pretensions in the case is unmistakable. It is this: "Shall the ax boast itself against him that heweth therewith? Or shall the saw magnify itself against him that shaketh it?" Isaiah x. 5, 13, 15. Thus the Assyrian was aiming at the accomplishment of his own ambitions, in utter ignorance of the fact that God was using him as an ax to hew down the Israelitish tree of wickedness. The event was perfectly human in its character, so far as the agency was concerned, and yet was a divine operation intended to effectuate divine objects.

The other instance is similar: "Lo, I raise up the Chaldeans, that bitter and hasty nation, which shall march through the breadth of the land to possess the dwellings that are not theirs. . . He shall pass over and offend and impute this his power unto his God." What is the comment? "Lord, Thou hast ordained them for judgment. O mighty God, thou hast established them for correction." Hab. i. 6, 12. So also with the Roman invasion, foretold ages before by Moses as a divine visitation for the sins of Israel: the Romans were unconscious of being divinely guided in their proceedings. They but yielded to the natural impulse of conquest, and to those who witnessed their proceedings on the spot, there would have appeared to be nothing divine in the events.

On the same principle, the events now impending in the East may be of divine initiation and intent, though perfectly natural on the surface. The simple question is, have these events been made the subject of prophecy? Have they any relation to the purpose of God on earth, as revealed to the prophets of Israel, and set forth in the writings in which they were instructed to record the revelation? If so, the perfect naturalness of them on the surface will be no bar to a divine construction of them by such as apprehend the facts involved in the foregoing argument.

The first clue is simple and palpable. It is a geographical one: Turkey has possession of the Holy Land, and whatever happens to Turkey must affect that land as part of her dominion. To see this fact in its true importance, we must look at another, viz., that the Holy Land is the geographical basis of the Divine work upon earth. No one will question this as regards the past. In the Holy Land the divine nation of Israel was established. Moses and Joshua guided them thither from Egypt. In the Holy Land Samuel judged them, and David and Solomon reigned. In the Holy Land, Jesus the Son of God, appeared, and lived his wondrous life, which in its effects has already largely changed the condition of mankind. The Bible is the book of the Holy Land. So much all admit concerning the past. But is there no future for the Holy Land?

This is the question which gives the Eastern embroglio its chiefest interest and importance. It is a question, the answer to which is one of the plainest this taught in the Bible and yet to which there is the strongest opposition. The part of the great bulk of professing Christians. The answer is one which we must establish before we can hope to create for the Eastern Question that interest which sensible people are requiring the facts of the case must feel; and before we can attract to it that amount of attention which it cannot fail to receive at the hands of such.

It is very easily established when once resurrection is accepted as the mode of future retribution; and the earth recognized as the arena of the divine purpose with regard to man living upon it.

The future portion of the righteous is frequently spoken of in the New Testament as "the inheritance," and this inheritance is said to be a thing promised. Gal. iii. 18. Standing foremost at the very beginning, indeed of this promise—we find Abraham, in whose case we are able to localize the inheritance at the start. It is testified that Abraham had the honor to receive the promises. Heb. xi. 17. "To Abraham and his seed were the promises made." Gal. iii. 16. As to the subject of the promise, so far as Abraham's personal part in it was concerned, we are informed that, "God gave the inheritance to Abraham by promise." (verse 18.) Now what was this inheritance that was given to Abraham by promise? This question is answered by Paul in a way that is simple, conclusive, and in harmony with the meaning of the term and the facts of Abraham's case. "By faith Abraham, when he was called to go out into a place which he should after receive for an inheritance, obeyed, and went out, not knowing whither he went. By faith he sojourned in the land of promise as in a strange country, dwelling in tabernacles with Isaac and Jacob, the heirs with him of the same promise." Heb. xi. 8, 9. Here we have "a place" and "a land" as the subject of the promise of inheritance. There will, of course, be no question that this is the Holy Land, now in Turkish grasp, for it was in this Holy Land that Abraham, when he lived, sojourned as a stranger, and Isaac and Jacob after him.

The only question will be whether the promise was ever fulfilled. On this point, infidels take strong ground as against Christians of the popular type. They say Abraham never inherited the land, and that, therefore, the divine promise has failed. If it can be shown that Abraham is to receive possession of the land at the coming of Christ to set up the kingdom of his father David. Luke i. 32, the force of their argument is gone; but ordinary Christians do not believe this, and, consequently, have no answer to the infidel, except the unsatisfactory one that the promise was fulfilled in the occupation of the Holy Land by the Jews under the law of Moses.

But the answer indicated is the true one. The infidels, of course, are wrong; but so, also, are the Christians when they deny that Abraham will receive the land for an inheritance, in which, in the days of his probation, he sojourned as a stranger.

Their explanation that he received it when the Jewish nation occupied it under the law, is inconsistent with Paul's express reasoning on the subject. Paul says, "If the inheritance be of the law, it is no more of promise, but God gave it to Abraham by promise." Gal. iii. 18. He also says, "The promise that he should be the heir of the world was not to Abraham or his seed through the law, but through the righteousness of faith." "If they who of the law be heirs, faith is made void, and the promise made of none effect." Rom. iv. 13.

Now the Jews held the land under the law of Moses, which made their occupation of it conditional on obedience to its provisions. See Deut. xxviii, entire. They did not render this obedience and they were consequently scattered among the nations of the earth as at this day. The dispersion of Israel is evidence that their occupation of the land of promise was under the law, and not under the promise. Consequently, there still remains a future occupation by Abraham under the promise; for it is beyond question that Abraham never inherited the land during his own life. Acts viii.; 5. Gen. xxiii. 4.; Heb. xi. 13.

It is this future occupation that forms the pivot of the entire prophetic science. Let any one read the books of Daniel, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, &c., &c., and he will be fully convinced of this. Two examples from the first of these books may suffice for what, without exaggeration, may be called hundreds. The second chapter foretells a day when "nation shall not lift up sword against nation neither shall they learn war any more."—Isaiah ii. 4. There is no need to prove that this is future. Now, observe the geographical surroundings of this state of things. "The mountain of the house of the Lord shall be exalted above the hills . . . The law shall go forth from Zion and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem"—verses second and third. The twenty-fifth chapter foretells—verse 8, a day when tears will be wiped from all faces, and death shall be swallowed up of victory. There is no need to prove that this is yet future. Observe, then, the geographical surroundings identical with the other case. "In that day shall this song be sung in the land of Judah"—xxvi 1. "The Lord of Hosts shall reign in Mount Zion and in Jerusalem"—xxiv. 23. The whole of the prophets have the same characteristic: their delineations of the coming glory are interwoven inseparably with the land promised to Abraham.

Let not the reader regard this as an unimportant fact. Let him not suppose it is unconnected with the glory and the work of Christ. Let him remember that the spirit of Christ in the prophets "testified beforehand the the sufferings of Christ and the glory that should follow.—I Peter i. 11, and that, therefore, the writings of the prophets, which Peter styles "the sure word of prophecy," is "a light in a dark place, until the day dawn," to which "we do well to take heed"—2 Pet. i. 19. The day spoken of has not yet dawned, but it will arise in due time, and that due time there is reason to believe to be near at hand, as will appear in what is to follow. It is the day of the glory of the Holy Land, as the inheritance of the chosen of God, and the scene of the exaltation of Jesus, returned in power and great glory, to sit on the throne of David, and reign over all peoples, nations, and languages.—Isaiah ix. 6; Jeremiah xxiii. 5; Luke i. 32; Dan. vii. 15; Rev. xi. 15.

ROBERT ROBERTS.

SENTENTIOUS PARAGRAPHS.

Difficulty is the nurse of greatness—a harsh nurse, who roughly rocks her fostering children into strength and athletic proportions.

Write your name by kindness, love and mercy in the hearts of thousands you come in contact with year by year, and you will never be forgotten.

A fair compensation for honest service is the best service you can make a man, and the best gift he can receive.

It is not by deeds of might and power
That the world's great work is accomplished at last;
But by patient toil through each lonely hour,
Each duty performed ere its time be past.

More hearts pine away in secret anguish, for the want of kindness from those who should be their comforters, than for any other calamity in life.

Secret kindness done to your fellow creatures is as beautiful as secret injuries are detestable. To be invisibly good is as godlike as to be invisibly evil is diabolical.

To live one day with the happiness, it may be, of a year dependent upon it, ought to make men and women careful how they live; but with the eternal life so closely interwoven into the life that now is, and every word, feeling, thought and act so many seeds that will grow to future harvesting, how serious a thing is life!

Art thou weary, tender heart?
Be glad of pain;
In sorrow sweetest things will grow,
As flowers in rain.
God watches, and Hope will have sun
When clouds their perfect work have done.

Every real and searching effort at self-improvement is of itself a lesson of profound humility. For we cannot move a step without learning and feeling the waywardness, the weakness, the vacillation of our movements, or without desiring to be set upon the Rock that is higher than ourselves.—W. E. Gladstone.

Light came when Christ was born, darkness when he died, how dark this world would be without the Sun of Righteousness. A new star directed the worshippers to Christ. And at his death there was darkness over the earth for three dreadful hours.

We must not hope to be mowers,
And gather the ripe gold ears,
Until we have first been sowers,
And watered the furrows with tears.

It is not just as we take it,
This mystical world of ours;
Life's field will yield as we make it,
A harvest of thorns or of flowers!

The finest and most renowned of the arches in Rome is the arch of Titus, which that Emperor built to commemorate the capture of Jerusalem. No Jew ever passed under it except forcibly, and at the present day, when the Jews are uppermost in official influence at Rome, they are in favor of its destruction, as being a memento of cruelty and humiliation to their race.

THE RESTITUTION.

Keep Brother Hess Article

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

WHOLE NO. 688. Plead PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, NOVEMBER 24, 1880. VOL. XXIX, NO. 45.

THE RESTITUTION

IS PUBLISHED

EVERY WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON,

[illegible]

[illegible]

S. A. CHAPIN, [illegible] EDITOR.

[illegible]

TERMS:—$2.00 PER YEAR IN [illegible]

[illegible]

ADDRESS ALL LETTERS RELATING TO THE PUBLICATION OF THE RESTITUTION

Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

[illegible]

COMMUNICATIONS.

Coming Age—Its Proximity—Evidence Drawn From the Apocalypse—The Book Itself—Is It a Revelation From God?—Unity of Design—History of the People of God to Their Final Triumph—Their Chief Enemies—Their Conflicts—Roles of Prophetic Events That Run Through to the Consummation.—No. II.

E. L. WITHEY.

1. Apocalypse. The Greek title of the book of Revelation is [illegible] Apocalypse of John the Revelator. Who wrote the book? John the Evangelist, that beloved disciple that reclined on Jesus' breast at the last supper—the author of the gospel. It was proper, therefore, that this disciple, to whom the blessed Redeemer had given the charge of his mother, in the flesh, should be the one selected to see, hear, and record Christ's last revelation to his people.

That Revelation is introduced in these words: "The Revelation of Jesus Christ, which God gave unto him, to show unto his servants things which must shortly come to pass; and he sent and signified (it) by his angel (messenger) unto his servant John: who bare record of the word of God, and of the testimony of Jesus Christ, and of all things that he saw. Blessed (is) he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy; and keep those things which are written therein; for the time is at hand." Rev. i. 1-3.

Does the book contain a Divine Revelation? The history of the past eighteen centuries attests its Divine origin. No human intellect can see the future as was open to the view of John. His chart, constructed upon the scale of what he saw and heard, is correct in every particular. No sea or ocean has been plotted with equal accuracy. It is a transcript of the mind of the Deity, that sees the future as the past; that can delineate coming events with equal exactness, as those in the past.

Unity of Design.—What purpose had God in this Revelation? To make known to his servants things which were shortly to come to pass. The Revelation is from God to Christ, who sent it by his messenger, to John, who was to make it known to the people of God then living, and to those succeeding them, till the consummation. It was evidently the intention of God to make the revelation a practical lesson for his people, during their bloody persecutions by presenting their ULTIMATE triumph. Without such cheering hope in the era of Pagan and Papal martyrdom, the Christian sun would have set in storm. With this Divine Chart before them they took courage, and smiled and shouted in the face of the tempest.

The Apocalypse is a Chart,—a prophetic, photographic history of the people of God from the time of the Apostles, to their final establishment in the New Earth. Such being its character, we have only to compare its scenic views with the history of the Fourth Monarchy and its family of Nations and Churches to reach our [illegible] to learn what we [illegible] cies have been accomplished: then, deducing these from the entire prophecies, we ascertain what still remain to be fulfilled. As a sea captain examines his chart to ascertain his latitude and longitude, and learns his exact position by the portion of the chart passed over. So we, with our Divine Chart in hand must determine what [illegible] are in or near to decide our bearings.

The Book of Revelations contains many threads of prophecy. Of these in Chronological lines we design to write, and, also, to examine the nature and specific character of each. We shall attempt to show why each one is given, by pointing out the end that [illegible] Why did Christ [illegible] to John such a plurality of visions? Why did he not follow the same plan as in the metallic images? Obviously that John, living nearer the events, might be more perfectly instructed. The more dangerous the sea, the more particular should be the chart. Every hidden rock,—every shoal,—every whirlpool or current, endangering the vessel, should have its exact location on the chart.

What has been the character of the Christian era? What dangers have gathered around the Christian voyagers? What seas have been calm? What Pacific ocean have they crossed? What night of eighteen and a half centuries could the pilot of our vessel have lain down to quiet repose? If there had not been one at the helm that neither slumbers nor sleeps, our vessel would long since have found a watery bed.

This Divine Chart has not been furnished for the use of our Captain, but for the benefit of our crew. It is our rainbow—a token that the tempests of human corruption and persecution will not overwhelm us. It shows bright creations in the midst of the gathering storms; a sign that, behind them, a sun is shining that will never go down. Such a chart we have in the book of Revelations. "Blessed (is) he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy, and keep those things which are written therein; for the time is at hand." Rev. i. 3.

Noted Characters on the Chart.—Follow us while we point out some of the most noted personages in the panoramic views exhibited to John in his banishment on the Island of Patmos, A. D. 96. In all our delineations, we shall adhere to the following laws of construction:

1. Every actor, seen in vision, is a symbol of itself or of some resembling agent, where one can be found.

2. Objects of the physical world symbolize, resembling objects in the moral world.

3. Our illustration is a Mirror. Mirror agents and objects are pictures or photographs of real agents and objects resembling them. John saw the photographs.

4. The real agents and objects must correspond in character and action. The symbol must be the exact likeness of the person, thing, or action symbolized. No violation of this general law of analogy will be allowed.

What are some of the noted symbols? The chart has three noted divisions: 1. "The things which thou (John) hast seen, (2.) and the things which are, and the things that shall be hereafter." (The past, the present and the future). Rev. i. 19. The future begins thus: "Come up hither, and I will show thee things which must be hereafter." Rev. iv. 1. With the last division we have principally to do.

Scenic Views.—First Scene.—a. One Like the Son of Man."—What are seen and heard in this vision? b. A great trumpet voice, revealing the messages to the seven churches. c. Seven golden candlesticks. d. Son of Man described. e. Seven stars. f. Two-edged sword. Seven stars are explained to be the seven angels (messengers) of the seven churches, symbols—each star symbolizing a messenger. Symbol from the physical world—the being symbolized from the moral world—compared and found to resemble. The seven candlesticks symbolize the seven churches or light-bearers. Between lamps and churches there is an analogy.

This vision is, therefore, fully explained in all its parts. The great agent in the vision (one like the Son of Man) is fully interpreted—"I am the first and the last; (I am) he that liveth, and was dead, and, behold, I am alive forevermore; and have the keys of [illegible] to learn what we [illegible] and of death." Two-edged sword is his word. Heb. iv. 12; Isa. xlix. 2.

Second Scene.—"A door is opened in heaven. Trumpet voice, Come up hither, and I will show you things which must be hereafter. A throne is set in heaven. Rainbow agent sits upon the throne, four and twenty elders clothed in white raiment were seated before the throne—seven lamps, which are the seven spirits of God—the sea of glass. In the midst, and round about the throne (were) four beasts (living creatures) full of eyes before and behind. Living creatures are, a. Like a lion: b. Like a calf; c. Had the face of a man; d. Like a flying eagle. They had each of them six wings; full of eyes within. The [illegible] ship of the living creatures and of the twenty-four elders are described. These characters belong to the first part of the second scene. What do the four living creatures symbolize? Classes of saints, as will appear from their acts: (1.) They give glory and honor and thanks to Him that sat on the throne. (2.) "The four living creatures and four (and) twenty elders fell down before the Lamb, having every one of them harps, and golden vials full of odors, which are the prayers of the saints. And they sang a new song, saying, Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof; for thou wast slain and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation; and hast made us unto our God kings and priests; and we shall reign on the earth [illegible]. And the four living creatures said, Amen. And the four (and) twenty elders fell down and worshipped him that liveth forever and ever." Rev. iv. 7-9, and Rev. v. 8-10, 11. Their acts are—(1.) Worship. (2.) They have harps of gold. (3.) They have vials full of odors which are the prayers of the saints. (4.) They were redeemed to God by the blood of Christ. (5.) They were made kings and priests. (6.) They shall reign on the earth. These living creatures will be considered again when tracing the through lines. This vision is sufficiently explained to suit our outline view.

Second Part of Scene Second.—The Book of Seven Seals.—The breaking of each seal opens a new scenic view, and new agents occupy John's vision. As the Lamb opens the seals one of the living creatures, after another, invites the prophet to come and see. The agents of the first four seals are the following:

1. A crowned conqueror on a white horse.

2. A warrior on a red horse.

3. A rider on a black horse with balances in his hand.

4. Death on a pale horse. Here the mission of the living creatures terminates. The scenes themselves occupy his attention.

5. The scene of the fifth seal is an altar surrounded with the martyrs of Jesus, crying to be avenged. White robes were given them, and they were required to rest for a little season.

6. The scenes of the sixth seal are alarming,—they are introduced by a great earthquake—shaking, seas, islands and mountains; obscuring the sun and moon and tumbling the stars out of their places, followed by great lamentations among the nobles of the earth, who were calling upon the mountains and rocks to fall on them and hide them from the face of him that sat on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb, as the great day of his wrath had come. Rev. vi. 2, 17.

Third Scene.—Four angels are seen standing on the four quarters of the earth, holding the four winds. Another angel is seen ascending from the east, having the seal of the living God. The sealing then begins and progresses through the twelve tribes of the children of Israel; then among all nations; these come out of the great tribulation. This is the third part of scene second. God sitting on the throne while the Lamb is revealing to John things then in the future.

Fourth Part of Scene Second.—Seven angels with their trumpets. Another angel stood at the altar, having a golden censer; having much incense (the prayers of the saints) to offer on the golden altar. Fire from the altar is cast upon the earth, followed by voices, thunderings, lightnings, and an earthquake.

1. The First Trumpet Sounds.—Its effects John saw—hail and fire mingled with blood—one-third of the trees and grass were consumed. Rev. viii. 7.

2. The Second Trumpet casts a burning mountain into the sea. Verses 8, 9. Third of the sea becomes blood—great calamities on the waters.

3. The Third Trumpet brings a burning star upon the rivers and fountains of waters. Verses 10, 11.

4. The Fourth Trumpet spends its power upon the sun, moon and stars, and their third parts are darkened. Verse 12. An angel is then heard, as he flies in mid heaven, Woe, woe, woe to the inhabiters of the earth by reason of the other voices of the trumpet of the three angels yet to sound. Verse 13.

Thoughts About Faith.

The natural object of faith, or man's capacity for believing, is TRUTH. In other words, when a statement is apprehended and its evidences seen to be valid, the human mind must believe it; that is, admit it to be true. The statement may be misunderstood, but the man must think he understands it; the evidence may be worthless, to him, however, it must appear the reverse.

Take, for instance, Purgatory,—the doctrine held by Roman Catholics that certain souls, and great numbers of them, are subjected to severe pains after death, from which, by various instrumentalities, such as payments by surviving friends and the prayers of the church, the sufferer is sooner or later delivered and admitted into heaven. The Catholic believes this because the evidence authorizes, or he thinks it authorizes, him to do so; Protestants reject the doctrine, because the evidence is held not to warrant their accepting it. Shake the Roman Catholic's confidence in the evidence, or authority for the doctrine, and his faith in the doctrine is immediately shaken. By his very nature, he cannot see the doctrine to be false and still believe it, to keep faith in it then is as much an impossibility for him, or for any human being, as for one to reckon a hill a plain, or a circle a square.

All over the world the most hideous fictions, like the gods of India, are held to be realities, and the gods, as a consequence, are worshipped by their devotees. If they discovered that the gods were not actual beings, their faith in them would vanish at once. Every sincere worshipper regards them as positive existences, and bows to them, and to the priests that minister at their unclean altars; and the benighted devotee will continue to do so while his faith in the system remains entire. Every lie, and the globe is full of lies, must put on the livery and semblance of truth. It is Satan transformed into an angel of light. Instructed eyes discover that it is a falsehood, but those believing in it see it as a truth—as a fact, and therefore worthy of confidence. Man was made to believe only truth, and he has faith in a lie so long merely as it seems to be a truth. Show it to him in its true character and colors as a sham, an imposture, a falsehood, and his faith in it is gone.

BELIEVING AN EASY FUNCTION.

It is the easiest thing imaginable for man to believe; as easy and natural as it is for him to see with his eyes and catch sound with his ears. As to objects of sense the difficulty is never lack of power to see, if the organs of vision are sound; but if a man will shut his eyes, or turn them in a wrong direction, he will never observe any object you wish him to look at and examine. He is lord of his own eyes, as of his own will. He may look or not, he may will to look or not to look, and you cannot change his purpose. He is supreme in his own domain, that is, over himself, and all you can do is to use influence with him, which, as sovereign over himself, he may resist to the last. In other words, when you wish a man to contemplate a particular object in the distance, you do not require to give him eyes, or seeing capacity to the eyes he has, for these God has endowed him with at his birth; you have only to master his will—to constrain him—to do what you desire. He yields to you, and he looks; he remains unmoved, and he looks not.

It is so with his faith power. It is under his mastery exactly as his eyes are; if he will look at any statement, say the Divine gospel of mercy, —if he will examine the message and its evidence—if he will study what he is invited to credit and why he is to credit the blessed record, the work would speedily be accomplished—the end of the gospel would be realized in his case. But if he refuses to examine it well,—if he persists in keeping out conviction from his mind,—if he will bury anxiety in worldly enjoyment,—if he will invent excuse after excuse for delay, he cannot believe, and as a result lives on in extreme peril of eternal death. All these acts he can do, for he is lord of his thoughts and resolutions, as of his eyes, and hands, and tongue, and limbs. It is the easiest thing in the world for him to believe, as easy as it is for him to see. He is believing every day, because he is willing to do so; and he might with equal facility and swiftness believe the gospel, if as sovereign over himself HE WOULD; then forthwith it must be done. As in using his eyes, you cannot, no power can, force him to look in a particular direction; so in believing the gospel, you may constrain him to consider it most seriously, you may plead with him to accept it, and all the blessings it presents, but you cannot, no power can, compel him to welcome the glad sound to his heart. He keeps the key of that chamber, and only admits what he pleases. If the door is opened, the truth enters without an effort. The mind works freely, sweetly, we may say naturally, in doing so; as the eye sweetly, and freely performs its part, when he consents to look at the object near or far away you request him to behold. Master his will in either case, and the conquest is achieved. You would smile in pity, if, be told you seriously he could not see, and that there was no need to turn round and make the attempt; so minutely more you may pity him should he say of the gospel, I cannot believe it, I cannot exercise faith, or the right faith, I need supernatural aid and I must wait till it come. The truth is, he wills not to believe, and in the dusty, lumber room of theology he seeks for a vain excuse to blunt the sting of his quickened conscience.

The only valid excuse in such a case would be—the Gospel is a fable and unworthy of credence. But is it so? Was Jesus' life and deeds a fable? Was his death a fable? Was his resurrection a fable? Was his ascension a fable? Have all the host of conversions by the gospel from sin to righteousness, from terror to the divinest peace and hope been fables? No! The evidence is mighty and it has prevailed in ten thousand times ten thousand cases. The story that speaks of life in Christ for the condemned is not a lie, but truth from heaven. The difficulty is not in a want of ability, but in a want of will to take it. Into that corner every resisting spirit is driven, and out of it he can never come till he says—"I am willing to believe,—I am willing to be saved."

W. G. MONCRIEFF.

London, Ont.

BREVITIES.

The work of the revision of the New Testament, under authority of the convocation of Canterbury, it is announced by cable from London, has been completed. The revisers were in session together forty-seven hours.

The house of refuge on the top of Mount St. Gothard, founded in the fourteenth century, will be permanently closed two years hence. The opening of the tunnel will render it useless, as not even beggars will then cross the mountains on foot. At present the Hospice affords shelter, food and bed to 20,000 people yearly, and is supported by private and public charity. The ride through the tunnel will cost only twenty cents.

The Aurora, in Rome, Italy, announces that a new association has been formed, to raise funds for the Pope. The tribute demanded daily from all Roman Catholics being one centime, or six sous per month. The Savior had not where to lay his head, but the Pope has a palace with 30,000 rooms and 600 staircases, requiring a large army of housekeepers to minister to the worldly pride and luxury of the sinful and dying mortal at its head.

The Flag of the Prophet is in the custody of the Mohammedan chief priest, Sheik-ul-Islam, and is made of green silk. There is a large crescent on the top of the staff, from which hangs a horsehair plume, claimed to have been the tail of Mohammed's favorite horse. On the folds of the flag are displayed the crescent and certain quotations from the Koran. Mohammed adopted green as his emblematic color because nature is green, and it is "everlasting and universal." The following words are on the flag: "All who draw the sword will be rewarded with temporal advantages; every drop of their blood shed, every peril and hardship endured by them, will be registered on high as more meritorious than either fasting or praying. If they fall in battle their sins will be at once blotted out, and they will be transported to Paradise, there to revel in eternal pleasures in the arms of black-eyed houris. But for the first heaven are reserved those of the faithful who die within sight of the green flag of the Prophet. There may no man give or expect money."

An idiot who, perhaps, surpasses all rivals in memory, and in the capacity to make mathematical calculations in his head, was recently examined before the students of the medico-surgical academy of St. Petersburg. He is twenty-seven years old. In his youth he was noted for his brilliant ability, but was addicted to the immoderate use of liquors, and led a dissipated life. He was attacked by an acute disease. When he recovered he was found to have lost all his mental faculties except memory and the power of mathematical calculation. These increased proportionately as his understanding and power of logical thinking vanished. Now he is a living phonograph and calculating apparatus. In the lecture room Prof. Medjevsky requested him to square numbers containing five or six figures, to extract the square roots of like numbers, and so on. All the questions were correctly answered by the patient in a few seconds. No mathematician present could do anything like it. Then the professor requested some one to read poetry aloud for some minutes, and the patient repeated it as correctly as a phonograph. The professor declared to the audience that he was unable to explain this psychical phenomenon. The memory and the calculating capacity of the patient are still growing, while in other respects he is becoming a more hopeless idiot.

Those who believe that the effects of disturbances in the sun are directly felt upon the earth have had many facts this year favorable to their theory. At intervals for months the surface of the sun has been a scene of tumultuous convulsions. The great orb has been shaken with forces whose tremendous power the human mind is unable to grasp. Coincident with these solar disturbances we have witnessed on the earth storms, hurricanes, volcanic outbursts, and earthquakes in unusual number. It was as if the mighty bonds of gravitation, by which the sun holds our globe in its orbit, were alternately tightened and relaxed until the frame of the earth snapped and creaked with the strain. During the pleasant Indian summer weather of the last week the sun seems to have been comparatively at rest. Its face has been as clear as a mirror. Yesterday, however, small spots were once more visible near the eastern edge of the disk, and moving slowly toward the center. Within a week they will probably be plentiful again. Then the sun will be once more shaken with storms, whose forces may reach the earth and usher in the winter with a hurly-burly of rough weather.

Millennial Blessedness.

There is no glory for creation, no deliverance from the curse, no loosening of the fetters of bondage, no millennial blessedness, until the Lord himself arrives. And who, save Him, can claim the honor of wiping off creation's curse, and as the last Adam, undoing the wrong which the first Adam wrought to this material earth, the seat of His royal dominion, which God at first pronounced so good? It was creation's curse as well as man's that He bore. The symbol of that curse was the thorn, and therefore it was with thorns that He allowed Himself to be crowned, that His might show Himself to be the Redeemer of man's earth, as well as of man himself; the breaker of creation's bonds as well as of the fetters of the flesh; not merely the restorer of man to Paradise, but the restorer of Paradise to man.—H. Bonar, D. D.

THE RESTITUTION.

E. A. CHAPLIN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, NOV. 24, 1880.

WILL do the best we can for all our worthy contributors. We have had many good articles sent that we have not used, and have deferred some topics proposed for our own consideration. To suit all our readers we must diversify our subjects, and our paper is limited.

Pictorial Description of the Tabernacle in the Wilderness—Its Rites and Ceremonies. is the title of a tract just received. It contains thirty-two pages, and is handsomely illustrated. Every Bible reader should have a copy, as it not only pictures out the typical ordinances of worship of the Jewish dispensation, but is, at the same time, the best interpreter of Paul's epistle to the Hebrews. Price by mail ten cents.

As the current year is drawing towards its close, will not our brethren and friends make some effort to enlarge our list? Could we add a few hundred names of paying subscribers to our present list, and retain all we now have, our paper would be self-sustaining. We are firmly persuaded that rest will be signalized by important events in fulfillment of prophecy. Papers devoted to prophetic subjects would have ample support if people could only be brought to realize the proximity of the most stupendous events that this world has ever witnessed. For ourself we propose to work and sacrifice for the cause. The church is doing its last work in this dispensation and papers heralding the coming King may not be needed more than a year or two. The decade of the eighties will have a momentous history. If brethren, professedly looking for the Lord will not sustain the cause, and let the beacon lights become extinguished, they may have cause to regret their course when regrets will avail nothing. We do not counsel any waste of property, or neglect of business, but we do say that more should be done for the dissemination of truth than is done. Many brethren that are abundantly able to scatter abroad two or three extra papers do not take even one. Those that have the light will be held responsible for its dissemination. It is sad to know that the doors of the kingdom will soon be closed and all the unfaithful be shut out forever. The responsibility of sustaining our beloved paper is with you brethren. Those that have made some sacrifice this year are none the poorer. They have our thanks and God's approbation.

We extract the following from a more lengthy article from a foreign correspondent to the New York Sun. The Oriental Question will evidently be the source of an "irrepressible conflict" between England and Russia, until the strife is settled in the great conflict at Armageddon. The building of the Euphrates Railway is evidently becoming a political necessity for England, if she would maintain her supremacy in the East. We are rapidly moving into the last grand events of this soon closing dispensation. Let us watch and pray always.

MR. GLADSTONE'S TROUBLES THICKENING.

LONDON, Nov. 5.—The season of London fog and gloom, which has set in with its accustomed virulence, is also the season of extra parliamentary utterances, and of the commencement of political life and activity.

Of all the questions now pending, the one which will probably cause the Gladstone ministry the most serious embarrassment is that relating to the present condition of Ireland. I think it will be found that the policy of prosecuting the leaders of the agitation for conspiracy will prove ineffacious as regards those proceeded against, but very damaging to the government. Messrs. Parnell, Dillon, Sullivan and their colleagues, are not men to be frightened or easily put down. They are making preparations to secure the best talent at the Irish bar. They are supported by a great national sentiment, and when the time comes it will probably be found extremely difficult to obtain the necessary testimony.

And also so far as foreigners are concerned, combinations are being made by the European powers to isolate England politically as being too unsafe to have any connection with. Prince Bismarck is the soul of this movement, and our able ambassador Lord Odo Russell, has come from Berlin, and is at this moment staying with Mr. Gladstone at Hawarden, in the hope of being able to instil a little common sense into the brain of that gifted philosopher, and to point out to him the danger of a transcendentalism in politics which removes his diplomacy so far above the range of ordinary statesmen that they have to combine upon the base grounds of national expediency, while he is soaring away in his doctrinaire balloon into a region of international ethics where it is impossible to follow him, and where he evolves nationality theories which, in the language of Lord Dundreary, "no fellow can understand."

The one power in Europe which is fooling Mr. Gladstone to the top of his bent is Russia. The Russian press can hardly restrain their sense of humor at the situation, while with mock gravity they applaud the noble efforts of the British government; and indeed one of them recently appreciated the joke too openly, and was warned by the government to be more respectful, and not let the cat out of the bag prematurely.

Meantime, while Russia has been loudly complaining in concert with England of the fearful outrages to which the Armenians have been subjected by the inroads of the Kurds, and backing our government in indignant remonstrances to the Sultan, it is now found that these same Kurds have all been armed with Martini-Henry rifles by Russia, the spoils of the late Russo-Turkish war. In fact, this Kurdish insurrection, like the Bulgarian insurrection, has been carefully prepared by the power which expects to reap the advantages of the condition of anarchy which it must create, and the annexation of Armenia is a foregone conclusion. With Armenia annexed to Russia, her frontier is brought down to Diarbekr, at a distance of 250 miles from the Mediterranean at the Gulf of Alexandretta, where the finest harbor in Syria, Ayas Bay, will be at her disposal: but once in possession of Aleppo and its port, she will not stop, but advance southward to Jerusalem, which city and not Constantinople is now the object of her ambition, as the possession of Palestine enables her to command Egypt, and indeed puts her in possession of the key of the East.

But while the train is being laid in Asiatic Turkey, the double policy which enables Russia to sympathize with the Armenian atrocities, while she is arming the Kurds to perpetrate them, is also being carried out in Turkey in Europe, where, while she demonstrates with the combined fleets to force the Sultan to cede Dulcigno, she holds back the Montenegrins from accepting the cession, except upon the most unreasonable terms. Hence the delay in the negotiations there has been quite as much due to the intrigues of Russia as to the resistance of the Sultan.

COMMUNICATIONS.

"Their Rock is not as Our Rock."

The song that Moses wrote and taught to the children of Israel in the closing days of his life was our lesson for the day. We read it slowly and thoughtfully. We have been pondering it since. We have a Rock. In it we have found shelter. It has become our fortress. We can hide behind it and be safe. There is no such hiding-place for the unbeliever. No shelter where he can flee from the storm. His rock is a strange god. The vine that o'ershadows it is "of the vine of Sodom, and of the fields of Gomorrah." "Their grapes are grapes of gall, their clusters are bitter." Their sacrifices are made unto devils, they are held in bondage by Satan.

The blessed word of God is to them as an idle tale. It is foolishness; they cannot understand it. So they mock at truth and make light of judgment. They set themselves up like Goliah and defy the armies of Israel; but how weak do they become in the presence of one who like David, trusts in the Rock. Where is then their strength? Who then becomes the Deliverer. Who will be the Deliverer of Ingersoll in the last day? Where will then be his hope? and the hope of the young who are following in his steps? Will the gold for which he is blaspheming his God, redeem him from the second death? Will it redeem you? Oh young man? Will it rise up and be your protection?

Forsake not your God; be not froward, but set your hearts unto all the words which God has testified unto you, and do them. It is not a vain thing for you, it is your life. Trust in God that raiseth the dead.

S. ROXANA WINGE.

"Practical Religion."

Our Orthodox friends (self-styled) often complain of us who are looking for the speedy coming of the rightful heir to the throne of David, and the consequent establishment of the kingdom, being, as all must admit, who believe that the Bible is authority in matters of faith, the great central point of God's revealed plan of salvation. They often speak sneeringly of our being unduly tenacious with regard to theory, and fail to preach or urge a more practical religion. But, with all due deference to our friends, (many of them, at least,) who are well educated in the theological schools; the more strange still, from the fact, that they would be greatly ashamed to use the same expressions or make the same plea in regard to any other department of science or theory, both of which inhere in the Christian religion in the highest degree. We would respectfully ask our friends if they could reasonably expect any practical religion from any one who should be destitute or greatly lacking in faith? Without this, we are told, "it is impossible to please God." Could we reasonably expect a good practical surveyor unless he understood the theory? Could we reasonably expect a safe voyage across the ocean to any foreign port, unless the conductors of the vessel should understand the science of navigation? The Bible is to the true Christian what the chart and compass and the science of navigation are to the mariner; neither of them are expected to understand either of the respective sciences intuitively, but, by dint of hard study, and often, too, by the light of the midnight lamp. No amount of feeling, emotion or spasmodic excitement, can supercede intelligent faith, "for this comes only by hearing the word." The former belong to a lower plane, viz: Animal, and not to the higher plane of intellect.

This subject was suggested to my mind from hearing the complaints above named. Our people, it is true, are not now assailed as formerly with such a frozen front from our opponents. They all admit now, (some of them rather reluctantly, however,) that we are too strongly intrenched in Bible truth to be easily dislodged; and, furthermore, that we are treated by them with more courtesy than formerly, which, I trust, none of us fail to appreciate. But, to their complaint, to which allusion has been made. I consider it a logical denial of their concessions, viz.: Of our understanding of the Bible. It is an axiom of Bible teaching as well as in philosophy, that effect follows cause. "A corrupt tree cannot produce good fruit," and vice versa. The gospel being "the power of God unto salvation," it follows, logically, that nothing practical can be acceptable to God, when the gospel is not understood, believed or obeyed, for certainly it could not be believed unless it was understood, and, as per consequence, could have no power, hence, all the so-called "practical religion," and all the conversions made in ignorance of the gospel, or God's revealed plan of salvation, must be like the chaff of the summer threshing floor easily driven away by the slightest breeze as is (I am sorry to say) too often exemplified in modern so-called revivals of religion.

M. I. LEWIS.

Rensselaer, Ind.

NEWS ITEMS.

FOREIGN.

TURKEY—SURROUNDED BY ALBANIANS.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Nov. 20.—The troops under Dervisch Pasha at the various points near Dulcigno, are surrounded by Albanians.

NO CONSCRIPTS FROM ALBANIA.

The Albanian League has informed the Turkish authorities that it will forcibly oppose any attempt to execute the decree calling out Redifs for service.

PILLAGED.

The Austrian Consulate at Prisrend has been pillaged by a mob.

EPIRUS.

LONDON, Nov. 20.—A correspondent telegraphs from Magaraka, Epiros, as follows: The position of affairs is very grave. Eight thousand Albanians and Epirates have volunteered to serve under the League. Two thousand assembled here Wednesday. The movement is directed as much against Turkish rule as against the annexation to Greece.

RUSSIA—A QUESTION.

ST. PETERSBURG, Nov. 20.—The Golos asks if the Porte is, through the medium of the Kurdish rebellion, preparing a road for the inevitable Ottoman retreat from Europe to Asia Minor.

ST. PETERSBURG, Nov. 22.—A large number of Nihilist placards have just appeared upon the walls of St. Petersburg, some of them in the most frequented parts of the city. They proclaim in flaming characters the beginning of a fresh revolutionary movement, beside which all former agitations will be considered puerile and insignificant. Ominous warning is given that the throne of Alexander will be vacant before the dawn of another year.

NAPLES, Nov. 20.—The activity of Mount Vesuvius increases. Lava flows abundantly on the side toward Naples.

A bottle has been picked up on the beach near Halifax, N. S., containing a piece of paper on which was written a statement purporting to have been made by Henry Lynch, Master of the bark Jane Glasgow. The date was May, 1880, and the bark was then in 42 degrees 44 minutes north latitude, and in 49 degrees 47 minutes west longitude, and had sprung a leak and was sinking fast. The crew was working with might and main at the pumps, but to no purpose. There were eleven men on board at the time, and, as nothing has been heard of the Jane Glasgow, all must have perished.

Siemens Brothers, of London, the cable contractors, have received an order from the American Union Telegraph Company for the immediate construction of two new Atlantic telegraph cables.

DIED OF DIPHTHERIA.

OTTAWA, Ont., Nov. 20.—Within the past twenty months 400 deaths have occurred from diphtheria in the Upper Gatineau, near Desert. The disease commenced its ravages two years ago in that district, and is now traveling downward. It attacks the young and old alike. A woman who had been called on to nurse a patient contracted the disease and died two days afterwards. There is something very strange about the prevalence of the disease in that locality. The land is high and dry, being well drained, and it is about the last place one would expect to breed disease.

Between Rochester and Utica 700 boats are ice-bound in the Erie Canal. An attempt will be made to clear a passage for them by means of an ice-breaker.

THE DEATH OF GOVERNOR WILLIAMS.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Nov. 20.—Governor James D. Williams died at 12:30 this afternoon. He was born in Pickaway county, Ohio, January 14, 1808. He had been almost continuously in the State Legislature since 1843, except when serving in Congress one term, beginning in 1875, and from which he resigned to accept the Governorship, and the present term is the Governor's chair.

Grave apprehensions are felt in every European capital that a general European war may be caused by the events now transpiring around Dulcigno. The Sultan in stirring up the Albanians has evoked a religious fanaticism which transforms Mohammedans into desperate maniacs, and which he is powerless to control. Already covert hints are thrown out of a massacre of Christians throughout the Turkish Empire, and the cry for "a holy war" is making itself heard. The spectacle of anarchy and massacre would speedily bring down the forces of the Great Powers, and the Turkish Empire would be dissolved amid a struggle for prey such as the world has never yet seen. While these war-clouds hang heavily on the horizon, and men's hearts are failing them for fear, the Christian sees in them only the fulfillment of prophecy. He remembers that his Lord foretold that these things should immediately precede the end, and as he sees the predictions fulfilling he knows that it is nigh, "even at the doors." Mark xiii. 29.

SELECTIONS.

[Jersey City Evening Journal.]

A Converted French Priest.

Father Seguin, an ex-Roman Catholic priest of Montreal, delivered an interesting sketch of his conversion recently in the Communshaw M. E. Church. Mr. Seguin graduated in the Grand Seminary of St. Sulpice, Montreal, where he was for fourteen years a Roman Catholic priest, and nearly all his relatives there are priests and nuns. He claims to have seen many scandals in the Roman Catholic Church among the priests and religious orders, which finally determined him, four months ago, to renounce Rome and join the Independent Catholic Church in New York. In the west he had seen a Romish Bishop who was so drunk while administering confirmation, that two priests had to support the intoxicated prelate. The speaker read the eighth chapter of Romans, basing his discourse on the text "delivered from the bondage of corruption into the glorious liberty of the children of God." He asserted his belief in no Pope but Christ Jesus, and said that courage is liberty and fear is the dungeon of the mind. He had the courage to shake off the bondage of the yoke of Rome, with its errors, abuses and imprisonment of thought. He arraigned Pope Pius IX. for his sympathy with Jeff Davis, assuring the rebel President of the safety of the souls of those who died fighting against the Union. He characterized the confessional as the bottomless pit of perdition for women, and said further that the Irish servant girls of New York tell priests all the private affairs of American families through the medium of the confessional. The priests then inform the politicians of things which may be used by them against their political enemies, and this is what makes the political power of the Romish Church in New York so great. He attacked the apostolic succession of the Roman Catholic Church, and maintained that it ceased to be an apostolic church after the time of Pope Bonifacius. The power of the Pope rests on blind obedience, but the speaker believed in Christ Jesus, and in reason and in faith. As an instance of the hatred and marked persecution of which the Fathers of the Independent Catholic Church in New York are the victims, M. Seguin said that yesterday evening Father O'Connor met two Romish priests in the street who scowled blackly at him, exclaiming loudly: "The devil! The devil. "They were," continued the preacher, "probably coming from the house of Boss Kelly, after arranging everything for the election of their candidate, Wm. R. Grace." There is a population of 50,000 French in New York, most of whom are either Roman Catholics or infidels, and M. Seguin proposes to devote his time and energies to their conversion. In the French language he is a powerful speaker, and he is a fearless man of superior intellect.

Wonderful Change of Sentiment.

The time was, and that not long ago, when the clergy professed to know a great deal of what they call positive truth. They assumed to know for an absolute certainty that every human being was naturally immortal; they also assumed to know that there was a vast ocean of burning brimstone, called hell, wherein the souls of unbelievers were to be tormented eternally; they were equally certain that all good souls who had contributed liberally toward their support, and asked no questions, went straight to heaven when they died. But a most wonderful change has come over the mind ecclesiastical of late, it is surprising how little they feel certain about now: they discover that the gross and palpable absurdities which, in the form of creeds, had been so successfully imposed upon former generations are fast losing their power in the light of increasing intelligence and a more general personal knowledge of the Scriptures on the part of the people. Hence the almost universal abandonment of the old dogmatic ultimatum, "Doubt, and you're damned," and the substitution of mere speculative generalities. In the meantime the grand truths of Christianity lie buried under the accumulations of centuries of ecclesiastical assumption and pagan superstition. Not only have those great principles of truth been robbed of their objective force and character, but the sternest facts in human experience have been so perverted that even death is spoken of as an angel of light, the messenger of God, etc. The duty of holding up and forth the sublime truths of Divine revelation and their logical relation to the needs of humanity was never more imperitive than now. Let every honest believer recognize this fact; let the truth be in him a power, to be seen and known of all men; let it be seen that revealed truth is not the creature of circumstances, but, under Jehovah, their cause, and that our highest honor is in obeying its behests, their greatest shame who would make it serve their selfish interests.

Oh, for men, like Paul of old,
Impelled by earnest love of God,
Abandoning home, self and place,
To tell of his reconciling grace.

The Mystery of the Stars.

It is difficult, when we look at the star-lit heavens, suggestive as they are of solemn peace, to conceive the stupendous energy, the fierce uproar and tumult, of which even the faintest visible star in reality tells us. Pythagoras spoke of the harmony of the celestial spheres, which we are only prevented from hearing by its continuity. "There's not the smallest orb which thou beholdest," said the science of the middle ages,

"But in his motion like an angel sings,
Still quiring to the young-eyed Cherubim."

The science of our own time tells us a still stranger story. There's not the smallest orb which thou beholdest, she says, but in his motion throbs like a mighty heart, still pulsating life to the worlds which circle round it. But while our powers of vision are limited to the narrow range of our present telescopes, we cannot watch the action of these great centres of energy, nor can we hope that the uproar of those remote fires will ever reach mortal ears, though to the mind's ear clear and distinct. It is no longer a mere fancy that each star is a sun, each accompanied by its attendant worlds; science has made this an assured fact, which no astronomer thinks of doubting. We know that in certain general respects each star resembles our sun. Each is glowing, like our sun, with an intense heat. Around each, as around our sun, are the vapors of many elements. In each the fires are maintained, as they are maintained in our sun in some way which may be partly mechanical, partly chemical, but which certainly does not in the least resemble combustion. We know that in each star processes resembling in violence those taking place in our own sun must be continually in progress, and that such processes must be accompanied by a noise and tumult compared with which all the forms of uproar upon our earth are as absolute silence. The crash of the thunderbolt, the bellowing of the volcano, the awful groaning of the earthquake, the roar of the hurricane, the reverberating peals of the loudest thunder—any of these, or all combined, are as nothing compared with the tumult raging over every square mile, every square yard, of the surface of each one among the stars.—Proctor.

Christ's Glory

Until He comes, He is the rejected one. His coming is to end the day of his long rejection, and to introduce the day of His acceptance—the day when He shall be owned by Israel, and by the world, as he is now by his saints—the day when he shall be owned on earth, as now he is owned in heaven. As the great Judge of all, his glory is yet to come; as the King of Kings and Lord of Lords, his glory is yet to come; as the Last Adam, his glory is yet to come; as the Church's Head and Bridegroom, his glory is yet to come; as Israel's monarch, his glory is yet to come; as Antichrist's destroyer and Satan's deliverer, his glory is yet to come.—H. Bonar, D. D.

SENTENTIOUS PARAGRAPHS.

He who wishes to secure the good of others has already secured his own.

Leighton: That flower that follows the sun does so even in cloudy days.

God glorifies Himself when he shines out in the blessed reality of what he is.

John Locke: Good qualities are the substantial riches of the mind; but it is good breeding that sets them off to advantage.

Cudworth: Truth and love are two of the most powerful things in the world, and when they both go together they cannot easily be withstood.

"'Tis good to speak in friendly guise
And soothe where'er you can;
Fair speech should bind the human mind
And form link man to man.
But stop not at the gentle words;
Let deeds with language dwell;
The one who pities starving birds
Should scatter crumbs as well.
The mercy that is warm and true
Must lend a helping hand.
For those that talk, yet fail to do,
But build upon the sand."

Goethe: Talents are best matured in solitude; character is best formed in the stormy billows of the world.

Wickliffe: The Bible is the faith of the church, and the doctrine of the gospel shall never perish.

M. Henry: None but a downright honest man can find favor with God. God has sometimes chosen the foolish things of the world, but he has never chosen the knavish things of it.

BRIGHTER HOURS.

Though dark the present hour may seem
With sorrow, care and strife,
Though gladness may not shed a beam
Upon our sky of life,
Yet fear not—for amid the gloom
One hope is ever ours—
That faith may yet our life illume,
And bring us brighter hours.

Dean Stanley: What pleases only for the moment, whether poetry, or oratory, or policy, will die with the moment. What looks beyond the moment will live beyond the moment. What speaks to the intelligent few will at last make a conquest of the unintelligent many; what speaks only to the unintelligent many will never reach the intelligent few, and will soon be forgotten by the unintelligent many also.

Dr. J. W. Alexander: I have found nothing yet which requires more courage and independence than to rise even a little but decidedly above the par of the religious world around us. Surely, the way in which we commonly go on is not the way of self-denial and sacrifice and cross-bearing which the New Testament talks of.

My home is not on this wild, lone shore,
Where storm-clouds gather and tempests roar;
Where bounding hearts will to breaking soon,
And the sun of the soul go down at noon;
Where sin's dark shadow is cast on all—
Whether bridal wreath or funeral pall;
Where none say wisely, "I here will stay;"
For written on all is "Passing Away."

PICTORIAL DESCRIPTION
OF THE
Tabernacle in the Wilderness
ITS RITES AND CEREMONIES.
By the Late JOHN DILWORTH.
32 Pages, Price 10c. For Sale at this Office.

A NEW TRACT.

Christ's Kingdom!
Where is it? What is it?

Being a discourse delivered at Berwick, Pa., by Jos. Bailey, of Mount Church, Pa. This is a 32 page tract, neatly printed and should have a wide circulation. Send to this office for it. Price 10c.

POETRY.

(Good Words.)

Charity.

E. CONDER, JUN'R.

'Tis better to weep than to joy,
When the heart with the sad gazes on
For joy, as frail flowers,
Reflects while exulting the rays.

Oh, the blast of the mighty Lord's
That [illegible]
Knows no respite of life
That only hath love to the end.

The journey here called to win
In the heavenly land wonderful
When the [illegible] the wine poured in Flows gladness joy back to the door.

The cries of the widow hath still Fullest record in books that are true,
Who [illegible]
The Lord He [illegible]

LETTER DRAWER.

Editor Restitution:—We are glad to receive the weekly visits of your paper. It is like cold water to a thirsty soul. We are very much interested in the news from Jerusalem. I can say "Peace be within thy walls, and prosperity within thy gates, O, Jerusalem, for unto thee shall it come, even the first dominion; the kingdom shall come to the daughter of Jerusalem." The kingdom of Israel will be restored to the ones that lost it—the Jews—God's people, whom he has forsaken, but as Paul says not cast away. "For the Deliverer shall come out of Zion, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob; for this is my covenant unto them when I shall take away their sins." That time has about come for the times of the Gentiles are about run out. Then Jerusalem will be free and Jesus will have the throne of his father David, and reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end.

What a blessed promise, to always be in the kingdom of God, and see Jesus and be made like him. O, praise the Lord for his mercy in providing a Savior, to bring back the lost and the perishing to the fold where they can find pasture and live forever. Glory Alleluyah for such a blessed hope. It is our anchor that has entered to that within the veil, where Jesus, our forerunner, for us has entered. Praise the Lord.

Your sister in Christ.

MRS. L. WHITAKER.

Alexander, N. Y.

Editor Restitution:—Please send us THE RESTITUTION for six months. Mamma took it for awhile, about two years ago, but being short of means could not renew before. She is a very strong advocate of your doctrine. She says if you will send one of your best preachers here that you will get a great many to accept your doctrine. She has got some of your most bitter enemies to read your paper. There is a church about a quarter of a mile from our home, and we will try and make it pleasant for him. So please send the paper as soon as possible.

Yours truly.

MINNIE SOMERS.

Evansville, Mo.

Editor Restitution:—I value the reading of THE RESTITUTION very highly, indeed; it is the only weekly preaching, aside from the word of God. I must be very busy on the arrival of the paper, if I do not leave all, and read its contents. How familiar the names of the old contributors are to us; it really seems as if I had met with them all personally. I often think of the difficult situation you are placed in as editor. May you have the Divine strength to carry on the tedious burden to the end. May we all gain an entrance into that haven of rest is my desire.

Respectfully yours in the one faith.

MRS. GEO. J. MYERS.

Auburn, N. Y.

COLFAX, Ind., Nov. 16, 1880.

Editor Restitution: As some persons wanted to know how our Savior appeared in his day, I will give you what Paul Wright, D. D., said in this past:

"There appeared in these our days, a man of great virtue, named Jesus Christ, who is yet living amongst us, and of the Gentiles is accepted as a Prophet of truth, but by his own disciples called the Son of God. He raiseth the dead, and, cureth all manner of diseases. A man of stature somewhat tall, and comely, with a very reverend countenance, such as the beholders may both love and fear; his hair is of the color of a filbert full ripe, and plain almost down to his ears; but from his ears downward somewhat curled, more orient of color, and waving about his shoulders. In the midst of his head goeth a seam or partition of his hair, after the manner of the Nazarites; his forehead very plain and smooth; his face without spot or wrinkle, beautified with comely red; his nose and mouth so formed as nothing can be reprehended; his beard somewhat thick, agreeable in [illegible] of his head, not to [illegible] great length, but forked in the middle; of an [illegible] look; his eyes grey, clear and quick. In reproving he is terrible; in admonishing courteous and fair spoken; pleasant in speech, mixed with gravity. It cannot be remembered that any have seen him laugh, but many have seen him weep. In proportion of body, well shaped and straight; his hands and arms right delectable to behold; in general his carriage temperate, modest, and wise. A man for his singular beauty, and passing the children of men."

I write this for the good of some of the readers of your paper if you see it to be published.

H. A. BOYD.

We have had to leave read the above description of our Lord's personal appearance in a book written by Paul Wright, D. D., entitled "The Life of Christ and Lives of the Apostles." We think that the author ship was ascribed to one Publius Lentulus. Its authenticity may be quite doubtful, but we give it as a literary curiosity at least. The unsparing hand of modern criticism has shown that many things that were once received as unquestioned history are only fictions. Of the genuineness of the above we have no means of deciding. It may have been written as claimed; or it may be an embodiment of traditions concerning our Lord's person. It will interest those of our readers who have not seen it before.—ED.

Editor Restitution:—I am sounding out the gospel of the kingdom. I have spent a good living and am poor to-day for the truth's sake; getting feeble and old age stealing on so I cannot labor physically for a living. But I shall spend and be spent in the gospel. The Apostle James says that God has chosen the poor of this age rich in faith and heirs of the kingdom, which he has promised to them that love him. Oh that the brotherhood may sustain THE RESTITUTION and its editor. May the blessing of God sustain it and you. Yours in hope of eternal life.

C. W. HERRON.

Grand, Kan.

Editor Restitution:—In THE RESTITUTION of Nov. 3d is an article from the Independent on the finding of the lost ten tribes, and this is a subject that ought to be interesting to all Bible students. But in studying those prophecies relating to God's ancient people we must keep in mind the marked distinction between Israel and Judah as set forth by the prophets, or our ideas will be much confused. The Jews were to be a scattered people. A specially persecuted people. To be without a nationality. To be without government. Not to be owners of landed property, though they will have money, until toward the latter days. They were to be a proverb; they were to be few in number; they are to remain a special type of features; they were to reject Christ; to retain the Mosaic service until returned to their own land; they are to keep their name, etc. That Israel were to be lost; they were to be divorced from the Mosaic law; they were to lose their names; they were to lose their language; they were to possess the isles of the sea, coasts of the earth, waste and desolate places, to inherit the portion of the Gentiles, their seed, land and cities. They are to be great and successful colonizers. Before them other people are to die out. They are to be a head nation; to be a company of nations; to be great in war on land or sea; to be lenders of money; to have a monarchy; to be keepers of the sabbath; to have David's throne and seed ruling over them; they are to possess Palestine and invite their brethren of Judah to return; and there are many other distinctive features between Israel and the Jews. The people found may, or may not be of the ten tribes, but if they are all that is left of the ten tribes, it will take many centuries before they can fill the niche of prophecy given to them, and, consequently, we are not living in the last days; but the English nation fill that niche, and answer to the description given of the house of Israel in the latter days in every particular; and the probabilities are, they will ere long possess the land of Palestine; and if we study the prophecies, holding to the literal interpretation, and carefully noting the distinctions between Israel and Judah, we shall be likely to get a more perfect view of coming events, of the order of those events, and at what stage of those events we may expect our Divine Master to come. I should be glad to see some of your able contributors take up this interesting subject. I believe it would be more instructive and satisfactory to your readers than those subjects that are worn threadbare.

S. HAMPER.

[illegible], Arkansas, N. S.

[That remnants of the ten tribes are still in existence in the more central parts of Asia is not only highly probable, but almost absolutely certain. That the Anglo-Saxons may be the descendants of Ephraim, according to the conclusions of many ethnologists, may also be true. Fragmentary portions of the departed tribes may, and doubtless have maintained all their national characteristics, while other portions may have lost all these in their migrations and exist as powerful people, under other national appellations. We cheerfully give our brother's communication a place. We direct attention also to some Jewish notes in the present issue, from the Cincinnati Messenger.—ED.

Editor Restitution:—I have been thinking of writing a private letter to you for some time, on three or four points. In a letter to Brother Pierce, you seem to indicate that he, with some others, hold extreme views. In this letter I will give you some of my views in as intelligent a manner as I can. James i. 18, says: "We are begotten by the word of truth that we might become a kind of first fruits unto God." The truth is found in Acts viii. 12: 1. A King. 2. Associate rulers. 3. Thrones. 4. Subjects. 5. Territory. This, as I understand, was preached by the prophets, then by Jesus and the apostles, three years and six months, to none but the lost sheep of the house of Israel. After this Peter unfolded the things concerning the name of Jesus on the day of Pentecost, and Phillip added the things concerning the name of Jesus at Samaria, as stated above. Acts viii. 12, also in Acts ii., and the name of Jesus. 1. That he is the Son of God. 2. That he was crucified and buried. 3. That he rose from the dead. 4. That he ascended to the Father, and at the appointed time he will return to take the reigns of government and sit on David's throne. Now, put these items together and we have the gospel of the kingdom. A man or woman believing these items, and is immersed into the name of, for the name of the Lord Jesus for the remission of sins and lives a holy life, will be in the first resurrection, go into the wedding supper, get eternal life, and will be joint rulers with him over the nations. Is this right? I have been preaching this for twelve years in a very humble way. I wish much success to THE RESTITUTION, financially. Will send you the $1.00 I owe you as soon as I market my wheat.

Most affectionately your brother,

JAMES MCCRIE.

Golden City, Mo.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Arkansas State Christian Conference.

Pursuant to notice, the Arkansas State Christian Conference held its second annual session with the church at Garland Springs, Faulkner county, commencing on Saturday, Sept. 18, 1880, at 11:30 a. m. Ministers present, A. M. B. Graham, J. N. A. Billingsley, D. P. Salley, J. C. Overstreet, W. R. Castleberry and J. P. Williams. Five churches were represented by delegates. Elder A. M. B. Graham, president of the Conference, took the chair and opened the Conference with singing and prayer. Appropriate opening remarks were then made by the president, after which the Conference proceeded to business. The president appointed business, devotional and ordination committees. Reports of ministers were received.

The following ministers applied for membership and were received by vote: G. W. Crosby, T. J. Daniel, G. C. Brown, T. C. Billingsley, J. L. Moncrief, J. G. Clegg, J. D. Martin, David Young, W. H. Porter, W. T. Roberts.

The following churches desired to be represented in the Conference and the delegates were accordingly received by vote: California, Dardenville, Antioch, Macedonia, Cove, Liberty and Garland Springs.

Some of the newly received members not thoroughly understanding the objects of the Conference, speeches were made by the president, and others, on different topics relating to the nature of the Conference, which resulted in a more thorough understanding.

Reports of the several officers and of standing committees were read and accepted.

The Conference proceeded to elect officers for the ensuing year, which resulted as follows: President, A. M. B. Graham; Vice President, T. J. Daniel; Secretary, J. G. Clegg; Treasurer, J. D. Martin; Directors, D. F. Salley, G. W. Crosby, J. N. A. Billingsley; State Evangelist, A. M. B. Graham.

The following resolution was unanimously adopted:

WHEREAS, The manufacture, sale, and use of intoxicating beverages in this state is a serious obstacle in the way of the progress of Scriptural piety and practical religion; and,

WHEREAS, All well-meaning people should endeavor to stay the fearful tide of sin and misery arising from the sale and use of intoxicating beverages; therefore, be it

Resolved, That this Conference pledge its hearty support, as a body, and, individually, as well, to the temperance cause; and that we will exert ourselves in every laudable way to banish the evil of intemperance from our state, and to use our influence to bring about such legislation as will secure the desired result.

Several brethren were duly ordained.

Voted, that the secretary prepare a synopsis of our proceedings for publication in the Bible Banner, World's Crisis and THE RESTITUTION.

Voted, that one hundred copies of the minutes of this Conference be published in pamphlet form.

Voted, that the next session of this Conference be held with the church at Shady Grove, Garland county, commencing on Friday, before the fourth Sunday in September, 1881.

The religious services during the Conference was a spiritual feast. It was good to be there. The Lord was with us.

A. M. B. GRAHAM, President.

J. G. CLEGG, Secretary.

Any person desiring the printed proceedings, in full, can have the same by addressing the Secretary, at Little Rock, Arkansas.

The Work of Elias.

Having, in a former paper, shown that Elias is yet to come, I now propose to inquire, by the light of Scripture, as to the nature of his work when he comes.

It is Truth that we seek, and Christ has promised the Spirit of truth to all them that worship him in Spirit and in Truth.

Let us, then, as an aid to this inquiry, examine the character of Elias, and of John (who came in the spirit and power of Elias) since we may fairly expect the coming messenger to have some, at least, of their characteristics.

In the Bible, we have elaborate biographies, where the birth, the life and the death of certain personages are mentioned with special minuteness. In Elijah's case, the first record begins with saying that "Elijah the Tishbite stood up and declared that there should be no rain," only according to his word.

When we again hear of him, we find him in controversy with four hundred and fifty prophets of Baal, concerning the true religion, and offering to attest the truth by calling down fire from heaven. All Bible readers know the result. He slew the prophets of Baal, his life was threatened, and he fled. Having accomplished his work, he was taken up into heaven.

In the case of John, we are told of the circumstances attending his birth and of the prophetic announcements beforehand, but from birth to manhood we have no record, only, that he remained in the wilderness until called by the word of God.

Then follows a brief record of his sayings and doings for about three years, and we are told that John was beheaded.

Elijah, although he performed miracles, made no change in the ordinances then existing. John, although he did no miracle, was authorized to make changes in the forms and ceremonies then practiced.

Both these prophets had one characteristic in common—they were zealous for the truth; one suffering death in attestation thereof—the other, doomed to death, but escaping by the the intervention of the Almighty.

Since Elijah is coming to restore all things, I judge that the harbinger of the King will be authorized to make change in the existing order.

Let us now inquire what will be the order of things when Christ comes. In Eph. v. 27 it is said that he will present to himself a church—"a glorious church, not having spot, or wrinkle, or any such thing—holy and without blemish."

John, in Rev. xix. 7-9, speaks prophetically of the church as a Bride who has herself ready for the marriage, arrayed in fine linen, clean and white—(for the fine linen is the righteousness of the saints.)

Daniel, vii. 27, speaking of the same thing, tells us that "the kingdom, and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominion shall serve and obey him."

So also John, Rev. xi. 15, evidently referring to the same grand events, tells us of voices saying, "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ; and he shall reign forever and ever."

The inquiry which directly concerns every Christian is—How is this state of things to be brought about?

I think the answer is easy and plain,—by obedience to the Scriptures—for we are told that "one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the Law till all be fulfilled."

On an examination of the Sacred Record, and a comparison thereof with history, it will be found that God has made use of human agency in carrying out his purposes on this earth. I presume the same agencies will be made use of during the remainder of this dispensation.

Having now ascertained who is to do the work, and how it is to be done, it remains to inquire what the work is, which will constitute the restitution of all things. I will leave this branch of the subject for another paper.

I. C. T.

[We can pledge nothing concerning a promised communication till we see it. The question concerning Elias is one that is not without difficulty.—ED.]

Wars and Rumors of Wars.

The invasion of Persia by the Kurds is giving great alarm to the government of that country. The Sheik Abdullah has declared himself an independent sovereign, and issued a proclamation in which he calls upon the Turkish and Persian Kurds to unite under his rule. That leader can bring into the field 40,000 fine horsemen, and has already captured the town of Urumiyah. So wretched is the condition of the Persian army that its resistance to the invaders can be but feeble at the best.

[Interior.]

THE FUTURE PROSPECT.

The wily Turk continues to baffle all Europe. Dulcigno is not yet fully surrendered to the Montenegrins. The Porte continues with great adroitness to raise diplomatic questions by proposing inadmissible terms for the cession of the city, and these are referred to the signatory powers and rejected, only to have new conditions thrust at them. So the half-hearted business drags. The Porte has given orders for the evacuation of the city, but the Albanians do not recognize the order, or if they do, regard it as a stroke of diplomacy, not otherwise seriously intended. The Greeks have been arming and waiting, but the winter is now coming down upon them, and there is a similar fall in the ardor of their friends. France, seeing no glory or profit in a controversy for herself, withdraws from it. A reaction against extreme measures is strong in England. Russia is jealous of the possibilities of Greece as the nucleus of a Slavonic power. And so it goes. The Greeks have it in their power, however, to set Europe in motion. If the precipitates war, Europe cannot stand off and see her crushed—least of all can England. That all this will eventuate in another war, the students of International European politics fully believe.

Something New!

GOD ESTABLISHED,

—AND—

The Bible Vindicated!

—BY—

A. J. EYCHANER.

The above is the title of a new tract, just out, and should be placed in the hands of every Infidel in the land. Those who live in Infidel neighborhoods will do well to get this work, as it will add fuel to conflicting this enemy. 20 pages. Price 5 cents; 15 for 50c, or 30 for $1. Send to this office for it.

SECOND EDITION.

THE GOSPEL OF THE KINGDOM

Advocated in a Series of

TEN DISCOURSES,

—BY—

WILEY JONES.

This edition is elegantly printed and bound by Lippincott & Co., clear type, good paper, 316 pages. Sent by mail at the following prices: Plain cloth binding $1.00; cloth gilt edge $1.50; leather marbled edge $1.75. To obtain this valuable work, send the price by Postoffice order or registered letter to

WILEY JONES,

Norfolk, Va.

Astronomical Etiology, or

STAR PROPHECIES

Concerning coming disasters on the earth from 1881 to 1885. By M. L. Knapp, D. D., and others. Published by Thomas Wilcox. Also containing an appendix by the publisher. 72 pages. 25 cents a copy.

HYMNS OF THE ADVENT

Is the name of a new Hymn Book, just out, compiled by Chas. C. Barker—member of the "Hymn of the Morning"—and published by W. N. Pitt, Springfield, Mass.

Mr Barker combines in this new work the "Hymns of the Morning" and a fresh and rare selection of music. As an appendix he adds a selection of "Favorite Hymns" (words only) whose music is familiar as a household word. Those of our brethren who have been asking for "Hymns of the Morning" for some time, can now be supplied with this new book, which is superior to the old one in that it embraces all of it and many new and beautiful songs. Those having the "Christian Psalmody" and no music book will find this exactly what they want.

Send to this office for them. Price only 40 cents.

NEW EDITION.

A LETTER TO A FRIEND

By MRS. C. C. WOODRUFF.

This little book is so well known that the announcement that an edition has been printed should be enough, without comment.

32 PAGES. PRICE 10 CENTS

Send for a Copy to this Office.

BOOK LIST.

The following publications are kept constantly on hand and will be sent prepaid to any address in the United States and Canada, upon receipt of published price. Address all orders to

THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Ind.

The Perfect Plea. A book of 96 hymns suited to all occasions. Cloth, 60c; leather, 75c, 80c; leather, 90c, etc.

Bible Tracts. Suitable for wide distribution. No. 1. The Gospel. 2. The Coming and Kingdom of Christ, by Wm. Miller in 1840. 3. Immortality. 4. The Kingdom of God. 5. Nature of Man and Thoughts for Thinkers. 6. The Two Advents. 7. What is Religion. 8. The Restitution Age. 9. Destiny of the Wicked. 10. Baptism. Ten copies, 60c; or assorted packages 100, 50c.

FOUR PAGE TRACTS.
25 for 20c; 50 for 35c; 100 for 60c.

The Sinner's Hope in Death. Contains an abundance of proof texts.

Life of Death. A concise statement and contrast of the two uses of three terms, to wit: the theological, the [illegible]

Human Depravity a Fallacy. By A. B. Maxwell.

Resurrection. By Austin Chatto. A careful examination of the query—"If a man die, shall he live again?" Job xiv. 14.

Is it True? By H. V. Reed. An examination of testimony as to whose subject of it is written.

What is Death? By H. V. Reed. An excellent contrast of the Bible teaching and modern theory. Should have a wide circulation.

The Accursed Parable. The Rich Man and Lazarus, by W. Laing.

EIGHT PAGE TRACTS.
50 each, or $3 for 100.

Is it Essential to Believe in the Kingdom of Jesus? By Benj. Wilson.

Signs of the Times. By Horatio Bonar, of Scotland.

The Scattering and Gathering. By H. V. Reed. Contemplates the future threefold gathering of the Saints, Israel and the Nations. In timely.

TWELVE PAGE TRACTS.
75 each, 70c per dozen.

Christian Union. By Joel A. Simonds.

Regeneration and the Kingdom of God. By E. Loyd. Well suited to inquiring minds.

Immortality Brought to Light. The grand reality of redemption. By J. H. Cook.

SIXTEEN-PAGE TRACTS.
Five cents each, 15 for 50c; 95 for $1.

The Acts Rich. By Joseph Peirce.

The Hope for the World. By Joel A. Simonds.

The Kingdom of Heaven. By Joseph Seiss, D. D. Set forth in beautiful language and apt Bible quotations.

Which is Right? By T. Wilson. Showing the Bible teaching on the question as to whether Christ's Kingdom is to be on the earth or in heaven.

The Oath of Abraham. By Joel A. Simonds. The promise made to Abraham, renewed to Isaac and Jacob, and so frequently referred to by Prophets and Apostles.

The King in His Beauty. By H. V. Reed. Just the thing to circulate everywhere.

TWENTY-FOUR PAGE TRACTS.
Seven cents each; 5 for 30c; 90 for $1.

Das Evangelium des Reiches Gottes. Teaches the true nature of God's kingdom.

Immortality Not Revealed, but [illegible] By T. Wilson. An argument from the Scriptures, showing that the earth will not be annihilated, as many suppose, but will be the everlasting inheritance of the saints.

Whose Voice do we Hear? or the Voice of God Against Spiritualism. By H. V. Reed. Cannot be too widely circulated.

The Scriptures. By Joel A. Simonds.

THIRTY-TWO PAGE TRACTS.
Ten cents each; 1 for $1.

Revelation concerning the reign of Christ over Israel and the Nations, or a brief statement of the things concerning the Kingdom of God and the Name of Jesus Christ. By Wiley Jones.

The Restitution, or the World restored to its Primeval State, and this to be consummated at the Second Advent. By E. Miller. A careful and satisfactory examination of Acts iii. 21.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS.

The Rich Man and Lazarus. By Thomas Wilson. The exposition throughout is in harmony with Bible teaching. Thirty-six pages, price 10c.

Synoptic Christian Faith. Being a concise history of the Primitive Christian Faith, or the Gospel as held by the Apostolic and Primitive Fathers, in small compass; a tract of fifty pages, by C. F. Sweet, of Albion, N. Y. Price 10 cents.

Bible Echo. Vol. I. May to Dec. 1874. A most valuable English weekly, edited by W. Kelly, esq. Contains important papers and discussions on vital matters. Not now published. 7 volumes. Originally $3.75, now offered at $2.

Bible Echo. Vol. II. January to June, 1876. 7 volumes, formerly $3.50, now $1.

Bible Echo. Vol. III. July to September, 1876, 3 volumes. Complete the Bible Echo as a weekly. Former price $1.50, now 25 cents.

The Light selected by the most irrefutable evidence relating to the authenticity and credibility of the Holy Scriptures. By W. H. Wilson. Just the thing for General Circulation, as it meets and expels in a clear, calm, Christian manner the infidel assertions of the day, and is a plain defence of the Bible. 48 pp. Price 10 cents.

The Doctrine of Immortality. By James H. Whitmore. 320 pages. 30 cents postpaid. Everybody should have it.

The Doctrine of Baptism, as taught in the Holy Scriptures, together with a collection of evidence upon this subject, from the most learned theologians, critics, lexicographers and ecclesiastical historians of all ages, on the any paper price 70 cents.

New Facts upon Old Lights. A book that is suitable to everybody. 328 pp. Cloth bound, Worth 50 cents. Sent postpaid for 30 cents. Only 46 copies.

Future Punishment. Its nature and duration. By Henry Constable, Prebendary of Cork. 320 pp. Examine the book for the times. Cloth $1.25.

The Burning of Babylon, as revealed by God's Prophets, together with an outline of the future movements and destiny of England, Germany, Persia, Africa, and the Jews. Contains a map of Europe and Asia. A work invaluable to every student of prophecy, and of intense present interest. 116 pages, cloth, 75c.

The Rich Man and Lazarus. By C. F. Sweet, 1876. 64 pp., price 10c. A careful unfolding of Luke xvi. xiii. 19-31, with an examination of Luke xix. and xxiii.

Origin and Nature of Sunday. By J. M. Stephenson. One of those handy little pamphlets for a ready reference to the best arguments which exhibit unanswerable points and arguments of our faith and hope. Brother Stephenson's book is a terse, comprehensive and able statement of the leading phases of Bible theology. Our brethren will find this just the thing to sell and circulate. The nature of man, the kingdom of God, and the obedience of faith, are ably and clearly set forth. Cloth binding $1.

New English Books.

Bible Echoes. By Rev. H. V. Reed. Paper 50c. A reply to "Bible Side-Lights or Reflections of the Bible." By A. J. Davis. An able refutation of Infidel charges.

Testimony of the Intermediate State of the Dead. By Henry Constable, A. M. Cloth, $1.00. Presents the Bible decisions of the state of man between death and the resurrection.

Discussion on the State of the Dead. Held at the Rev. W. C. Brodbent, Congregational meeting, and W. Kelly, esq., editor of Bible Echo, and exhibitor of the Gospel. Both of England. The propositions discussed were: 1. That the dead exist in a living, conscious state after their decease. Affirmed by W. C. B. 2. That the Scriptures teach that men in death are wholly unconscious, irresentible, and possess no part whatever in what is done under the sun. Affirmed by W. K. and that they rest in darkness, silence and the dust. Cloth, 50c; paper, 30c.

THE NEW TESTAMENT IN GREEK AND ENGLISH, ENTITLED THE

EMPHATIC DIAGLOTT,

Containing the original Greek text of the New Testament, with an interlinear word-for-word English translation, based on the renderings of eminent critics, viz., with the richest readings of the Vatican MS. collated, together with illustrative and explanatory foot notes, and a copious selection of references. By Benjamin Wilson.

The universal rendering of various passages in the New Testament are the foot-falls on which most of the sects of Christendom have been built up; with this work each reader may judge for himself whether the words there literally translated are so arranged in the common version as to express the exact meaning of the Holy Testament writers. New improved edition on larger paper than ever, 924 pages. Price, extra cloth, $4.00; library binding, $5.00 postpaid. For sale at this office.

Address, THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth Ind.

MISTAKES of INGERSOLL,

Being a review of Col. Ingersoll's lecture entitled "Mistakes of Moses."

By J. M. STEPHENSON.

[illegible] pages, paper cover, printed on [illegible] paper. Price [illegible]

For [illegible]

POETRY.

The Minister's Daughter.

JOHN GREENLEAF WHITTIER.

In the minister's morning-walk he came
He had said of the primest fair
And how the sweet fall the words of God
Rest, dew-like, and all.

And look, of his self-and pleasure,
All smiles, on a child at play,
Were stopped to the quiet, clear Sunday morning,
And held in the way that day.

For never by faith's mansion
A sunbeam and was dead,
And never the harsh old law
A soothing heart rested.

And, after the prideful service
Of that pleasant Sabbath day,
He walked with his little daughter
Through the apple-orchard of May.

She sat in the tree-green meadow
Sparrow and the bobolink sang;
And she felt their varied petals
The blossoms among.

Around on the wonderful story
The minister talked and smiled;
"How good is the Lord who gives us
These gifts from His hand, my child!

"Behold in the bloom of apples
And the violets in the sward
A hint of the old, lost beauty
Of the Garden of the Lord!"

Then up spoke the little maiden,
Looking up snow and pink:
"O Father! these pretty blossoms
Are very wicked, I think.

"Had there been no garden of Eden
There never had been a fall;
And if never a flower had bloomed
God would have loved us all."

"Hush, child!" the father answered,
"By His love we must fall;
His ways are inscrutable and darkness,
But He doeth all things well.

"And whether by His ordaining
To us cometh good or ill,
Joy or pain, or light or shadow,
We must love and trust Him still."

"Oh, I fear him!" said the daughter,
"And I try to love Him too;
But I wish he was good and gentle,
Kind and loving as you."

The minister groaned in spirit
As the tremulous lips of pain
And wide, wet eyes uplifted
Questioned his own in vain.

Bowing his head he pondered
The words of the little one;
Had he erred in his life-long teaching?
Had he wrong to his Master done?

To what calm and dreadful blot
Had he lent the holiest name?
Did his own heart, loving and human,
The God of his worship blame?

And lo! from the blossoming orchard,
From the trees by the singing wave,
And the face of the little daughter
He read a lesson of love.

No more as the dimly terror
Of Sinai's mount of law,
But as Christ in the Syrian Hills
The vision of God he saw.

And as when, in the clefts of Horeb,
Of old was His presence known,
The dread inscrutable Glory
Was infinite Goodness alone.

Thereafter his hymns were tender
In his prayers a tenderer strain,
And never the gospel of human love
Burned on his lips again.

And the scoffing tongue was prayerful,
And the blinded eyes found sight,
And hearts, as flint before time,
Grew soft in his warmth and light.

CORRESPONDENCE.

"The Lord hath more to break out of His holy word. He will not turn from it. Of the fruit of thy body will I set upon thy throne. For the Lord hath chosen Zion; he hath desired it for His habitation. This is my rest forever; here will I dwell, for I have desired it. I will abundantly bless her. I will satisfy her poor with bread. I will also clothe her priests with salvation, and her saints shall shout aloud for joy."

Now, have the above plain and pointed and forcible declarations of inspiration been accomplished? No, no; they have not. It is true that Solomon sat on David's throne, as we read in 2 Sam. vii. 12, 13, 16, but not in righteousness, nor in peace; for in speaking of Solomon, he says: "If he commit iniquity I will chasten him with the rod of men, and with the stripes of the children of men." So, by reading 1 Kings x. 2, where he (Solomon) did transgress, and, therefore, is not the one promised to David with an oath? For we are in another Scripture, "Unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given, and the government shall be on his shoulders. Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end upon his father David's throne." Isa. ix. 6, 7. Now, is the foregoing in harmony with inspiration? Does it accord with Peter's words after he had received the promised Holy Ghost, that would guide them into all truth? Yes, it certainly does. But, now for the proof. Listen! "Whom God hath raised up, having loosed the pains of death, because it was not possible that he should be holden of it." Acts ii. 24. And why, one may ask? Peter goes on to tell that David was a prophet. "Therefore being a prophet and knowing that God had sworn with an oath to him, that of the fruit of his loins, according to the flesh, he would raise up Christ to sit on his throne." Acts ii. 30. Now, here is proof of the very plainest type, and I am made to wonder with astonishment that any one who has read the 32d chapter of the Acts should be talking about a spiritual reign on David's throne, when, in the text, it says, "of the fruit of thy body," and then by Peter after being filled with the Holy Ghost, which lead him into the whole truth. Now, who would dare say that Peter missed it one time? and he seems to be carried away with the new revelation, "David is not ascended to heaven," Christ is risen from the dead before that Christ is raised from the dead, because God had sworn to David that of the fruit of his loins according to flesh, he would raise up Christ to sit on his throne. Now, as the spirit returns to God who gave it, you cannot have a spirit, therefore, it was not necessary for that particular purpose, to have Christ raised from the dead to sit on David's throne, if, indeed, it was only by his spirit. But here is proof shown of all peradventure. "For after these days, saith the Lord, I will return and rebuild the tabernacle of David that is fallen down, and close up the breaches as of old." Amos ix. 11. That fearful beast, and all the Antichrist of Days come, and judgment was given to the saints of the Most High; and time came that the saints possessed the kingdom. Dan. vii. 22. "But the judgment shall sit, and they shall take away his dominion, to consume and destroy it unto the end. And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him. Hitherto is the end of the matter." Dan. vii. 26-28. Thus saith the Lord, "If you can break my covenant of the day, and my covenant of the night, that there should not be day nor night in their season; then may also my covenant be broken with David my servant, that he should not have a son to reign upon his throne." Jer. xxxiii. 20. Thus saith the Lord, "If my covenant be not with day and night, and if I have not appointed the ordinances of heaven and earth; then will I cast away the seed of Jacob, and David my servant, so that I will not take any of his seed to be rulers over the seed of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob." Jer. xxxiii. 25, 26. No marvel at all that, as David was a prophet. Speaking of Christ, he says, "I foresaw the Lord always before my face; for he is on my right hand, that I should not be moved, therefore did my heart rejoice, and my tongue was glad; moreover also shall my flesh rest in hope." Acts ii. 25-26. Here again, as before, the Holy Ghost, by Peter, said, "David is not ascended to heaven," and I accept it as authority, doubly sure, and were, by inspiration on inspiration, David understood it, that it would take place after the resurrection of the just; "moreover my flesh shall rest in hope." And these are the sure mercies of David. Here we are brought to Job's faith, that, if "I wait as a hireling, till my appointed time, I make the grave my house," and to Paul's faith that, "If the dead rise not, then they that have fallen asleep in Christ have perished;" and with David, when he says to his Maker, "Thou wilt redeem my soul from the power of the grave," and with all the faithful, that will say in that day "This is the Lord; we have waited for him; this is our God, and he will save us." Then the grateful shouting and hallelujahs will go up from Mount Zion and the hills of God; then the sun shall be confounded and the moon ashamed, when the Lord shall reign in Mount Zion, and before his ancients gloriously. So let it be. Amen. J. T. FERGUSON.

Harrison, S. C.

Editor Restitution: Father and I left home Sept. 30. Stopped at Brother J. F. Wagoner's over night and the next day went to North Manchester, where we found Brother Griffin awaiting us. He took us to his home eight miles east of North Manchester.

We held meeting over Sunday, good attention being manifested. Brother J. L. Wince and wife, Brother Alfred Wince and wife, Brother Barnhill and wife, and Brother Watkins and son came down on Saturday, and Sister Souls, Sister Dennis, and others came Sunday morning.

We had one temperance lecture.

Next we visited Gospel Grove, staying over Sunday. We had a good meeting and a temperance lecture. From there we went to Pierceton, remaining three days, and had social meeting two nights. We visited Brother and Sister J. L. Wince.

From there we went to Warsaw, but could not get a house in which to hold meeting.

We went to Plymouth the same day, and stayed over night with the worthy editor.

Next day we went to Argos, remaining over Sunday. Had a temperance lecture while there.

We next went to Bourbon, where we found Brother Shaffer, who took us to the Roose neighborhood. We had a very interesting meeting—four being added to the church. We formed new acquaintances and had a pleasant time that will not soon be forgotten. Had a temperance lecture, and very good attention notwithstanding the crowded house.

We went to Millwood on Wednesday to deliver a temperance lecture, then back to the Pierceton neighborhood where we remained until Sunday night; thence to Millwood again.

We started home Monday, going as far as Brother Wagoner's where we remained all night, reaching home Tuesday evening, Nov. 2.

The brethren kindly remembered our financial necessities at all the points we visited, for which we are thankful.

Father intends to visit the Rome neighborhood again the 4th Sunday in December.

While there if any one wishes his labors at other points they can address him at Home or at Bremen, Marshall county, Ind. If Brother Henry, at Walkerton, or the brethren at Millwood, Pierceton, Gospel Grove, Brother Gatlin's, or any other place in that part of the country wish him, they can let him know.

Yours in love of the truth.

ADONIJAH M. HATCH.

Bourbon, Ind.

SELECTIONS.

THE PARABLES OF THE KINGDOM.

The Treasure Hid in the Field, and the Pearl of Great Price.

Again, the kingdom of heaven is like unto treasure hid in a field; the which when a man hath found, he hideth, and for joy thereof goeth and selleth all that he hath, and buyeth that field.

Again, the kingdom of heaven is like unto a merchant seeking goodly pearls: who, when he had found one pearl of great price, went and sold all that he had, and bought it. Matt. xiii. 44-46.

These two parables I take to be one—that is, they are meant to set forth and illustrate the same truth. This idea is generally accepted, but the question—What is the particular truth illustrated in one by these two parables? is answered variously. Thus, some say that "the treasure hid in the field," and "the pearl of great price" is the Lord Jesus Christ, and that the merchantman is the believer in Jesus. Others, that the merchantman is the Lord who "made himself of no reputation," gave up life itself that he might redeem lost sinners—represented here by "a treasure" and a "pearl of great price."

It is not easy to see the fitness of the comparison of a treasure and a costly pearl to guilty sinners. Not because we are of value to the Redeemer, but of his mercy he saves us. In relation to the believer the Savior may well be compared to a costly pearl—to those who believe he is precious. But whatever fitness there may be in either, or both of these applications of these two parables, the Lord himself tells us that what he is comparing is "the kingdom of the heavens." As formerly remarked, these parables may be used in reference to many things; but what we are seeking to point out is the application of them which our Lord made.

The point of the comparison, or resemblance, is to be found in relation to the kingdom of God, namely—its inestimable value. The treasure hid in the field was, in the man's estimation, of more value to him than all the property he possessed; and he gladly parted with it all to gain that treasure. The pearl-merchant discovered a rare specimen far exceeding in value all his possessions, and, like a wise merchant, he sold all he had and bought it.

Thus, by these two parables the Lord sought to impress on the minds of his disciples the paramount value of that kingdom, which it was their Father's good pleasure to give them (Luke xii. 32); and to stimulate and encourage them to follow in that course of conduct to which the apprehension of that truth legitimately led.

The kingdom of the heavens—that inheritance to which your Father hath called you—surpasses far in value all other treasures; it therefore becomes you to act in relation to it, as those men did towards the treasure in the field, and the pearl of great price.

The force and appropriateness of the comparison cannot fail to strike any thoughtful person who has his attention called to the subject or it, and who has learned the meaning of the term—"The kingdom of God." As an inheritance its value far outweighs all that belongs to the present life. It is a kingdom that cannot be moved—everlasting, incorruptible, undefiled, unfading, and perfectly good. Its characteristics are righteousness, peace, and joy. Its products, glory to God in the highest, peace on earth, good will to men. All evil, moral and physical, shall be completely destroyed by it. Glory, honor, and incorruptibility, are secured to all who inherit it, along with complete and permanent fellowship with the Lord Jesus Christ, in his kingship and priesthood to all eternity. Like him, dying no more; participating in his holiness, power, and goodness; blessing all the nations of the earth, and receiving from them gratitude and praise. Are any, or all of the treasures of earth, equal to that?

These parables suggest two thoughts. That—That we may have to part with much that is desirable to secure an entrance into the kingdom of God. Many were the lessons to this effect taught by the Master to his disciples. "Ye shall be hated of all men for my name's sake; brother shall deliver up the brother to death, and the father the child, and the children rise against their parents to cause them to be put to death," and "strait is the gate that leadeth unto life." These, and such like statements, were reported to the faithful in Christ Jesus by his apostles, after his ascension to the Father's right hand. Hence we find Paul and Barnabas confirming the souls of the disciples, exhorting them to continue in the faith, and testifying that "through much tribulation they must enter the kingdom" (Acts xiv. 22), a warning very soon realized in all its severity. The closest ties of friendship were broken; all the comforts and amenities of life had to be parted with; destitution, hunger, nakedness, imprisonment, torture, and death had to be borne. Thus were verified the words of the Master—"In the world ye shall have tribulation, but in me ye shall have peace." Peace! Yes; for they had respect to the recompense of reward; and took joyfully the spoiling of their goods, knowing that they had secured for them in heaven an enduring substance, a kingdom that cannot be moved. They had peace, for he who had promised was faithful. "There is no man," said he, "who hath left house, or parents, or brethren, or wife, or children, for the kingdom of God's sake, who shall not receive manifold more in the present time, and in the world to come life everlasting."

Again, these two parables suggest the thought—That much which belongs to the present life must be abandoned for the inheritance of the kingdom of God, in the presence of Pilate, Jesus declared—"My kingdom is not of this world." To his disciples he said that neither he nor they were of this world. The kingdom, and those who were to inherit it, are "of God." The present world, as far as human action is concerned, is antagonistic to God: so that "the friendship of the world" is declared to be "enmity with God;" so much so, that "if any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him; for all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but of the world."

A decided change of heart and character is necessary to inherit this kingdom. Unrighteousness and ungodliness have from the first pervaded the kingdoms of this world; and like as the pearl-merchant gave all his property to secure one precious pearl, so must the successful candidate for the kingdom of the heavens give up "all that is of the world" to inherit the kingdom. Necessarily so, for how possibly could they who relish the pleasures of sin be happy in that kingdom where righteousness has its abode?

A sad thought here presents itself; it is, that the great mass of mankind, and many of our friends and acquaintances, prefer "the pleasures of sin, which are but for a season," to the everlasting joys of God's holy kingdom—"this present evil world," to that "kingdom which cannot be moved."

Say, dear friend, how stands this choice with you? Have you acted like the men in these parables, and made the best and enduring treasure your own? God in his abundant mercy has brought his kingdom very near to you, and is entreating you to enter in. The door yet stands wide open. A little while and it may close against you for ever. Decide at once; there is no reason for Jubirty, for no sacrifice can be too great to make, no price too high to pay for the possession of a treasure so inestimably precious as the inheritance of the kingdom of God.—W. Loling.

[Messenger.]

Jewish Notes.

We present the following notes as further illustrating certain tendencies of modern events to which we have from time to time called attention in these pages:

RAILWAYS FOR SYRIA.

The Jewish World, commenting on the announcement of the formation of "The Syrian Railways' Founders' Association (Limited)," which has just appeared, says it is "of far-reaching importance, and should receive a large measure of public attention." The Association "has been established, it is stated, for the purpose of obtaining a concession from the Porte to put down railways in the vilayets of Damascus, the Lebanon and Aleppo, in order to connect the populous towns of Aleppo, Hems, and Damascus with each other and the sea. Independent of the great stimulus which such a project must give to local commerce and agriculture, it derives at the present moment particular importance from the fact that it is the first attempt of anything like a large scale, and which has approached so near realization, to introduce into Asia Minor a means of communication by steam at all. For years it has been pointed out by the most experienced of Oriental travellers that if England wishes to maintain her commercial pre-eminence in the far east, she must not depend merely on the Suez Canal and chance. The great maritime highway of M. Lesseps has certainly brought us much nearer our Indian Empire and our eastern customers generally than we were before it was opened. But since the last war Russia has obtained in Batoum the key to one of the shortest overland cuts to Persian and Central Asian trade—a caravan route which, if improved, will in a very short time ruin the great road running from Trebizonde to Tabreez via Erzeroum, and may even diminish the traffic of the Suez Canal. The safety of the English competition in the East is therefore solely dependent on the establishment of railways in Asia Minor, and the sooner the scheme of the Syrian Railways' Founders' Association is extended the better." Among the chief promoters of the Association's schemes we notice the name of Commander Cameron, R. N., whose recent work on "Our Future Highway" was written to prove the commercial and strategical importance of a railway through Mesopotamia to the Persian gulf under British protection.

GERMAN OPPRESSION OF JEWS.

The German "anti-Jewish crusade," according to the Jewish World, which has now been waged for some months by means of newspaper articles and secret societies, is passing into the acute stage of actual violence. Attacks on the Jews are reported from Carlsbad and Wiesenfeld, the mob wounding the persons of some, and sacking and plundering the houses of others. The Jewish World denies that the outrages are merely "revivals of the Judeophobic fanaticism of mediæval times. They are really the agitations of malcontents against industry, wealth, and orderly citizenship of every kind, pegged on to a talent, but always easily revived prejudice, in the present case rendered all the easier to vitalize by the superior industry, wealth, and orderliness of the hated Jews." It attributes this result mainly to the evil influence of German "militarism," and says in conclusion—"Germany is now one great hotbed of philosophic communism, and the authorities may depend upon it that if they do not curb the present outbreaks against the Jews, and alter the whole system of administration, they will find that the attacks on the Jews of to-day are, to the German mob, only the stepping stones to general attacks on property and order to-morrow."

ANOTHER PROPOSED JEWISH COLONY.

An interesting appeal has been made to the Jews of England by some of their brethren in Roumania, in a letter from Bucharest to the Jewish Chronicle, which says:—"The troubles which the Jews of Roumania are compelled to suffer are well known to you. It is a land whose princes are like the wolves of the forest, in their endeavor to annihilate the children of Israel. . . . . We are constantly and severely attacked, and our powers of endurance are exhausted. We have therefore resolved, after mature deliberation, to leave the country. With this view we have formed ourselves into a society for the colonization of the Holy Land, consisting of 100 families. Every one of the members is experienced in the work of cultivating the soil, and it is our intention to journey to Palestine to till the ground and to guard it." The writers go on to say that they have collected 40,000 francs, and ask the board of the Montefiore Testimonial Fund to take charge of it, and purchase land and found a colony for them, they undertaking to repay in ten years any additional outlay in so doing. Mr. Laurence Oliphant, in a subsequent letter to the Jewish Chronicle, offers them any assistance in his power, and informs them "that by the Ottoman Colonization law they are entitled to take up and cultivate any amount of unoccupied land they may desire without purchase, on condition of becoming Turkish subjects, and that there are in the Caimacamliks of Tiberias and Jenin about 200,000 acres of most eligible land for this purpose."

THE BENI-ISRAEL.

"The first visit of members of the Beni-Israel community to the Holy Land took place this year. This interesting offshoot of the Israelitish nation has been settled in India since before the destruction of the second temple. But a few years ago they were scarcely recognized as Jews, and threatened to be lost altogether to our nation. Owing principally to the efforts of the Anglo-Jewish Association, the stem has been reunited to the parent stock. A regular communication has been instituted between the Jews of that country and the brethren in India, and the social feeling, which had almost died out of the Bombay community and the Beni-Israel inhabiting the villages on the coast, has revived in all its intensity." The Jewish Chronicle, from which this statement is quoted, pleads for like efforts to lay hold of the Falashas of Abyssinia, and the isolated communities of Jews located in various cities of the Chinese Empire, and to investigate the claims of the Afghans to be of the stock of Israel. "Few more pressing duties," it says, "are incumbent upon modern Jews than the task of gathering up the last clues of our family history, or strengthening the weak links of Israel's genealogy."—H. W. Strang.

A Town Upon Which the Eyes of the World Rest.

The town of Dulcigno, which the Albanians are ordered by the powers of Europe to give up to plucky little Montenegro, lies on the Turkish side of the Adriatic sea, at a point opposite Rome and Naples, midway between each. It is called in that quarter of the earth Dool-cheen-yo. About 5,000 people live there, and are the chief descendants of the most formidable band of pirates that ever existed. It is a very old town, as everything in that region is old beyond our Western meaning of the word. One hundred and sixty-seven years before Christ the city surrendered to the Romans, and received exemption from taxation, and its freedom. From 1300 to 1600 the pirates held full sway, and in 1715 a great battle was lost there by the Venetians. In the seventeenth century Dulcigno became temporarily as noted as Jerusalem on account of the successful assumptions of an impostor named Sabbatai, who proclaimed himself the Messiah. Converts to Sabbatai were numbered by thousands in every part of Europe. His face was handsome and his conduct austere and becoming to the part he played. He was deeply versed in the Talmud, and able, through his fine education and general earnestness of demeanor, to impose upon all who came under his influence. As his fame increased his responsibilities widened, and it became necessary that he should despose the Sultan, the enemy of Christianity. He therefore set out for Constantinople to confound the Turk with his anathema. Owing to the moral power which he had acquired, this expedition was not so crazy an affair as might be imagined. However, the Sultan met him with craft, temporized, and finally got him in his power. Under threat of execution the impostor renounced his claims and became a convert to the Mussulman's faith. He was then banished to Dulcigno, where, such is the power of faith, his former disciples refused to accept the fact of his apostasy in any other light than as a divinely inspired means of bringing Islam to his feet. The religion of Sabbatai of Dulcigno continued to thrive until his death, and his tomb became a shrine for fanatical pilgrims from Germany and France.

The harbor of old Dulcigno is one of the oldest on the Adriatic, and the best that exists on that harborless coast between the southern point of Dalmatia and the mouth of the Brin. The haven is a sure safeguard from the south wind—the fierce sirocco, but is exposed on the northern side. When the pirates were captured, in the sixteenth century, this harbor was the scene of the conflagration of 60 of their ships, a lustration that at one blow forever purged the whole Adriatic sea. In 1878 the Montenegrins took Dulcigno by storm, most of the Turkish garrison having previously got away by sea. Austria, however, at the Berlin Congress, objected to its retention by Montenegro. Austria is chagrined by the present cession of Dulcigno to Montenegro. The little country of hereditary fighters is an unwelcome neighbor, and its liability to also want Scutari in the near future disturbs the Austrians. The Dalmatian tongue of land which Austria is compelled to guard so jealously is at all times open to the forays of the Montenegrins, and the stronger they become, the greater the danger to Austria.

The Montenegrins, intrenched in their mountain fastnesses, can never be extirpated by their enemies. Their position is as impregnable as was the retreat of Captain Jack in the lava beds. There is a vitality in their race which would seem to prophesy great possibilities should they ever drift into the Roman role of conquest.

The oldest house in the United States is supposed to be at Pembroke, Mass. In 1622 Peleg Barker's ancestors built a fort of stone and mortar as a defense against the Indians, and it has been used as a dining room for years. The main building is only ten years younger.

THE RESTITUTION.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

WHOLE NO. 689. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, DECEMBER 1, 1880. VOL. XXIX, NO. 46.

THE RESTITUTION
IS ISSUED
EVERY WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON,
By the Christian Publishing Association.

OFFICERS OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

R. S. LOWDEN.....PRESIDENT.
CHARLES PALMER.....VICE PRESIDENT.
E. E. ESKRIDGE.....SECRETARY.
S. A. CHAPLIN.....TREASURER.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.
CHARLES PALMER, WM. HAILSBACK,
ISRAEL C. ROBERTS.

S. A. CHAPLIN,.....Editor.

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTORS.
J. M. STEPHENSON, A. H. MANGUPER, J. P. WEETHEE, JOEL A. SIMONDS, PENJ. WILSON, C. A. MYERS, WILEY JONES,

TERMS:—$2.00 PER YEAR,
Payable Invariably in Advance. Subscriptions received for less than six months at the same rate.

All letters and communications to
THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION will make the first publication of all things which have been spoken by the mouth of all the Holy Prophets since the world began." It is the object of it, as a monthly visit, to establish the set of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of Kings, in the immediate salvation of such with him in the possession of the nations; the re-location of Israel in the Promised Land; the destruction of the devil; the glorification of the righteous, and the annihilation of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a purity in belief of the Gospel, repentance as a condition on precedent to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Coming Age—Its Proximity—Two Woe Trumpets—Rainbow Angel—Seven Thunders—Voice of the Seventh Angel—Temple—Two Witnesses—Third Woe Trumpet—Sun-clad Woman—Dragon—Leopard—Beast—Two-Horned Beast—Lamb on Mount Zion—Three Angels With Messages—Judgment Age Commenced.—No. II.

J. P. WEETHEE.

The First Woe Trumpet.—Under the sound of this trumpet are the following symbols: a. A star. b. Bottomless pit. c. Smoke. d. Locusts. These symbols will be explained hereafter. It is sufficient here to remark, that symbols are later, related in the visions themselves, to some portion of the Bible or to history. This is essential to the ideal of Revelation; for, what is revealed where nothing is explained?

The Second Woe Trumpet.—A voice comes from the four horns of the golden altar. Four destroying angels are loosed, prepared for an hour, a day, a month, and a year to slay the third part of men. The army of horsemen is then described; also their work.

The rainbow angel then appears, with a book in his hand, and placing his right foot on the sea, and his left foot on the earth, he cried with a loud voice as the roaring of a lion; when seven thunders uttered their voices; and as John was about to write, according to previous orders, he is commanded to seal them up and write them not—a clear intimation that all things which were written, were to be read and understood.

The angel, standing on the sea and on the land, with hands uplifted, aware by the throne's occupant, that the time is not yet, but it shall be in the days of the voice of the seventh angel when he shall delay to sound the trumpet, the mystery of God shall be finished as declared by the prophets. During this delay great events were to transpire; the closing up events of his reign were to be accomplished.

The temple, altar and the worshippers brought to view, and the outer court, which was left to the Gentiles, and the holy city, and the two witnesses, and the beast out of the bottomless pit, are seen by John. They prophesy a thousand two hundred (and) three score days, clothed in sackcloth. The two witnesses are explained to be the two olive trees and the two candlesticks standing before the God of the earth. Rev. xi. 4. The witnesses will be explained when we come to our expositions. We now propose giving, simply, an outline of the visions seen by the evangelist.

The Third Woe Trumpet Sounds.—Voices are heard in heaven, saying, "The kingdoms of this world are become (the kingdoms) of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign forever and ever." The reign of subjugation is here introduced and carried onward. "And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead, that they should be judged, and that thou shouldest give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear thy name, small and great; and shouldest destroy them which destroy the earth." Rev. xi. 15, 18.

Third Scene Then.—A great wonder is seen in heaven, a woman clothed with the sun, and the moon under her feet, and upon her head a crown of twelve stars. Another wonder is seen in heaven, a great red dragon, with seven heads and ten horns, and seven crowns upon his heads. And his tail drew the third part of the stars of heaven, and cast them to the earth. The dragon stands before the woman ready to devour her child so soon as brought forth. A man child who was to rule all nations with a rod of iron; and her child was caught up to the throne of God.

A man child being born, the woman flees into the wilderness, her retreat for 1260 days prepared. There is war, then, in heaven between Michael and his angels and the dragon and his angels. Michael is victorious and the dragon, called satan, and the devil, was cast out, with his angels, into the earth. Voices are heard in heaven, saying, Now is come salvation, and strength, and the kingdom of our God, and the power of his Christ, for the accusers of our brethren is cast down, which accused them before our God day and night.

The dragon cast out a flood of waters after the woman on her eagle-winged flight into her place in the wilderness. The earth helped the woman by swallowing up the floods cast out of the mouth of the dragon. Finding it impossible to reach the sun-clad woman, he went forth to make an exterminating war on her seed, which keep the commandments of God, and have the testimony of Jesus Christ.

The agents of this vision are the following: a The woman and her seed. b. Michael and his angels. c. The dragon and his angels. d. Stars. e Man child. f. Inhabitants of earth and sea. g. An angel speaking from heaven. The places: a. Heaven. b. Earth. c. The sea. d. Throne of God. e. Wilderness. Duration of the wilderness state twelve hundred and sixty days (years).

We have here brought to view the Roman world under its Pagan priesthood. These contests are between Paganism and Christianity. The dragon is the standing symbol of Pagan rulers. The crowns on the heads indicate that period in the Roman Empire. It is safe to follow the position of the crowns, which are on the heads or horns. During the existence of Pagan Rome the diadem is on the heads; under Papal Rome, it is on the horns. The diadem denotes supreme power, and is, therefore, a key to the time denoted in the vision.

The number of horns is not characteristic character in Daniel's visions as well as in the Apocalypse, the beast with ten horns symbolizes the same great empire. There never has been but one kingdom with such a family of nations. While examining the visions of John, we must keep our eye upon the crowns, and we cannot err, as to the identity of the prophetic era.

Fourth Scene.—John, standing upon the sand of sea looks over its waters: a beast, with seven heads and ten horns, with crowns on the horns, comes up out of the sea. The dragon abdicates in favor of the leopard beast, giving him his seat (Rome), his power, and great authority. One head is wounded to death, and its deadly wound was healed. There was given him a mouth (the mouth of the little horn of Daniel vii. 8). Power was given him to make war forty-two months, with the saints. His captivity is then declared. This power is Christian (now covering a period extending from Constantine the Great to the establishment of the Papacy.

Another beast is seen coming up out of the earth. And he had two horns like a lamb, and he spake as a dragon. He has all the power of the leopard beast, and causeth the earth, and them which dwell therein to worship the first beast, whose deadly wound was healed. His acts are then described. He accomplishes great wonders, bringing fire from the heavens, and deceiving by means of his miracles. The most remarkable agency is seen in his power over the people who constituted the subjects of the ten kingdoms to induce them to make an image to the leopard beast. After the people had constructed the image, the two-horned beast, by his civil power, breathes into this image the element of life, giving it organic action. It issues edicts, causing as many as would not worship the image of the leopard beast should be slain. He causes all both small and great, rich and poor, free and bond, to receive a mark in their right hand, or in their foreheads; and that no man might buy or sell, except the persons marked; or such as had the name of the beast, or the number of his name; the number is 666.

The agents of this vision are: a. The leopard, and the two-horned beasts. b. The image of the leopard beast—two wild beasts, and an image. Let us not fall into the very common error of calling this image a beast. It is not called a beast, neither is it a beast, as we shall show in some future number.

This is the GREY VISION of the Apocalypse. It covers the transition age—that in which the great empire nominally changes its religion; the period of the rise of the family of nations symbolized by the two horns; that period when the fourth monarchy exhibited all the cunning and craftiness of the leopard in sustaining two religions so opposite.

What power is symbolized by the two-horned wild beast? We propose to answer that question at length, in the future, since it is essential to the proper interpretation of the book of Revelations. It plays such a conspicuous part in the worship of the leopard beast, and that of his image, that, for the time, it must represent a powerful empire. The history of the Roman empire from A. D. 476 to A. D. 510 contains the proper solution of the difficult parts of this vision of Rev. xiii. To that history we shall appeal, for true history is fulfilled prophecy. No where does this appear more distinctly than in the Apocalypse.

Fifth Scenic Vision. A lamb stands on Mount Zion, and with him a hundred (and) forty (and) four thousand, having his Father's name written in their foreheads. A voice of harpers is heard in heaven, a great multitude, singing a new song before the throne, and before the four living creatures, and the elders; "song which no man could learn but the hundred (and) forty (and) four thousand, redeemed from the earth. Their character is then described. They are called the first fruits to God and the Lamb.

Second Scene in the Vision.—An angel, having an everlasting gospel, to every nation, kindred, tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him; for the hour of his judgment is come, and worship him that made heaven, and earth and the sea, and the fountains of waters. Rev xiv. 6, 7.

Third Scene.—"And there followed another angel, saying, Babylon is fallen is fallen, that great city, because she made all nations drink of the wine of the wrath of her fornication." Verse 8.

Fourth Scene.—"And the third angel followed them, saying with a loud voice, If any man worship the beast and his image, and receive (his) mark in his forehead, or in his hand, the same shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God, which is poured out without mixture into the cup of his indignation; and he shall be tormented with fire and brimstone in the presence of the holy angels, and in the presence of the Lamb: and the smoke of their torment ascendeth up forever and ever (unto the age of ages); and they have no rest day nor night, who worship the beast and his image, and whosoever receiveth the mark of his name. Here is the patience of the saints; here (are) they that keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus." Verses 9-12.

Fifth Scene.—John sees one, like the Son of Man, having on his head a golden crown, and in his hand a sharp sickle, sitting on a white cloud; another angel, coming out of the temple, commands him to thrust in his sharp sickle and reap; adding that the reaping time was come, since the harvest of the earth was ripe. It was done. Another angel came out of the temple in heaven, having also a sharp sickle. Another angel came out from the altar, having power over fire, and cried with a loud voice to him that had the sharp sickle, Thrust in thy sharp sickle, and gather the clusters of the vine of the earth; for her grapes are fully ripe. And the angel thrust in his sickle into the earth, and gathered the vine of the earth, and cast (it) into the great winepress of the wrath of God. And the winepress was trodden without the city, and blood came out of the winepress even unto the horses' bridles, by the space of a thousand (and) six hundred furlongs." Verses 14-20.

This vision, composed of five distinct scenes, constitutes one of the most interesting portions in the Apocalypse. The Lamb, standing on Mount Zion surrounded by the arms of first fruits, presents a scene full of sublimity. The three angels, following each other in quick succession, draw undivided attention. The two-fold harvest that succeeds keeps up our excitement till the curtain falls. Are these scenes now in their incipient stages of accomplishment? We shall see.

SELECTIONS.

The Christian Herald
Spurgeon on The Jews.

EXTRACTS.

Rather than that we shall receive a shilling out of it, we would have cut off our right hand; but we say, with Paul, the holy seed shall be the substance thereof. Isa. vi. 13.

Our first business will be briefly to explain the metaphor employed in the text. The prophet was told that despite all the remonstrances he was instructed to deliver, and notwithstanding the eloquent earnestness of his lips, which had even just touched with a live coal from off the altar, still the people of Israel would persevere in their sins, and would therefore be certainly destroyed. He asked the question, "Lord, how long?" That is, How long will the people be thus impenitent? How long will thy more judgment thus continue? And he was informed that God would waste and destroy the cities and their inhabitants till the land should be utterly desolate.

Then it was added, for his comfort, "Yet in it shall be a tenth." And so it happened, for when "Nebuchadnezzar carried away all Jerusalem," the historian gives this reservation—"none remained save the poorer sort of the people of the land." They were left by the captain of the guard "to be vine-dressers and husbandmen." Thus in it there was a tenth; this small remnant of the people, however, was to be nearly destroyed too. "It shall return and shall be eaten;" the sense is eaten up or consumed. The poor creatures left in the land, many of them fled into Egypt at the time of the conspiracy of Ishmael (not Ishmael, the son of Hagar, but an unworthy member of the royal family of Judah); and there in Egypt most of them were cut off and perished.

"But," says God, "although (this) tenth only shall be preserved, and then even this small part shall be subjected to many perils, yet Israel shall not be destroyed, for it shall be as a terebinth tree and as an oak;" their "substance is in them, when they cast their leaves," and so lose their verdure and their beauty; thus in like manner a holy seed, a chosen remnant, shall still be the substance of the children of Israel, when the fruitful land is stripped of its foliage, and that fair garden of earth is barren as the desert.

The figure is taken, first of all, from the terebinth or turpentine tree—here translated the teil tree. That tree is an evergreen, with this exception, that in very severe and inclement weather it loses its leaves; but even then the terebinth tree is not dead. And so of the oak; it loses its leaves every year, of course, but even then it is not dead. "So," says God, "you have seen the tree in winter, standing naked and bare, without any sign of life, its roots buried in the hard and frozen soil, and its naked branches exposed to every blast, without a bloom or a bud; yet the substance is in the tree when the leaves are gone. It is still there, and it shall by-and-by, in due season, bud and bloom; so," says he, "Nebuchadnezzar shall cut off all the leaves of the tree of Israel—take away the inhabitants, only a tenth shall be left, and they shall well-nigh be eaten up; still the church of God and the Israel of God never shall be destroyed; they shall be like the terebinth tree and the oak, whose substance is in them when they cast their leaves; so the holy seed shall be the substance thereof."

I hope I have made the meaning of the passage as plain as words can make it. Now, then, for the application.

I. First, to the Jews.

What a history is the history of the Jew! He has antiquity stamped upon his forehead. His is a lineage more noble than that of any knights or even kings of this our island, for he can trace his pedigree back to the very loins of Abraham, and through him to that patriarch who entered into the ark, and thence up to Adam himself. Our history is hidden in gloom and darkness; but theirs, with certainty, may be read from the first moment even down till now. And what a chequered history has been the history of first fruits, presents a scene full of sublimity. The three angels, following each other in quick succession, draw undivided attention. The two-fold harvest that succeeds keeps up our excitement till the curtain falls. Are these scenes now in their incipient stages of accomplishment? We shall see

THE RESTITUTION.

E. A. CHAPLIN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, DEC. 1, 1880.

NOTICE!

According to regulation, the Annual Meeting of the Stock holders of the Christian Publishing Association, will meet on the fourth Monday of December (27th) 1880, for the purpose of electing a new Board of Directors, and such other business as may come before the meeting.

E. S. DARNELL, SEC'Y.

THE Association contemplate an enlargement of THE RESTITUTION at the commencement of the next year, if sufficient encouragement should be manifested on the part of our brethren and friends. We hope all our present subscribers will renew as fast as their time expires, and that many who do not now take THE RESTITUTION will become its supporters. More here after.

THE Quarterly Conference Meeting of the Churches of God in Northern Indiana is appointed to be held in Plymouth, commencing on Friday evening, Dec. 24, 1880, to continue over Sunday. It will be seen in the Secretary's notice that the meeting of the Publishing Association is appointed for the following Monday. We hope to see many of our brethren and sisters at this contemplated gathering, and we implore that the Divine blessing may attend us in all our efforts to advance the cause of our Redeemer.

NEWS ITEMS.

THE OCCUPATION OF DULCIGNO.

RAGUSA, Nov. 26.—Dervisch Pasha has occupied the Mazura heights, compelling the Albanians to abandon their intrenchments. The Turks are thus enabled to communicate with the Montenegrin brigade sent to the frontier under Gen. Petrovic.

The Montenegrins are to occupy the town and district of Dulcigno with 4,000 men and twelve pieces of artillery.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Nov. 26.—In the fighting which preceded the occupation of Dulcigno by Pervisch Pasha the Turks lost 300 in killed and wounded, and the Albanians lost 400.

Montenegro has only 2,000 men at Antivari for the occupation of Dulcigno.

VIENNA, Nov. 26.—The Montenegrins have passed through Mazara, leaving a garrison there, and occupied the Turkish intrenchments on the Heights. A detachment subsequently advanced to take possession of Dulcigno.

LONDON, Nov. 27.—A despatch to the News from Vienna says that official information has been received that Dulcigno was surrendered to the Montenegrins on Friday by Dervisch Pasha personally.

A despatch to the News from Dulcigno reports that the Montenegrins have occupied all the chief positions of Dulcigno, meeting with no resistance.

GERMANY—THE WAR ON THE JEWS.

BERLIN, Nov. 27.—A great attempt is being made to excite the indignation of the students against the Jews by the Stoecker party. This is already beginning to have effect at Leipsic, where stormy meetings are held.

A Bremen newspaper says that the North German Lloyds have engaged to convey three thousand Roumanian Jews to New York before the end of the present year. The emigrants are sick of their own country, and have been enabled to seek fresh homes across the Atlantic by the liberality of their co-religionists in France and Germany. The North German Lloyds have undertaken to find orthodox food for the emigrants during the passage. The patrons provide funds not only for the passage, but also for the purchase of homes and farms in America.

CENTRAL ASIA—CAMELS AND STORES CAPTURED.

LONDON, Nov. 27.—A dispatch from Derjuez announces that the Tekke Turcomans have captured 400 camels, laden with stores for the Russian army, near Bourma.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Nov. 27.—The occupation of Dulcigno was peacefully completed at midnight Friday.

LONDON, Nov. 27.—Earl Granville in a speech to-day explained why the naval demonstration did not take place, England, he said, proposed to blockade and afterward occupy Smyrna. Russia and Greece agreed, and Austria agreed at first, but afterwards withdrew from the agreement, whereupon France, which had given tacit consent, also withdrew. Earl Granville thinks that the threat of occupying Smyrna had its effect on the Sultan, however.

LONDON, Nov. 29.—The Turks kept at a distance of 500 paces on the entry of the Montenegrins into Dulcigno. Delegates from the fleet and General Petrovic and staff were met by a deputation of citizens. The Montenegrin flag was hoisted on the fortress with a salute of twenty-one guns. The town is quiet.

LONDON, Nov 29.—Earl Granville's speech, yesterday, is understood here to mean that France will join England, Russia and Italy in coercing Turkey on the Greek boundary question. This is to be the foreign issue of the next session of Parliament. The Porte will undoubtedly resist the cession of territory, but Gladstone is resolved that it must take place.

THE KURDS.

TEHERAN, Nov. 29.—Sheik Abdullah is reported negotiating with the principal Kurds to form a coalition against Persia in the spring.

MELBOURNE, Australia, Nov. 29.—The commander and six of the crew of Her Majesty's schooner Sand Fly have been murdered at the Solomon Islands.

LONDON, Nov. 29.—The latest news from the South American war is that the Chilians occupied Pisco, 150 miles south of Lima, the 26th instant, without opposition.

COMMUNICATIONS.

"I Am as Good as Other People."

Well, what if you are? Is that going to save you? Does God promise that he will save you if you live about as other people live? Have you looked into his perfect law to see about this thing? Now what is the truth of the matter? Has he not said, "they that believe, shall be saved?" More than this; "he that believeth on me shall never thirst!"—"he that believeth on me hath everlasting life," he that eateth of this bread shall live forever." Have you come to the fountain and drank—have you believed on Jesus in a saving way, in a way that has made you act, that has brought you into his name, and set you apart for his service? Have you eaten of the bread? Is God's word your daily food? Are you keeping God's commandments? Have you come out from the world? Are you living soberly, righteously and godly in this present world? Are you denying yourselves all ungodliness and worldly lusts? Are you laying up your treasures in heaven? Not one of these things have you done. You may have accepted the truth, but you have not even believed it, in a Bible sense, until you have acted upon it. Faith that does not act is not faith. You must turn away from your sins, you must take Christ's name upon you, you must follow in his steps, you must wait for God's Son from heaven, you must rejoice in having your name cast out as evil, you must go with God's people, you must strengthen their hands, you must be prayerful, you must be fighting the good fight of faith. Put on the armor. Other people are not good enough for God. You must be a great deal better, and to become better, you must keep his commandments.

S. ROXANA WIKE.

The Glorious Future.

Psalms lxxii. Reader, please turn and read this Psalm, for in it the sweet singer of Israel has most beautifully presented the reign of Jesus—the Christ. Often have I thought I could imagine how David felt when he penned this Psalm, especially the last part, "Let the whole earth be filled with thy glory! Amen and Amen." Oh, what a scene is now before us! God, the Father, having descended and taken up his abode with Israel, as we learn from other portions of the Living Oracles, his glory now in fulfillment of his oath (Num. xiv. 21), in mighty waves rolls over and inundates this entire earth. Then Christ, having fulfilled his mission, which was to redeem the earth and the family of God, and put away sin (Luke xix. 10; Heb. ix. 26), in the presence of this innumerable company of redeemed ones, makes his returns or presents the work as finished to the Father, which he had sent him to do, that he may be all in all. See 1 Cor. xv. 24, 28. And, as a reward for the accomplishing of this work, he and his princes will reign as subordinate rulers under the Father, over the subjects, which had been prepared under his supreme rule, "for the ages of the ages." And as Pharaoh was greater in the throne than Joseph, so the Father will be greater than Jesus. And as Pharaoh governed his empire through, or by Joseph, so God will govern his vast empire through or by Jesus and his associated princes. Hence Canaan, the land promised to Abraham and his seed; the Eden where the garden was planted, and among its beautiful groves Adam and Eve once dwelt, is to become the seat of God's government, and the voice of the Elohim again be heard among its vine-clad hills.

Reader, come and take a walk with me around its beautiful city, view its jasper walls, its pearly gates, its streets of pure gold. O see the redeemed as they are standing upon the sunny banks of life's beautiful river, whose waters are clear as crystal as they roll majestically along among the verdant hills of the paradise of God! View them as they walk amid Eden's beautiful groves, recline themselves among its vine-clad hills, which will be dressed up by a hand that is all divine, their ears saluted with the sweet notes of Eden's feathered songsters, borne along on zephyr's stainless wing! The victor's palm they bear; the white robe wear. The conqueror's song they sing! Behold them! The joyful multitude purchased by the Redeemer's blood, standing on the celestial hills of their Eden home! The days of their mourning are ended! They have shed their last tears; they have uttered their last groan; they have heaved their last sigh; songs of everlasting joy are on their heads. A dazzling halo of unfading glory surrounds their once suffering bodies. Smiles of angelic sweetness dawn on their glowing faces, and unsullied beauty lingers at their steps. Oh! their sun shall no more go down, nor their moon withdraw its shining. Their saving King is with them; their mighty God is among them! A crown of righteousness shall forever sparkle on their brow and harmonious music flow from their gladsome tongues. No devouring curse, no wasting disease, no violence, no swelling floods, no passing storms, no sweeping tornadoes, no chilling frosts or winds, no blasting mildews, no raging fires, no jarring earthquakes, no forked lightnings or rattling thunders, nor marring hail-stones, nor fear, nor grief can enter there! O see them as they rise higher and higher in glory!

R. V. LYON.

Sycamore Bridge, N. Y.

SELECTIONS.

Watchfulness.

Watch ye therefore: for ye know not when the master of the house cometh, at even, or at midnight, or at the cockcrowing, or in the morning. Lest coming suddenly he find you sleeping. And what I say unto you I say unto all, watch. Mark xiii. 35-37.

Let us look at what is implied in this injunction to watch for the Son of Man.

The first particular I notice is a living faith that he is to come. No one can watch for an event which he does not believe will come to pass, or be on the lookout for an epiphany in which he has no confidence. Nor can we be in any way affected with reference to the Savior's return again to the earth, until faith first takes up the promise and makes it a reality in our minds and hearts. Something more is required even than a mere cold speculative credence, which simply admits it as a fact of prophetic history, but which awakens no warm personal and practical concern. Everybody knows that mere theoretical faith is nothing better than practical unbelief. Unless the articles of our creed are made to awaken the conscience, touch the heart, and mold the life, they cannot be said to be believed in any evangelical sense of the word. An old author has said that "cold theorems and maxims, dry and jejune disputes, lean syllogistic reasonings, could never yet, of themselves, beget the least glimpses of true heavenly light, the least sap of saving knowledge, in any heart. Words and syllables, which are but dead things, cannot possibly convey the living notions of heavenly truth to us. The secret mysteries of a Divine life, of a new nature, of Christ formed in our hearts, cannot be written or spoken; language or expressions cannot reach them; neither can they ever be truly understood, except the soul itself be kindled from within and awakened into the life which animates them. A painter that would draw a rose, though he may flourish some likeness of it in figure and color, can yet never paint the scent and fragrancy; or, if he would draw a flame, he cannot put a constant heat into his colors; he cannot make his pencil drop a sound. All the skill of cunning artisans and mechanics cannot put a principle of life into a statue of their own making. Neither are we able to enclose in words and letters the life, the soul, and essence of any spiritual truths, and incorporate it in them."

And what is true of the articles of Christian faith in general, is just as true with reference to the article of the second advent in particular. It must have a living power in the soul, and enlist our anxious attention, and excite our practical concern, and stand forth in the imagination clothed in the force of literal reality, or we cannot be said to believe it, and can in no healthful degree be watching for it.

Dr. Chalmers once wrote down in his journal this item of experience: "I have all my life viewed the truths of Christianity too much in the way of speculation, and as if at a distance. I have not closed with them; I have not laid hold of them; I have not apprehended them. I have been persuaded of the truth of the promises, but not embraced them." And precisely this record might modern Christendom justly write against itself, especially with reference to the doctrine of the coming again of Christ. People view it too much "in the way of speculation, and as at a distance." They do not "close with it." They do not "lay hold of it." They are "persuaded of the truth of it," but "do not embrace it." And it is just this which the injunction of the text strikes at as the first thing to be remedied, if we would conform to what the gospel requires upon the subject. We must accept and close in with the promise in the exercise of a living faith in its truth, and feel it as a fact that Christ is presently to appear again upon the earth.—Dr. Seiss, in the Ten Virgins.

"The Messenger."

Turned Into Hell.

The wicked shall be turned into hell, and all the nations that forget God.—Psalm ix. 17.

This passage evidently refers to the judgment, and the punishment of the wicked, and is frequently quoted as a proof text to show that the punishment of the wicked will be in hell, and that for ever. A close investigation of the passage, however, considerably alters its meaning. The word translated "turned" is in the original "shoov," which literally means "turned back" or "returned." Our greatest scholars are all agreed that this is the correct meaning of the word. Leopold, who is considered an authority on this subject, among other definitions, gives "reverti," "to turn back, to return." The word "shoov" occurs in the third verse of this Psalm, and is there translated "turned back."—"When mine enemies are turned back, they shall fall and perish at thy presence." Benisch, in his translation, renders this verse, "Wicked ones shall return unto the grave, and all the nations that forget God." The wicked, or those who forget God, "having been raised from 'sheol' to appear before the great white throne, death relaxes not its claim upon them, but in the eternal embrace of the second, supplements his temporary hold at the first."

The word shoov occurs frequently in the Old Testament, and for the sake of example we will take a few passages where it occurs. "And the Lord said unto Jacob, Return unto the land of thy fathers." Gen. xxxi. 3. "He returning and rest shall ye be saved." Isa. xxv. 15. "He restoreth my soul." Psa. xxiii. 3. "Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was; and the spirit shall return to God who gave it." Eccl. xii. 7. The last example we shall quote is Ezra vi. 21. "And the children of Israel, who were come again, out of the captivity."

It will be quite plain from these examples that the translation given by Benisch is the nearest approach to the original. If we might be allowed to paraphrase the passage before us, we would submit the following, which we consider to give the meaning both grammatically and theologically—"At the resurrection the wicked shall rise from the grave to receive the due reward of their deeds, and the doom of all unbelievers being everlasting destruction, they shall return to the grave the second time, from which there shall be no resurrection."

This passage properly understood contains the key to the "second death."—H. F. Gardiner.

"General H. Goodwyn—"Trial and Triumph," page 34.

The Invisible Power.

A few weeks ago I had an opportunity to see Saturn through one of the largest telescopes in the world. It had always looked to me such a little diamond point of light, in the arch above, that the knowledge of the vast diameter, the mammoth rings, and circling moons, had made little impression upon me. But the magnificent telescopic appearance filled me with awe indescribable.

There it hung, the mammoth planet, encircled by those gorgeous rings, luminous and inconceivably grand. I could not see the invisible force that held the planet in its place. In the great immensity of space, there was nothing above, nothing below, nothing to the right—or left; and I was overwhelmed with the thought of the invisible, silent, mighty force.

The lightning that rends the rocks, and tears in pieces the giant oake, and terrifies with its thunderings and crashings, is only a fire-fly spark compared with it. The powerful forces of the universe are the silent invisible forces.

In my laboratory work in chemistry, at the Medical College—the invisible changes among the unseen atoms always astonished me—for mightiest forces hide themselves among molecules so small that we cannot find them. The power is unseen, but just as wonderful as the force that binds worlds to worlds, and systems to systems. In regions infinitely little, as well as in regions infinitely great, are the "hidings of God's power." And so I began to comprehend the meaning of the word "Faith."

Power is spiritual, rather than physical—and faith is an invisible mighty power. "Difficulties upon difficulties can never rise to the level of the promise of God." He has the strongest faith who leans most fully on God; and he leans most fully, who is the weakest.

"The heavy, helpless leaning of utter weakness, is strong faith."

Have we faith? These are the words of our Lord—"If ye abide in me, and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will, and it shall be done unto you." He demanded of us a faith that will make divine ventures upon his power. A faith that will say nevertheless—notwithstanding great discouragements, and the apparent impossibility of success—"at thy word I will let down the net."—D. M. Latimer, in Guide to Holiness.

The Danger of Riches.

Ah! the rust of riches! Not that perdon of them which is kept bright in good and holy uses, "and the consuming fire" of the passions which wealth engenders! No rich man—I lay it down as an axiom of all experience—no rich man is safe, who is not a benevolent man; no rich man is safe but in the imitation of that benevolent God, who is the possessor and disposer of all the riches of the universe. What else mean the miseries of a selfish, luxurious, and fashionable life everywhere? What mean the sighs that come up from the parlieus, and couches, and most secret haunts of all splendid and indulgent opulence? Do not tell me that other men are sufferers too.—Say not that the poor, and destitute, and forlorn, are miserable also. Ah! just heaven! thou hast in thy mysterious wisdom appointed to those a lot hard, full hard, to bear.—Poor houseless wretches! who "eat the bitter bread of penury, and drink the baleful cup of misery;" the winter winds blow keenly through your "looped and windowed raggedness;" your children wander about unshod, unclothed, and untended; I wonder not that ye sigh. But why should they, who are surrounded by everything that heart can wish, or imagine can conceive—the very crumbs that fall from whose table of prosperity might feed hundreds—why should they sigh amidst their profusion and splendor? They have broken the bond that should connect power with usefulness, and opulence with misery. This is the reason. They have taken up their treasures, and wandered away into a forbidden world of their own, far from the sympathies of suffering humanity; and the heavy night dews are descending upon their splendid revels; and the all-gladdening light of heavenly beneficence is exchanged for the sickly glare of selfish enjoyment; and happiness, the blessed angel that hovers over generous deeds and heroic virtue, has fled away from the world of false gaiety and fashionable exclusion.—Dr. Dewey.

Our Times.

The times in which we live are eventful and solemn. All things seem hastening to a point—to some great and inevitable crisis. So rapidly does the mighty wheel of Providence now revolve, that Prophecy is daily passing into history. Institutions, the work of centuries, that seemed stable as the mountains, are giving way. Principles, that seemed forever secured, are again denied and denounced. Controversies, that had lain for ages in silent oblivion, are again revived, and are engaging thousands in keenest warfare. The church is rapidly separating from the world—the men of God from the men of the earth, to range themselves on opposite sides; and few now doubt that, if not the last, yet certainly some dread momentous struggle between light and darkness, between the seed of the woman and the seed of the serpent, is at hand. In such circumstances, what a blessing is it that we are not left to grope in the dark, or trust to vague conjectures? No! we have a more sure Word of Prophecy, unto which we do well to take heed; for it is as a light shining in a dark place, as a pilot in the storm, as a note of warning in a time of peace, and as a voice of encouragement in the hour of conflict; for while it tells of a night of deepest darkness, it also tells of an immediately succeeding day of brightest light—a day of universal righteousness, rest, and glory.

(N. Y. Observer.)

Gas in Jerusalem.

The announcement that a gas company has undertaken to light Jerusalem with gas, gives rise to the following remarks: "The lighting of streets was introduced by the Israelites as early as the time of Samuel. King Saul caused a large number of streets to be lit up at his own expense. The arrangement of a torchlight procession was also known among the Israelites in the earliest times; for instance, on the termination of the Day of Atonement, the High Priest, on leaving the Temple, was escorted to his residence by thousands of his co-religionists bearing torches. Equally interesting is it to know that already in the time of the Second Temple, street-sweepers were to be found in Jerusalem, whereas, in civilized Paris, they were not introduced till the 16th century."

BREVITIES.

Four boys, while removing a primrose root at Felton near Bristol, unearthed a large urn containing thousands of coins of the Emperors Domitian and Constantine.

At the personal solicitation of Sir Henry Layard before he left Constantinople the Sultan was pleased to extend for another two years, dating from next spring, the period during which the employes of the British museum are to be permitted to continue their excavations of the mounds of Assyria and Babylonia.

Dr. Wenger, the eminent Baptist missionary to India, died in Calcutta on August 20th. He had translated the historical and prophetical books of the Old Testament and the Gospels and Acts into Sanscrit, putting the poetical parts of the Old Testament into Sanscrit verse. In Bengali he executed one or two revisions of the translation of the Bible, and parts of it he translated afresh. His version is used by all denominations of Christians in Bengal. Dr. Wenger was a Swiss by birth. He went out to India in 1839, and, with the exception of about three years spent in two visits to Europe, he passed the whole of the intervening period in India.

Professor Nordenskjold, the Arctic Explorer, in an interview with a newspaper correspondent, has stated some curious things about the climate in regions of perpetual snow: "The cold is by no means so insupportable as is supposed. We passed from a heated cabin at 30 degrees above zero to 0 degrees below zero in the open air without inconvenience. At 15 degrees below zero a steam, as if from a boiling kettle, rises from the water. At once frozen by the wind it falls in a fine powder. At 40 degrees the snow and human bodies also smoke, which smoke changes at once into millions of tiny particles, like needles of ice, which fill the air and make a light, continuous noise, like the rustle of a stiff silk. At this temperature the trunks of trees burst with a loud report, the rocks break up, and the earth opens and vomits smoking water. Knives break in cutting butter. Cigars go out by coming in contact with ice on the beard. To talk is fatiguing. At night the eyelids are covered with a crust of ice, which must be carefully removed before one can open them."

[San Francisco Post.]

THE PETRIFIED FOREST IN CALIFORNIA.

The site of the petrified forest is about one thousand feet above the sea level, and lies in the same trend with the Geysers, Mount St. Helena, and the thermal springs of Calistoga. Geologically it is one vast tuffa bed, in which the trees lie as they were thrown, probably thousands of years ago by some vast convulsion of nature. This tuffa, I will say for the benefit of the uninitiated in scientific lore is a volcanic ash or cinder; it is lava thrown upward in a fiery mass and descending with rain. It is gray in color and granular in structure. Sometimes it is found imbedded in the form of little globes or bombs. Ammonites, found in the strata, fix the event in the cretaceous period; the professor inclines to the opinion that it was pre-glacial. The trees lie at five or six different levels—on the lower almost north and south; at the highest, northeast and southwest. At the latter level the trees must have been buried under eighty or a hundred feet of lava; at the lowest, five hundred feet, their dip conforms to the dip of the tuffa, and is at an angle of from thirty to forty-five degrees. They are in fragments, many of which have been converted into charcoal, others into lignite, and others into beautiful specimens of jet. Where the heart of a tree had decayed the cavity is filled with opal, a form of lustrous, uncrystalized silica, containing water. Chalcedony, another form of silica, but clear and limpid, is found in other cavities. No top has been petrified, and only here and there a root. Many have been charred by fire. Some are broken after petrifaction had taken place, as there is no mark of splintering or bruising. What must have been the giant force that followed their first destruction to have dealt this further blow? The majority of the trees are redwood, some few the madrona, and the limb of an oak has also been found. One of the first named is eleven feet in diameter, and the part of the trunk still preserved is sixty-eight feet in length. Another shows marks of having been hacked with an axe, probably made of obsidian, as all the pre-historic implements from this locality were made of this substance. A volcanic rock, which appears in abundance all about. There is no mistaking the fact that the cutting was done before petrifaction began, as the cuts appear at different angles to the grain of the wood.

POETRY.

In The Shadow.

I walk through darkened paths, yet know
My Father marks the way I go;
I can not see the tender smile,
But feel his clasping hand the while:
And since he feeds the sparrow's fall
I trust his love, in spite of all.

Borne through the dark by loving arms,
I sometimes shrink with vague alarms,
As closer clings that I may hear
The voice that whispers in mine ear,
"Oh, trembling soul!" it says to me,
"Rest in the love that clings to thee!"

I do not feel if long the way
By which I go, through night and day;
But, weep or late, I know we two
Will walk in sunshine, hand and soul;
And, soon or late, before me yet
The radiant hills of peace uprise.

LETTER DRAWER.

Editor Restitution:—Let me say through THE RESTITUTION to all the dear brethren, that I have just returned home from a trip that I had over to Golden City, Mo. There I met our old brethren Josiah Pierce, of Indiana, and Dr. Messick and others, old Father and Mother Sanford. Amos Sanford's father and mother. I spoke six times at Golden City, on the "Plan of the Ages," or, in other words, "The Three Worlds; or Restitution of All Things." One man put on Christ by baptism; his name is W. W. Cushman, son-in-law of Dr. James Messick. The brethren at Golden City say to me, to say to the brethren scattered, and especially to Brethren Finn, J. S. Lawyer, and all others, that their home is at Golden City, Barton county, Mo., and that they are in the faith of a full and complete restitution of all things spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets (Acts iii.); and that their houses are ever open for Jesus and his friends: W. W. Cushman, five miles south of Golden City; Dr. James Messick, one mile north of Golden City; Father Sanford, at the City—he runs the hotel. I will further say, that my postoffice address, after November 25, will be Macy, Miami county, Ind., and will be for one or two months. Also will begin a meeting on Saturday evening before the fourth Sunday in that month, wherever Bro. Stephen Foore may appoint, to continue as long as we think best. Brethren from abroad are invited to come and hear your old friend and brother. Also will say to the brethren that desire my labors to write me at that place. Write in good time, so I can make my arrangements. Would like to see all my old brethren and as many new ones as I can get to see. Come one, come all, and let us have a good time together once more. As we are looking for the Master to come, let us live so that we may be ready to meet him when he comes. Let us lay aside our worldly cares for a few days, or weeks, and have a good time. May the good Lord bless our aged editor, and all the dear brethren. As ever, your brother in the hope of eternal life,

JOHN FOORE.

Galesburg, Kan.

Editor Restitution:—I returned from Lake county, in this state, about one week ago. My health is quite good. The asthma and chills have left me, and I am regaining my strength very fast in this healthful climate. Large fires are raging in the mountains, doing great damage. Our fall rains have not set in yet, and the indications are favorable for dry weather for a time yet. Some are concluding that the perihelion of the planets has an influence upon our earth. Others think not. Very few realize that we are entering into "a time of trouble such as never was since there was a nation." Very few will heed the signs of impending events until too late to do them any good. I will write again for the paper in a few days.

As ever in hope,

RICHARD CORBALEY.

Healdsburg, Cal.

To the Brethren and Sisters scattered abroad, Greeting:—Dearly beloved, I embrace the opportunity to appraise you of my whereabouts, and also of my condition of health, at the present time by the blessing of God, I am able to attend to business once more, and am at present engaged in settling the affairs of Bro. W. H. Peck, who passed from life Oct. 26th. Bro. Peck was well known to many readers of THE RESTITUTION as a liberal Christian gentleman, and a firm supporter of the gospel of the kingdom. Many a pilgrim has been fed and cared for by himself and his estimable wife, who shared with him in all his interest pertaining to the kingdom of Christ. Poor sister Peck, do not forget to pray and she may be sustained under her terrible trial, for she has been called to pass through the deep water of affliction. I visited the family near the close of Sept. and found her two boys one 16, and one 18, prostrated with typhoid fever, she wished me to remain and take care of the boys, on the 4th day of Oct. we closed the eyes of the eldest boy, and the next day we laid him in his narrow house to rest until Jesus comes. About four years ago I immersed him into the name of Jesus, (let him rest in peace and hope.) a few days before his death Bro. Peck returned home sick, and on the 25th of Oct. he also fell asleep, and we carried him to his resting place. Her other son recovered, but sister Peck had still to encounter other trials, her only daughter was taken with the same disease, and to-day at this writing lies quite low, having been sick five weeks, we hope for her recovery and ask your prayers for the same. As to myself I was attacked with the fever, and prostrated for 3 weeks, but by the blessing of God, and as I firmly believe by the prayers of the church, I was quickly restored, and am still able to administer to the wants of others. I wish to acknowledge through our dear paper that I have been the recipient of money enough to pay all my current expenses during my sickness, and also to pay my expenses home to my family. God bless them and add his usual rate of interest, (one hundred per cent). I will acknowledge the receipts personally by card soon. I close by subscribing myself. Your servant and brother.

C. C. RAMSAY.

Editor Restitution:—Let me say to the many readers of THE RESTITUTION to send for the pamphlet for sale by your office entitled "Christ's kingdom" "Where is it?" and "What is it?" by Joseph Leclar of Manch Chunk, Pa. Price 10 cents. And I will say to every one getting it (of the brotherhood) that if they are not paid a hundred fold by reading it, that I will pay them back their money and trouble. Yes brethren and sisters get it to read and buy at least a dollars worth to distribute to your interested neighbors, and you will do much good for Jesus, and enlighten them. And let me just say to the brethren and sisters scattered abroad, that John Foore of Galesburg, Kan., has preached as well as myself for the last many years the things concerning the name of Jesus Christ, and the kingdom of God, so beautifully illustrated and elucidated in said pamphlet of Joe. Leclar. Yes I have heard Brother Foore for many years, and if you send for him you will not be disappointed, he is an earnest, able and logical reasoner, and God has stamped his approval upon his work, by many who are now rejoicing in the light of "God's oath to Abraham." I have been in a hundred places or more where he has preached, and he was always approved for his kind and Christian deportment. I write this in answer to some inquiries that have been made through THE RESTITUTION from some brethren, for fear Brother Foore had run off on a tangent—Bro. Foore does not believe in a compromise, for it has been wisely said that "a compromise is a proceeding in which the hypocrites deceive each other," but in speaking the truth in love Brother Foore is a self-educated man, and mighty in the Scriptures. Brethren send for him, and keep him in the field, for the harvest is great, and the laborers are few; brethren such men as Stephenson, Myers, Foore and all who are willing, ought to be kept in the field, and don't forget to get all who are interested in the one faith to subscribe for THE RESTITUTION, it will be the cause of keeping believers alive, they cannot live without food, recollect that the church is increased through human agency but the kingdom will be set up miraculously. The winter months brethren, is the time to push the claims of THE RESTITUTION on your neighbors, for then they have time to read and investigate. Yours in love.

J. S. LAWYER,

Berlin, [illegible], Mo.

SELECTIONS.

(Christian Herald and Signs of our Times.)

ELEVEN SIGNS OF THE NEARING ADVENT OF CHRIST.

The Night Coming: Signs of Christ's Advent Notable and Numerous: The Millennium not a Sign—1. Wars, Earthquakes, Pestilence, and Famines—2. Restlessness of the World—3. Missionary Exertions—4. Position of Israel—5. Disbelief in the Church—6. Human Efforts at Self-Regeneration—7. The Spirit of Knowledge—8. The Maturity of Papal Anti-Christ—9. The Diffusion of Infidelity—10. The Increase of Immorality—11. Increase of Sanctimony and Formalism.

The night cometh! Nor does it seem far off. It never appeared so nigh. The shadows are lengthening out, and falling with ominous gloom upon the valleys of earth. The dimness of twilight is beginning to make itself felt. It is settling down drearily upon our cities, and on our solitudes; upon the towers of our strength, and the palaces of our pomp; nor can the noisy rush of eager multitudes, hurrying to and fro for gain or pleasure, wholly stifle the utterance of fear and awe.

Yet it is written also, "The day is at hand!" The night, though dark, will be brief, and will be soon succeeded by a glorious day. But still of that day the night will be the forerunner. And this world's night is surely near.

The signs of Christ's second advent that have been given us both by the Lord and his apostles are both notable and numerous. And it is very evident that those have been selected which were the most expressive and least ambiguous. They were chosen as being the most prominent and explicit that could be given. It cannot be thought that the least striking have been announced and the most striking concealed.

If so, then is it not very remarkable that the Millennium of a thousand years is never mentioned as a sign at all? Had this been to take place before the second advent, how has it never been alluded to as one of the most signal? it would have been by far the most distinct and visible. No one could overlook or mistake it. Yet nowhere, by prophets or apostles, or by the Lord himself, is it noted as a sign. How can this be accounted for, save upon the ground that it was to take place after, not before, the advent? If this be omitted, all is plain: if it be denied, then let those who deny it account for the fact, that among the many signs of the advent, the Millennium is never mentioned as one. How the most palpable of them could be omitted seems to me to require an explanation. On the post-millennial system, the omission seems to me inexplicable. For thus our Lord would be made to profess to tell us the signs of his appearing, and yet to conceal the most notable of them all

But this is not all. The signs given are inconsistent with the idea of a Millennium before the second advent. Who that read the Lord's prophecy in Matt. xxiv., which begins with the destruction of Jerusalem and ends with his second appearing in the clouds of heaven, does not feel that the whole drift of it was to show the church that they were to expect sorrow, not joy, tribulation, not triumph, up till the time when he should return? These signs were the successive events of the billows on which she was to be tossed, till he, with his own voice and presence, should rebuke and calm the ocean.

Let me now note some of the signs which, in the present day, seem most remarkable as forerunners of the Lord's appearing. And though of some of these it might be said they have been found in former days, yet others of them, as we shall see, are peculiar to our own.

1. WARS and rumors of wars, earthquakes, pestilences, and famines in divers places. Matt. xxiv. 6, 7. I need not enter minutely into the proof of the existence of these. The public journals bear witness to it. For awhile it seemed almost as if the world were at rest, as if its storms had spent themselves. But now all seems changed. Every day brings new indications of

DISQUIETUDE AND CONVULSION.

Few nations seem willing to draw the sword, yet every nation has her hand upon the hilt: with some it is already gleaming in the air, and with others it is reddened with blood. Over the whole earth is heard "the long, low, distant murmur of dread sound." And is this not the prelude to the Last Universal War? Ezek. xxxviii; Zech. xiv; Dan. xi. 40-45; xii. 1; Rev. xvii. 7; xvi. 12-16; xvii. 8-14; xix. 11-14. Is it not a sign of the near approach of him who, when earth's madness and ambition are at their height—when the summoned nations are gathered to Armageddon, girt for battle and slaughter—himself appears for their discomfiture and ruin? Then, but not till then, wars shall cease, and the weapons of war perish.

2. THE RESTLESSNESS OF THE WORLD.

This sign is in part connected with the preceding, yet may be viewed separately. The state of the world is at present very ominous. "Distress of nations with perplexity—men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things that are coming on the earth," "and then shall they see the Son of Man coming in a cloud," Luke xxi. 25, 27. is God's picture of the state of men at the final crisis drawn on. This certainly seems our attitude at this moment. The earth, and the things that are coming on it, attract the attention of all serious thinkers. There is something in the state of the world so unsettled, so pregnant with uncertain evil, that every eye is moving to and fro in expectation of strange issues, and as if to catch the first sign of the ir approach. The time for listlessness and apathy is gone.

SOME THIRTY YEARS AGO,

when the skies were bright, and men could promise themselves days of sunshine, it was safe enough to fold the hands and take our ease. But all this is over. No doubt, after the excitement of recent wars and revolutions, men would pause to say that the onward swell of the waters stays not for an hour. There is among the nations a spirit of restlessness, anarchy, and insubordination, a passionate love of change, a headlong rush to overturn every established system, too furious and united to be ultimately withstood. Many call it but a passing tumult, the frenzy of an hour; but they who understand it know how deep is the spring out of which it flows. The storm, long gathering, but restrained and repressed by the barriers which ancient wisdom had erected for the stability of kingdoms, is concentrating and condensing its strength in those venerable recesses, which may for a while refuse to yield to the explosive force, but which, overstrained at length, give way to the accumulated pressure; then will the kingdoms of the earth be shivered; throne and temple overturned; wall and fortress laid in ruins. Such is the night which is to precede the long-looked-for day—when not only Israel but the whole earth shall arise and put on the garments of beauty, to meet for the personal presence of their glorious King.

3. HOME AND FOREIGN MISSIONARY EXERTIONS.

No age since that of the apostles has witnessed such widespread exertions in behalf of the Jewish and Gentile nations as our own. This certainly is a sign peculiar to the present century. I do not speak of Missionary and Bible Societies as if they were to convert the world; but still I would point to the fact of hundreds of missionaries going forth to every region of our globe, millions of Bibles circulated—almost every nation having the Scriptures in their own language—and pointing to these simple but magnificent facts, I ask, Is there not in these a most palpable fulfillment of the words of the Lord. "This Gospel of the kingdom shall be preached to all nations for a witness, and then shall the end come?" Matt. xxiv. 14. In our day we have the preaching of the Gospel, and its witness-bearing most manifest.

The result is not the conversion of the world, but the gathering out of the election. Acts xv. 14. And then the End comes! It is not said, And then the Millennium comes; but the End—the end of this present age, and the Coming of the Son of Man. This sign seems also referred to in Rev. xiv. 6, "I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting Gospel, to preach unto them that dwell on the earth, and to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people, saying with a loud voice, Fear God, and give glory to him, for the hour of his judgment is come." This sign will, I doubt not, become more and more visible—but still there it is already before us—a sign which foretells a coming Lord, and most distinctly intimates the impossibility of a Millennium at his Advent.

4. THE POSITION OF ISRAEL.

This long-forgotten nation is now coming into remembrance. The nations of the earth are beginning to observe this strange people. "terrible from the beginning hitherto." The eyes both of the world and of the Church are far more intently directed toward them than they have been since the day that their city perished, and they were led captive into the land of the stranger. It is curious to observe how both travellers and missionaries are continually making new discoveries with regard to Israel, stumbling upon some new fragment of their lost ten tribes.

A GOODLY NUMBER OF JEWS

are also turning their eyes to the Cross of Christ. The "remnant according to the election of grace" is visibly coming in. The interest taken in the Jews everywhere is very striking. God is once more placing them before the eyes of the world, as those through whom he has blessed the world in times past, and through whom he means to bless it again. But when is this? Not till "the Redeemer shall come to Zion, and turn away ungodliness from Jacob." Not till "they shall look on him whom they have pierced, and mourn." The full salvation of Israel is reserved for the coming of their Messiah. Then, but not till then, shall "Israel blossom and bud, and fill the face of the world with fruit." Rom. xi. 5, 26; Zech. xii. 10.

5. DISBELIEF OF THE APPROACHING ADVENT OF CHRIST, EVEN IN THE CHURCH.

It is no marvel that the world should either deride or deny that event. And it is of the world's mocking that Peter speaks when he says, "There shall come in the last days scoffers, saying, Where is the promise of his coming?" But the Church also loses sight of that day; nay, refuses to credit the news of its approach. She says, "My Lord delayeth his coming." She slumbers and sleeps. And it is just when she is speaking thus, and thus slumbering, it is in an hour when she thinks not, that he arrives. It is often said, Surely, if the time were just at hand, more of God's people would believe it. But it is when many of them are not believing it, and counting on delay, that the Bridegroom comes. While then we mourn that so many of the saints should misinterpret the nearness of that day, let us also lift up our heads, for by this sign we know that our redemption draweth nigh. Luke xxi. 28; Matt. xxiv. 33.

Scripture plainly predicts the future restoration of the Jewish nation to Palestine—first, partially in unconverted state from politico-[illegible] Jer. [illegible]; Dan. [illegible]; Jer. [illegible]; Zech. [illegible]; Isa. [illegible]; then, in a converted state, as the result of a miraculous conversion and restoration after the [illegible] period of "Jacob's trouble." Luke [illegible]; Isa. [illegible]; Rom. [illegible], etc.

Now, who can tell the exact time when [illegible] will be in the Abrahamic land? Will the Church see [illegible] when the Hebrews are there? How [illegible]? Will it be possible for any [illegible] to know the coming?

(To be Continued.)

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

I will guide for the benefit of friends and brethren who may come to this city, that I will be at Adventist Book Room, No. 21 Bible House, New York, from Dec. 11th to [illegible] inclusive, where I will be pleased to meet them.

E. M. MYERS.

Notice.

My address is 220 Eighth Street, Washington, D. C. NEWELL DOD.

LETTER RECEIPTS.

SUBSCRIPTIONS.

C Boyd	$2 00	A Jacobs	$1 50
J Middlecoff	2 00	E Terrell	1 00
Mrs J W Dalbadie	2 00	Wright & Sons	1 50
Elizabeth Hawkins	1 00	Wm Stiles	1 00
Mrs E J Sykes	1 00	W Chamberlain	1 00
Mrs Tuckett	1 00	Wm Palmer	1 00
A E Hutchison	3 00	D A Kendall	1 00
Miss Scherer	1 00	O M Metcalf	1 00
P Howard	50	J J Bowman	1 00
Catherine Harrold	1 00	M F Foster	1 00
A R Ecob	1 00	J L Hickey	1 00
A B Richardson	50	Miss L W Hickey	1 00
J S Lamson	2 00	A Hibbins	1 00
A Foote	1 00	C H Dresser	2 00
R Corbaley	2 00	Mrs Lois Bullock	1 00
P A Blackwell	2 00	Jas Meader	1 00
L H Hanson	50	D S Lyon	1 00

BOOKS AND TRACTS

D F Cox	$5	R Price	$ [illegible]
M F Fowler	75	J S Lamson	1 00
W Churchill	1	J Hickey	1 00
Chas E Oliver	1	N F Randle	1 00
Wright & Sons	1	Mrs Wm Scott	1 00
J E Hendrickson	15	C M Hendrickson	1 00
Ira Bridgeford	5 00

RESTITUTION FUND

Amount published previously to this date ..... $[illegible]
A Postlip 1 00

PICTORIAL DESCRIPTION OF THE Tabernacle in the Wilderness

ITS RITES AND CEREMONIES.

By the Late JOHN D. LAWORTH.

96 Pages. Price 10c. For Sale at this Office.

A NEW TRACT.

Christ's Kingdom!

Where is it? What is it?

Being a discourse delivered at Bedford, Pa., by Joe. Leclar, of Manch Chunk, Pa. This is a 32 page tract, neatly printed and should have a wide circulation. Send to this office for it. Price 10.

Something New!

GOD ESTABLISHED, —AND— The Bible Vindicated!

—BY—

A. J. EYCHANER.

The above is the title of a new work, just out and about ready for the hands of every subscriber to the Herald. When this is made known, the writer will at once go to get this work. [illegible] and you to commencing this enemy. 30 pages. Price each 15 for 50c, or 30 for $1. Send to the office for it.

SECOND EDITION!

THE GOSPEL OF THE KINGDOM

As recited in a Series of

TEN DISCOURSES.

—BY—

WILEY JONES.

This edition is elegantly printed and bound by Lippincott & Co., clear type, good paper, 328 pages. Sent by mail at the following prices. Plain cloth binding $1.00, cloth gilt edge $1.50, leather marbled edges $1.75. To obtain this valuable work, send the price by Postoffice order or registered letter to

WILEY JONES,

Jefferson, Va.

Astronomical Etiology, or

STAR PROPHECIES

Concerning coming disasters on the earth from 1881 to 1888. By N. L. Knapp. Price, [illegible] cts. Published by Thomas Wilson. Also [illegible] an appendix by the publisher. 72 pages. [illegible]

HYMNS OF THE ADVENT

In the course of a new Hymn Book, just out, compiled by Chas. C. Barker—compiler of the "Hymns of the Morning"—and published by W. S. Pike, Springfield, Mass.

Mr. Barker combines in this new work the "Hymns of the Morning" and a fresh and rare selection of music. Also upper alphabetical selection of "Favorite Hymns" (words only) whose music is familiar as a household word. Those of our readers who have been waiting for "Hymns of the Morning" for a long time, can now be supplied with this new book, which is superior to it in all but many new and beautiful songs. Those having the "Christian Pentecost" and no music book will find this exactly what they want.

Send to this office for them. Price only 40 cents.

NEW EDITION.

A LETTER TO A FRIEND

By MRS. C. C. WOODRUFF.

This little book is so well known that the announcement that a new edition has been printed should be enough, without comment.

32 PAGES. PRICE 10 CENTS

Send for a Copy to this Office.

BOOK LIST.

The following publications are kept constantly on hand at the Restitution office, and will be sent postpaid to any address in the United States and Canada, upon receipt of published price. Address all orders to

THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Ind.

The Millennium. A book of 336 hymns suited to [illegible]. Cloth, 40c; leather, plain, 60c; leather, gilt, 75c.

Bible Doctrine. Suited for wide distribution. No. 1. The Coming and Kingdom of Christ, by T. Wilson. 16 pages. 2. Immortality. 4. The Kingdom of God. 5. Nature of Man and Thoughts for Thinkers. 6. The Two Advents. 7. What is Restitution. 8. The Restitution Age. 9. Destiny of the Wicked. 10. Baptism. Ten copies for 30 cents; per hundred, $2.50.

FOUR FALL SERMONS of Elder [illegible] for $1.

The Coming Kingdom. Contains 16 absorbing [illegible].

Christ's Coming. A careful examination of the prophecies. It's near day, shall we [illegible]? 16 pp.

Jesus Christ and the Resurrection. By [illegible]. Cloth. A careful examination of the prophecies. It's near day, shall we [illegible]? 16 pp.

Is it True? By H. W. Reed. An examination of [illegible] with a glance at [illegible]. [illegible] Second Coming of Christ, the Resurrection, [illegible] Future Life, Retribution.

The Coming of Christ. The Rich Man and Lazarus. [illegible]

EIGHT PAGE TRACTS.
Per 100, 40 cts.; per 1000, $3.

Is Immortality Inherent? Or, Is Man a Mortal? By [illegible].

Christ's Coming. By Josiah Litch. A careful examination of the prophecies. It's near day, shall we [illegible]? 16 pp.

Is it True? By H. W. Reed. An examination of [illegible] with a glance at [illegible]. [illegible] Second Coming of Christ, the Resurrection, [illegible] Future Life, Retribution.

The Coming of Christ. The Rich Man and Lazarus. [illegible]

EIGHT PAGE TRACTS.
Per 100, 40 cts.; per 1000, $3.

Is Immortality Inherent? Or, Is Man a Mortal? By [illegible].

Christian Unity. By Joel A. Simonds.

Review Notes and the Kingdom of God. By E. Hayes. Well intended to [illegible] subject. [illegible] Theory of Immortality. By J. H. Cook.

SEVEN-PAGE TRACTS.
Five cents each, $3 for 100, $25 for 1000.

The Kingdom of God. By Josiah Pierce.

The Restitution Creed. By Joel A. Simonds.

The Kingdom of Christ. By Joseph Marsh, D.D. Set forth in [illegible] and [illegible]. Bible quotations.

What is Light? By T. Wilson, showing the Bible teaching on the question, Is or is not Christ's Kingdom to be set up on the earth, or in heaven. The Kingdom. By [illegible]. The [illegible] made by Messiah, as revealed to Isaac and Jacob, and as repeatedly referred to by Prophets and Apostles.

The Way to Life. By H. V. Reed. Just the Bible to circulate everywhere.

TWENTY-FOUR PAGE TRACTS.
Five cents each, $3 for 50, $5 for 100.

The Kingdom. By Josiah Litch. Treating on the restoration of God's Kingdom.

Is Immortality Inherent? By T. Wilson. An argument from the Scriptures, showing that the saints and not an unclothed, as many suppose, but will be ever with the Master at the [illegible].

Plain Facts about the Voice and Coming Spiritualism. By H. V. Reed. Contains [illegible] Spiritualism.

The Sabbath. By Joel A. Simonds.

TWENTY-FIVE CENT TRACTS.
Ten cents each, 6 for $1.

Evangelium concerning the reign of Christ on earth and the Salvation, a brief statement of the Gospel concerning the Kingdom of God and the Name of Jesus Christ. By Miles Jones.

The Restitution, or the World restored. To [illegible] and the truth [illegible] examination. By S. Minier. A careful and [illegible] examination of Acts iii. 21.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS.

The Rich Man and Lazarus. By Thomas Wilson. The [illegible] throughout in harmony with Bible teaching. Extra cloth, price $1.00.

Sermons on Faith. Being a series of sermons on the Primitive Christian Faith, of the Gospel as taught by the Apostles and Primitive Fathers. Bound in cloth, 300 pages. By C. F. Sweet, of Abilene, Kan. Price $1.00.

Bible Gift. Vol. I. May to Dec. 1878. A first [illegible] weekly, edited by W. Kellogg. Contains important principles and discussions on [illegible] questions. Not now published. 7 volumes. Originally $3.50, now offered at $1.

Bible Echo. Vol. II. January to June, 1878. 7 volumes, formerly $3.50, now $1.

Bible Echo. Vol. III. July to September, 1878. 3 volumes. Completes the Bible Echo as a weekly. Formerly price $1.50, now 75 cents.

The Jubilee issued by the seven Israelitish editors relating to the [illegible] and [illegible] of the Holy Land [illegible] by H. H. Wilson. Just the thing for [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] of the [illegible] and [illegible] of the Bible. 40 pp. Price 10 cts.

The Doctrine of Immortality. By James H. Wilkinson. 20 cents postpaid. Everybody should read it.

The Doctrine of Baptism as taught in the Holy Scriptures, together with a collection of evidence upon this subject, from the most learned Pedobaptist writers, by the apostolic historians and fathers, on its true mode and subjects. By Elder [illegible]. 96 pages, paper 25 cents; cloth [illegible].

Bible Readings for the Home Circle. Two hundred and fifty [illegible] questions, [illegible] Bible [illegible] arranged for the use of Bible classes and [illegible] examination. By [illegible]. Price, paper, 30 cents; cloth, [illegible].

Bible Proofs. A book of 240 pages, containing [illegible] Scripture texts, with [illegible] and [illegible] on the following subjects: The Unconscious State of the Dead; Immortality Conditional; Eternal Life Promised to the Righteous Only; Endless Punishment Examined; Origin of the Soul; Origin of Evil; Satan; Who Shall Be Saved; Election; Predestination; Reprobation; Free Will; Free Grace; Faith; Repentance; Baptism; Laying on of Hands; Resurrection of the Dead; Eternal Judgment; Restitution; Miscellaneous Questions. Bound in cloth, 400 pages. Price, extra cloth, $1.00; Library Binding, $1.50 postpaid. For sale at this office.

Address, THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth Ind.

MISTAKES of INGERSOLL,

Being a review of Col. R. G. Ingersoll's lecture entitled "Mistakes of Moses."

By J. M. STEPHENSON.

This is a large [illegible] book, [illegible] tinted paper. Price [illegible] cents; [illegible] cents. For sale at the [illegible]

New English Books.

Bible Dictionary. By Mrs. H. V. Reed. Paper 50 c. A reply to "Bible Contradictions," etc. Paper 50 c. By A. J. Davis. An able refutation of Infidel cavilers.

Hades, or the Intermediate state of the Dead. By Henry Constable, A. M. Cloth, $1.00. Presents the Bible doctrine of the state of man between death and the resurrection.

Discourses on the Signs of the Times. Between the Rev. W. C. Burleson, Congregational minister, and W. Kellogg, editor of Bible Echo, and minister of the Gospel. Both of England. The propositions discussed were: 1. That the dead exist in a living, conscious state after their decease. Affirmed by W. C. B. 2. That the Scriptures teach that the dead in Christ are wholly unconscious, incapable of and unable to perform any act whatever, and that they rest in darkness, silence and the dust. [illegible] paper, 50c.

THE NEW TESTAMENT IN GREEK AND ENGLISH,

EXHIBITING THE

EMPHATIC DIAGLOTT,

Containing the original Greek text of the New Testament, with an Interlinear word-for-word English translation, based on the readings of eminent critics, and on the various readings of the Vulgate, Nestorian, together with a literal and explanatory foot notes, and a copious selection of references by Benjamin Wilson.

The object of the Diaglott is to [illegible] the New Testament as the foundation which most of the sects of Christendom have been built up; with this work each reader may judge for himself whether the words thus literally translated are so arranged in the common version as to express the exact meaning of the New Testament writers. New improved edition on large 8 vo. One vol. 864 pp. Price, extra cloth, $5.00; Library Binding, $5.50 postpaid. For sale at this office.

Address, THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth Ind.

POETRY.

A Mosaic on Life.

This curious compilation is said to have occupied a year in searching for and fitly together the thirty-eight lines from Greek, English and American poets. The authors names are appended.

Why all this toil for triumphs of an hour? 1
Life's a short summer—man a flower; 2
By turns we catch the vital breath, and die—3
The cradle and the tomb, alas! so nigh. 4
To be is better far than not to be, 5
Though all man's life may seem a mass of misery; 6
But light cares speak when mighty griefs are dumb—7
The bottom's but skation whereon they come. 8
Your life is but the common lot of all: 9
Unmingled joys, here, to no man befall. 10
Nature to each allots his proper sphere—11
Fortune makes folly her peculiar care. 12
Custom does not often reason overrule, 13
As I throw water's sunshine on a fool. 14
Live well—how long or short permit to heaven; 15
They who forgive most shall be most forgiven. 16
Sin may be clasped so close we may not see it—17
Be warned—18
Vile intercourse where virtue has not place. 19
Then keep each passion down, however dear, 20
Thou pendulum betwixt a smile and a tear; 21
Her sensual snares let faithless Pleasure lay, 22
With craft and skill, to ruin and betray. 23
Soar not too high to fall, nor stoop to rise; 24
We masters grow of all that we despise. 25
Oh! then renounce that impious self-esteem; 26
Riches have wings, and grandeur is a dream. 27
Think not ambition wise because 'tis brave; 28
The paths of glory lead but to the grave. 29
What is ambition? 'Tis a glorious cheat. 30
Only useful to the brave and great. 31
Oh! fatal gift of mighty minds to err! 32
The way to ills here not on beds of down. 33
How long we live, not years, but actions, tell; 34
That man lives twice who lives the first life well. 35
Make, then, while yet ye may, your God your friend, 36
Whom Christians worship, yet not comprehend. 37
The trust that's given, guard and keep yourself to be; 38
For, live we how we may, yet die we must. 39

1 Young. 2 Dr. Johnson. 3 Pope. 4 Dodsley. 5 Spenser. 6 Daniel. 7 Sir Walter Raleigh. 8 Longfellow. 9 Shakespeare. 10 Cowper. 11 Churchill. 12 Beaumont. 13 Armstrong. 14 Moore. 15 Pope. 16 Rowe. 17 Thomson. 18 Young. 19 Thompson. 20 Byron. 21 Shirley. 22 Crabbe. 23 Massinger. 24 Cowley. 25 Beattie. 26 Fawkes. 27 Sir Walter Raleigh. 28 Wray. 29 Willis. 30 Addison. 31 Dryden. 32 Francis. 33 Sir Walter Scott. 34 Herrick. 35 William Mason. 36 Hill. 37 Dana. 38 Shakspeare.

COMMUNICATIONS.

The Law and the Covenant.

J. N. STEPHENSON.

Abel this I say that the covenant, that was confirmed before of God in Christ, the law which was four hundred and thirty years after cannot disannul, that it should make the promise of none effect. Wherefore then serveth the law. It was added because of transgressions, till the seed should come to whom the promise was made. Gal. iii. 15, 19.

Thus, the law was added to the Abrahamic covenant because of transgression till the promised seed should come. Thus further, the law originated contemporaneously with the Sinaitic covenant and terminated with the coming of Christ. It is denied by the Sabbatarians that the ten commandments were the covenant. That this is a mistake I will prove by as clear testimony as can be found in the Word of God. I will quote two out of many passages I might adduce.

We read, "And the Lord spake unto you out of the midst of the fire; ye heard the voice of the words, but saw no similitude; only ye heard a voice. And he declared unto you his covenant, which he commanded you to perform, even ten commandments; and he wrote them upon two tables of stone." Deut. iv. 12, 13.

Again, we read, "And the Lord said unto Moses, write thou these words; for after the the tenor of these words I have made a covenant with thee and with Israel. And he was there with the Lord forty days and forty nights; he did neither eat bread nor drink water, and he wrote upon the tables the words of the covenant, the ten commandments." Ex. xxxiv. 27, 28.

No language could more positively affirm that the covenant was the ten commandments. They could not be the conditions of the covenant and the covenant itself any more than they could be the conditions of themselves.

The time God declared the covenant agrees with the time Paul says the law was added. And Moses says in so many words, "The Lord God made this covenant with us at Horeb. The Lord made not the covenant with our fathers, but with us, even us who are all of us alive this day." Deut. v. 2, 3. How can this be reconciled with the idea that the law existed antecedently to its being given on Mount Sinai? The idea conveyed by Paul that "the law was added till the seed should come," implies that then it would cease or run out by limitation. Of the same import is the following language of Paul when speaking of the same thing.

He said, "Wherefore the law was our schoolmaster to bring us to Christ, that we might be justified by faith. But after that faith is come we are no longer under the schoolmaster."

Thus again, it is clear that the law was only a temporary arrangement to restrain the overt conduct of the man for whom it was designed until the promised seed or the Messiah should come as "the end of the law." Rom. x. 4. The law having accomplished the design for which it was projected run out by limitation. The schoolmaster having prepared his pupils for the higher school, and the more perfect teacher, was superseded by him who "taught us never man had taught." All the laws, ordinances and commandments, were limited to the generations of that peculiar people as God's chosen nation. This was especially true of the Sabbath. Thus, we read, "Wherefore the children of Israel shall observe the Sabbath throughout their generations, for a perpetual covenant." Ex. xxxi. 16, 17. The same limitations were placed upon the Passover and all the ordinances in the whole law system. That the law was superceded by faith, or Christ the great object of faith, is further evident from Paul's letter to the Romans.

1. The apostles concedes the point for argument that the law was binding, and then demonstrated by them that the law could not justify them from the acknowledged fact that they had all transgressed it, and therefore that instead of justifying it would condemn every one of them to death.

Having thus prepared their mind to listen to any plea he might offer, he appealed to the fact, that their own law the writings as the prophets had foretold that the time would come when men should be justified through faith in Christ without the law. Hence he says, "Therefore by the deeds of the law shall no flesh be justified in his sight: for by the law is the knowledge sin. But now the righteousness of God without the law is manifested, being witnessed by the law and the prophets; even the righteousness of God which is by faith in Jesus Christ unto all that believe; for there is no difference. To declare, I say, at this time his righteousness: that he might be just, and the justifier of him which believeth in Jesus. Where is boasting there? It is excluded. By what law? Of the works? Nay; but by the law of faith. Therefore we conclude that a man is justified by faith without the deeds of the law. Do we then make void the law through faith? God forbid; yea we establish the law." Rom. iii. 20-31.

1. If Paul in the foregoing refers to the ten commandments then they are not binding in this dispensation. Where one word has the same meaning of another you may read that word in and it will convey precisely the same meaning that its synonim would convey. We will therefore substitute the ten commandments for the law and see how it will sound. "Therefore by the deeds of the ten commandments shall no flesh be justified in his (God's) sight." "But now the righteousness of God without the ten commandments is manifested."

Where is boasting there? It is excluded. By what ten commandments? Of works? Nay; but by the law of faith. Thus teaching that a man is justified by the law of faith. Therefore we conclude that a man is justified by faith without the deeds of the ten commandments. Thus it is clear that Paul does not refer to the ten commandments as a separate law; and if he does not refer to the ten commandments he must refer to the great law system including all the hundreds of commandments in the foreordained constitution of God—and therefore it proves nothing for the perpetuity of the ten commandments.

2. The law and the prophets testified that the time would come when men would be justified by faith in Christ Jesus without the deeds of the law. That time having come, the fulfillment of this prophecy so far from making void the law only confirmed what the law and the prophets had foretold should come to pass. But this fact no more proves the perpetuity of the law than of the prophets. Most of the prophets were dead before their predictions were fulfilled. The law of works must have perished before it could be superceded by the law of faith. There were no prophecies among the ten commandments—no testimony to be confirmed by justifying men by faith in Christ Jesus. But in the book of the law "of God by his servant Moses," there were prophecies and prophetic types and shadows foretelling and foreshadowing these days, and the fulfillment of the predictions of these witnesses confirmed their testimony, by demonstrating that they were true prophets. But as before said, this no more proves the perpetuity of the law than of the prophets. It confirms the testimony of a dead law in the same sense that it confirms the testimony of dead prophets. Of the same import is Paul's reasoning of the 7th chapter of Romans. He says, "Know ye not, brethren, (for I speak to them that know the law,) how that the law hath dominion over a man as long as he liveth? For the woman which hath an husband is bound by the law to her husband, so long as he liveth; but if the husband be dead, she is loosed from the law of her husband. So then, if while her husband liveth, she be married to another man, she shall be called an adulteress; but if her husband be dead she is free from that law: so that she is no adulteress, though she be married to another man. Wherefore my brethren ye also are become dead to the law by the body of Christ; that ye should be married to another, even to him who was raised from the dead that we should bring forth fruit unto God. But now we are delivered from the law, that law being dead wherein we were held; that we should serve in newness of spirit, and not in the oldness of the letter." Rom. vii. 1-6.

In the foregoing Paul presents Moses and Christ as the husbands of the woman—the church. Moses being the first husband must die, or his law system being represented by him must die before the wife could marry another man without being an adulteress. Moses is represented as living during the entire existence of his law, and as dying with his law. This could only be true upon the principle that as God's great legislator, or legate, he represented his law and that his legal death represented the death of his law. This is clearly evident from the sixth verse, in which Paul says, "But now we are delivered from the law, that being dead wherein we were held." If therefore the law is not dead then all are adulterers who are married to Christ; because they have two living husbands. But Paul represents all Christians as being dead to the law, and the law as being dead to them, so that they are no adulteress though they be married to another husband, even to him who was raised from the dead. How can such testimony as this be reconciled with the idea of the law being alive to day, and therefore Moses being still the living husband, and both Christ and all who are married to him, being adulterers? Of the same import is Paul's language at the eighth chapter and eighth verse. Paul deduces the following conclusion from the foregoing teachings.

He says, "There is therefore no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh but after the spirit." At the next verse he gives the reason why there was now "no condemnation." He adds, "For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death."

To read in the ten commandments as our Sabbatarian friends must do according to their position, it would read, "For the law of the spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the ten commandments of sin and death."

In perfect accord with the foregoing is Paul's language in Rom. x. 4. He says, "For Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth." Sabbatarians vainly argue that "He is the end of the law to every one that believeth"—but that the Jews did not believe; therefore he is not the end of the law. How could the belief or unbelief of the Jews or anybody else, change an immutable fact in the past? Christ was either the end of the law or he was not. If he was, then it will remain a changeless fact, though the whole world should be unbelieving. If he was the end of the law unbelief would not change or effect that fact in the least. This text agrees also with Paul's letter to the Galatians, in which he represents the law as a temporary arrangement, added to the Abrahamic covenant, after an interregnum of four hundred years, and to continue only until the promised seed should come. It was not designed as a permanent arrangement, but only as a pedagogue to restrain the overt actions of men through fear of penalties until the perfect teacher should come to place his pupils upon a higher plane, and teach them the ennobling principles of love, mercy and kindness, the most patient moral natures in the world; thus, wielding argument and moral suasion instead of heroism.

The most cursory reader cannot fail to see that Paul refers to one and the same law in his epistles to the Romans and Galatians. The same issues existed in both congregations, and Paul wrote to settle the same questions in both places. Judaizing teachers were enforcing their old obsolete law upon their Gentile brethren, Paul wrote these letters to settle this vexed question. He says, "Knowing that a man is not justified by the works of the law but by the faith of Jesus Christ, even we have believed in Jesus Christ that we might be justified by the faith of Christ, and not by the works of the law: for by the works of the law shall no flesh be justified. But if while we seek to be justified by Christ, we ourselves also are found sinners; is therefore Christ the minister of sin? God forbid." Gal. ii. 16, 17.

Suppose we read in the ten commandments instead of the law. It would then read that a man is not justified by the works of the ten commandments, but by the faith of Jesus Christ.

This corresponds perfectly with Paul's grand appeal to the great law of faith in Christ versus Moses.

Referring to the only standard of justification in the Christian dispensation, Paul said, "Be it known unto you therefore, men and brethren, that through this man is preached unto you the forgiveness of sins: and by him all that believe are justified from all things, from which ye could not be justified by the law of Moses." Acts xiii. 38, 39.

It will not do in the light of the plain texts I have cited in my former article to say that either Testament makes any difference between the law of God or the law of Moses, when referring to the foreordained constitution. The foregoing corresponds also with Rom. iii. 21-31; v. 13, 17; Gal. iv. 8. Paul uses the same language in his letter to his Roman brethren, when he says, "Therefore by the deeds of the law there shall no flesh be justified." He then asks the pertinent question, By what law are ye justified "of works?" Nay; but by the law of faith. Therefore, he says, we conclude that a man is justified by faith without the deeds of the law." Thus clearly superceding the old law of works by the law of faith in Christ Jesus. He also ignores the law to which he refers in Romans and Galatians as the standard of faith and justification. He presents the gospel of Christ as the all sufficient rule of faith and justification. He says, "For I am not ashamed of the gospel of Christ; for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first and also to the Greek. For therein is the righteousness of (the standard of right doing erected by God) God revealed from faith to faith; as it is written the just shall live by faith.

Thus Paul being his own expositor, the law of faith versus the law of works in the former dispensation, is the gospel of Christ—that it being clothed with the power of God will save all who through faith shall develop the character required by the gospel. Paul erects the same standard in contrast with the same law in Galatians. Referring to the same immutable standard of faith and justification, he says, "And the Scripture foreseeing that God would justify the heathen (Gentiles) through faith, preached before the gospel to Abraham, saying, In thee shall all nations be blessed." Gal. iii. 8. "Wherefore (Paul says in another place) the law was our schoolmaster to bring us unto Christ that we might be justified by faith." Gal. iii. 24.

In the light of such immutable testimony as the foregoing any other law or rule of faith or justification, is not only superfluous, but dangerous, and dishonoring to Christ, and subversive of the right way. Sabbatarians affirm that to be under the law is to be under the penalty as transgressors. According to their own position the law being capital its penalty would be death. Is it reasonable to believe that sane men and women would desire to be under sentence of death? And yet the Galatians desired to be under the law of which Paul speaks. Addressing his brethren, Paul says, "Tell me, ye that desire to be under the law, do ye not hear the law?" Gal. iv. 21. If they had only heeded the testimony of the law, they would have believed that the time had come when "the righteousness of God without the law was manifested, being witnessed by the law and the prophets; even the righteousness of God which is by faith in Christ Jesus. Rom. iii. 21, 22. Paul in the following verses, represented the Sinaitic covenant and the Abrahamic covenant by Abraham's two wives and their two sons, one born of the flesh, and the other of the promise—one representing the law, and the other the Abrahamic covenant, or the gospel. He adds, "For it is written, Abraham had two sons, the one by the bond maid, the other by the free woman. But he who was of the bond woman was born of the flesh, but he of the free woman was by promise. Which things are an allegory, for these are the two covenants, the one from the Mount Sinai, which gendereth to bondage, which is Hagar. Now we, brethren, as Isaac was, are the children of promise. But as then he that was born of the flesh persecuted him that was born of the spirit, even so now. Nevertheless what saith the Scripture? Cast out the bond woman and her son; for the son of the bond woman shall not be heir with the son of the free woman. So then, brethren, we are not the children of the bond women, but of the free." Gal. iv. 21-31.

No language or contrast could more clearly teach that the old covenant or law was done away, having been superceded by the new covenant, or "law of life in Christ Jesus." As it was in the days of Paul so it is with the children of the bond woman. As the children of Hagar they persecute the children of the free woman—the brethren of Isaac.

The following language of Paul as clearly affirms the abolition of the ten commandments as Deut. iv. 12, 13, affirms their enactment. Paul says, "that if the ministration of death, written and engraven in stones was glorious . . . . how shall not the ministration of the spirit be rather glorious?" For if the ministration of condemnation be glory, much more doth the ministration of righteousness exceed in glory. For even that which was made glorious had no glory in it in this respect, by reason of the glory that excelleth. For if that (ministration) which was done away was glorious, much more that which remaineth is glorious. Seeing we have such hope, we use great plainness of speech. And not as Moses, who put a vail over his face, that the children of Israel could not steadfastly look to the end of that (ministration) which (ministration) was abolished." 2 Cor. iii. 7-13.

According to the verses referred to in Deuteronomy, there was nothing written on the tables of stone except the ten commandments. According to Paul in the foregoing language, that which was written on tables of stone was "done away"—was "abolished." To supply the ellipsis as that it can be parsed, it would read, "For if the ministration that was written in stone." That would be a relative pronoun referring to ministration for its antecedent. The noun death is in the objective case, and is governed by the preposition of, and therefore cannot be the subject of the verb. It is an utter perversion of Paul's language to render it death written in tables of stone instead of the ministration written in stones. The phrase "of death" does not change the position and office of the noun ministration. That which was written and engraven in stone was abolished. Will write one more article on the Sabbath.

Tradition vs Baptism.

As it were in times of old when our blessed Savior was on earth, men were prone to transgress the commandments of God by their tradition, even so it is now. It was then as now, men drank freely at the muddy pool of indifference, being led on by the deceptive wiles of the evil one. That it makes no difference just so we are honest, and that system most successful in winning unwary souls is most universally adopted and approved by nearly all shades and names, even by those who make a great effort (compass sea and land) and a tremendous ado to have the people understand that they are the chosen ones, men that ought to know better.

For example. At a recent camp-meeting held near by, the most noted speaker gave an exhibit of his weakness and inconsistency, by stating publicly in a discourse that he did not believe that any would be saved this side of the cross, without baptism, which caused a dissenting smile to roll from the face of one of his co-laborers who thought otherwise.

How strange that doctors will disagree, and yet will plead we're in unity. But alas! how soon the scene was changed, for our finding that their legally authorized efforts in old style was insufficient to produce conviction on poor sinners, causing them to exclaim as formerly.

Men and brethren what shall we do? They step down and aside, lay hold on the scape goat, that human institute which makes void God's command, demanding the front seats, (called anxious seat or mourner's bench, a device of the apostasy unknown to the Apostles and early Christians) call for those wishing prayers to come forward, singing up what they can, sending out hunters to hunt out others, and by teasing and leading them, where? to the mourner's bench, even little children who knew nothing of the gospel, the divine plan of salvation were excited and over persuaded into the ring where pleasing prayers were offered in behalf of these poor seekers, and while the prayers and nice singing lasted, good words and fair speeches, the spirit moved, the excitement run high and the mill of tradition ground away on its poor deluded victims, until a few were ground out. One poor little boy about eight years old, being catechized by the officiating priest, not knowing what to say, was requested to say he wanted to be a better boy, he was taken and put under the water on his honest confession that he knew not what it was for. Poor boy, we can but pity such converts, as we do infants who are held by their superiors physically, and ranized, or the poor Irish child who is made to say mass. All such, we can but regard as poor man-made miserable tradition, which makes void some of God's holy will and ways. Such workings are entirely outside the divine plan.

There is no record of such proceedings by the Apostles, the founders of the Christian system. Jesus preached the gospel, God's plan of salvation to every one that believeth (the gospel). The gospel as preached by Christ was the good news relating to God's kingdom, as taught by prophets, Christ and Apostles. Jesus predicts that this same gospel of the kingdom should be preached in all the world for a witness to all nations, Jesus next sends out the apostles into the world to preach this gospel of the kingdom to every creature. He that believeth the gospel and is baptized shall be saved, he that believeth not (the gospel) shall be damned. Peter, a faithful servant, stands up on Pentecost day full fall to the trust imposed in him, and proclaims the great fundamental principles of the same gospel to the vast multitude assembled, omitting the law, the Sabbath and its concomitants). Thousands were instructed and cry out, men and brethren what shall we do? Come forward for prayers? No, as this was not in Peter's commission and he had not so learned of Christ his master and teacher, what then? Then Peter said unto them, repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. Philip being another one of God's preachers of the pure stamp, went down to the city of Samaria, and preached Christ unto them, and the people with one accord gave heed unto those things which Philip spoke, hearing and seeing the miracles which he did (which his pretended successors can not do, neither do they preach the same things he did). But when they believed Philip preaching what? the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, what then? they were baptized, both men and women.

This is the original way for men and women to be adopted into God's family, no side tracks of tradition, leading to perdition, is found in the original charter, but they are the inventions of self willed men and women, to gather into their folds believer and unbeliever indiscriminately. But in vain they do worship one teaching for doctrine, the commandments of men! Paul a chosen vessel unto the master, enquires of the Lord "what wilt thou have me to do?" goes on his way as directed to Damascus for the needed information, one Ananias being sent to instruct him, finds him prostrate praying. What does he say? Pray on Bro. Saul, and we will pray with you. No sir! this was not in the original programme at this point, neither is it yet. What then? And now why tarriest thou? arise and be baptized and wash away thy sins, calling on the name of the Lord. If immersion in the name of Jesus Christ preceded by a hearty belief of the gospel of Jesus Christ, as taught by him and his apostles with a Godly sorrow for sin, true repentance, or reformation of life, be not the divine law of adopting God's plan of salvation to every one that believeth, then we despair, and say, you gave me the wrong book! Come and see.

T. E. Adams.

Christ's Grandeur.

Looking, then, at that world as we see it, laboring heavily along in our own time—as we hear of it through the records of the ages—I must repeat there is no phenomenon in it comparable for a moment to this of Christ's life and work. The more we canvass and sift and weigh and balance the materials, the more clearly and grandly does his figure rise before us, as the true head of humanity, the perfect ideal, not only of wisdom and tenderness and love, but of courage also, because he was and is the simple truth of God—the expression, at last, in flesh and blood, of what he who created us means each of our race to be.—The Manliness of Christ.

Discouragement.

One of the most fatal things in the life of faith is discouragement. One of the most helpful is cheerfulness. A very wise man once said that in overcoming temptations cheerfulness was the first thing, cheerfulness the second, and cheerfulness the third. We must expect to conquer. This is why the Lord said so often to Joshua, "Be strong and of a good courage"; "Be not afraid, neither be thou dismayed"; "only be thou strong and very courageous. And it is also the reason he says to us, "Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid." The power of temptation is in the fainting of our own hearts. Satan knows this well, and he always begins his assaults by discouraging us, if he can in any way accomplish it.—Secret of a happy life.

THE RESTITUTION.

Keep Brothers Article.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

WHOLE NO. 690. Read PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, DECEMBER 8, 1880. VOL. XXIX, NO. 47.

THE RESTITUTION
IS ISSUED
EVERY WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON,
By the Christian Publishing Association.

OFFICERS OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

H. S. PHILLIPS.....PRESIDENT.
CHARLES PALMER.....VICE PRESIDENT.
E. E. BARNHILL.....SECRETARY.
S. A. CHAPLIN.....TREASURER.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

CHARLES PALMER, WM. RAILSBACK,
ISRAEL G. ROBERTS.

S. A. CHAPLIN, : : : : : : : Editor.

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTORS.

J. M. STEPHENSON, | BENJ. WILSON,
A. H. MACRIDER, | H. S. MYERS,
J. P. WEETHEE, | WILEY JONES,
JOEL A. SIMONDS.

TERMS:—$2.00 PER YEAR,
Payable Invariably in Advance. Subscriptions received for three and six months at the same rate.

Address all Letters and Communications to
THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

"THE RESTITUTION" advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates, as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of Kings, and its immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a living belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisite to the remission of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Coming Age—Its Proximity—Seven Angels With the Seven Last Plagues—Song of Those that Overcome the Beast—Seven Golden Vials Full of the Wrath of God—Seven Angels Pour Out Their Vials Upon the Earth—Scarlet Wild Beast and His Rider—Fall of Babylon and the Lamentations—Great Battle—Christ's Victory—Age of Subjugation—New Heavens and Earth.—No. 45.

J. P. WEETHEE.

Sixth Scenic View.—This scene is laid in heaven; seven angels with the seven last plagues; for in them is filled up the wrath of God. John sees as it were a sea of glass mingled with fire. On this sea are standing, with Divine harps, those that were victorious over the beast, and over his image, and over his mark, and over the number of his name. They sing the songs of Moses and the Lamb, Great and marvellous (are) thy works, Lord God Almighty; just and true (are) thy ways, thou King of saints. Who shall not fear thee, O Lord, and glorify thy name? for (thou) only (art) holy: for all nations shall come and worship before thee; for thy judgments are made manifest. Here closes the first part of the Sixth Vision.

Second Part.—The temple of the tabernacle of the testimony in heaven was opened; the seven angels with the seven last plagues, clothed in pure and white linen, their breasts girded with golden girdles, came out of the temple. And one of the four living creatures gave to the seven angels seven golden vials full of the wrath of God. Smoke fills the temple. No man could enter the temple till the seven angels had accomplished their judgment mission.

Third Part.—A great voice comes out of the temple, saying to the seven angels, Go your ways, and pour out the vials of God's wrath upon the earth. The first angel empties his vial on the land. This afflicted those that had the mark of the wild beast and his image worshippers. The second vial is poured upon the sea. The third vial is emptied upon the rivers and fountains of waters; the fourth vial is poured into the sun, adding destructive power to its rays. And the fifth angel pours his vial upon the seat of the wild beast, and his kingdom is full of darkness. The sixth vial is discharged upon the great river Euphrates and the waters are diverted. The fifth is on Babylon (the seat of the beast); the sixth is on its sustaining river.

Three unclean spirits, like frogs, issue from the mouths of the dragon, the wild beast, and the false prophet; they are the spirits of demons, working wonders, going forth unto the kings of the earth, and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty. The seventh vial is poured into the air; and there came a great voice out of the temple of heaven, from the throne, saying, It is done. Then follow voices, and thunderings, and lightnings; and there was a great earthquake, such as was not since men were upon the earth. And the great city was divided into three parts, and the cities of the nations fell; and great Babylon came into remembrance before God, to give unto her the cup of the wine of the fierceness of his wrath. A great hail-storm follows, yet without producing any reformation. Men blasphemed God because of the plagues.

Seventh Scenic View.—This scene is laid in the wilderness, the same into which the sun-clad woman had fled; and whither the wild beast and his rider had pursued. A woman is seen on a scarlet colored wild beast. The beast has seven heads and ten horns. He is in the uniform of his female rider—scarlet. The time is her judgment: "Come hither; I will show unto the judgment of the great harlot that sitteth upon many waters." Rev. xvii. 1. The character of the woman is given: she is a harlot. She is also named:—BABYLON THE GREAT, THE MOTHER OF HARLOTS, AND ABOMINATIONS OF THE EARTH. The beast and his rider are then explained:—The beast that thou sawest, was, and is not; and shall ascend out of the bottomless pit, and go into perdition; and they that dwell on the earth shall wonder, whose names were not written in the book of life from the foundation of the world, when they behold the beast that was, and is not and yet is. We leave the beast to be fully examined when tracing the through lines. The ten horns are then explained. The waters are also explained. "And the woman which thou sawest is that great city, which reigneth over the kings of the earth." Ver. 18.

Eighth Scenic Vision.—A mighty angel, descending from heaven, proclaims the fall of Babylon. Another voice from heaven is heard saying, Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues; for her sins have reached unto heaven, and God hath remembered her iniquities. Then follows great lamentation for the fall of Babylon. Her fall was sudden, "in one hour." Her sins were terrible; for, in her was found the blood of prophets, and of saints, and of all that were slain upon the earth. Rev. xviii. 24.

Ninth Scenic Vision.—Her judgment, with its execution, is followed by great rejoicings in heaven, "Alleluia; salvation and glory, and honor, and power, unto the Lord our God; for true and righteous (are) his judgments; for he hath judged the great whore, which did corrupt the earth with her fornication, and hath avenged the blood of his servants at her hand. And again they said, Alleluia. And her smoke rose up forever and ever (unto the age of ages). And the four and twenty elders and the four living creatures fell down and worshipped God that sat on the throne, saying, Amen; Alleluia. And I heard as it were the voice of a great multitude, and as the voice of many waters, and as the voice of mighty thunderings, saying, Alleluia; for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth. Let us be glad and rejoice, and give honor to him; for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready. The was arrayed in fine linen, clean and white; for the fine linen is the righteousness of saints. Blessed (are) they that are called to the marriage supper of the Lamb." Rev. xix. 4-10.

Third Scene.—After noticing the bride (the second scene) John sees heaven again opened: A white horse again appears. In Rev. vi. 2, the white horse carries a conquerer, with a bow in his hand, and on his head a single diadem; the mighty conqueror of the ninth vision. His eyes (were) as a flame of fire, and many diadems upon his head. He (was) called Faithful and True, and in righteousness he doth judge and make war. Verses 11, 12. His name is called, The Word of God. A sharp sword goeth out of his mouth; and on his vesture a name, "KING OF KINGS, AND LORD OF LORDS." His armies followed him from heaven. They were clothed in fine linen, white and clean, and were mounted on white horses.

Fourth Scene.—An angel in sun standing in the sun; he cries with a loud voice, saying to all the fowls of heaven, Come and gather yourselves unto the supper of the great God.

Fifth Scene.—"I saw the beast, and the kings of the earth, and their armies, gathered together to make war against him that sat on the horse, and against his army." John records the result of the conflict:—"The beast is taken, and with him the false prophet that wrought miracles (wonders) before him, with which he deceived them that had received the mark of the beast, and them that had worshipped his image. These were both cast alive into a lake of fire burning with brimstone."

This brings us to the close of the great conflict, that establishes his (Christ's) power over the nations in his reign of subjugation. The harlot is first judged and her judgment is executed. She was the great corrupter of the nations. It was not proper that judgment should first begin at what was called the Church of God (the apostacy). It then fell upon the nations that were corrupted. From Rev. xii. a through line of prophecy commences. A proper understanding of this through line will enable us to comprehend the final catastrophe. The world that meets Christ in the final battles will be under the control of three great powers, the Dragon, the Beast, and the False Prophet. When the armies of these three empires are overthrown, the nations will be compelled to submit to the mighty Conqueror.

Tenth Scenic Vision.—An angel descends from heaven, with a key and a chain in his hand; the key to unlock; the chain to bind. A prison is to be unlocked and thrown open, a noted criminal is to be cast into it, when it will be again closed, locked, and sealed, for a long period, one thousand years, or more. Who is this noted criminal? "And he laid hold on the dragon, that old serpent, which is the Devil, and Satan, and bound him a thousand years. And cast him into the bottomless pit, and shut him up, and set a seal upon him, that he should deceive nations no more, till the thousand years should be finished; and after that he must be loosed a little season." Here is the ancient enemy of God, and of man;—the original seducer; whose head was to be bruised by the Seed of the woman; the old serpent, the charmer of the nations. In this great conflict which resulted in a great national overthrow, that the work of defeat might be thorough and lasting, a mighty angel is dispatched to apprehend their master Spirit and shut him up in his gloomy prison. It is done, and the nations without their powerful leader, gradually submit to the reign of the King of kings.

Second Scene.—Thrones with their occupants now appear,—a session of judgment. Who are acquitted? The following classes:

a. Those that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God.

b. Those that had not worshipped the wild beast, nor his image.

c. Those that had not received his mark in their foreheads, nor in their hands.

These are joint heirs with Christ in his thousand years' reign of subjugation. Their character is expressed by the terms, blessed and holy. Over these the second death hath no power. They are priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years. The remaining dead sleep on during this reign. What a loss is even one thousand years of happiness! Yet the masses prefer to live for the pleasures of this age. Let us live in and for the coming age.

Third Scene.—Satan is again loosed for the final conflict. The deceiver's work is not yet accomplished. A great national dejection wants a leader; who so fit as their former commander. In this rebellion the nations have one object; God has another. The nations strike for licentious freedom; God calls them to meet their final doom. The nations had grown wealthy, and powerful under a peaceful, and righteous government. Full of pride they aspire to independent dominion; Gog of the land of Magog, in the four quarters of earth, the number of whom is as the sand of the sea. They come up on the breadth of the earth, encompassing the camp of the saints, and the beloved city, and fire comes down from God out of heaven and devours them. Satan is then cast into the lake of fire.

Fourth Scene.—A white throne appears. The Almighty, the great, the universal Judge sits upon the throne. Great changes follow. The remaining dead stand before God. Books are opened—books of works, and the book of life. The dead of the early ages come forth, those from the land, and also from the sea, and they were judged according to their works. Our explanations are reserved for other numbers.

Eleventh Scenic Vision.—The new creation comes to view. The New Heavens and the New Earth. The New Jerusalem comes down from God out of heaven. All things are made new. Paradise is restored, a second Eden, as much more glorious as its Governor, and its inhabitants are superior to those of the first Paradise. The tree and river of life again appear. None but the righteous enter the bowers of the second Eden. But we are not allowed to multiply remarks since this state is in the coming age, and we are describing its proximity. Its nature belongs to the first division of our subject.

Our outline is closed; we close this number with some general thoughts:

1. These ten visions cover a most interesting period of the world's history. Nine of these visions mark events that are principally in the past.

2. A faithful and accurate history of the last seventeen centuries would cover all that John saw; hence we should study carefully such a history.

3. A faithful ecclesiastical history will describe the harlot, and the scarlet woman.

4. Let us study such histories with this Divine chart open before us.

5. If we study the Apocalypse we are sure of blessings. Blessed is he that readeth.

[London Correspondence New York Times.]

WAR PREDICTED.

What is Likely to Occur in Europe Next Month.

Those who are behind the curtain assert that February will not pass without bloodshed on an extensive scale in Epirus and Thessaly. There was every reason to anticipate this late-ished six months ago, and yet there was none, because diplomacy hoped to frighten the Sultan by threats which a diplomat assured him privately should not be executed, and I would be inclined to think that nothing more serious need be feared for 1881, if it were not for two circumstances: First, the Greeks have managed to raise a loan of sixty millions, which they are spending entirely upon the armament and mobilization of their national forces; second, although the Sublime Porte pays none of its creditors either at home or abroad, "the palace floats in gold," to quote literally the expression of an Oriental banker to me last evening. That this money should have been furnished to the Greek and Turkish Governments, both notoriously insolvent, is a symptom of trouble ahead, and, if my information be correct, the subsidies can be traced to Berlin on the one hand and to London and St. Petersburg on the other. The catastrophe is certain; when it will come depends entirely upon the good pleasure of Prince von Bismarck, which in its turn depends upon the success of his present intrigues to draw France into the Austro-German orbit. Monstrous as this alliance would be, it is not at all an impossible eventuality. Just now such a compact would overthrow any Government by which it might be proposed, but the mere circumstance that some very respectable men have begun to discuss its possibility, to estimate the nature and extent of the quid pro quo to be demanded, is evidence of a wish to feel the public pulse. That the maintenance of quasi-cordial relations between Russia and Germany depends entirely upon the existence of their sovereigns is generally admitted, and the news concerning the Czar's health is of a nature to cause legitimate apprehensions. The official reports, of course, represent it to be blooming, but private letters speak quite in another way, and it is certain that the two most eminent physicians of St. Petersburg were telegrapbed for last week to consult with His Majesty's ordinary medical attendants at Livadia. The report is that dynamite and revolvers having proved of no avail, arsenic has now been resorted to. The utmost secrecy is described to the press, but the correspondents of foreign journals tell queer stories of perquisitions made in the imperial kitchens and of the arrest of several of the imperial cooks. Something of the sort must have been the cause of the precipitation with which the morganatic marriage with Princess Dolgorouki was celebrated. I have already noticed this affair, and, I think, stated how there was even question, at one moment, of having a right-handed instead of a left-handed ceremony, for which there was a precedent in the case of Peter the Great. Mme. Dolgorouki had quite enough influence over her august lover to obtain this had she been elected to wait awhile, but being a clever woman, she appreciated that delays may be dangerous, and so preferred the lesser honor by which her children are legitimated and her own very equivocal position as a favorite rendered respectable. Although I wrote about this marriage more than a month ago, the French newspapers have only just published it as a fact, and have only just begun to make their commentaries, while but three days ago did even the Cologne Gazette obtain full details. The ceremony was performed on the first of last August in a chapel of the palace, in the presence of a very few witnesses among whom were the Grand Duke Nicholas, who will now, as a reward for his condescension, be probably restored to favor, and the Minister of War, General Milijutine. All the Imperial family except Nicholas testified disapproval by their absence. The Czarewitch went away to Hapsal, the Grand Dukes Constantine and Vladimir came to Paris, the latter accompanied by the Grand Duchess, the former with the mission to bring home the yacht Livadia.

Earthquakes in Divers Places.

Whether we are prepared to concede that stellar influence may produce disastrous effects on the earth or not under the present arrangements of nature—especially when the great planets are in the perihelia of their orbits, as one now is, and several more are soon to be—yet it is remarkable that earth and the elements are even now giving unmistakable signs of a state of fearful unrest. Volcanoes are active, cyclones sweep the land and sea, earthquakes rock the globe, and disease and death are filling the burial places with a rapidly increasing silent population. We are edging the unprecedented time of trouble. The coincidence between the "star prophecies" and the Scripture predictions is remarkable indeed.

THE DESTRUCTION OF AGRAM.

An Interesting Account of the Disaster that Recently Desolated the Capital of Croatia and Slavonia, in Europe.

A resident correspondent of the New York World, at Vienna, writes as follows:

Of course the telegraph has informed you of the sudden disasters which befell the city of Agram or Zagrab, as it is called in Slavonia, 160 miles south-southwest of Vienna. Agram is the seat of a Catholic Archbishop and of the Superior Courts of Croatia, Slavonia, and the Banat. It is the center, too, of South-Slavic learning and had many seminaries and gymnasia, and its manufactures of silk and porcelain are highly appreciated in this part of Europe. The earthquake of November 9 was felt in Vienna also, but it did no harm beyond bringing all the clocks in the city to a sudden standstill and was considered a laughing matter in fact, because it was believed that our latitude is not exposed to such phenomena. But when in the evening telegrams arrived from Agram bringing news of the dreadful state of things there we all felt that we had narrowly escaped a very great danger. The detailed reports of Agram's condition present a picture of terrible destruction. The first shock of the earthquake, which enveloped the city in a cloud of dust, was felt at 7:30, and many persons who were still in bed ran out into the street without taking time to dress. The three shocks that followed drove hundreds of terror-stricken families who did not dare to remain under their roofs to the open place called Zriny, a favorite spot with the idlers of Agram. Some are now living in the market-stalls, others in omnibuses, and the luckiest of them in railway cars. During the first night after the earthquake no one dared close an eye or think of sleep.

The continuous rain, the cold and the damp make matters worse, of course, for those who have to spend the nights in the open air. The town is shrouded in darkness directly after sunset, the magistrates having prohibited the lighting of gas, as the pipes are broken in many places, and an explosion might ensue. Carriages are not allowed to drive fast, as there is danger that the slightest vibration will bring down in ruins the cracked and shattered edifices that remain. In a majority of the houses fires cannot be lit because the chimneys have all fallen in, and in many cases the staircases have become impassable. Indeed, the city appears as if it had been shelled by a besieging army. The largest and best houses have suffered most, and not a single one has escaped damage. The Cathedral is so damaged that it cannot be recognized from the pictures of it, and the Franciscan Convent, which resembles a fortress, has been so thoroughly shaken that it may fall at any moment. The largest tobacco manufactory in Hungary, an imposing building, was damaged so badly that it had to be cleared. The Marcus Church and St. Mary's Church, a great building, once a Jesuit Convent and now used by the military commander, are all in ruins. The roof of the Jewish Synagogue fell in six minutes before the doors were to have been opened to admit a bridal party, and the young couple, thinking the day of judgment had come, and wishing to die as husband and wife, were united in a private house.

The damage done is estimated at 3,000,000 florins, but of course the irreparable ruin wrought in the churches is not comprised in this sum. A reporter who, at the risk of his life, explored the cathedral a day or two after the disaster, gives the following description of what he saw: The roof over the sanctuary is entirely gone, and the high altar, a rare work of art, the Archbishop's chair and the chairs of the choir are all broken to pieces and lie buried under heaps of rubbish several yards high. The beautiful stained-glass windows have suffered comparatively little. One of the columns of a triumphal arch has been bent and looks as if it would fall. Near the organ and choir the roof also fell in, and one arch in falling broke through the lids of a tomb. All the supporting arches are loose and seem unable to bear the great roof much longer. One curious effect of the earthquake is to be seen in one of the towers, which was turned almost completely around on its axis. When the earthquake began the prebendary and two priests were celebrating masses, but they all managed to escape into the vestry before the roofs fell in. One of the towers with a staircase in it was turned on its own axis.

The country around Agram has also suffered severely, but in all cases the small houses remained unscathed, while churches, station-houses, belfries and all large buildings fell in or were partially damaged. The mad-house and a house of detention not far from Agram also suffered severely, and three castles, Kereatinec, Helena, and Pankovic, are mere heaps of ruins.

"Holiday Presents."

Many a reader of the Bible now as of old is ready to exclaim, "How can I understand, except some man should guide me?" And to show the right way to all is a mark of true discipline, —"These men are servants of the most high God, which show unto us the way of salvation." Acts viii. 31; xvi. 17. Now in buying "holiday presents" at this time of the year consult the list of valuable works advertised in THE RESTITUTION (not forgetting "The Gospel of the Kingdom"), and procure some of them for presentation to your friends. In so doing you may be instrumental in turning many to righteousness. The reward for such a "labor of love" is sufficiently encouraging,—"He that winneth souls is wise.... And they that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament, and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars forever and ever." Prov. xi. 30; Dan. xii. 3. Yes, the white robe, more dazzling than the beautiful snow of December days, and the bright crown, outshining the sparkling fire that glows in the grate will fully repay for all these labors.

WILEY JONES.

Colonel William G. Gordon, of Chesterville, O., is said to be 113 years old, and still a comparatively strong and active man. He is wealthy, and manages all his own business affairs. In his youth he served in the British army, and says that he knew Napoleon.

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CHAPLIN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, DEC. 8, 1880.

NOTICE!

According to regulation, the Annual Meeting of the Stockholders of the Christian Publishing Association, will meet on the fourth Monday of December (27th) 1880, for the purpose of electing a new Board of Directors, and such other business as may come before the meeting.

E. K. BARNHILL, Sec'y.

MANY thanks to the kind friends of our paper who have nobly helped in sustaining it by voluntary aid. We believe that heralding the Lord's coming is approved of God, and that all that make a covenant with him by sacrifice will be most amply rewarded both in this world and in the world to come. Read carefully Psa. l. 5; and Matt. xix. 29. The fashion of this world is fast passing away. Read also Matt. vi. 19-21; and vii. 21-23. We are in the time of the end, and the church is doing its last work.

THE current year nears its close, and the immediate future is certain to rapidly change the prophetic into history. Every paper in the land devoted to the exposition of what has been uttered by all the holy seers respecting the coming of Israel's King and earth's Deliverer, concerning the restitution of all things, and the final establishment of God's kingdom on the earth, should be liberally sustained. We find, however, that THE RESTITUTION is not the only one that, in part, depends upon the sacrifice of those that look for their reward in the soon coming kingdom. We say now, as we have said before, that the enlargement of our subscription list, by only a few hundred names, would make the paper self-supporting. Will our friends make an earnest effort in this direction? It seems more than probable that all papers of this kind will not be needed much longer.

ALESSANDRO GAVAZZI landed in New York a few days ago. He was once a monk of the Barnabite order. He is now a protestant champion, and at the present time is on a mission to this country in behalf of the Free church of Italy. The following is from the first discourse delivered in this country Sunday Nov. 28, on the very day of his arrival in New York. It is interesting as showing the state of things at the very seat of the great anti-christian apostasy.

Very dear to him, he said, were the evangelical schools which he had established against the advice of foreign Protestant committees in Italy. They have twenty-one public teachers, each with the requisite Government diploma, and 1,700 pupils. They have been taken by Government as a model, and the municipality of Florence had granted to them an annual bounty in recognition of their excellence. Then Gavazzi related a story of one of the pupils, a sprightly and clever girl. She stood at the head of the class in the Government examination of excellence in scholarship. Her father was a silversmith and a Catholic. Gavazzi said that the Catholic church tried to coax the girl back to her father's church by first offering her a rich husband, then by pensioning her grandmother and giving her father work and money. The girl refused to go back. Then came persecution. Her father went to the police in Florence, where the girl lived, and by false pretenses got possession of her. "He took her to Rome," said Gavazzi, "and immured her in one of those fatal nunneries that are really the curse of all nations. The girl brought revolution into the institution. At midnight she would jump up and cry 'fire! fire!' and create false alarm and confusion. The Mother Superior wrote to Rome: 'Free us from such a devil; we can have no peace while she is here.' The girl was taken away and made a monitor over a large class of Catholic children. When the Cardinal questioned the children on their catechism they knew nothing. The girl was finally let alone as incorrigible."

Finally, Gavazzi described the "biblical college in Rome of which he is the head. It has 17 students. "The institution," he said, "is a crowning triumph of Christianity from its position. Do you say that there is no material triumph in its situation merely because the Castle of St. Angelo, the Pope's territory, is separated from the theological seminary by only the bridge of St. Angelo across the Tiber? Yes; but the Cardinals, the Archbishops, the Bishops, the Monseigneurs, the prelates, the priests, the vagabonds, the English and the American fools who go to kiss the toe of the Pope cannot get to him without passing our building. It's there, it's there; and on the wall is the legend. 'The Free church in Italy.' My writing desk is at the window where I look out upon the beautiful scenery and across the Tiber toward the Pope. There I write my lectures every week against the Pope—always against the Pope. I look across the river at the Pope. Ah, ah, we meet. Ah, but he trembles and he grumbles, for hasn't he issued three encyclical letters against us? Do you say, 'It is not possible; the Pope never grumbles?' Ah, but he roars—whoo-o-o-o! It is only natural, for he is called Leo XIII. Leo means lion and lion means beast. Therefore the Pope is a beast, and it is natural for all beasts to roar. Remember one thing—if the Pope were silent it would mean that he is doing his own work; but if he grumbles and roars it signifies that we are doing the work of our Lord and Master." Gavazzi concluded by hoping that his coming at his time of life and upon such an errand may be appreciated by Christians.

SELECTIONS.

[Christian Herald and Signs of Our Times.]

ELEVEN SIGNS OF THE NEARING ADVENT OF CHRIST.

The Night Coming—Signs of Christ's Advent Notable and Numerous—The Millennium not a Sign—1. Wars, Earthquakes, Pestilence, and Famines—2. Restlessness of the World—3. Missionary Exertions—4. Position of Israel—5. Disbelief in the church—6. Human Efforts at Self-Regeneration—7. The Spirit of Knowledge—8. The Maturity of Papal Anti-Christ—9. The Diffusion of Infidelity—10. The Increase of Immorality—11. Increase of Superficiality and Formalism.

6. HUMAN EFFORTS AT SELF-REGENERATION.

I do not say this of the Church, though there are some tokens of it even in her. But I speak of the world. Man seems now to be putting forth every effort to regenerate himself without God. Amid all the modern achievements of science and of art he has lost sight of his own helplessness and dependence on him who created him. He thinks to be a God to himself. It is as if, before God's glorious purpose of restitution is brought to pass, man is to be allowed to do his utmost for the renewal of himself and of the world. He is to be put to the proof. He is to be permitted to boast himself for a little, and congratulate himself upon the triumph before him. Hence the vainglorious speeches we so often hear of man's powers and man's prospects. Political reforms are spoken of as the regeneration of the world. One party most loudly maintains that the separation of Church and State is to usher in the Millennium; another as boldly affirms that it is the union of Church and State that is to accomplish this.

EDUCATION, SCIENCE,

literature, philosophy, are sometimes called the world's regenerators, and no limits are assigned to the blessings which these are to confer upon the world. It is curious, also, to observe, for some years past, how eagerly science has been putting forth all its energies in pursuit of discoveries that shall restore fruitfulness to the soil. Agricultural chemistry has shot up into a separate study. As if unconsciously prescient of the earth's deliverance from the curse of barrenness, men are laboring to do all that science can to hasten on that day of restitution. These efforts at self-regeneration must prove abortive; for man cannot undo either his sin or its consequences. They may succeed to a certain extent, but only to prove how little they can effect. These are, however, signs of a coming deliverance. For when man's endeavors shall prove fruitless, both in reference to himself and society, and the soil which he tills, God shall at length interpose and accomplish the work of renovation by the word of his power.

THE SPREAD OF KNOWLEDGE.

7. "Many are running to and fro, and knowledge is increasing." Daniel xii. 4. Nor is it knowledge of one kind, but of every kind, secular and sacred. It is, however, for the former that this age is especially distinguished. And Satan is putting forth his utmost resources of power and craft thus to lead men captive at his will. "He is the prince of all knowledge where God is not known; of all power where God is not acknowledged; the bright archangel of the natural man, revealing himself in his angelic glories of natural knowledge, natural beauty, natural wisdom, and natural humanity." Thus does he play his part in this last age! Under these radiant disguises he is bewildering the eyes of men, and persuading them that this diffusion of knowledge is the appearing of the Millennial dawn. So specious are his counterfeits that it is hard to separate the real from the false, the precious from the vile; for when he thus comes forth as an angel of light, clothed in every perfection that the natural heart loves and the carnal eye admires, who shall penetrate the deception and escape the snare save those who "know all things," by reason of "the unction from the Holy One?" 1 John ii. 20. Most truly has the present state of the world been described by one of the world's own poets, when picturing the gay glitter of an evening assembly, over which was thrown

"A dazzling mass of artificial light,
Which showed all things, but nothing as they were."

So it is now upon the earth, among the heedless multitudes of the children of men. It is the world's midnight. They are eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage. Literature, science, art, philosophy, are all their own! Yet there is an artificial coloring, an unreal brightness, over all. There is music, but it is of the syren kind. There is eloquence, too, but it is "the words of man's wisdom," not that which speaks for God and "wineth souls." There is fervor, too, but it is the warmth of wild excitement, born in novelty and nursed by perpetual change. There is high thought, too, but it is often of the unhealthful cast, wrought off at the midnight lamp; not the deep musings begot in fellowship with God, and ceaseless converse with that inspired word which maketh wise the simple. And, in connection with all this, there is a proud air of independence, like that which said, "Our lips are our own; who is Lord over us?" There is a reckless determination to hold what opinions men please, unchecked and unreproved.

8. THE MATURITY OF THE PAPAL ANTICHRIST.

Popery itself is no new thing on earth, so that its mere existence is no peculiar sign of the last day. But its progress and prevalence are entirely new. There is a maturity about it which, in other ages, it could not claim. It is rising in stature and fast hastening to its consummation. In extent of circle she stretches far beyond the territories of other days. In all regions of the earth she is planting her banner and claiming dominion over the nations. Never did she show herself more thoroughly in earnest. She is flinging her chains across the globe. With stealthy foot she has been advancing step by step, till now she walks abroad at noonday with the sound of the trumpet, lifting up her head in bold defiance. Her hand, like Amalek's, is "upon the throne of the Lord;" and she acts and speaks as if in nothing she would be restrained of all that she has imagined to do.*

Never since the Reformation has popery made so deadly and determined a struggle for the recovery of throne and altar. Hundreds of missionary priests are thrusting themselves into every corner, winding themselves into the confidence of the influential, and insinuating themselves with serpent-stealth and subtlety into all seats of power. They mark off their districts and rear their churches everywhere, carrying on their work of proselytism at any expense, and by every method. They build with costly splendor; they adorn with most attractive grace; they cast the net with consummate art, that beneath its ample stretch they may entangle the thousands of every age and class and temper who love a theatrical religion, that will gratify the carnal sense, and furnish men with a license for the commission of any amount of iniquity. They talk proudly, too, and boast openly of their success, casting off the mask of meekness and modesty which they had in some measure assumed, proclaiming loudly that, as no heresy was ever allowed more than a duration of three centuries, the British apostasy has now reached its close. Thus they prophesy of their own speedy triumph, and of our hastening doom.

It is not my part either to confirm or to confute the prophesy. A few years will unfold it all. There may be darker days in reserve for Britain, than many will believe. Her day has been long bright, her sky long cloudless. What nation has ever enjoyed a century of such profound tranquility as we have experienced, unbroken save by a few political commotions, or a few murmurs of fretful discontent? The cup of trembling, which was put into the hands and pressed to the lips of every nation in Europe, in 1793-1815, passed us by. The revolutionary earthquake shocks that have during this century successively laid waste every kingdom around us, convulsing nations and overturning thrones, tearing up a thousand hearths, and agitating ten thousand fearful bosoms with alternate despair and hope, reached us not, nor stirred even one ripple on our sea-bound shore.

When Providence raised up

NAPOLEON BONAPARTE"

as the scourge of the Papal empire; when he called him to his foot, gave the nations before him, and made him ruler over kings, giving them as dust to his sword and as driven stubble to his bow, he appointed him his bounds that he could not pass over, and we were preserved, unmolested and secure. When every capital in Europe was in flames, from Moscow to Madrid, we were sitting each man under his own vine and fig-tree, with none to make us afraid. The enemy, with the vanquished might of Europe in his train, prepared to overwhelm us; he threatened, boasted, numbered his armies, talked of a second Armada; but in vain! We were secure. We needed "no bulwarks, no towers along the sleep." We were Protestant, and therefore invincible. Our protest was our palladium. From our far-off lonely island there went forth upon the earth the solitary voice that testified for Christ against Antichrist, in the midst of a world of idolatry and darkness. God heard the testimony, and he blessed the witness!

But since that time what has taken place? We have laid aside our protest as too bigoted for an enlightened age like ours. We have struck our Protestant colors, and hung out the flag of neutrality; or rather, we should say, of religious indifference. With our own hands we have taken down the old ancestral standard which has braved three centuries of storm, allowing the spoiler to tear in pieces and trample under foot the inheritance of our fathers, the birthright of our sons; proclaiming to the world that our past protest was a stain upon our history, and that it matters nothing to a nation's well-being whether the Bible or the Koran be the basis of her statute-book, or whether the national ensign be surmounted by the cross, the crescent, or the triple crown. We have little reason to hope that we shall ride out another storm as we have done the last. The anchor of our national Protestant testimony is gone!—By the Rev. Horatius Bonar, D. D.

* The recent popish dogmas of the Immaculate Conception, and the infallibility of the Pope, and the revival of Pilgrimages and Ultramontane Propagandism, manifest the maturing development of the papacy.—EDITOR.

(To be Concluded.)

[The Age to Come Herald.]

Paul's Prayer for Israel's Restoration.

Brethren, my heart's desire and prayer to God for Israelis, that they might be saved. Rom. x. 1.

Who the apostle means here by "Israel," is a disputed point; I will therefore settle this first, because it is the most important point in the prayer. Many deny that Paul alluded to Israel in the flesh, but, misusing another phrase—"the Israel of God," to assist them—claim that it means all true Christians of every nationality.

That such an application is wrong, the whole chapter fully proves; while the preceding and the succeding chapters also more fully establish the fact that he prayed for Israel according to the flesh. The apostle says:

"I say the truth in Christ, I lie not, my conscience also bearing me witness in the Holy Spirit, that I have great heaviness and continual sorrow in my heart. For I could wish that myself were accursed from Christ for my brethren, my kinsmen according to the flesh." Rom. ix. 1-3.

Campbell translates this last verse as follows:

"For I myself could wish to be so cursed from Christ, instead of my brethren, my kinsmen according to the flesh; who are Israelites."

"I ask then, hath God cast away his people? (these "Israelites.") God forbid. For I also am an Israelite, of the seed of Abraham, of the tribe of Benjamin. God hath not cast away his people which he foreknew." Rom. xi. 1, 2.

In these three chapters, (Rom. ix., x. xi.,) the apostle sets forth two distinct people—Israelites and Gentiles. And this distinction is so plain and positive that no unprejudiced mind can possibly misunderstand it. Here is the most powerful argument that can be produced for the return and restoration of the nation of Israel.

In chapter xi., verses 12 and 15, Paul says: "Now, if the fall of them be the riches of the world, and the diminishing ("or decay, or loss"—see margin) of them the riches of the Gentiles; how much more their fulness." "For if the casting away of them be the reconciling of the world, what shall the receiving of them be, but life from the dead." That is, if their fall and temporary rejection accomplished such a wonderful work of grace for the Gentile world, who were groping in utter darkness and idolatry, what a still more wonderful display of the power to save will be exhibited to the world at large, when Israel shall be restored to the bosom of divine favor and love! Seeing the prophecies fulfilled in their ingathering to their own land, in accordance with these predictions, the atheist will be confounded; the infidel will feel insecure in his tottering citadel; the scoffer will become alarmed for his safety; and the poor skeptic will leave his doubts and believe God's word.

"What shall the receiving of them be, but life from the dead!"

When God receives back that people whom he had cast away, it will not only be the resurrection of that nation from their dead state, but it will also be as life from the dead to the whole world. (Col. Ingersoll will not receive a thousand dollars a night then for rejoicing over a dead, formal church.)

"Life from the dead" is a strong figure or similitude, to show what a magical effect the receiving of that people will have upon a wondering and astonished world. Nothing has ever equalled it. Nothing has ever done so much for the truth. The re-establishment of Jerusalem, the building up of Zion and the Temple of the Lord, with the King of Glory dwelling therein, will be as life from the dead to the human race. See Psa. ciii. 16, 17; cxlvii. 2; Isa. ii. 17; iii. 1, 2; lxi. 1-3; lxii. 7.

To this end the apostle prayed in the Spirit; and his prayer was in perfect harmony with the entire Scriptures. This prayer to God that Israel might be saved, was but an echo of all the prophets; and in full accord with the precious promises, and in perfect harmony with the declarations of Christ. He has promised to return to Jerusalem. The Holy City will see him again; as it is written in the 118th Psalm: "Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord." Jesus quoted this passage just before he left the city, saying, ye shall not see me henceforth, till ye shall say, "Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord." This is tantamount to saying that Jerusalem shall see him again. It is more. She shall not only see him again, but she shall see him coming. This is not all. Jerusalem shall not only see her King again, but when that time comes she will hail him with joy, saying, "Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord." How changed the scene. Jerusalem hated her King, cast him out and slew him. When he returns she will say, "Blessed is he that cometh?" Who will have the audacity to say that Paul's prayer will not be answered? Whoever does, also says that Christ's words will not be fulfilled!

"The day of the Lord" is "The Lord's day" of the Apocalypse, when he "will pour upon the house of David, and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem, the spirit of grace and of supplications: and they (Israelites) shall look upon him whom they have pierced, and shall mourn for him," etc. Zech. xii. 10.

Jerusalem will gladly welcome her Lord at his return. Zechariah says: "Thus saith the Lord. I am returned [will return] unto Zion, and will dwell in the midst of Jerusalem; and Jerusalem shall be called a city of truth; and the mountain of the Lord of hosts, the Holy Mountain." Zech. viii. 3. This is the mountain unto which all nations will flow. Of it, and the coming of Christ to reign in it, Isaiah says:

"And in this mountain shall the Lord of hosts make unto all people a feast of fat things, a feast of wines on the lees; of fat things full of marrow, of wines on the lees well refined. And he will destroy in this mountain the face of the covering cast over all people, and the vail that is spread over all nations. He will swallow up death in victory; and the Lord God will wipe away tears from off all faces; and the rebuke of his people shall he take away from off all the earth: for the Lord hath spoken it. And it shall be said in that day, Lo, this is our God; we have waited for him, and he will save us; this is the Lord; we have waited for him, we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation." Isa. xxv. 6-9.

Paul's "heart's desire and prayer to God for Israel" will be answered; Israel will be saved, and their rebuke and reproach will be taken away from off all the earth. And when saved, a feast of fat things will be made at Jerusalem for all nations; and to that feast will all nations flow; because the vail that is now spread over all nations will then be destroyed. The glorious resurrection morning will also then have come, and death will be swallowed up in victory. "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?"

If the apostle took this all in when he prayed to God that Israel might be saved, who can wonder that he should be willing to be accursed from Christ, instead of his brethren according to the flesh?

Whoever prays for Israel to be saved—Israel according to the flesh—if they pray with the Spirit and with the understanding also, will pray for all the glorious events to take place which are promised as the sequence of their restoration.—William Shepherd.

Drying Up of the Euphrates.

Everything is tending to the dissolution of the Turkish Empire. Warlike and peaceful measures and influences alike result disastrously, and like the predicted doom of Amalek by the Seer from Pe'or, who said "Amalek was the first of the nations; but his latter end shall be that he perish forever" so the mighty power that has swept away thrones and dynasties with its overflowing waves of desolation, is wasting rapidly under the evaporating influences of the vials of wrath. As a further comment we subjoin the following:

THE GREEKS IN ASIA MINOR.

While Turkey is making so much difficulty about letting Greece have what the Berlin Conference commanded to be given her in Europe, the Greeks are quietly but surely annexing a considerable slice of Turkey in Asia. The extent to which this peaceful annexation has already gone on may be learned from a paper in the last number of the "Proceedings of the Berlin Geographical Society," by Herr Karl Humann. In Western Asia Minor, in all the region west of a line drawn from Constantinople to the mouth of the Geronis Chai (Indos in Lycia), the Turks are gradually succumbing in presence of the increasing number of enterprising Greeks. The population of this region is about 1,500,000, of whom 600,000 are Turks, 300,000 Nomad Yuruks in the mountains, 400,000 Greeks, with smaller numbers of other nationalities. Everything is against the Turks in favor of the Greeks. The former can speak no tongue but their own, few can read or write, their religion prevents their women from giving them any help in their industries; still, except when they are officials, or come much in contact with Christians, they are simple and honest. They possess sound common sense and correct judgment, but in business craft and money matters they are nowhere. The Greeks, on the other hand, are crafty business folk, and monopolize nearly all the trade and shipping.

In every village is at least one Greek keeping a retail shop. He alone is rich, the Turks are poor. These Greeks are extremely energetic, industrious, and desirous of learning. In the towns the Greeks are the foremost physicians, advocates, teachers, merchants, and workmen. Many Bulgars and Wallachs join their church, adopt their language, and use Greek names, but the Greeks themselves are extremely jealous of their language and its purity. Herr Humann gives statistics to prove that within the past few years the Greek population in many of the towns of Asia Minor has enormously increased, and he thinks it will not be long before the whole country, from the Sea of Marmora to Lycia, will be inhabited by Greeks, while the Turkish population will entirely disappear.

Power of a Holy Life.

The beauty of a holy life constitutes the most eloquent and effective persuasive to religion which one human being can address to another. We have many ways of doing good to our fellow-creatures; but none so good, so efficacious, as leading a virtuous, upright, and well-ordered life. There is an energy of moral suasion in a good man's life, passing the highest efforts of the orator's genius. The seen but silent beauty of holiness speaks more eloquently of God and duty, than the tongues of men and angels. Let parents remember this. The best inheritance a parent can bequeath to a child is a virtuous example, a legacy of hallowed remembrances and associations. The beauty of holiness shining through the life of a loved relative or friend, is more effectual to strengthen such as do stand in virtue's way, and lift up those that are bowed down, than precept, command, entreaty, or warning. The beauty of that holiness which is enshrined in the four brief biographies of Jesus of Nazareth, has done more and will do more to spread his religion in the world than all that has ever been preached or written on evidences of Christianity.—Dr. Chalmers.

A Thought for the Middle Aged.

It is the solemn thought connected with middle life that life's last business is begun in earnest; and it is then, midway between the cradle and the grave, that a man begins to marvel that he let the day of youth go by so half-enjoyed. It is the pensive autumn feeling; it is the sensation of half sadness that we experience when the longest day of the year is past, and every day that follows is shorter, and the light fainter, and the feeble shadows tell that nature is hastening with gigantic footsteps to her winter grave. So does man look back upon his youth. When the first gray hairs become visible, when the unwelcome truth fastens itself upon the mind that a man is no longer going up hill, but down, and that the sun is always westering, he looks back on things behind. When we were children we thought as children. But now there lies before us manhood, with its earnest work, and then old age, and then the grave, then home. There is a second youth for man, better and holier than the first, if he will look on and not look back.—F. W. Robertson.

A good man incarnates goodness. Goodness is a part of him. He cannot exist apart from it. The flower and its fragrance are one.

POETRY.

"A Little While."

A little while, our fighting shall be over;
A little while, our tears be wiped away;
A little while, the presence of Jehovah
Shall turn our darkness into heaven's bright day.

A little while, the fears that oft surround us
Shall to the memories of the past belong;
A little while, the love that sought and found us
Shall change our weeping into heaven's glad song.

A little while! His presence goes before us,
A fire by night, a shadowy cloud by day;
His banner, love inscribed, is floating o'er us,
His arm almighty is our strength and stay!

A little while to live and work for Jesus,
To gather with the reapers till he comes;
Oh, let not faithless fears and doubtings seize us
A little while, and then the harvest-home!

A little while! The drawing nearer—
The wished-for dawning of that glorious day,
Blest Father, make thy children's vision clearer,
And guide them ever in the shining way.

A little while! O blessed expectation!
A little while! "Lord, tarry not," we cry;
Our hearts exult in loud anticipation;
Rejoice! "The coming of the Lord is nigh!"

COMMUNICATIONS.

Christianity.

Editor Restitution:—Before leaving Indiana, I was requested by a number of the brethren to write some articles on the great subject of "Christianity," for THE RESTITUTION. In compliance with that request I now commence. So much has been written upon this topic that, at first, it would seem almost needless to say more. Each writer has his own way of presenting this question. The question may be asked: "What is Christianity?" It is Christianity and nothing else, and no other thing is Christianity. I start out, then, with the proposition that no one thing is any other thing, and almost everything is named in order to distinguish it from every other thing. Among religious worshippers we have a great variety of names, so they can be distinguished from each other, such as: Mohammedanism, Catholicism, Paganism, Protestantism, etc. This latter division is sub-divided into hundreds of divisions or denominations, all claiming to base their religious systems in the Bible. Every one with a moments reflection will agree that no two of these systems are alike. Then how many are just like the Bible? If either system is an exact copy of the Bible, then what necessity of using any other book for instruction as to faith and practice? Any addition to the word of God makes more than that word, and any less falls short of being that word.

In the former dispensation, Israel was under the law of God, given by Moses, and, in order to acceptance with God, it was absolutely necessary for each one to do the things required in what was then called "the law of Moses." In the time of Moses, Israel was informed that, at some time in the future, another prophet would be given like unto Moses, whom they would be under the necessity of hearing in all things he should say unto them. See Deut. xviii 15. "The Lord thy God will raise up unto thee a prophet from the midst of thee, of thy brethren, like unto me; unto him ye shall hearken." Verse 18: "I will raise them up a prophet from among their brethren, like unto thee, and will put my words in his mouth; and he shall speak unto them all that I shall command him. And it shall come to pass that whosoever will not hearken unto my words which he shall speak in my name, I will require it of him." That prophet is Christ. See Acts iii. 22, 23.

Paul, in Heb. i. 1, 2, uses the following clear language: "God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spake in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also he made the worlds." Christ came into the world as the light of the world, to teach men and women how they can obtain remission of sins, and how to live thereafter, while they were enjoined to do the things which he required at their hands.

Now, the question is, are Christians under obligation to do the things he required, in the order in which he has stated them? Or, may men change the order Christ has acquired, and all be well in the end? Could Israel do otherwise than obey in the order Moses commanded? Will it do to omit doing some things, positive commands, and substitute things Christ did not command? What propriety in connecting the name of Christ in any act which he did not require to be performed? Is it serving God when we do things he has not commanded or neglect to do things he has required? Can we claim to be his servants when we are doing what his servants are most positively forbidden to do? I shall claim that he is the servant of God, who is obediently following the directions which Christ and the apostles have left on record. And, obediently following these directions brings out practical Christianity as I shall endeavor to show before I close this subject. The world was in wickedness, and Christ came as a light. Let us look at the status of the world as given by Paul in Eph. ii. 11, 12: "Wherefore remember, that ye being in time past Gentiles in the flesh, who are called uncircumcision by that which is called the circumcision in the flesh made by hands; that at that time ye were without Christ, being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world."

Accepting of Christ, and becoming obedient to the faith, their relation is changed, having complied with the law of naturalization they become citizens, where they were formerly or naturally strangers. See Eph. ii. 19: "Now therefore ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow citizens with the saints, and of the household of God; and are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone."

What a relationship is thus placed within the reach of all men and women! Is this all? By no means. There is a warfare that these citizens must engage in. The world, the flesh and the devil will be always on hand offering inducements to lead them to transfer their citizenship back in the world, or, at least to such an extent as to take up part of their time from serving God, and go into their former ranks in the world.

Christ said in John xv. 17: "These things I command you, that ye love one another. If the world hate you, ye know that it hated me before it hated you. If ye were of the world, the world would love his own; but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you." In the 14th verse he says: "Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you."

By turning to Peter's second letter 1st chapter, we find him addressing persons of like precious faith with the apostles and giving them instructions, which are, doubtless, just as applicable now as they were then. Hear him at the 5th verse: "And beside this, giving all diligence, add to your faith virtue; and to virtue knowledge; and to knowledge, temperance; and to temperance, patience; and to patience, godliness; and to godliness, brotherly kindness; and to brotherly kindness, charity; for if these things be in you and abound, they make you that ye shall neither be barren nor unfruitful in the knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ. But he that lacketh these things is blind, and cannot see afar off, and hath forgotten that he was purged from his old sins. Wherefore the rather brethren, give diligence to make your calling and election sure; for if ye do these things ye shall never fall; for so an entrance shall be ministered unto you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ."

As men and women are to be called out of the world to form an alliance with Christ, there must, of necessity, be something of a definite character to induce them to act in the premises.

In the commission which Christ gave his apostles, after his resurrection he outlines the work assigned them. The different items to be preached and the final results to be obtained, are given us by the four evangelists. In Matt. xxviii. 18-20: "And Jesus came and spake unto them, saying, all power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you; and lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world."

In Mark xvi. 15, 16: "And he said unto them: go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned."

From this we learn that it is the gospel they were authorized to preach; and the message preached is what people were to believe, and after believing baptism is enjoined. Now turn to Luke xxiv. 46, 47, we learn that repentance and remission of sins were to be preached. Now, for the grand result.

John xx. 30, 31: "And many other signs truly did Jesus in the presence of his disciples, which are not written in this book; but these are written that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing ye might have life through his name."

From these quotations we have—teaching the nations the gospel—those who believe are required to repent, (or turn from their former course) then be baptized, for remission of sins; then comes the development of Christian character in the new, or adopted relationship, by developing the characteristics, which, in the end, will give these obedient believers a position in the kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, with eternal life and immortality.

If this is God's order, then any other arrangement will not be his. Is there salvation in any other than the Lord's appointed way? Who will risk any other? This may be illustrated by a bank authorized to issue bills. The bills are printed on an authorized plate and when properly printed and signed by the proper officers are put in circulation. These are regarded as, and are, genuine under the law. Suppose on the bills the number is given in figures at the left hand upper corner, and a large capital letter near the right hand lower corner, and every feature of the bill is in accordance with the law authorizing the establishment of the bank. The people receive the bills as money and feel safe so long as the bank is good. Suppose a man offers you a bill purporting to be upon this bank, having the number at the right hand lower corner and the letter at the left hand upper corner. You compare it with what you know to be a genuine bill, and you may ask how could the type of the letters and numbers change places? We know they could not change themselves and the law does not allow but the one way. You will not risk taking the bill until you consult the detector. There you find it described as a counterfeit, and a very dangerous one, for it has all on it that is authorized on the genuine; but it is lacking in the order. 'Tis a crime for any man to offer to pass a bill knowing it is not genuine. Has any man the right to print and put in circulation counterfeit bills? Has any man or set of men the right to change the face of God's bills or to legislate or change any of his ordinances, and teach men that if they only think it is right to do, or not do certain things it will be right?

The things required to be believed and done are either the commandments of God, or of men. Then to the law and the testimony; if we speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in us. Look out for counterfeits. RICHARD CORNALEY.

Healdsburg, Cal.

(To be Continued.)

Copy of Letter Sent to Cottage Avenue, Prof. I. Remsen.

Prof. I. Remsen—DEAR SIR:—I regretted to note in your last interesting lecture on the "Nature of Gases" that you cast such a slur upon the fair fame of one whose name will ever be associated with the science of chemistry, Joseph Priestley, lightly speaking of him as a "religious fanatic" and seeming to imply that it was this fanaticism that was the cause of his abhorance in England and the reason why he was compelled to take refuge in this country.

The facts in the case are these: His house in Birmingham was burned down by what we would call (had it occurred in Turkey or Hindoostan) a fanatical mob, causing the loss of his property to the extent (if I remember right,) of £2,000 besides his notes, books and instruments.

The principal cause of the persecution he received at the hands of the clergy and their victims following, were the views he held and freely advocated concerning man's constitution; and for the same reason is his name still continued in certain circles. He maintained that, like all animals, man depended upon his material organism for his individuality, or conscious being; and that, apart from such organism, that is, before he is born, or after he is dead, he ceases to exist. (See "Spirit and Matter," and other of his works). For this cause he was hated for a materialist, (whatever that may mean,) although I have been unable to learn that science has propounded any better conclusion as regards the mystery of death.

Furthermore, Priestley, as a Christian man, believed in the resurrection of the dead at a future period; but, in this age, where Christianity is recognized, this can hardly be termed fanaticism without doing violence to the sentiments of a large portion of the intelligent community.

Priestley had one opinion and stuck to it like a man in spite of the loss of goods. For this, I, for one, honor him. He was the personal friend and correspondent of Thomas Jefferson, and, in his day, was classed with the great men of his time. (See Scribner's Magazine for Sept., 1880, page 773).

I am yours, respectfully,
J. L. GELLETLY.

To Prof. Remsen, Thos. Hopkins University, Baltimore.

NEWS ITEMS.

FOREIGN.

RAGUSA, Dec. 3.—Admiral Seymour has given notice to the commanders of the various squadrons of the dissolution of the combined fleet. The British squadron will leave to-morrow for Malta, and the French squadron for Toulon, the Russian for Piræus, the Italian for Brindisi and the German for Trieste.

BERLIN, Dec. 3.—France and Germany agree with all the powers in advising Greece to follow a wise and moderate policy.

It is announced by cable that the joint naval squadron of the European powers in Turkish waters has been dissolved, the vessels of each nation having been ordered home. It is alleged that Count Bismarck thinks no definite step will be taken in the Greek question till April or May, and should Turkey then refuse to obey the voice of Europe for the annexation of Thessaly to Greece, then Germany would favor a renewed naval demonstration.

DEBATE IN THE CHAMBER OF REPRESENTATIVES.

ATHENS, Dec. 4.—An animated debate has began in the Chamber of Representatives, the opposition insisting that the government should make a statement concerning the policy they propose to pursue before the chamber proceeded to vote on the convention for a loan of 62,000,000 drachmas from the National Bank and other measures. The matter is expected to become a cabinet question.

TURKEY.—AN ADDRESS TO THE POWERS.

VIENNA, Dec. 4.—The Porte is preparing an address to the powers, which while declaring its readiness to come to a fair compromise with Greece, will ask the powers to use their influence to induce Greece to enter into direct negotiations.

SENTENTIOUS PARAGRAPHS.

Be your strife
To lead on earth an angel's life.
—Keble.

A heart unspotted is not easily daunted.—Shakspeare.

On slippery places take short steps and slow.

When you are in pain, fear, sorrow, or sudden peril, one verse of the Bible may be like a star to the mariner.

"Walk in the light, so shalt thou know
That fellowship of love
His spirit only can bestow
Who reigns in light above."

Without earnestness no man is ever great, or does really great things. He may be the cleverest of men; he may be brilliant, entertaining, popular; but he will want weight. No soul-moving picture was ever painted that had not in it a depth of shadow.—Peter Bayne.

"Why labor for treasures that rust and decay;
That sparkle a moment, then vanish away?
Go rather to Jesus, with earnest desire,
And buy of Him gold that is tried in the fire,
Salvation's a treasure of value untold,
Be wise to obtain it, for this is pure gold."

People who do not believe in prayer lose a wonderful rest and refuge. When time and space, the wants, the bitterness, or the duties of life, separate us from those we love so far that our help is useless to them, our voices silent, our eyes blind; when we know that suffering, idleness, danger, death, may lie in wait for them every hour, and no strength or longing of ours can avail to help them, where do they fly, what hope or comfort do they have, who cannot give their beloved into the safe keeping of the Omnipotent God; who cannot pour out their tortured and anxious hearts to him who heareth and answereth prayer?—Ledyard.

Where we but see the darkness of that mine,
God sees the diamond shine;
Where we can only clutching leaves behold,
He sees the fruit they fold.
We only see the rude and outer strife;
God knows the inner life.
And those from whom, like Pharisees, we shrink,
With Christ may eat and drink.

Religion's grand secret is living upon Christ, looking continually to him. All that is desirable in ourselves, all that is useful to others, must be drawn simply from this source; and everything else must be in subserviency to this. The secret of abiding in Christ is a compound grace of humility, faith and love,—humility, by which the soul feels its own nothingness and emptiness; faith, by which it embraces the Savior, as all sufficient for every want; and love, by which it continually dwells in him.—Bickersteth.

DIED.

EWING—November 16, 1880, JOHN EWING, aged sixty-nine years, eleven months and twenty-five days.

For almost twenty years father Ewing had been looking for the return of the Just One. He has said to the writer, "I may yet live to see the coming of Christ." But the fell destroyer has closed his eyes in that sleep that is to be broken by the trumpet sound. Thus, one by one, silently sinks into the tomb the waiting ones. Let us cherish the hope that, "because the Master lives, we shall live also."
J. F. WISDOM.

Notice.

My address is 720 Eighth Street, Washington, D. C. NEWELL BOND.

dec4-tf

PICTORIAL DESCRIPTION

OF THE

Tabernacle in the Wilderness

ITS RITES AND CEREMONIES.

By the Late JOHN DILWORTH.

32 Pages. Price 10c. For Sale at this Office.

A NEW TRACT.

Christ's Kingdom!

Where is it? What is it?

Being a discourse delivered at Berwick, Pa., by Jos. Lacier, of Mauch Chunk, Pa. This is a 32 page tract, neatly printed and should have a wide circulation. Send to this office for it. Price 10c.

Something New!

GOD ESTABLISHED,

—AND—

The Bible Vindicated!

—BY—

A. J. EYCHANER.

The above is the title of a new tract, just out, and should be placed in the hands of every infidel in the land. Those who live in infidel neighborhoods will do well to get this work, as it will aid you in combatting this enemy. 32 pages. Price 5c each; 12 for 50c, or 25 for $1. Send to this office for it.

SECOND EDITION.

THE GOSPEL OF THE KINGDOM

Advocated in a Series of

TEN DISCOURSES,

—BY—

WILEY JONES.

This edition is elegantly printed and bound by Lippincott & Co., clear type, good paper, 278 pages. Just what the following private Plain cloth binding $1.50; cloth gilt edge $1.50; feather matched edge $1.50. To obtain this valuable work, send the price by Postoffice order or registered letter to

WILEY JONES,
Norfolk, Va.

Astronomical Etiology, or

STAR PROPHECIES

Concerning coming disasters on the earth from 1841 to 1915. By M. L. Knapp, D.D., and others. Published by Thomas Wilson. Also contains an appendix by the publisher. 72 pages. 25 cents a copy.

HYMNS OF THE ADVENT

Is the name of a new Hymn Book, just out, compiled by Chas. C. Backer—compiler of the "Hymns of the Morning"—and published by W. N. Pile, Springfield, Mass.

Mr. Backer combines in this new work the "Hymns of the Morning" and a fresh and rare selection of music. As an appendix he adds a selection of "Favorite Hymns" (words only), whose music is familiar as a household word. Those of our brethren who have been asking for "Hymns of the Morning" for some time, can now be supplied with this new book, which is superior to the old one in that it embraces all of it and many new and beautiful songs. Those having the "Christian Psalmodist" and no music book will find this exactly what they want.

Send to this office for them. Price only 40 cents.

NEW EDITION.

A LETTER TO A FRIEND

By MRS. C. C. WOODRUFF.

This little book is so well known that the announcement that an edition has been printed should be enough, without comment.

32 PAGES. PRICE 10 CENTS

Send for a Copy to this Office.

THE SUN FOR 1881.

Everybody reads THE SUN. In the columns of this newspaper throughout the year to come every body will find:

I. All the world's news, as presented that the reader will get the greatest amount of information with the least unprofitable expenditure of time and eyesight. The first long age discovered the golden mean between redundant fulness and unsatisfactory brevity.

II. Much of that sort of news which depends less upon its recognized importance than upon its interest to mankind. From morning to morning THE SUN prints a continuous story of the lives of real men and women, and of their deeds, plans, loves, hates, and troubles. This story is more varied and more interesting than any romance that was ever devised.

III. Good writing in every column, and freshness, originality, accuracy, and decorum in the treatment of every subject.

IV. Honest comment. THE SUN'S habit is to speak out fearlessly about men and things.

V. Political matter in dealing with each political party, and equal readiness to commend what is praiseworthy or to rebuke what is blamable in Democrat or Republican.

VI. Absolute independence of partisan organizations, but unwavering loyalty to true Democratic principles. THE SUN believes that the Government which the Constitution gives us is a good one to keep.

Our terms are as follows:

For the DAILY SUN, a four-page sheet of twenty-eight columns, the price by mail, postpaid, is 55 cents a month, or $6.50 a year; or, including the Sunday paper, an eight-page sheet of double size, the price is 65 cents a month, or $7.70 a year, postage paid.

The Sunday edition of THE SUN is also furnished separately at $1.20 a year, postage paid.

The price of the WEEKLY SUN, eight pages, fifty-six columns, is $1 a year, postage paid. For clubs of ten sending $10 we will send an extra copy free.

Address I. W. ENGLAND,
Publisher of THE SUN, New York City.

dec4-10

BABYLAND FOR 1881.

The only magazine in the world expressly for Babies!

Only 50 Cts. a year, postpaid, "as

Extra Christmas frontispiece, in ten colors.

The baby will look for BABYLAND in his Christmas stocking, and if he finds it there he will coo all the year round.

Baby stories, poems, jingles,
Charming pictures, funny pictures,
Large clear type,
Words divided into syllables,
All beautifully printed on
Heavy cream-tint paper.

A special feature for 1881 will be a series of charming outline drawings for the little ones to "paint" with water colors. The suggestions for coloring will be given in a quaint "story" way—and with the January number will be given a page of similar drawings all colored.

The Editors also have pleasure in announcing the purchase of Kate Greenaway's Painting for the year 1879. Acclaimed by Publishers and Critics, it will be reserved for the Christmas frontispiece.

Send for specimen.

D. LOTHROP & CO., Publishers
32 FRANKLIN STREET, BOSTON, MASS.

dec4-tf

BOOK LIST.

The following publications are kept constantly on hand and will be sent postpaid to any address in the United States and Canada, upon receipt of published price. Address all orders to

THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Ind.

The Psalmodist. A book of 342 hymns suited to all occasions. Cloth, 60c; leather, plain, 80c; leather, gilt, 90c.

Bible Pearls. Suitable for wide distribution: No. 1. The Gospel. 2. The Coming and Kingdom of Christ, by Elder Baptist, in 1660. 3. Immortality. 4. The Kingdom of God. 5. Nature of Man and Thoughts for Thinkers. 6. The Two Advents. 7. What is Religion. 8. The Restitution Age. 9. Destiny of the Wicked. 10. Baptism. Ten copies, 5c; or assorted packages of 100, $1.

FOUR PAGE TRACTS.

25 for 20c; 50 for 35c; 100 for 60c.

The Destiny of Man as Taught. Contains an abundance of proof-texts.

Life and Death. A concise statement and contrast of the two uses of these terms, to-wit: the theological and Bible use.

Mormon Government a Failure. By A. S. Mergnler.

Resurrection. By Austin Curtis. A careful examination of the query—"If a man die, shall he live again?" Job xiv. 14.

Is it True? By H. V. Reed. An examination of testimony as to who are subjects of salvation.

Wait Awhile. By H. V. Reed. An excellent contrast of the Bible teaching and modern theory. Should have a wide circulation.

The Perverted Parable. The Rich Man and Lazarus, by W. Laing.

EIGHT PAGE TRACTS.

3c each, or $5 per 100.

Is it Essential to Believe in the Kingship of Israel? By Benj. Wilson.

Signs of the Times. By Horatio Bonar, of Scotland.

The Sojourning and Saturday. By H. V. Reed. Contemplates the future threefold gathering of the Saints, Israel and the Nations. In family.

TWELVE PAGE TRACTS.

3c each, 25c per dozen.

Christian Union. By Joel A. Simonds.

Regeneration and the Kingdom of God. By E Hoyt. Well suited to inquiring minds.

Immortality brought to Light. The grand reality of redemption. By J. H. Cook.

SIXTEEN-PAGE TRACTS.

Five cents each, 12 for 50c; 25 for $1.

The New Birth. By Josiah Peirce.

The Hope for the World. By Joel A. Simonds.

The Kingdom of Messiah. By Joseph Seiss, D. D., Set forth in beautiful language and apt Bible quotations.

Which Is Right? By T. Wilson. Showing the Bible teaching on the question as to whether Christ's Kingdom is to be on the earth or in heaven.

The God of Abraham. By Joel A. Simonds. The promise made to Abraham, renewed to Isaac and Jacob, and so frequently referred to by Prophets and Apostles.

The King in His Beauty. By H. V. Reed. Just the thing to circulate everywhere.

TWENTY-FOUR PAGE TRACTS.

Seven cents each; 12 for 75c; 25 for $1.

Das Koenigreiches des Reiches Gottes. Teaches the true nature of God's Kingdom.

Hold the Fort; Or, Journal Up! By T. Wilson. An argument from the Scriptures, showing that the earth will not be annihilated, as many suppose, but will be the everlasting inheritance of the saints.

Witchcraft Unveiled; or, the Voice of God Against Spiritualism. By H. V. Reed. Cannot be too widely circulated.

The Scriptures. By Joel A. Simonds.

THIRTY-TWO-P. OR TRACTS.

Ten cents each; 12 for $1.

Evangelium concerning the reign of Christ over Israel and the Nations, or a brief statement of the things concerning the Kingdom of God and the Name of Jesus Christ. By Wiley Jones.

The Restitution; or the World restored to its Primeval State, and this to be its everlasting condition. By E. Miller. A careful and satisfactory examination of Acts iii. 21.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS.

The Rich Man and Lazarus. By Thomas Wilson. The exposition throughout is in harmony with Bible teaching. Thirty-six pages, price 10c.

Primitive Christian Faith. Being a concise history of the Primitive Christian Faith, or the Gospel as held by the Apostolic and Primitive Fathers, in small compass; tract of fifty pages, by C. P. Sweet, of Albion, N. Y. Price 15 cents.

Bible Echo. Vol. I. May to Dec. 1878. A most valuable English weekly, edited by W. Kelloway. Contains important papers and discussions on vital matters. Not now published. 7 volumes. Originally $3.75, now offered at $2.

Bible Echo. Vol. II. January to June, 1879. 7 volumes, formerly $3.00, now $1.

Bible Echo. Vol. III. July to September, 1885, 4 volumes. Completes the Bible Echo as a weekly. Former price $1.60, now 75 cents.

The Infidel Silenced by the most irrefutable evidence relating to the authenticity and credibility of the Holy Scriptures. By W. H. Wilson. Just the thing for General Circulation, as it meets and exposes in a clear, emphatic manner the infidel notions of the day, and is a plain defence of the Bible. 96 pp. Price 15 cents.

The Doctrine of Immortality. By James H. Whitmore. 320 pages. 50 cents postpaid. Everybody should have it.

The Doctrine of Baptism as taught in the Holy Scriptures, together with a collection of evidence upon this subject, from the most learned theologians, critics, lexicographers and ecclesiastical historians 44 pages, on heavy paper price 20 cents

New Facts upon Old Subjects. A book indispensable to every body. 328 pp. Cloth bound. Worth $2 cents. Sent postpaid for 60 cents. Only 46 copies.

Future Punishment. Its nature and duration. By Henry Constable, Prebendary of Cork. 320 pp. Exactly the book for the times. Cloth $1.25.

The Destiny of America, as foretold by God's Prophets, together with an outline of the future movements and destiny of England, Germany, Persia, Africa, and the Jews. Contains a map of England and Asia. A work invaluable to every student of prophecy, and of intense present interest. 110 pages, cloth, 75c.

The Rich Man and Lazarus. By C. P. Sweet. 1876. 64 pp. price 15c. A careful unfolding of Luke xvi. and xvi., with an examination of Luke xix. and xxii.

God's Plan of Salvation. By J. M. Stephenson. Over three hundred pp. For a long time our brethren have desired a work which would embody the leading points and arguments of our faith and hope. Such Bro. Stephenson's book is a large, comprehensive and able statement of the leading phases of Bible theology. Our brethren will find in the just the thing to read and circulate. The nature of man, the Kingdom of God, and the obedience of faith, are ably and clearly set forth. Cloth binding $1.

New English Books.

Bible Triumphant. By Mrs. H. V. Reed. Paper 50c. A reply to "101 contradictions in the Bible." By A. J. Davis. An able refutation of infidel charges.

Hades, or the Intermediate State of the Dead. By Henry Constable, A. M. Cloth, $1.00. Proves the Bible doctrine of the state of man between death and the resurrection.

Discussion on the State of the Dead, between the Rev. W. C. Brenham, Congregational minister, and W. Kelloway, editor of Bible Echo, and minister of the Gospel. Both of England. The propositions discussed were: 1. That the dead exist in a Hades, conscious state of their decease. Affirmed by W. C. B. 2. That the Scriptures teach that man in death are wholly unconscious, insensible, and unable to perform in any act whatever; and that they rest in darkness, silence and the dust. Cloth, 60c; paper, 40c.

THE NEW TESTAMENT IN GREEK AND ENGLISH,

ARRANGED IN THE

EMPHATIC DIAGLOTT,

Containing the original Greek text of the New Testament, with an interlinear word-for-word English translation, based on the rendering of eighteen critics, and on the various readings of the Vatican Manuscripts, together with illustrative and explanatory foot notes, and a copious selection of references by Benjamin Wilson.

The different rendering of various passages in the New Testament are the foundations on which many of the sects of Christians have been built up; with this work each reader may judge for himself whether the words have been truly rendered, are so arranged in the common version as to express the exact meaning of the New Testament writers. New improved edition on finer paper. One vol. 12 mo. Price, extra cloth, $4.00; Library binding, $5.00 postpaid. For sale at this office.

Address, THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Ind.

MISTAKES of INGERSOLL,

Being a review of Col. R. G. Ingersoll's lecture entitled "Mistakes of Moses."

By J. M. STEPHENSON.

This is a large size, 8 page tract, printed on fine tinted paper. Price 10c per copy or $1.00 per dozen

For sale at this Office.

POETRY.

Lost and Found.

In memory of Rhoda McKin, who died A. D., 1859. Selected for her husband, E. T. McKin.

I lost the brook as it wound its way
Like a thread of silver hue;
Through greenwood and valley, thro' mead-ows gay,
'Twas hidden away from view;
But I found it again, a nobler river,
Sparkling, and broad and free,
Wider and fuller growing ever,
Till it reached the boundless sea.

I lost the thy-rsel that I sowed
With many a sigh and tear,
And vainly waited thro' sunshine and cold
For the young green to appear;
But surely after many long day-s,
The blossom and fruit will come,
And the reapers on high the sheaves will bring
For a joyful harvest home.

I lost the life that grew by my own
For a short sweet summer day,
And then it left me to wander alone,
And silently passed away;
But I know I shall find it further on,
Though not as it left me here,
For the shadows and mi-sts will have passed and gone,
I shall see it fair and clear.

I lost the note- of the Heavenly chime
That once came floating by,
I have listened and waited many a time
For the echo, though distantly;
But I know in the halls of glory it thrills
Ever by day and night,
I shall hear it complete when the harmony fills
My soul with great delight.

I lost the love that made my life,
A love that was all for me;
Oh, vainly I sought it amid the strife
Of the stormy, raging sea.
But deeper and fuller I know it waits
Beyond my wistful eyes,
I shall find it again within the gates
Of the Garden of Paradise.

I shall lose this life. It will disappear
With its wonderful mysteries;
Some day it will move no longer here,
But will vanish silently;
But I know I shall find it again once more
In a beauty no song has yet told;
It will meet me at the golden door
And around me forever fold.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Samuel.

The one striking characteristic of Samuel, is that described in the words —"Samuel ministered before the Lord, being a child girded with a linen ephod." His whole life was given by the dedication of his mother to serve the Lord. Such a childhood well became him, who bore before the world an unsullied manhood and a glorious old age.

The first child to bear the character of a prophet; from him we trace the commencement of a new era in Israel. He was the founder of the prophet office as a permanent institution among the Jews; and also by divine authority the founder of the kingly government.

We are told in the third chapter of Samuel that the word of the Lord was precious in those days; and that there was no open vision. Samuel came upon the scene at this time, when the spirit of prophecy had departed from Israel. It was no more as it was in the days of Moses and Deborah. And we find a parallel in these days; men care comparitively no more now for the voice of the prophets, than they were when the noble son of Hannah came, to direct and control Israel.

From the death of Eli, Samuel became the civil and ecclesiastical head of his nation. He became their statesman, their Jurist and their religious guide. He held the remarkable position as last of the Judges and first of the long line of prophets that terminated with Malachi the last representative of theocracy and the connecting link between it and the Jewish monarchy. A Levite by birth, he offered sacrifice as a priest.

When Israel was oppressed by the Philistines, they said to Samuel "cease not to cry unto the Lord our God, for us, that he will save us out of the hands of the Philistines. And Samuel took a sucking lamb, and offered it for a burnt offering wholly unto the Lord: and Samuel cried unto the Lord for Israel, and the Lord heard him.

In the administration of justice he made the annual circuit between Bethel, Mizpah, Gilgal and Ramah; oftentimes working miracles for the salvation of his people, and the vindication of the cause of Jehovah, as during the offering of the burnt sacrifice, when the Lord through the prayers of Samuel, smote the Philistines with fear and confusion in the crashing of the thunder.

But as a prophet, Samuel presents one of the grandest characters in the Bible. He was the unswerving messenger of God, whether his message was of life or death. He learnt from his youth that to serve God faithfully, is the highest and noblest aim of man. He had an example of the folly of human ambition in the profligate Saul. He realized that God alone is true, and the rewarder of those who diligently seek him. And what more could he or any man desire than that he may be approved of God?

Samuel was the veritable Warwick of the Bible. As the interpreter of the divine will, and its executor, he set up kings and pulled down kings, yet sought no other recompense than the blessing of his God. The "Seer" as he was called in his old age, was the one all important person in Israel. He was consulted by all even on the small and trivial affairs of life. Confidence universal was reposed in him, and well did he repay that confidence This noble self-respect and conscientiousness of right, is one of the most beautiful traits of his character. What noble words are those of his recorded in the xii chapter. Not only do they speak the pure heart of Samuel, but they should be inscribed on the heart of every one who with him have consecrated their lives to the only true and living God, the creator and giver of all things. Hear them—"Turn ye not aside: for then should ye go after vain things, which cannot profit or deliver; for they are vain. For the Lord will not forsake his people, for his great namesake; because it hath pleased the Lord to make you his people. Moreover as for me God forbid that I should sin against the Lord, in ceasing to pray for you; but I will teach you the good and the right way. Only fear the Lord and serve him in truth with all your heart; for consider —(this should be the great incentive to right) how great things he hath done for you."

Again how majestically he executes the Lord's message to the disobedient Saul. Rising early in the morning to meet Saul—probably that their audience might not be disturbed; while the fleeing shadows of the night lingered with the mists in the valleys; before the sun had lit the top of Carmel with heavenly glory; we can imagine the prophets look as he listens to the false words that fall from the lips of Saul. Then, reads the Divine Record, "Samuel said unto Saul, Stay, and I will tell thee what the Lord hath said to me this night. When thou wast little in thine own sight, wast thou not made the head of the tribes of Israel, and the Lord anointed thee king over Israel?" How the words "when thou wast little in thine own sight" must have smote on the ears of the haughty and proud monarch, coming as they did from the Lord's emissary. A very striking lesson, also, this extract conveys. "The Lord anointed thee king over Israel" closes the verse. Now connect this with the first lines—"when thou wast little in thine own sight." Do we not have here embodied in different words the Savior's beautiful law—"Whosoever shall exalt himself shall be abased; and he that shall humble himself shall be exalted.

But continuing the address of Samuel to Saul, we come to the memorable passage—"Because thou hast rejected the word of the Lord, he hath also rejected thee from being king." Here let us contrast the two men thus presented to us. No characters could be more opposite. Saul as he stood before the prophet of God, with a falsehood on his lips—of magnificent personal appearance; of unquestioned physical courage; he was by turns a despot, a fanatic, a murderer, a demon. Like a grand tower crowned by the glory of the sun, yet whose interior is the abode of misery and every vile and hideous sin, stood Saul; but like a towering mountain, bearing upon its brow the seal of God, and containing within countless treasures of pure gold, stood Samuel. One looked down on his followers and said—"I am great;" the other though tabernacling with Jehovah said by his life—"There is none great but God." 'Tis in this that the character of Samuel assumes the grandest phase of Christianity. The childlike obedience that he manifested everywhere, and sometimes under the most aggravated circumstances: the simple majesty with which he ruled in the office of Judge; all combine to make a man whom God loved to honor.

"Samuel," says Dr. Smith, "became the spiritual father of the Psalmist king." The idea is well expressed. Samuel recognized in David the "Lord's Anointed," and took especial care concerning him. A noble guardian of a noble ward. The fire of the youthful poet was tempered and made to glow in the service of God, through the venerable prophet who had learned the will of his Maker and followed it.

Samuel is presented to us in another character, besides that of prophet, that speaks his nobleness. He was an educator of his people, and established regular institutions of religious instruction.

Prophet, judge, statesman, jurist, priest, educator; such was Samuel. Well might "all the Israelites gather together and lament him." A bright light was gone out. A star that heralded the approach of a new era, and lingered awhile on its horizon, was set.

We might take this good man's life to heart. We, as did Samuel, have consecrated ourselves to God. We, like him, have announced our determination to leave after following "vain things." We, have experienced, as did he, "all the good things that the Lord has done for us." And we have the same blessed assurance that God will never forsake his people. With such consecration; with such determination, through the help of God; with such experience of his goodness, can we not say, "There is none holy as the Lord; for there is none besides thee; neither is there any rock like our God," and so shape our course that we, like Samuel, shall fall asleep lamented by the good, and accounted worthy to obtain the crown of glory that fadeth not away, when Christ our life returns.

I cannot better close this sketch, than in the words of the grand old prophet himself, when resigning all civil authority to Saul. "And Samuel said to all Israel, Behold I have hearkened to your voice in all that ye have said unto me, and have made a King over you. And now behold, the King walketh before you; and I am old and grey headed; and, behold, my sons are with you; and I have walked before you from my childhood to this day. Behold here I am; witness against me before the Lord, and before his anointed: whose ox have I taken? Or whose ass have I taken? Or whom have I defrauded? Whom have I oppressed? Or of whose hand have I received any bribe to blind my eyes therewith, and I will restore it. And they said, thou hast not defrauded us, nor oppressed us, neither hast thou taken aught of any man's hand. And he said unto them, the Lord is witness against you, and his anointed is witness against you this day that ye have not found aught in my hand. And they answered, he is witness."

Glorious close of a useful career! Sublime old man! With no consciousness of having wronged his fellow man, he could go to death "sustained and soothed—by an unfaltering trust, —like one who draws the drapery of his couch about him, and lies down to pleasant dreams."

W. I. CROCKETT.

[New York Observer.]

The Sea of Galilee,

As the sun arose above the beautiful ridge of Carmel we were in our saddles, and leaving Nazareth, where we had passed a most interesting Sabbath, we continued our march over an undulating country enamelled with wild flowers of great beauty. In about an hour we came to Cana of Galilee, now only a small village, where at a marriage feast our Lord performed his first miracle. Shortly after leaving this place we passed through the field where, according to tradition, the disciples plucked the ears of corn upon the Sabbath day. Further on, my brother pointed out a hill supposed to be the Mount of Beatitudes, from which our Savior preached his wonderful sermon of wisdom and love. Here, too, on that long, dry ridge, July 5th, 1187, the great battle of Hattin was fought. In this conflict the mighty Sultan Saladin, leader of the Saracens, completely overthrew the army of the Crusaders under Guy de Lusignan, the last Christian king who ruled in Jerusalem. Proceeding onward up a gentle rising ground for a short distance, we came suddenly upon a view, one of the most striking in the Holy Land.

Dismounting, we handed over the horses to our drogoman, and directing him to lead the animals away, we sat down to gaze long and intently upon scenes which revive in the heart of the Christian many hallowed memories. A thousand feet below us, with no sail upon its surface and scarcely a sign of life upon its shores, lay in calm repose the dark blue waters of Galilee. Beneath us, on the shores of the lake, at the distance of about a mile, is the city of Tiberias. Across the lake, on the eastern side, rise the steep and wild shores of Gadara, mounting higher and higher, until at the height of 2,000 feet they terminate in the mountains of the Hauran. Beyond and hid from view by these high ridges, is the boundless desert stretching off toward Bagdad. Far away to the right, in the country beyond the Jordan, rise the mountains of Moab, on a spur of which Moses must have stood when he viewed the Promised Land. Turning to the left, our eyes easily discern at the distance of about forty miles (so clear is the atmosphere), Mt. Hermon towering grand and majestic, its hoary head covered with eternal snow. Directly to the north, perched on a high hill, is Safed, that city which cannot be hid—the mystic city of the future. All about us is a region of country deeply interesting as the land where first were preached the glad tidings of salvation and where were performed the miracles of our Lord. These hills now uninhabited have echoed his voice, these scenes now desolate once lay before his eyes, these waters now deserted were blessed by his feet, and these cities now in ruins have witnessed his triumphs.

Calling for our horses, we mount and slowly wind down the hill toward Tiberias. This city, chiefly inhabited by Jews, is a disgustingly filthy place. A Moslem tradition is responsible for the saying that the "King of the Fleas holds his court in Tiberias." The town, named by Herod after the Roman Emperor, was nearly destroyed by an earthquake in 1837, and to-day, in its present state, Tiberias is only a little better than a dirty ruin. The houses are built of uncemented stones, are mostly one story high, and have the universal flat roofs. The four holy cities of the Jews are Tiberias, Safed, Hebron, and Jerusalem; but many hold the former in special veneration as the home of Jacob and the place to which Christ will first direct his steps on his arising out of the lake at his second coming. To the south, a little way from the city, are the hot baths of Emmaus, built by Ibrahim Pacha when Syria was governed by the Egyptians. The water is salt, bitter and somewhat sulphurous, and is much used by rheumatic people, who take the baths during the summer season. The temperature is 143 deg. Fahrenheit, almost unbearable.

You obtain a fine view of the lake from this point, and according to the best authority it is about twelve miles long and six broad, with a depth of 165 feet. The surface of the water is 653 feet below the Mediterranean. The inhabitants believe that the waters, which are cool and sweet, possess some medicinal qualities. From Tiberias we follow the western shore nearly north, and in a little while pass Mejdel —the ancient Magdala and the birthplace of Mary Magdalen, to which our Savior once came. We are approaching, nearer yet nearer, to the cities where Christ performed his greatest miracles. The lake was here margined with the beautiful oleander—at this season in full flower.

"All thro' the summer night
Those blossoms, red and bright,
Spread their soft breasts."

Ducks and other wild birds could be seen skimming the surface of the lake. Soon we descry our camp in the near distance, and galloping up to it, we find that our tents are pitched very near the supposed site of ancient Capernaum.

What a strange charm there is in this nomadic life!—how totally different from anything we have before experienced! We bathed in the pleasant waters of the lake, and then sat down to a dinner of several courses excellently prepared by our Abyssinian cook, to which our appetites did full justice. After dinner, in the cool of the evening we walked down to the margin of the lake. What a flood of memories came o'er us! Within easy distance are the ruins of Capernaum—Christ's own city,—and you cannot but be impressed with the fact that God's anathema is fully accomplished: "And thou Capernaum, which art exalted unto heaven, shalt be brought down to hell." Not a house, scarcely a wall or column remains to mark the site of a once busy and wealthy city. As we stood there, apparently "the world forgetting, by the world forgot," we recalled that it was while walking on the surface of this lake that our Savior spoke those words which quieted the trembling disciples and have since comforted so many Christian hearts during eighteen hundred years: "It is I, be not afraid!" To this sea when a great tempest arose, threatening destruction to the ship and all on board, Jesus addressed his rebuke, and immediately "there was a great calm." It was on these shores when the people were burdened with a sense of guilt that these words were spoken: "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." "How pleasant to me thy deep blue wave.

O Sea of Galilee!
For the glorious One who came to save
Hath often stood by thee!"

Leaving camp early the next morning, we took up our line of march toward Mt. Hermon en route for Damascus.—Sam'l S. Dennis.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Editor Restitution:—I have just received from my old class-mate, A. J. Eychaner, his new tract, which I have read with pleasure and profit, I wish to recommend it to one and all, as a tract which commends itself for its clear and logical manner of dealing with the skeptic. I have in my library Patterson, Thayer, Jonyns, Leslie, Lord, Littleton, Watson, Todd, Newton and others, which I have carefully read. I have no hesitancy in pronouncing Bro. Eychaner's little work entitled "God and the Bible Vindicated," in point of ability inferior to none of them. Brethren who live in communities afflicted with infidelity should avail themselves of the opportunity of scattering this tract, in fact all should read it whether infidel or Christian; it will do you good, I speak from experience, I intend to introduce it to my brethren, and also into infidel communities where I labor. I am truly glad that Bro. A. H. Magruder has accepted of Col. Ingersoll's challenge. I hope arrangements will be made to have the discussion published in a book, for the benefit of the masses. But, I fear that when Ingersoll learns that Bro. Magruder does not believe in the theory of "endless torment" and the "immortality of the soul" that he will refuse to discuss with him, as he did with Eli Crag, though a congregationalist. Yet a believer in conditional immortality I presume the Col. thinks if he can make the Bible responsible for these papish ideas, that he can defend this course better. If the discussion takes place I wish to attend it. I am satisfied that the cause of Christianity will not suffer in the conflict. I have read with increased interest, Bro. Weethee's articles on the "coming age," also the articles on "trine immersion," written some time ago by the editor in reply also to S. McClothlin. These articles and Bro. Weethee's I should like very much to see in pamphlet form, and I know many others who have the same desire. As I of late years seldom write for THE RESTITUTION, I wish to say to my old friends and former associates of the faith and hope of Abraham, press on, the prize is in view, with unbroken trust and courage undaunted, march forward, the kingdom is near, soon its glories will break in upon us. "Fight the good fight of faith" never give up the battle until victory is won. The warfare then over, we shall rest in the kingdom of God, let us grow in grace and in the knowledge of the truth, keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus, Rev. xiv. 12, the promise is "Blessed are they that do his commandments," they are to enter the city of God, and have right to the tree of life, Rev. xxii. 14. May we be among them. Your Bro. in the hope.

A. H. DURBOR,

Alcalton, Mo.

The following will attract the attention of our readers as important in the complication of what is known as —The Eastern Question; especially when read in connection with another in this number on the almost absolute certainty of a war soon between Greece and Turkey on the boundary question between the two latter powers. We are nearing a momentous crisis in this world's history. The dissolution of Mohammedan supremacy is the startling signal of the nearness of Christ's second coming. The finger of destiny seems ominously to point to 1881–1882, as a most eventful period. Watch, work, pray.

[From the Utica Morning Herald.]

THE WAR IN PERSIA.

Now that there is a lull in the Turkish phase of the Eastern question, attention will be naturally drawn to another phase, which, though not now directly a part of it, is likely eventually to become one of its chief features. This is the invasion of Persia by the Koords. These people inhabit a tract of country partly in Asiatic Turkey and partly in Persia, and whose boundaries are not very definite. Of a population of 3,000,000, at least 2,500,000 are in the Turkish portion. In fact, the Persian portion is comprised mostly of wandering tribes, the few towns in their country being occupied largely by Persians. Again, as the prevailing religion of the Koords is Mohammedism, and as most of their trading is with the Turks, they may be called a Turkish people, although their language is of Persian stock. They are a fierce people, and, by their nomadic life, learned early the sweets of liberty. For years previous to the Russo-Turkish war they were a thorn in the side of the Sultan, resisting his authority when they chose with impunity. As the Porte has now its hands full with European concert, it can pay little attention to the Koords. The latter, therefore, have turned on the Persians. The movement, however, although accompanied by the customary outrages of Asiatic warfare, does not have plunder for its main object. Its leader is Shiek Obidullah. He is possessed of all the qualities admired in a Mohammedan commander. He holds a high religious position among Moslems, being next in rank to the Sheriff of Mecca. His people believe him to be their prophet as well as their prince, and obey him implicitly. For some time Obidullah has dreamed of an independent Koordish kingdom, composed of both the Turkish and Persian portions of Koordistan. A year ago he resisted the Governor of Oroomiah in the Persian portion when he came to collect the revenues. This year he insisted on controlling the Persian districts of Koordistan, guaranteeing their revenue to the Shah. Failing in both attempts he declared war. With an army of 15,000 he marched into Persia in three detachments, sweeping everything before him. Usually the Koords are armed with horn bows, javelins and a sling, the like of which Xenophon saw when he passed through the country. Obidullah's troops were armed with rifles obtained during the Russo-Turkish war, and for a while had it all their own way. Three weeks ago, however, they advanced 8,000 strong against Oroomiah and were met and finally defeated by the Persians. They are still in that neighborhood, while the Persians recently have been invading Turkish Koordistan. Obidullah is doing all he can to unite all Koords in one grand movement for independence. In case he succeeds, the Koordish becomes the most prominent feature of the Eastern question. It will unquestionably be made an international matter, in which Russia and England will not be on the same side. The Russians are already assisting the Persians, while the British Minister has asked the Porte to station a guard on the Persian's frontier to stop them from crossing. A conflict seriously involving European interests is, therefore, not improbable. Such a conflict would be of special interest to Americans, as it would occur in the Nestorian mission field of the American Board. Although menaced by both sides, the missionaries have thus far escaped harm. Should a general conflict be precipitated, however, they would be in imminent danger.

BREVITIES.

Advices from Honolulu describe the eruption of Mauna Loa, now in progress, as one of the grandest ever witnessed. It broke out on November 5, about six miles from the summit, the crater throwing out two great streams of lava, one of which is thirty miles long, 100 to 200 yards wide and about twenty feet deep. Terrible explosions accompany its flow.

THE JEWS IN MOROCCO.

The condition of the Jews in Morocco is deplorable. At Morocco itself, only six weeks ago, the Cadi ordered the crucifixion of a Jew accused of having lent money at a usurious rate of interest. A short time before this a band of dervishes, who exercise great influence over the native inhabitants, seized a Jew at Antifa, and, after slaying him alive, killed him and ate him. This crime was left unpunished.

DEATH OF TWO CENTENARIANS.

A despatch from Logansport, Indiana, of Nov. 29, says: Mrs. Mary Dillon, or as she was better known, "Old Mother" Dillon, died at her home in this city yesterday at the extraordinary age of 112 years. She was born in the county of Limerick, Ireland, in the year 1768, and came to this country near the year 1840. The colored woman, Mrs. Agnes Brown, died at Bronson, Ohio, last week, at the age of 120 years, and the funeral sermon was preached on Sunday, by an old time acquaintance from Xenia, O., who is in his 100th year, and has been in the ministry since 1802.

The carob bean is grown all over the Mediterranean seaboard and islands, and 8,000 tons were imported from Cyprus by England alone in 1879. It forms an important ingredient in cattle feeds, is now employed in France for making brandy since the continued failure of the vines, and is eaten by the peasants in Russia and the East. Last year was a wonderful year for carobs. The carob tree is a handsome evergreen with dark glossy foliage, which forms a grateful rest for the eye along the hot slopes of the Limasol, Paphos, and Verynia hills. In the spring the long, broad pods of the beans can scarcely be distinguished amid the leaves; but in the early autumn they turn to a dark chocolate color, and in an abundant year bow the branches to the ground, presenting a striking contrast to the rest of the tree. The carob tree is hardy, flourishes well with but little rain, and attains a large size, much resembling the walnut in its spread and habit. It grows sparsely in Cyprus, often not more than twenty or thirty to the acre, for there is no regular planting.

A COUNTRY OF ROBBERS.

Macedonia is said to be in a terrible condition. Bands of brigands, strong in numbers and well armed, are infesting almost all parts of the country; taking advantage of the weakness of the authorities, and enriching themselves by the indiscriminate plunder of the inhabitants without distinction of race or creed. Beys and other high dignitaries are being seized, and there are even cases in which all the members of provincial councils have been carried off in a body and sent into the mountains. One of the bands demands the sum of £5,000 sterling as ransom for the liberation of two Turkish dignitaries and three Christians who hold the rank of councillors. Communication is everywhere interrupted. In Epirus incredible atrocities are reported to have been perpetrated. In one case two women are said to have been thrust alive into an oven. The inhabitants are powerless to defend themselves, and are looking for pity and protection from the West.

THE RESTITUTION.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

WHOLE NO. 691. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, DECEMBER 15, 1880. VOL. XXIX, NO. 48.

THE RESTITUTION

IS ISSUED

EVERY WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON,

By the Christian Publishing Association.

OFFICERS AND BOARD OF DIRECTORS.

S. S. HIGGINS, ... PRES'T.
CHARLES PALMER, ... VICE PRES'T.
E. K. MARSHALL, ... SECRETARY.
S. A. CHAPLIN, ... TREASURER.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

CHARLES PALMER, WM. HAILSBACK,
ISRAEL G. EDGARTON.

S. A. CHAPLIN, : : : : : : Editor.

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTORS.

J. M. STEPHENSON, | H. L. WILSON,
A. H. MAGRUDER, | G. M. MYERS.
J. F. WHEELER, WILEY JONES,
JOEL A. SIMONDS.

TERMS:--$2.00 PER YEAR.

Payable Invariably in Advance. Subscriptions received for three or six months at the same rate.

Address all Letters and Communications to

THE RESTITUTION,

Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates, as a means to this end, the second advent of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with its Chief as King of Kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the investigation of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also protests a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and baptism, as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Coming Age--Its Proximity--Seven Churches--Two Views---a. Figurative.--b. Literal--Ephesus--Smyrna--Pergamos--Thyatira--Sardis--Philadelphia--Laodicea--Summary.--No. 4b.

J. F. WHEELER.

Introductory Vision.—Such a vision seemed to be required to induce John to see, hear and believe, in his hopeless banishment; and may we that read and hear have the same spirit of faith. In our outline sketch we designed to show that the Apocalypse, as a whole, and in all its parts, brought to view the proximity of the Coming [illegible] to demonstrate [illegible] eye-witness of these panoramic views, that we may partake of his spirit, and participate in that interest which Jesus threw around these, his final revelations.

John is in the Spirit on the Lord's day (Christian Sabbath—Ignatius,) and heard behind him a great voice, as of a trumpet, saying, I am Alpha and Omega, the first and the last; and, what thou seest write in a book, and send (it) unto the seven churches which are in Asia; unto Ephesus, Smyrna, Pergamos, Thyatira, Sardis, Philadelphia and Laodicea. Rev. i. 10, 11. The voice, drawing John's attention, he turns to see the speaker. A temple scene opens upon his vision: He sees seven golden candlesticks (lamp-stands); and in the midst of the seven candlesticks (one) like unto the Son of Man, clothed with a garment down to the feet, and girt about the paps (breasts) with a golden girdle. His head and (his) hairs (were) white like wool, as white as snow; and his eyes (were) as a flame of fire; and his feet like unto fine brass, as if they burned in a furnace; and his voice as the sound of many waters. Verses 12-15. In his right hand were seven stars; out of his mouth a sharp two-edged sword; his countenance as the clear meridian sun. At the sight John fell as dead, when he laid his hand upon him, saying, Fear not; I am the first and the last. He that liveth and was dead, and, behold, I am alive forevermore, Amen; and have the keys of hell (hades) and death. Write the things which thou hast seen, and the things which are, and the things which shall be hereafter. The seven stars, seen in my right hand, are the angels (messengers) of the seven churches; and the seven candlesticks (lamp-stands) are the seven churches.

Here closes the opening vision. The dignity of the person prepares John to believe his revelations.

As the imagery is principally of the Jewish Temple, with its officiating High Priest, the head of the Jewish church (congregation) while superintending their worship; so, in this vision, when Christ is about to open to John the history of the Christian church under his High Priesthood, in a series of panoramic visions, he shows himself in his robes, and in his priestly glory, administering to the churches, his future bride, holding their ministers (angels) in his hand of power. In this vision the evangelist is permitted to enter the vestibule of that Temple (Christians into whose courts the true worshippers of God have gathered amid the tribulations of eighteen centuries.

Seven Churches.—Two views are held relative to the seven churches. That they symbolize seven states of the church. (2.) That they are seven literal churches, bearing the names by which they are called.

(1.) Are they Symbolic?—To this view we dissent, for the following, among other reasons: (a.) They are not seen in vision, as churches. If John had said, I saw the churches in a vision, it would have established their symbolic interpretation; but they are addressed as churches. (2.) When seen in vision they were lampstands—explained to be churches. Their angels, or ministers were stars. Rev. i. 20. The terms used to explain a vision are literal; but angels and churches are used to explain stars and candlesticks (lamp-stands,) seen in vision; therefore, angels (messengers) and churches are literal—there is no escape from this conclusion. (3.) No two expositors agree on the portions of the church belonging to each of the seven parts. (4.) They do not give a reason for seven parts rather than ten, fifteen, or any other number. The Christian church, during eighteen centuries has assumed many forms, and often the same form. It was Laodicean in the days of Constantine the Great. Should we admit that interpretation, however, it would simply add another sign to the proximity of the coming age, since that school of prophetic expositors agree in this that the church is in its Laodicean state, which is the final period of this age.

That they are literal churches is clear from the following reasons:

1. In Rev. i. 2, John is commanded to write what he sees, and send to the seven churches which are in Asia, Ephesus, Smyrna, Pergamos, Thyatira, Sardis, Philadelphia and Laodicea. Rev. i. 10, 11. The voice, drawing John's attention, he turns to see the speaker. A temple scene opens upon his vision: He sees seven golden candlesticks (lamp-stands); and in the midst of the seven candlesticks (one) like unto the Son of Man, clothed with a garment down to the feet, and girt about the paps (breasts) with a golden girdle. His head and (his) hairs (were) white like wool, as white as snow; and his eyes (were) as a flame of fire; and his feet like unto fine brass, as if they burned in a furnace; and his voice as the sound of many waters. Verses 12-15. In his right hand were seven stars; out of his mouth a sharp two-edged sword; his countenance as the clear meridian sun. At the sight John fell as dead, when he laid his hand upon him, saying, Fear not; I am the first and the last. He that liveth and was dead, and, behold, I am alive forevermore, Amen; and have the keys of hell (hades) and death. Write the things which thou hast seen, and the things which are, and the things which shall be hereafter. The seven stars, seen in my right hand, are the angels (messengers) of the seven churches; and the seven candlesticks (lamp-stands) are the seven churches.

Here closes the opening vision. The dignity of the person prepares John to believe his revelations.

As the imagery is principally of the Jewish Temple, with its officiating High Priest, the head of the Jewish church (congregation) while superintending their worship; so, in this vision, when Christ is about to open to John the history of the Christian church under his High Priesthood, in a series of panoramic visions, he shows himself in his robes, and in his priestly glory, administering to the churches, his future bride, holding their ministers (angels) in his hand of power. In this vision the evangelist is permitted to enter the vestibule of that Temple (Christians into whose courts the true worshippers of God have gathered amid the tribulations of eighteen centuries.

Seven Churches.—Two views are held relative to the seven churches. That they symbolize seven states of the church. (2.) That they are seven literal churches, bearing the names by which they are called.

(1.) Are they Symbolic?—To this view we dissent, for the following, among other reasons: (a.) They are not seen in vision, as churches. If John had said, I saw the churches in a vision, it would have established their symbolic interpretation; but they are addressed as churches. (2.) When seen in vision they were lampstands—explained to be churches. Their angels, or ministers were stars. Rev. i. 20. The terms used to explain a vision are literal; but angels and churches are used to explain stars and candlesticks (lamp-stands,) seen in vision; therefore, angels (messengers) and churches are literal—there is no escape from this conclusion. (3.) No two expositors agree on the portions of the church belonging to each of the seven parts. (4.) They do not give a reason for seven parts rather than ten, fifteen, or any other number. The Christian church, during eighteen centuries has assumed many forms, and often the same form. It was Laodicean in the days of Constantine the Great. Should we admit that interpretation, however, it would simply add another sign to the proximity of the coming age, since that school of prophetic expositors agree in this that the church is in its Laodicean state, which is the final period of this age.

That they are literal churches is clear from the following reasons:

1. In Rev. i. 2, John is commanded to write what he sees, and send to the seven churches which are in Asia, Ephesus, Smyrna, Pergamos, Thyatira, Sardis, Philadelphia and Laodicea. Rev. i. 10, 11. This church was reduced to poverty, [illegible] ministering, or angels, to the churches. The most natural explanation would seem to be the following: The Roman emperors allowed banished Christians to be visited by their friends, and supplied with the necessaries and comforts of life. John is now banished to Patmos, in sight of the land where these churches are located. From these churches messengers (angels) are sent to John with presents. While there, Christ communicated his instructions to John, who sends, by his messenger, the message to each of the seven churches, to each church its particular message.

2. Terms used in explanation of visions are literal; otherwise, there would be no end of the symbolic series; it would require a second symbol to explain the first, a third symbol to explain the second; and so onward. This would fail to explain the vision. This introductory vision has all its agents and features explained. John sees an extraordinary personage, one like the Son of Man as he saw him on the mount of transfiguration. That he might be certain, the person speaks, I (am) he that liveth, and was dead, and, behold, I am alive forevermore. Christ is a symbol of himself, as there is in the universe no resembling being.

The seven stars are the angels (messengers) of the seven churches. The seven candlesticks are the seven churches. This vision is, therefore, fully explained. This was necessary, since John would wish to know what authority was about to accompany the opening vision, whether of human or of Divine origin.

3. The history of those churches shows that they are to be literally understood. Their features, and their fortunes agree with those things expressed in their letters.

(a.) Ephesus.—In Christ's address, there are matters for praise and for reproof. They are commended for works, labor, patience, hating evil, and especially, the deeds of the Nicolaitanes (who held to a community of wives). They are censured for having left their first love. They are commanded to reform, or their candlestick (church and its privileges) should be quickly removed. Churches, being composed of people addicted to the habits of their vicinities, have the characteristics of those localities. We can read the characters of these seven cities, in part, by Christ's epistles to their churches; so also can we read the [illegible] Churches would naturally excite by becoming the characters of the several cities.

(b.) Ephesus.—Ephesus was, at this time, the chief city of Proconsular Asia—was connected by highways [illegible] west, with the four quarters of the earth, and immediately. It was a centre of commerce—the seat of heathen worship. A great temple was erected to the worship of Diana. Many Jews resided there. Silver shrines were manufactured in that city. The citizens were given up to idolatry. Here Paul labored two years in this city and formed a church. To establish a church required immense work, labor, patience, and strict adherence to the pure Christian doctrines and practice. They were, at first, severely persecuted. During that time they were true and zealous, but when persecutions subsided, they became wealthy and lost their first love. Their surroundings formed their character. When they received Ephesus into the church, it became Ephesian. It repented not and thus brought to pass Christ's predictions. The prophetic cast of each letter is found in its predicted destiny. The once flourishing congregation of Ephesus, had in 1810, only three individual Christians, one only, of whom could read; and who know nothing of Paul, but by his name in the calendar. —Orient Lit.

(c.) Smyrna.—The commendatory features of this church are, works, tribulation, and poverty. In their letter Christ says: Thou art rich. I know the blasphemy of those that say they are Jews, but are not, but (are) the synagogue of Satan. Fear none of those things which thou shalt suffer; behold, the devil shall cast (some) of you into prison, that ye may be tried; and ye shall have tribulation ten days; be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life. Rev. ii. 9-11. This church was reduced to poverty, [illegible] were rich in [illegible] generations. About seventy years [illegible] severely persecuted by the Jews [illegible] by the great empire. During the trials, Polycarp, their bishop, suffered martyrdom. He had been a Christian eighty-six years. His language, when about to die, shows that he had before him Christ's words to his church. Be thou faithful unto death and I will give thee a crown of life. In that city of 140,000 inhabitants, there are 140 Protestants. Greeks, Armenians, Catholics and Jews are more numerous.

(d.) Pergamos.—The commendatory features of this church were, works, caused by their location in Satan's seat, holding fast Christ's name, not denying his name in the midst of martyrdom. Some things were charged against them—bad company—those that held the doctrine of Balaam, and of the Nicolaitanes," Repent; or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will fight against them with the sword of my mouth." Rev. ii. 16. Pergamos was one of the most noted cities of Asia, the seat of a Roman consul, abounding in wealth, and luxury, making it a seat for Satan. Escalapius was there worshipped under the form of a serpent, hence Satan's seat. The city now contains a population of 15,000, has ten mosques, two churches, and one synagogue. It was once the seat of Attalian kings.

(d.) Thyatira.—The church at Thyatira is commended for its works, charity, service, faith, patience and labor; she was censured for suffering Jezbel to teach and to seduce Christ's servants to commit fornication, and to eat things sacrificed unto idols. Some were not seduced by her doctrines. A reward is then promised to those that overcome. Thyatira was a city of temples. Apollo was the chief deity. A temple was dedicated to Sambatha, by some, called the wife of the bishop; by others a Jewess Sibyl, amalgamating various religions. This worship will explain Rev. ii. 20-24. We find much internal evidence that this letter was addressed to a literal church of that name.

(e.) Sardis.—This is the fifth church in the order of the circuit. It was located in the "the proud capital of Lydia." The church, partaking of the sensual pleasures of the city, was dead —they lived on the wages of sin. Christ had a few names in Sardis that had not defiled their garments; they were to walk with him in white. Not a Christian now lives in Sardis. It is buried beneath the rubbish of ages.

(f.) Philadelphia.—The epistle to this church contains no reproof. Still, they were exposed to temptations, hence commanded to hold fast what they had that no one take their crown. Philadelphia has in it more of the remains of Christianity than any of the other cities.

(g.) Laodicea.—The letter sent to this church contains not a word of commendation. She is neither cold nor hot; simply lukewarm—nauseating—ready to be spewed out of Christ's mouth. "She was wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind and naked." Rev. iii. 17. Christianity has not a vestige remaining. She continued her downward course till she was totally ruined.

We close our remarks on the churches with the following:

1. They all contain evidence of being literally addressed by the seven epistles.

2. They contain things that were then, and that would be in the distant future.

3. If these churches represent seven states of the church, we are in the Laodicean state.

4. If they are literal churches, and typical of the church general in seven states we are still in the Laodicean state; the advent of him that holds the seven stars in his right hand is near. He comes to recover his bride from a world of persecuting enemies.

SELECTIONS.

[Prophetic Times.]

The Throne of David.

On Luke i. 32, 33.

The angel Gabriel delivered this message to Mary the Mother of Jesus, we therefore can set aside all spiritual constructions by commentators, theologians and the great mass of preachers of the present day. The simple prophecy and announcement to Mary [illegible] that Christ the Son of the Most High shall in future sit upon the throne of his father David, not in Heaven, but in the literal Jerusalem of Palestine—the metropolis of the millennial kingdom and the joy of the whole earth.

Long before the foundation of the earth was laid, in the unfathomable depths of eternity, the Father loved the Son, and gave all things into his hand. It was then that it was decreed that the world should be created, it should be allowed to fall from God; be rescued from the enemy, and be redeemed again with the life blood of the Son of God, and should finally be made the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ, and that he should reign not only forever and ever, but specifically a reign of one thousand years upon the throne of David in Jerusalem, with his resurrected and translated saints, and that the law political should proceed from Mount Zion, (not from the church of the present dispensation), and the law, i. e., the millennial religious law, should proceed from Jerusalem. Micah iv. 12. The incarnation of the Son of God for this purpose developes a new principle, and affects the destinies of the earth to the utmost limits; both for time and of existence. The trust committed to Israel failed completely, as every other trust committed to man. In place of holding the earth for the Messiah to come, Israel could not even hold their own land in a state of independence. This was foreseen, and divine wisdom foreseeing what would happen, provided a brief representative government as a precedent for the future government of Christ. The kingdom of David was established to the utmost limits of the land of Israel. It reached from the Nile to the Euphrates, and embraced all that is hereafter to be comprehended in the millennial territory of the Son of David upon the throne of David in Jerusalem. For forty years David as the representative of the Messiah, reigned over the Messianic empire of his future Son. By this means a precedent was established which is hereafter to be acted upon, and the kingdom of the Messiah was represented as in a rehearsal upon the public stage of life. Man always fails, and is permitted to fail, that the necessity of a divine government should be made evident to all. Israel having failed, God gave over the earth to the dominion of the Gentiles. Dan. ii. 31-35. God no longer strove with man, but left him to himself to work out his own policy, to destroy with his own hands the empires, kingdoms and republics, and to go from folly to folly, from vain confidence to vain confidence, until not only he should be thoroughly convinced that he is unfit to govern, but, as predicted in Daniel, the whole fabric of the great image should be driven away like the chaff of the summer threshing floor. Dan. ii. 32-44. Yet amidst these outward vicissitudes, one principle was always kept in view. The precedent established by the reigns of Solomon and of David was recorded in the archives of heaven, to be produced at the fit time to confirm the claims of the Messiah as the Son and the legal heir of his father David, and of his kingdom there shall be no end. The present era is therefore particularly remarkable.

The seeds of decay are as evident in all governments, the failure of mankind, both Jews and Gentiles, has now become manifest to all. The model constitution is worn out, i. e., human policy has wasted to its last cinders, there is nothing left behind but a heap of ashes, like the individual recently cremated at Washington City, his entire constitution reduced to ashes and preserved in a bottle—Empires, kingdoms, and republics are mad, and the rest of the world is groaning under despotism, amidst universal ruin and despair, when there is not a choice left, but anarchy, Nihilisms, strikes, riots, trades-unions, commissions, and tyranny, the era of man concludes, and the era of the Messiah must begin; and it will be a most happy change, from the most sickening cant, to the coming reign of the Son of God, of truth, holiness and justice and mercy; when war shall cease (Isaiah ii. 4) and when the whole creation shall rejoice and sing, it will be a happy change from the governments of vain and sordid men, to the sublime empire of the Son of David.

Of all the claims of the Son of God, his claims as the Son of David will be most surely enforced. He owes it to himself, he owes it to the whole creation, which has long waited deliverance from bondage and the restitution of all things, (Acts iii. 20, 21).

The earth and its governments of every country are in rebellion against the righteous government of God, and it is only among men that the Son of God is defrauded. All angels are in subjection to him.* In view of this general apostacy the God of heaven is levying war (Jeremiah xxv. 32, 33). And it is the whole earth that is to be the battle-field, and when he issues from the heavens at the head of his immortal armies, the great controversy must at last take place, the future struggle which seems now so near will not be a struggle between earthly empires or dominions, or between rival kings, but a struggle between God and man, the nations at large utterly scoff at the idea of a divine kingdom, the religious world and its ten thousand ministers and higher orders, with an air of meek derision, speak of the kingdom of Christ as a delusion, and propose to convert a world of mankind of nearly fifteen hundred millions, mostly idolators by their measures. The more the earth and the religious world resists God's designs, deny its prophecies, and disregard the indications of the signs of the times, the more terrible will be the judgments of God on their apostacies. The literal reign of Christ annihilates all human likeness and pronounces an anathema upon all who take the sword as the instrument of regeneration—nothing will complete the design of God, but the renovation of all that the earth contains, scripturally termed the restitution of all things (Acts iii. 20, 21). When Jesus shall come from heaven to take possession of the entire creation, which is given to the Son as the Son of David to occupy the throne of David in Jerusalem, (not a throne in heaven, as falsely interpreted by the ministry, for David's throne was as much an earthly throne, as is the throne of England) all kings shall bow down before him, all nations that are left remaining subsequent to the battle at Armageddon (Rev. xvi. 16) shall then serve him (Psalm lxxii). Since then the redeemed world of Christ includes the redemption even of the kingdoms of the earth, it must also include the redemption of earthly politics from their present debasement, and while men will not yield to mere force they will be compelled to yield to the force of divine judgments. The 14th of Zechariah, the 3d of Joel, the 12th of Zechariah, the 38th and 39th of Ezekiel, all agree in representing a scene of military force and of physical power, in which the millions are overwhelmed and destroyed, when his feet shall stand before Jerusalem on the east upon the mount of olives, with all his saints, and war shall forever be abolished; and the reign of the Son of David will begin.

Now, in conclusion, this conquest of the earth is not by the preaching of the gospel, but by the judgments of the Almighty; the spiritualizer has tried long enough to lead the people astray, and nothing now remains but God's fearful vengeance, and by these alone, the kingdoms of this world will be transferred to the Son of David.

Examine the 2d chapter of Isaiah and the 4th chapter of Micah, and you will find a sentence pronounced upon the whole earth, the Holy Land and Jerusalem, peculiarly honored and redeemed.

Every device of man and the power of man in government will be forever annihilated, and the Lord alone shall be exalted in that day. Such is the destiny of our earth in the great transition from the empire of man to the empire of the Son of God. Amen.—S. Bonhomme.

* Except Satan and his angels.—Ed.

SENTENTIOUS PARAGRAPHS.

The happiness or unhappiness of old age is often nothing but the extract of a past life.—Mme Neche.

That which is called considering what is our duty in a particular case, is very often nothing but endeavoring to explain it away.—Bishop Butler.

Awake, O dreamer, sleep no more!
Thy bark is nearing Canaan's shore;
Stern toil alone will win the strife,
And give the victor endless life.

The great thinker is seldom a disputant. His answers other men's arguments by stating the truth as he sees it.—Prof. March.

What can be a stronger motive to a firm trust and reliance on the mercies of our Maker, than the giving us his Son to suffer for us.—Addison.

Experience is the Lord's school; and they who are taught by him usually learn by the mistakes they make that they have no wisdom, and by the slips and falls they meet with that they have no strength.—John Newton.

As flows the river, calm and deep,
In silence toward the sea,
So floweth ever, and ceases never,
The love of God to me.

What peace He bringeth to my heart.
Deep as the soundless sea,
How sweetly singeth the soul that clingeth,
My loving Lord, to Thee.

As the eye which has gazed at the sun cannot immediately discern any other object; as the man who has been accustomed to behold the ocean turns with contempt from a stagnant pool, so the mind which has contemplated eternity overlooks and despises the things of time.—Edward Payson.

All truly consecrated men learn, little by little, that what they are consecrated to is not joy or sorrow, but a divine idea and a profound obedience, which can find their full outward expression, not in joy and not in sorrow, but in the mysterious and inseparable mingling of the two.—Phillips Brooks.

Sign not the old heroic ages back,
The heroes were but brave and earnest men;
Do thou but, hero-like pursue thy track,
Striving, not sighing, bringe them back again.
The hero's path is straight to do and say
God's words, and work in spite of toil and shame,
Labors enough will meet thee on thy way.
Do thou forsake it not to seek for them.

What a strange power in silence! How many resolutions are formed—how many sublime conquests effected—during that pause when the lips are closed, and the soul secretly feels the eye of her Maker upon her! When some of those cutting, sharp, blighting words have been spoken, which send the hot, indignant blood to the face and head, if those to whom they are addressed keep silence, look on with awe—for a mighty work is going on within them, and the spirit of evil, or their guardian angel, is very near to them in that hour—during the pause they have made a step toward heaven or hell, and an item has been scored in the book which the day of judgment shall see opened. They are the strong ones who know how to keep silence when it is a pain and a grief to them—those who give them to their own souls to wax strong against temptation, or to the powers of wrath to stamp upon them their passage.—Emerson.

THE RESTITUTION.

E. A. CHAPLIN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, DEC. 15, 1880.

NOTICE!

According to regulation, the Annual Meeting of the Stockholders of the Christian Publishing Association, will meet on the fourth Monday of December (27th) 1880, for the purpose of electing a new Board of Directors, and such other business as may come before the meeting.

E. E. BARNHILL, Sec'y.

REMEMBER that the Quarterly Conference meeting will commence at Plymouth, on Friday evening, Dec. 24, to hold over the following Sunday.

BROTHER John Foore called on us last Saturday. He was on his way to Ohio. In another column will be found a notice of an appointment at the Antioch Meeting House, where he proposes to deliver some lectures.

NOTICE of a watch-night meeting, to be held in Brooklyn, appears in another column. We hope the blessing of heaven may rest upon our brethren who may then assemble. The Bride may be taken away from earth before the incoming year shall close.

"A few more shadows
And He will come."

The church is now doing her last work and making her last sacrifices. Gentile times are closing.

The Sea and Waves Roaring.

A perfect frenzy of storms seems to have raged on the Atlantic during the month of November. So severe have been the tempests that the hatches were fastened down, while the huge waves swept over the decks and the imprisoned passengers below. The multitudinous waves in angry voice herald coming doom.

Wars and Rumors of Wars.

Ireland is in an incipient revolution. Greece makes no secret of her intention to draw the sword to obtain her purposes. Russia and the Teke Turkomans are at war. There is war between the Persians and the Kurds. There is prospect of war between Russia and China in the immediate future. The clouds of war gather dark over Asia, Europe, Africa, and South America. All these are the primary skirmishes to the battle of the Great day.

IN a discussion of the Sunday School lesson for Dec. 12, 1880, at the teacher's meeting held at Farwell Hall in Chicago, on Saturday, Dec. 11, a Miss Dreyer made the following remarks which we clip from the Evening Journal to lay before our readers. Surely the question is pertinent—what difference would it make whether the bones of the Patriarchs lay in Egypt or elsewhere if there were to be no future resurrection, and if the soul leaves the body as a butterfly leaves the chrysalis? The point made that one's sin is sure to find him out is worthy of every one's consideration:

Miss Dreyer, the well-known Bible-reader, said she did not doubt that the patriarchs looked for resurrection.

The first oath regarding the taking of one of the patriarch's bones to a desired place of burial was that of Joseph to Jacob. Joseph subsequently bound the children of Israel with regard to carrying his bones out of Egypt. These things were doubtless due to the fact that the patriarch expected to rise again. If not, what difference whether their bones lay in Egypt or elsewhere. The whole of Genesis was opposed to the teaching coming into vogue to-day that the soul leaves the body as the butterfly leaves the chrysalis. There was a great hope before Joseph when he died, regarding the promises to his people, and they were just as real to-day, for those promises had not yet been realized, and Joseph had not yet risen from the dead. One of the noticeable features of the lesson was the fact of Jacob's great funeral.

Jacob had become a Prince through his contest with the angel, and he it was who first bestowed royal blessings. So it was especially fitting that his funeral should be grand. He had become "Israel"—a Prince in the eyes of God and man. In the fifteenth verse, the speaker spoke of the opposite idea from that which had been alluded to. Confession was her theme. Never until our record showed a voluntary confession were we to be pardoned. It would not do that they should send the innocent Benjamin. The Mediator could never bear our guilt or take our guilt upon him, but we who had sinned must come and lay our sins at the feet of the One who could forgive. It had been truly said that a man's sin is sure to find him out, and the children should be taught that they must sooner or later face their sins and have to talk them over. The speaker concluded with a plea for the plenary inspiration of the Scripture, claiming it to be exemplified by the lesson.

SELECTIONS.

[Christian Herald and Signs of Our Times.]

ELEVEN SIGNS OF THE NEARING ADVENT OF CHRIST.

The Night Coming—Signs of Christ's Advent Notable and Numerous—The Millennium not a Sign—1. Wars, Earthquakes, Pestilence, and Famines—2. Restlessness of the World—3. Missionary Exertions—4. Position of Israel—5. Disbelief in the Church—6. Human Efforts at Self-Regeneration—7. The Spirit of Knowledge—8. The Maturity of Papal Anti-Christ—9. The Diffusion of Infidelity—10. The Increase of Immorality—11. Increase of Superficiality and Formalism.

[Concluded from our last.]

9. The Diffusion of Infidelity.—This at least is new. Our fathers knew comparatively little of this, and our fathers' fathers almost nothing. An infidel was rare indeed in their day—a man wondered at and shunned. Toward the close of the last century infidelity burst forth in France, and partially extended itself elsewhere. Of late years it has developed itself with prodigious swiftness, and assumed a bold and lofty attitude of assault. Its extent is incredible. The masses are thoroughly leavened with it. It has insinuated itself everywhere, and is eating out the very heart of everything like deep principle among men. It has corroded the cement by which society hangs together, so that nations and communities are now like walls or towers without mortar, ready to fall to pieces of themselves, or be leveled by the first blast.

Its ferocity is alarming, its activity unceasing. Much of it is undisguised and confessed; but very much of it is still secret and unavowed. It taints the air, it blights life, it ossifies conscience, under it all good things wither. It is the worm at the root of all that is noble and excellent in these last days. Hence the hollow condition of things among us—the chill that is upon life's warm fellowships and offices of love. Social, political, kindred ties are worm-eaten and ready to break asunder. The erect bearing and manly vigor which religion imparts are no longer visible. Superstition has come to the rescue, and is trying to supply their place. But in vain! expediency rules. Large masses of the people are either openly or secretly infidel, if not atheistical. God is not acknowledged. His yoke seems to gall men's shoulders. The nations are ready to cast it off. And what hope is there, what token, that this is to end before the Lord return to end it? Is it not a sign of his approach and the denial of the possibility of a previous millennium of holy blessedness upon the earth?

10. The Increase of Immorality.—Like a flood it is swelling and widening in its course. It is without shame and without fear. Crimes that our fathers knew not of are common among the nations. Licentiousness riots fearfully, perpetrating deeds without a name, so that it is "a shame even to speak of those things that are done of them in secret." Drunkenness staggers along every street. Blasphemy pours itself forth till we shudder and close the ear against its horrid sounds. Murder has broken loose, and every day our newspapers are telling some horrible tale of bloodshed; man slaying his fellow-man, in fiendish hatred or more fiendish love of gain; none spared; the parent slaying his children, the child his parent, the husband the wife, the wife the husband; no sanctity of relationship is any safeguard from the poison, or the bullet, or the knife, or the more brutal hammer.

OR, WHAT A CRY

is going up to God from this land of ours, the cry of innocent blood! blood which a righteous God will yet avenge! But the picture of our spreading immorality is one not easily drawn, save by the record of facts—facts which one man scarcely ventures to whisper to another, too awful to be laid bare before the public eye. It calls for a prophet's eye to see it, a prophet's pen to record it, and a prophet's soul to weep over it "in secret places" before the Lord. Men are truly "lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce-breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high-minded, lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God." All this is to come to pass in the last days, and to wax worse and worse till the Lord come. How vivid, then, and how numerous are the signs of the advent—signs of whose nature, whose progress, and whose termination demonstrate irresistibly that there can be no millennium before his coming.

11. The Prevalence of Superficiality and Formalism in Religion.—Form without power, a body without a soul, religion without vitality—these are among the signs of the last days. The show of piety is widespread, but the thing itself occupies a narrow circle. There is much profession, but profession lies on the surface, and underneath all may be worldliness. Depth and solidity are wanting; the aspect of religion is unhealthy; the fresh hue of primitive times is departed; the intense vitality, which of right belongs to it, is dried up, so that instead of its being the living source of motion to the world without, controlling or counteracting or impelling its currents, it lies inert and passive, at the mercy of every outward movement. It is a worldly, self-pleasing religion, adopted for fashion's sake, and used according to convenience.

Satan has now transformed himself into an angel of light, and under this fair disguise he is working with marvelous success. He is teaching us to build the tombs of our fathers, that we may rest content with the mere approbation of their principles without any imitation of their practice. He leads some astray into fatal error under the pretext of candor and the love of truth; others he saturates with the orthodoxy of the head, that they may become indifferent to the state of their heart before God. Some he persuades to deny the Bible; to others he lauds it, that he may make it a substitute for the God of the Bible. He allows us a wide range of religious feeling and sentiment, if he can only succeed in making them a substitute for God. He hinders not our being serious, earnest, solemn, if he can thereby feed the cravings of a restless, empty soul with something which may prevent us from seeking the bread of life. He permits us to denounce the world's vanity and hollow pleasures, to be weary of its unsatisfying round of folly, that he may delude us into the idea that this dissatisfaction with the world is a proof that we are religious, and thereby cause us to sit down contented when yet a great way off from our Father's house.

These outward things may be in themselves right and good, but what are they without the indwelling spirit? What is truth without the True One? What is the perfection of church order without the vital power from above? The body is there, but the living spirit has fled.

And are not these the signs of the last days? Is it not when the virgins are slumbering that the midnight cry is to be heard, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh;" and when the Son of Man cometh shall he find faith on the earth? Where, then, is there room for a millennium before the advent?—By the Rev. Dr. Horatius Bonar.

Assurance.

We read of "the full assurance of faith (Heb. x. 22.); "the full assurance of understanding (Col. ii. 2.); and "the full assurance" of hope (Heb. vi. 11). But the term in all these places is [illegible] which simply means fullness or abounding; not at all what is popularly understood by the term "assurance"—namely, a sense of reconciliation with God, which is an elementary enjoyment of spiritual life, and ought ever to accompany reconciliation. This accordingly is pre-supposed in the several texts in question; but the specific exhortation of the spirit is that believers should abound in the graces mentioned:—in "faith," that is in reliance on the object of faith; in "understanding," that is in clear apprehension of such object of faith; and in "hope," that is in anticipation of the glory that is coming. For hope is never associated with forgiveness of sin as its object, forgiveness being the present blessing of the believer—but always with the future. For example: "hope of the glory of God," "hope of salvation," that is, consummated salvation. It is, in fact, the expression for future unseen good; and we can conceive of believers—indeed, they are too many—who are very deficient under this head, by reason of their not taking knowledge of the future, as God reveals it in his word; just as other believers all deficient in their apprehension and religion on those truths which are the objects of faith.

NEWS ITEMS.

AUSTRIA—ANOTHER EARTHQUAKE SHOCK AT AGRAM.

VIENNA, Dec. 10.—Another sharp shock of earthquake occurred at Agram, Croatia, Wednesday night, causing a terrible panic. No serious damage was done.

A Constantinople dispatch says: "Turkey and Greece have agreed to submit their disputes to arbitration by a European congress."

There is a threatening outbreak in Africa. War seems inevitable between Egypt and Abyssinia. Egypt is making undoubtable preparations for something of a warlike nature and the King of Abyssinia has given all resident Mussulmans the choice of exile or baptism.

The widow of M. Thiers, the great French statesman and ex-president of the French Republic, died Dec. 12.

CINCINNATI, O., Dec. 11.—The Times-Star special says nine-tenths of the business portion of Pensacola, Fla., is burned. The loss is $1,500,000. The origin of the fire is unknown. The insurance has not been ascertained.

IRELAND—THE LONDON "TIMES" CORRESPONDENT ON THE SITUATION.

LONDON, Dec. 13.—A Dublin dispatch to the Times says: It is hardly correct to say that anarchy prevails in Ireland, for there is a very distinct and potent government which is rapidly superseding the Imperial Government, and is obtaining the ascendency. It rules with an iron hand and a promptitude which enforces instant obedience. Its code is clear; its executive resolute; its machinery complete, and its action uniform. There is a government de facto, and a government de jure—the former wielding a power which is felt and feared, and the latter exhibiting only pomp, and but little reality of power. The former is a terror to well-doers; the latter no terror to evil-doers. The law of the Land League is becoming the law of the land, and while the law of the state is costly and to a large extent suspended, the new law is administered cheaply and conveniently. League courts are springing up in various places, and the people are instructed to have their disputes decided by such courts, and to go no more to sessions. The local magistrates in the west of Ireland have lately been surprised to find no cases brought before them except by police. The people have been for some time advised to take this course, but they are now beginning to act thereon. As a rule, the penalties which said courts have the power of inflicting are regarded with more dread than those imposed under the statutes. Another function of the new government, that of levying of taxes, is most effectively fulfilled. No rate assigned by law is half as promptly paid as the tax which the league imposes. Licenses to sell at fairs and in the markets are required by the new government, and their production is enforced by summary process. The only element wanting to constitute the new government a body of the country is a standing army, but the materials for one are at hand and are being fitted for use when called upon. Knowledge of this fact creates deeper alarm because with an armed and disaffected population around them the loyal subjects of the Queen in many places believe that the danger which lies beneath it is more formida-

[illegible] reports having made the astonishing discovery of a city of an extinct people, old dwellings of which extend for thirty or forty miles parallel with the Rio Grande, and about ten miles back from the river, and only about forty miles from Santa Fe. The dwellings are, in some instances, 12x20 feet in dimensions, cut in solid rock with arched ceiling, on the face of a cliff apparently inaccessible to man. The excavations were made, apparently, with implements of stone. In some of the dwellings were found fragments of materials used by the inhabitants, who long since disappeared.

A very interesting observation was made in England early in November, which seems to favor the theory that the perihelion of Jupiter not only excites unusual convulsions, both in the sun and in that planet, but produces minor but appreciable effects on our own globe. On the night of Nov. 2 Jupiter was seen to be powerfully disturbed. The great red spot and the equatorial belts glowed with unusual brilliancy, and black specks, like sun spots, dotted the equatorial regions. The next night a splendid display of the northern lights was seen in England. The bright curtains and streamers of the aurora were shaken across the northern heavens for hours, their colors shifting from white to red and green. The study of the physical influence of the planets upon each other and upon the sun is yet in its infancy, but facts are accumulating that bear directly upon this subject. There can be no more fascinating branch of investigation. It is astrology stripped of superstition.

Professor C. A. Grimmer, a Kingston (Jamaica) scientist, predicts that the star of Bethlehem, which appears every 315 years, will again be visible in "Cassiopia's chair" in 1887, and will be accompanied by a total eclipse of the sun and moon. It will be seen even by noonday, shining with a quick, flashing light the entire year, after which it will gradually decrease in brightness and finally disappear, not to return to our heavens till 2200. The appearance of this star, accompanied as it will be by solar and lunar eclipses, together with the baneful influence that follows the positions that Mars and Saturn will occupy, will cause, the professor thinks, a universal war, floods and fearful shipwrecks. North America will be involved in civil strife, and a reign of terror will prevail in the Atlantic.

THE LAKE OF GENNESARET.

Some very curious researches of a zoological character have been made lately by M. Lortet in the Lake of Gennesaret, the Biblical Sea of Galilee. The level of the lake being some 600 or 700 feet below that of the Mediterranean, it was interesting to find out whether the present or past fauna in the lake resembled that of the larger inland sea. In this way M. Lortet hopes to show that at some far-distant period there had been a communication with the Mediterranean, which communication had been severed by geological convulsion. The greatest depth was found to be 250 meters, in the extreme north, near where the River Jordan enters into it. Strange to say, on the banks and highlands surrounding the lake the same round stones were found, showing a sea abrasion, and at that exact elevation which to-day belongs to the Mediterranean level. This shows almost conclusively that at some former period the level of the Sea of Tiberias and the Mediterranean were the same. As to there having been any communication between the two, that is a question not so easily solved. M. Lortet thinks that at one time the salinity of the lake must have equaled that of the Dead Sea. As it was, the study of this water induced the French savant to spend a long time in this region, calling on the energies of languid and indifferent boatmen. There are, according to M. Lortet, forty-two different kinds of fish in the lake, of which seven belong to the species known as Chromis. One family of this kind presented the curious trait of hatching its young in its mouth, and for that act was very appropriately named Chromis Paterfamilias. But beyond the fish ton molluska, two tortoises, a crab and a shrimp were the only living organisms. But what was remarkable was the abundance of the fish. Two castings of the net usually filled M. Lortet's boat.

The Celestial commotions now engaging the attention of astronomers in this country and in Europe, are believed to indicate that mighty changes are in progress, not only in the planetary orbs but in the sun itself. The spots on the sun's surface observed two months ago now cover two-thirds of its diameter.

[illegible] closely resembles [illegible] Jupiter there are also evidences of unwonted activity. An eminent astronomer says: "Beneath the apparently quiescent envelop of this vast star tremendous energies are at work, causing outbursts compared with which our grandest volcanic eruptions are utterly insignificant, and originating hurricanes which have been seen to sweep its skies for weeks with currents moving a hundred and fifty miles an hour." The New York Herald, which has attained much celebrity for the accuracy of its weather forecasts, commenting on these facts, says: "The present celestial activity should be closely watched and compared with the phenomenal weather now transpiring on our own atmosphere. The new year, if we may judge from present indications, promises to be one marked meteorological phenomena, which should be diligently investigated from every view-point, atelier and terrestrial." These remarkable phenomena are sure to be diligently investigated by scientists, but to the Christian believer they are interesting because Jesus said that among the signs which would herald his coming would be that "the powers which are in heaven would be shaken" (Mark xiii. 25).

CINCINNATI, O., Dec. 11.—The Times-Star special says nine-tenths of the business portion of Pensacola, Fla., is burned. The loss is $1,500,000. The origin of the fire is unknown. The insurance has not been ascertained.

IRELAND—THE LONDON "TIMES" CORRESPONDENT ON THE SITUATION.

LONDON, Dec. 13.—A Dublin dispatch to the Times says: It is hardly correct to say that anarchy prevails in Ireland, for there is a very distinct and potent government which is rapidly superseding the Imperial Government, and is obtaining the ascendency. It rules with an iron hand and a promptitude which enforces instant obedience. Its code is clear; its executive resolute; its machinery complete, and its action uniform. There is a government de facto, and a government de jure—the former wielding a power which is felt and feared, and the latter exhibiting only pomp, and but little reality of power. The former is a terror to well-doers; the latter no terror to evil-doers. The law of the Land League is becoming the law of the land, and while the law of the state is costly and to a large extent suspended, the new law is administered cheaply and conveniently. League courts are springing up in various places, and the people are instructed to have their disputes decided by such courts, and to go no more to sessions. The local magistrates in the west of Ireland have lately been surprised to find no cases brought before them except by police. The people have been for some time advised to take this course, but they are now beginning to act thereon. As a rule, the penalties which said courts have the power of inflicting are regarded with more dread than those imposed under the statutes. Another function of the new government, that of levying of taxes, is most effectively fulfilled. No rate assigned by law is half as promptly paid as the tax which the league imposes. Licenses to sell at fairs and in the markets are required by the new government, and their production is enforced by summary process. The only element wanting to constitute the new government a body of the country is a standing army, but the materials for one are at hand and are being fitted for use when called upon. Knowledge of this fact creates deeper alarm because with an armed and disaffected population around them the loyal subjects of the Queen in many places believe that the danger which lies beneath it is more formida-

[illegible] reports having made the astonishing discovery of a city of an extinct people, old dwellings of which extend for thirty or forty miles parallel with the Rio Grande, and about ten miles back from the river, and only about forty miles from Santa Fe. The dwellings are, in some instances, 12x20 feet in dimensions, cut in solid rock with arched ceiling, on the face of a cliff apparently inaccessible to man. The excavations were made, apparently, with implements of stone. In some of the dwellings were found fragments of materials used by the inhabitants, who long since disappeared.

A very interesting observation was made in England early in November, which seems to favor the theory that the perihelion of Jupiter not only excites unusual convulsions, both in the sun and in that planet, but produces minor but appreciable effects on our own globe. On the night of Nov. 2 Jupiter was seen to be powerfully disturbed. The great red spot and the equatorial belts glowed with unusual brilliancy, and black specks, like sun spots, dotted the equatorial regions. The next night a splendid display of the northern lights was seen in England. The bright curtains and streamers of the aurora were shaken across the northern heavens for hours, their colors shifting from white to red and green. The study of the physical influence of the planets upon each other and upon the sun is yet in its infancy, but facts are accumulating that bear directly upon this subject. There can be no more fascinating branch of investigation. It is astrology stripped of superstition.

Professor C. A. Grimmer, a Kingston (Jamaica) scientist, predicts that the star of Bethlehem, which appears every 315 years, will again be visible in "Cassiopia's chair" in 1887, and will be accompanied by a total eclipse of the sun and moon. It will be seen even by noonday, shining with a quick, flashing light the entire year, after which it will gradually decrease in brightness and finally disappear, not to return to our heavens till 2200. The appearance of this star, accompanied as it will be by solar and lunar eclipses, together with the baneful influence that follows the positions that Mars and Saturn will occupy, will cause, the professor thinks, a universal war, floods and fearful shipwrecks. North America will be involved in civil strife, and a reign of terror will prevail in the Atlantic.

THE LAKE OF GENNESARET.

Some very curious researches of a zoological character have been made lately by M. Lortet in the Lake of Gennesaret, the Biblical Sea of Galilee. The level of the lake being some 600 or 700 feet below that of the Mediterranean, it was interesting to find out whether the present or past fauna in the lake resembled that of the larger inland sea. In this way M. Lortet hopes to show that at some far-distant period there had been a communication with the Mediterranean, which communication had been severed by geological convulsion. The greatest depth was found to be 250 meters, in the extreme north, near where the River Jordan enters into it. Strange to say, on the banks and highlands surrounding the lake the same round stones were found, showing a sea abrasion, and at that exact elevation which to-day belongs to the Mediterranean level. This shows almost conclusively that at some former period the level of the Sea of Tiberias and the Mediterranean were the same. As to there having been any communication between the two, that is a question not so easily solved. M. Lortet thinks that at one time the salinity of the lake must have equaled that of the Dead Sea. As it was, the study of this water induced the French savant to spend a long time in this region, calling on the energies of languid and indifferent boatmen. There are, according to M. Lortet, forty-two different kinds of fish in the lake, of which seven belong to the species known as Chromis. One family of this kind presented the curious trait of hatching its young in its mouth, and for that act was very appropriately named Chromis Paterfamilias. But beyond the fish ton molluska, two tortoises, a crab and a shrimp were the only living organisms. But what was remarkable was the abundance of the fish. Two castings of the net usually filled M. Lortet's boat.

The Celestial commotions now engaging the attention of astronomers in this country and in Europe, are believed to indicate that mighty changes are in progress, not only in the planetary orbs but in the sun itself. The spots on the sun's surface observed two months ago now cover two-thirds of its diameter.

[illegible] closely resembles [illegible] Jupiter there are also evidences of unwonted activity. An eminent astronomer says: "Beneath the apparently quiescent envelop of this vast star tremendous energies are at work, causing outbursts compared with which our grandest volcanic eruptions are utterly insignificant, and originating hurricanes which have been seen to sweep its skies for weeks with currents moving a hundred and fifty miles an hour." The New York Herald, which has attained much celebrity for the accuracy of its weather forecasts, commenting on these facts, says: "The present celestial activity should be closely watched and compared with the phenomenal weather now transpiring on our own atmosphere. The new year, if we may judge from present indications, promises to be one marked meteorological phenomena, which should be diligently investigated from every view-point, atelier and terrestrial." These remarkable phenomena are sure to be diligently investigated by scientists, but to the Christian believer they are interesting because Jesus said that among the signs which would herald his coming would be that "the powers which are in heaven would be shaken" (Mark xiii. 25).

LETTER DRAWER.

Editor Restitution:—I send you the following information: Concluding it would interest your many readers to hear that a debate had been arranged to take place (the Lord willing) at Germantown, Bethel, Frederick county, Md., commencing on Friday night, January 7, 1881, on four propositions, between Elder Palmer, of the Church of God, (Winebrennarian,) and Elder Wells, of the "Church of God in Christ Jesus." The first proposition Elder Wells affirms to-wit: That feet-washing is a Jewish custom and should not be practiced in the Church of God; the other three propositions Elder Palmer affirms to-wit: "That the spirit of man has a living, conscious existence after the death of the body." "That baptism in the name of the Father, Son, and of the Holy Ghost, is the only authorized formula of Christian baptism." "That the punishment of the wicked is eternal, conscious suffering." You are cordially invited. It is about two miles from Blue Ridge Station, on Western Maryland Railroad.

Respectfully submitted,
HENRY BATTERICH.
Baltimore, Md.

Editor Restitution:—At the conclusion of my sermon to-day, I told the audience that I had a little book to sell, entitled "Christ's Kingdom,"—"Where is It?"—"What is It?" by J. Laclar, and all were taken and the money paid, all by seekers after Truth. Now, I would recommend to the brethren everywhere, send and get a supply, and, at the conclusion of a sermon, offer them for sale; for they will not be prized by them unless they pay for them, and in this way you will lose nothing, but you will do a large amount of good in enlightening your fellow-men on God's word. Send at once, as the long winter nights are the time to read and study in. People will read in the winter that are too busy in the summer season. The time is short; the Judge is at the door; let us be faithful stewards. Ask people also to subscribe for THE RESTITUTION at the conclusion of each meeting. There are men who are then interested, and while they are hungering after more knowledge, will subscribe for a paper if asked when they are interested.

J. S. LAWYER.
Burlington Junction, Mo.

Editor Restitution:—It seems hard to get subscribers for a good paper in these degenerate times, the best way to get people to take THE RESTITUTION is, first to awake an interest in their minds concerning the kingdom of God. We must go with the Bible in hand, being able to give to every one a reason for our hope, not only doing our duty before God, but will become a blessing to those who are in ignorance and darkness, blinded by the traditions of men. We must not be selfish and hide our light, for it is a free gift from God to all who will come into it; therefore we who have the light ought to become God's reflectors, that through word or deed we attract others to buy oil for themselves. We should cry aloud continually, penetrating the darkness and superstition that surrounds us. Oh let every one unfurl the banner of truth, and set up a light that cannot be hidden, there is a work for all to do, will we do it? are we not God's servants? if we do not work for him will he reward us? God has said "I will have my house full." May we not hasten the day of the Lord! Are we all praying "Thy kingdom come," or "Not yet Lord" by our actions if not in words? God help us all to be faithful servants and workers in his vineyard. The church in Stockton is small but steadily increasing in numbers. We meet every first day for worship and Bible investigation. Last Sunday we had the pleasure of hearing Bro. B. Wilson expound the word. Bro. W. and wife spent four days with us, and in that time he gave us four discourses, greatly benefitting and invigorating the little body here. Tuesday morning just before his departure, he aided two intelligent persons to put on Christ by baptism, Bro. B. Boat and Sister Bowden. May God bless and keep our dear Bro. Wilson until the work of ingathering be done, that he, with all who love his appearing, may behold the King in his beauty and share this glory without seeing death. Yours in hope of that bright day,

L. J. KIDWELL.
Stockton, Cal.

BREVITIES.

[Cleveland Leader.]

[illegible] AN EXTINCT PEOPLE.

[illegible]

[illegible]tions of the govern[illegible], and the arrival of the First Battalion of Coldstream Guards, and an order for two more regiments of troops indicate that the authorities possess a consciousness of impending danger.

MARRIED.

MILLER—BERKLITE. At the residence of Brother Daniel Berklite, in Frederick Co., Md. Nov. 18, 1880, by N. J. Morgan, Brother A. J. Miller, of Wilmington, Va., and Sister Emma Berklite, of Frederick co., Md.

Now may they both in union dear,
Be helpmeets for each other here;
And in that happy age to come,
Receive that blessed word—well done.

S. F. M.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

My address is Room 66, Major Block, Chicago, Ill.
JOEL A. SIMONDS.

I will be at Antioch, Marshall co., Ind., the first Sunday in Jan. 1881, at 11 o'clock a. m., and give a series of lectures on the plan of the ages, or the vindication of the true character of God.
JOHN FOORE.

SECOND EDITION.

THE GOSPEL OF THE KINGDOM

Advocated in a Series of

TEN DISCOURSES,

—BY—

WILEY JONES.

This book is elegantly printed and bound by Lippincott & Co., stereotype, good paper, 272 pages. Sent by mail at the following prices: Plain cloth binding $1 00; cloth gilt edge $1.50; leather marbled edge $1.50. To obtain this valuable work, send the price by Postoffice order or registered letter to
WILEY JONES.
Norfolk, Va.

POETRY.

[Review and Herald.]

My Pilot.

The late Henry Alford, Dean of Canterbury, is better known by his Commentary on the Greek Testament than by his poems; and yet there are few sweeter strains of poetry than his poetic writings afford. He was a devout Christian, and they tenderly express his religious experiences; and as his physical constitution was frail, and his life was a continued struggle with disease, they are likewise pervaded by a peculiarness which harmonizes with the feelings of the many sufferers who come under the significant denomination of "broken reeds." As an illustration of the truth of this remark, take the following little poem from his pen, in which mourners have found sympathy and consolation:

I know not if or dark or light
Shall be my lot;
If that wherein my hopes delight
Be best or not.

It may be mine to drag for years
Pain's heavy chain;
Or day and night my meat be tears
On bed of pain.

Dear faces may surround my hearth
With smiles and glee;
Or I may dwell alone, and mirth
Be strange to me.

My bark is wafted from the strand
By breath divine,
And on the helm there rests a hand
Other than mine.

One who has known in storms to sail
I have on board;
Above the raging of the gale,
I hear my Lord.

He holds me when the billows smite,
I shall not fall;
If sharp, 'tis short; if long, 'tis light;
He tempers all.

Safe to the land, safe to the land!
The end is this;
And then with Him go hand in hand
Far into bliss.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Is the Seventh Day Sabbath Binding During the Christian Dispensation?

J. M. STEPHENSON.

And he said unto them, the Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath. Mark ii. 27, 28.

Sabbatarians argue that when the noun man is not qualified or limited it must be understood in an unlimited sense, denoting the whole race. The noun man is frequently used in an unlimited sense to denote a specific class of men. It is thus used in reference to the twelve tribes of Israel to whom the Sabbath was given.

We read, "And it came to pass, when ye heard the voice out of the darkness (for the mountain did burn with fire) that ye come near unto me even all the heads of your tribes, [illegible] And ye said, behold [illegible] God doth talk with man, and he liveth." Deut. v. 23, 24. David referring to Israel as a nation said, "Man did eat angel's food." Ps. lxxviii. 25. Here again the unlimited noun man refers exclusively to the children of Israel, for whom alone the Sabbath was made.

Again it is affirmed that the Sabbath was made for man in contradistinction to all creation below him. So were the annual Sabbaths, the Passover, and all the ordinances of the whole Mosaical system made for man; but were they for this reason designed to be perpetual through all dispensations?

The asseveration that the Sabbath was made for man at creation, assumes the point to be proven, and therefore begs the question at issue. They assume that the word sanctify signifies to set apart for religious use; and God could not have set the seventh day apart for his own, therefore it was set apart for the use of man.

There is not a particle of evidence in Gen. ii. 1-3, that God designed the Sabbath for man. No reference is made to man in all God said about the Sabbath at creation. We should not be left to guess at, or infer, in reference to a capital law to which all men in all ages are held amenable and around which shall finally and forever turn, the everlasting destiny of all responsible men, living and dead. Such a law, or institution, ought not to be solgmatical.

The only reason God gave for blessing and sanctifying the seventh day is clearly expressed in Gen. ii 3. It reads; "And God blessed the seventh day and sanctified it; because that in it he had rested from all his work which God created and made. The same reason is given for blessing and sanctifying the seventh day, in the fourth commandment, twenty hundred years subsequently. We read; "For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day; (for this reason) the Lord blessed the Sabbath day and hallowed it." Ex. xx. 11. According to both these records the only reason mentioned why God blessed and sanctified the seventh day was because he had rested that day, not because he designed man to rest. God made it his Sabbath by resting that day. It was his Sabbath before he rested. God made the seventh day man's Sabbath by commanding man to rest, then man made the seventh day his Sabbath.

Until there was a precept there was no obligation resting upon man to sabbatize; "for where there is no law there is no transgression." Rom. iv, 15; v. 13. There was no law or precept for twenty-five hundred years subsequent to God's having rested on the seventh; therefore during these centuries man was under no obligation to sabbatize.

Can it be possible that during twenty-five hundred years every man should voluntarily observe the seventh day as holy time, without having any commandment to sabbatize or warning against Sabbath breaking, or reproof for having broken the Sabbath? Would not the many servants and numerous flocks and herds of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, be in danger of violating the Sabbath every week? Would these servants need no commandments to rest every seventh day, they and their flocks and herds according to the fourth commandment, if it was binding, as Sabbatarians vainly argue?

These good old patriarchs were under sentence of death, if they or their servants, their flocks or herds did not keep that day inviolate—that is if the fourth commandment had been binding. Such great jeopardy and yet no commandment, warning or reproof! It is too unreasonable to believe. But it is claimed that after the children of Israel had passed over the Red Sea, God proved them to see whether they would voluntarily make preparation to keep the Sabbath after receiving a commandment to gather a certain rate of manna every day; and that the people, without any commandment from Moses or their officers made preparations on the sixth day to keep the seventh day as a holy day, thus demonstrating that they had been in the habit of keeping the seventh day from time immemorial. They seldom, if ever, read the fifth verse of the 16th chapter. If they did they would find as positive a commandment to gather twice as much the sixth day, as to gather a certain rate every day previously.

The rulers informed Moses that the people had done as he had commanded them, in gathering twice as much manna the sixth day. If they had been in the habit of preparing for the Sabbath every sixth day, would not the rulers have under[illegible] well [illegible] twice as much the sixth day. Like faithful officers, the rulers came and informed Moses that the people had done as he had commanded them; and also to receive further orders to communicate to them, which Moses promptly gave. "And he said unto them, this is that which the Lord hath said; to-morrow is the rest of the holy Sabbath: bake that which you will bake to-day, and seethe that you will seethe; and that which remaineth over, lay up for you to keep until the morning. Six days ye shall gather it; but on the seventh day, which is the Sabbath, in it there shall be none. And it came to pass that there went out some of the people on the seventh day, and they found none. And the Lord said unto Moses, how long refuse ye to keep my commandments and my laws? See for that the Lord hath given you the Sabbath, therefore he giveth you on the sixth day the bread of two days: abide every man in his place, let no man go out of his place the seventh day." Ex. xvi. 4, 5, 16, 22, 23 27-30.

Please observe the reason why God gave the children of Israel twice as much manna on the sixth day. "See said he for that the Lord hath given you the Sabbath, therefore, (for this reason,) he hath given you twice as much the sixth day." How would it sound to say, for "see that the Lord hath given Adam the Sabbath; therefore he hath given you twice as much manna the sixth day?" It would have been a singular reason for giving Israel the Sabbath, because he had given it to somebody else twenty-five hundred years before.

2 The foregoing reveals the first commandment, or intimation that God purposed that any human being should Sabbatize. This brings me to notice the only reason why God ever commanded man to observe a weekly Sabbath. In rehearsing the commandments which were uttered forty years before Moses said; "And remember that thou wast a servant in the land of Egypt, and that the Lord thy God brought thee out thence through a mighty hand and by a stretched out arm; therefore the Lord thy God commanded thee to keep the Sabbath day." Deut. v. 15.

The only reason why God gave the annual and weekly Sabbaths and all the commandments, was because he had brought them out of the land of Egypt. See Deut. v. 3. At the 15th verse we find given as a specific reason for the giving the fourth commandment, the fact that God had delivered them from Egyptian bondage. Of course the reason for giving the Sabbath must have preceded the commandment to keep the Sabbath. All thus far is plain and straight forward. Failing to see or heed the difference between the reason why God commanded Israel to observe a weekly Sabbath at all, and the reason why he commanded them to observe the seventh day in preference to any of the previous six days, has caused a great mistake. The reason why they should observe a weekly Sabbath at all was because they had been delivered from Egyptian bondage; but the reason why they were required to rest on the seventh day instead of any other day of the week was the fact that God had rested the seventh day. It was this fact that made the seventh day more memorable than any other day of the week.

God commanded them to work six days and rest the seventh. "For in six days the Lord made heaven and earth * * and rested the seventh day; wherefore (for this reason) the Lord blessed the seventh day and hallowed it." Ex. xx. 11. The reason given in the foregoing for man resting the seventh day in contradistinction to the other six days, is the fact that God rested that day, and the only reason given why he blessed and hallowed the seventh day is because he had rested that day, not because he designed man to rest that day. According to the immutable testimony going before, no people ever were commanded to observe any weekly Sabbath, except the Israelites, and they not until they had been delivered from Egyptian bondage.

According to the Sabbath law, Gentiles residing in Palestine were only required to rest on the Sabbath, on the same principle the horses and cattle were required to rest, to-wit; because they were within the jurisdiction of Israelites: See Ex. xx. 9, 10.

That the Sabbath was exclusively Israelitish is further evident from Exodus xxxi. 12, 13, 16, 17. "And the Lord spake unto Moses saying, speak thou also unto the children of Israel, saying verily my Sabbaths ye shall keep; for it is a sign between me and you; throughout your generations; that ye may know that I am the Lord that doth sanctify you. Wherefore [illegible] throughout their generations, for a perpetual covenant. It is a sign between me and the children of Israel forever." Thus, the Sabbath was made for man and limited to the twelve tribes of Israel throughout their generations. It never was binding upon Gentiles as a class or people, whether saints or sinners in any locality or dispensation, only as individual servants of Israelitish masters, the same as horses or cattle, because they were within the jurisdiction of Israelites; and even then on their masters account, not their own. Thus, during twenty-five hundred years antecedent to the deliverance of Israel from Egyptian bondage, and just previous to their organization into a nation and kingdom, with God as their head, were they required to observe any Sabbath, weekly or annual and even then for an exclusively Israelitish reason. The same is true of the Passover and all the ordinances and institutions of the Commonwealth of Israel—a reason which never has been and never can be applied to any other people, namely, because they had been brought up out of the land of Egypt, and from the house of bondage.

This same Israelitish reason is given for keeping the ten commandments and more especially for keeping the fourth commandment.

During twenty-five hundred years before Israel existed as a nation and during eighteen hundred years since they ceased to be a nation, no Sabbath has been enforced by precept or example. As before shown, no precept or reference to a Sabbath for man, is recorded in all God's dealings with the patriarchs before and after the flood or during their sojourn in Egypt; nor is there any example, warning or commandment against Sabbath breaking or precept to keep a Sabbath until they reached the wilderness Sin; and then it was given exclusively to Israel. We read; "See for that the Lord hath given you (Israel) the Sabbath, therefore he giveth you (Israel) on the sixth day the bread of two days. But no sooner was the Sabbath instituted than we find it interwoven with every institution of the whole Mosaical system.

In all the teachings of Christ and his twelve legates there is no precept for Jew or Gentile to sabbatize—reproof for Sabbath breaking, or warning against the danger of Sabbath breaking.

Obedience.

In Biblical biography let us endeavor to find what is the characteristic in moral character and conduct which receives the approval of God. What is it which, when present in character, is its preserving salt—the thing which makes all pure and acceptable in God's sight. We see that God does not deny his approval to men for many faults which they possess, nor even in the face of great sins which they commit. We see that the guilty, but repentant, David is accepted; that the erratic Samson is put in the list of men of faith by New Testament authority; while the poetic prophet Balaam, the man who declared he could not go one step to the right or left except as God bid him, was accursed and utterly rejected.

The one essential thing, the great lesson of Old Testament biography, is this: The thing pleasing to God is the purpose, the habit of absolute obedience to God—the will surrendered to God's will.

Let us follow this clew through all the characters of Biblical biography, and we shall find it a silver line running all through the Bible.

Saul had many very amiable characteristics; but he was disobedient. His will was not subjected to God's will, and he was rejected. He had no purpose to do punctually what God bade. David's sin and guilt were great; but his penitence was profound, and his spirit of obedience was perfect. Abraham erred; but he bent his will to God's will. Throughout the history of the kings of Israel and Judah, the disobedient Jeroboams and Ahabs are in sharp contrast to the obedient, although imperfect, Hezekiahs and Josiahs. The prominence given in the Bible to the habit and spirit of obedience, even as compared with mere faith, is very noteworthy. The faith of Noah is less signal than that implicit obedience to God's command which, in the face of the scorn and contempt of his generation, pursued the steady work God had appointed for a hundred and twenty years. He might have believed, and yet failed to obey. His faith uncoupled with obedience, would but have opened his eyes to the impending destruction, while the eyes of others were closed, but would not have saved him. By faith says the record in the epistle to the Hebrews, he prepared an ark; he showed his faith by obedience. And of Abraham it is expressly said that, when called to leave his home and kindred, he obeyed. So in that most remarkable instance of his faith in the scene on Mount Moriah, the obedience is more conspicuous than the faith, or, if you please, it is faith translated into the act of obedience, where the odds were that he would believe, and then heart and hands faint and fall on the threshold of the act.

Knowing, as we do, that God upholds and will help, even to its final salvation, every believing soul, we have the assurance that all true faith will develop in obedience; but on the part of the believer himself the problem is to translate faith into an obedient life. Considered on the side of our own human will and responsibility,—and this most nearly concerns us,—if we weigh Christ's own declaration, that "he that endureth to the end shall be saved;" if we consider that the test he gave for the sincerity of the love, not merely the faith, of his own disciples was their obedience,—"if ye love me, keep my commandments," we may well doubt the quality of our faith till it has been tested—till it has shown itself fruitful in obedience.

Faith, just because it is an internal and personal act, is incapable of being effectively tested except by the Omniscient; but the habit of punctual obedience to God, when such obedience squarely traverses our own wishes, our natural desires, tastes, and habits, interferes with our business, deranges our plans, and, in fine, makes it needful to reconstruct our whole manner of living,—such obedience fairly tests faith, as the dre tries silver. Christ put himself under the conditions of a man in his earthly life, made himself subject to the divine law; and the most conspicuous thing in that earthly life of his was his absolute and perfect obedience to God. How often he repeats it, that he is here on earth to do the Father's will. Obedience was the law of his human life. His obedience it was that led him, in the face of a present and coming agony before which his human soul fainted, and his body sweat blood, when he cried out, "If it be possible, let this cup pass from me," to add, "not my will, but thine, be done;" and then, in that supreme moment, it was the fixed, set purpose of his soul to do the work appointed, though it rent his soul,—to obey, though obedience were death,—which completed the possibility and the fact of our salvation.—Bibliotheca Sacra.

DIED.

November 20, 1880, Miss Harriet Hayes, aged 87, of Coldyard near Warrington, England.

H. HEYES.

At Grand Rapids, Mich., November 26, 1880, Sister Lovica Steele, widow of the late Br. James Steele, aged 70 years.

She had a very large tumor removed the day before, which had for two years threatened early death. Her funeral was attended from her home at Fruitport, by a large company of relatives and friends, to whom the writer spoke words of comfort and hope from John xi. 24. Brother and Sister Steele leave behind them many precious recollections, many very dear friends to mourn their loss, and four sons, bereaved, (three widely.) Yet we instructed, so inspired, so blessed with their faithful letters, examples and prayers, that their Christian spirit in their works will live and grow in them and by their fidelity.

O. R. L. CROZIER.

At the residence of her brother, John Gordon, near Argos, Ind., Sister Peachy Fox, aged 63 years. Funeral from Rev. xiv, 13, by ELDER H. S. BARNHILL.

At his residence, in Marshalltown, Ill. Nov. 29, Brother Peter Wright, of a disease of long standing, supposed to be due to taking cold with the measles, some twenty years ago.

Deceased was 65 years of age, and had been a firm believer in the Gospel of the Kingdom eight or nine years. He had formerly belonged to the Baptists, then for a number of years with the Disciples. At length the glorious light of the Gospel dawned upon him. He age by because obedient to the faith, and together with his wife, was baptized into the Christ by Brother Hatch, since which he has been an earnest advocate of gospel truth, speaking publicly, when his health would permit. He zealously opposed the errors of popular theology, especially the heathen dogma of inherent immortality, or conscious existence in death teaching that future life is the gift of God through Jesus Christ, fulfilled at the resurrection of the dead. Believing that the coming of the Lord was nigh, deceased expressed to the writer a year or two since his desire to be permitted to continue unto that event; but latterly anticipating his speedy dissolution, he seemed resigned to the will of him that worketh all things well, knowing that whether we wake or sleep we shall be caught up together, to meet the Lord at his coming, and we shall we ever be with the Lord.

L. W. NORRIS.

Martinsville, Ill.

Notice.

If there is among the brethren, a blacksmith, to believe wanting a situation, with or without tools, address,

F. G. WILLIAMS,
Bonita, Johnson Co., Neb.

LETTER RECEIPTS.

SUBSCRIPTIONS.

J Mesimore	1 00	JCooper	1 00
HDon	2 00	MrsLSlater	2 00
J Verdin	1 00	HezJBush	3 00
MrsUFreeman	2 00	JPerkins	2 00
MJMansfield	50	JWeisberger	1 00
BSayrelds	1 00	JSlauk	2 00
JHSteven	2 00	Mrs[illegible]Jones	2 00
JohnShuff	1 00	JCStone	2 50
CAMrich	1 00	FMSmith	1 00
PdWilliams	2 00	HAHaskin	2 00
JASimonds	2 00	NMorton	1 00
MsBoyd	50	EJKimball	4 00
BFRenner	4 00	TAFowler	2 00
LRhinson	2 00	JHDouglas	1 00
JuliaARockefeller	1 00	Allenton	2 00
BHHeere	1 00	DrJRhsworth	2 00
JHHatch	2 00	AThorpe	2 00
EunieJudson	2 00	JHHolsey	1 00
MrsWHunt	2 00	JSPrine	1 00
NDBaxter	1 00	CThase	2 00
BFThompson	2 00	PSackett	2 00
EtCook	25	HarriotCovey	1 00
HJarlfager	2 00	PHatch	1 00
CarrieWilliams	1 00	MSouthwick	2 00

BOOKS AND TRACTS

JHeasdance	50	LHenley	1 25
ADRowden	1 50	JPerkins	1 00
ASNewart	5 00	MrsLMolestone	20
LDHatfield	1 00	JWebbenger	1 00
Martha Shaw	25	MrsBStone	25
MrsHFreeman	50	ANeyenswe	10
JHCastle	30	LRichards	25
MHurphy	1 00	PScoville	1 00
MJMandeburg	50	JWTyler	50
WDHatch	10	WRRogers	10
JAWilson	50	JSLancer	1 00
JHHatch	50

RESTITUTION FUND.

Amount published previous to this	$167 19
WBBurns	5 00
"A Friend"	10 00
Mrs PZeiker	2 00
ALBaker	1 00
CThase	2 00

THE SUN FOR 1881.

Everybody reads THE SUN. In the columns of this newspaper throughout the year to come every body will find:

I. All the world's news, as presented that the reader will get the greatest amount of information with the least unprofitable expenditure of time and eyesight. THE SUN long ago discovered the golden mean between redundant fulness and unsatisfactory brevity.

II. Much of the best of news which depends less upon its recognized importance than upon its interest to mankind. From nearly to morning THE SUN prints a continued story of the lives of real men and women, and of their deeds, plans, loves, hates, and troubles. The story is more varied and more interesting than any romance that was ever devised.

III. Good writing in every column, and freshness, originality, accuracy, and decorum in the treatment of every subject.

IV. Honest comment. THE SUN's habit is to speak out fearlessly at men and things.

V. Equal candor in dealing with each political party, and equal readiness to commend what is praiseworthy or to rebuke what is blamable in Democrat or Republican.

VI. Absolute independence of partisan organizations, but unwavering loyalty to true Democratic principles. THE SUN believes that the Government which the Constitution gives us is a good one to keep.

Our terms are as follows:

For the DAILY SUN, a four-page sheet of twenty-eight columns, the price by mail, postpaid, is 55 cents a month, or $6.30 a year; or, including the Sunday paper, an eight-page sheet of fifty-six columns, the price is 65 cents a month, or $7.70 a year, postage paid.

The Sunday edition of THE SUN is also furnished separately at $1.20 a year, postage paid.

The price of the WEEKLY SUN, eight pages, fifty-six columns, is $1 a year, postage paid. For clubs of ten sending $10 we will send an extra copy free.

Address I. W. ENGLAND,
Publisher of THE SUN, New York City.

de 8.6

Something New!

GOD ESTABLISHED,

—AND—

The Bible Vindicated!

—BY—

A. J. EYCHANER.

The above is the title of a new tract, just out, and should be placed in the hands of every infidel in the land. Those who live in infidel neighborhoods will do well to get this work, as it will aid you in contesting this enemy. 20 pages. Price 5c each; 10 for 50c, or 20 for $1. Send to this office for it.

PICTORIAL DESCRIPTION

OF THE

Tabernacle in the Wilderness

ITS RITES AND CEREMONIES.

By the Late JOHN D. LWORTH.

32 Pages, Price 10c. For Sale at this Office.

BOOK LIST.

The following publications are kept constantly on hand and will be sent postpaid to any address in the United States and Canada, upon receipt of published price. Address all orders to

THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Ind.

The Psalmodist. A book of 343 hymns suited to all occasions. Cloth, 40c; leather, plain, 50c; leather, gilt, 60c.

Bible Pearls. Suitable for wide distribution: No 1. The Gospel. 2. The Coming and Kingdom of Christ, by 8,000 Baptists, in 1880. 3. Immortality. 4. The Kingdom of God. 5. Nature of Man and Thoughts for Thinkers. 6. The Two Advents. 7. What is Religion. 8. The Restitution Age. 9. Destiny of the Wicked. 10. Baptism. Ten copies, or 10 assorted packages of 100, 50c.

FOUR PAGE TRACTS.

25 for 20c; 50 for 35c; 100 for 60c.

The Scent of Man in Death. Contains an abundance of proof-texts.

Life and Death. A concise statement and consideration of the two creeds of three terms, to-wit: the theological and Bible one.

Human Government a Failure. By A. B. Maguder.

Resurrection. By Austin Curtis. A careful examination of the query—"If a man die, shall he live again?" Job xiv. 14.

Is it True? By H. V. Reed. An examination of testimony as to the real facts of salvation.

What is Death? By H. V. Reed. An excellent contrast of the Bible teaching and modern theory. Should have a wide circulation.

The Parrotted Parables. The Rich Man and Lazarus, by W. Lalor.

EIGHT PAGE TRACTS.

Per hundred, at $5 for 60c.

Is it Essential to Believe in the Kingship of Jesus? By Benj. Wilson.

Signs of the Times. By Horatio Bonar, of Scotland.

The Scattering and Gathering. By H. V. Reed. Contemplates the future threefold gathering of the Saints, Israel and the Nations. Is timely.

TWELVE PAGE TRACTS.

3c. each; 25c per dozen.

Christian Union. By Joel A. Simonds.

Resurrection and the Kingdom of God. By E Floyd. Well suited to inquiring minds.

Immortality Brought to Light. The grand reality of redemption. By J. B. Cook.

SIXTEEN PAGE TRACTS.

Five cents each; 12 for 50c; 25 for $1.

The New Birth. By Joseph Pace.

The Hope for the World. By Joel A. Simonds.

The Kingdom of Messiah. By Joseph Seim, D. D. Set forth in beautiful language and apt Bible quotations.

Which is Right? By T. Wilson. Showing the Bible teaching on the question as to whether Christ's Kingdom is to be on the earth or in heaven.

The Seed of Abraham. By Joel A. Simonds. The promise made to Abraham, renewed to Isaac and Jacob, and so frequently referred to by Prophets and Apostles.

The King is His Beauty. By H. V. Reed. Just the thing for circulate every where.

TWENTY-FOUR PAGE TRACTS.

Seven cents each; 6 for 40c; 10 for $1.

Der Bucupitzer der Bocker Gehe. Teaches the transmigration of God's Kingdom.

Will the Earth be Burned Up? By T. Wilson. An argument from the Scriptures, showing that the earth will not be annihilated, as many suppose, but will be the everlasting inheritance of the saints.

Witchcraft Unveiled; or, the Voice of God Against Spiritualism. By H. V. Reed. Cannot be too widely circulated.

The Scriptures. By Joel A. Simonds.

THIRTY-TWO-PAGE TRACTS.

Ten cents each; 12 for $1.

Exposition concerning the reign of Christ over Israel and the Nations, or a brief statement of the things concerning the Kingdom of God and the Name of Jesus Christ. By Wiley Jones.

The Restitution: or the World restored to its Primeval State, and this to be its everlasting condition. By E. Miller. A careful and satisfactory examination of Acts iii. 21.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS.

The Rich Man and Lazarus. By Thomas Wilson. The exposition throughout is in harmony with Bible teaching. Thirty-six pages, price 10c.

Primitive Christian Faith. Being a concise history of the Primitive Christian Faith, of the Gospel as held by the Apostolic and Primitive Fathers, in small compass; a tract of fifty pages, by C. F. Sweet, of Alden, N. Y. Price 15 cents.

Bible Echo. Vol. I. May to Dec. 1876. A most valuable English weekly, edited by W. Kelloway. Contains important papers and discussions on vital matters. Not now published. 7 volumes. Originally $3.15, now offered at $2.

Bible Echo. Vol. II. January to June, 1878. 7 volumes, formerly $1.50, now $1.

Bible Echo. Vol. III. July to September, 1879, 3 volumes. Completes the Bible Echo as a weekly. Former price $1.50, now 75 cents.

The Bible Advocate by the most irrefutable evidence relating to the authenticity and credibility of the Holy Scriptures. By W. H. Wilson. Just the thing for General Circulation, as it meets and exposes in a clear, emphatic manner the infidel modes of the day, and is a plain defence of the Bible, 64 pp. Price 5 cents.

The Doctrine of Immortality. By James H. Whitmore. 200 pages. 30 cents postpaid. Everybody should have it.

The Doctrine of Baptism as taught in the Holy Scriptures, together with a collection of evidence upon this subject, from the most learned theologians, critics, lexicographers and ecclesiastical historians 64 pages, on heavy paper price 20 cents.

New Testament on all Subjects. A book indispensable to everybody. 328 pp. Cloth bound. Worth 50 cents. Sent postpaid for 40 cents. Only 45 copies.

Future Punishment. Its nature and duration. By Henry Constable, Prebendary of Cork. 290 pp. Exactly the book for the times. Cloth $1.25.

The Destiny of Russia, as foretold by God's Prophets, together with an outline of the future movements and destiny of England, Germany, Persia, Africa, and the Jews. Contains a map of England and Asia. A work invaluable to every student of prophecy, and of intense present interest. 118 pages, cloth, 75c.

The Rich Man and Lazarus. By C. F. Sweet. 1876. 64 pp, price 15c. A careful unfolding of Luke xv, and xvi., with an examination of Luke xix. and xxiii.

God's Plan of Salvation. By J. M. Stephenson. Over three hundred pp. For a long time our brethren have desired a work which would embody the leading points and arguments of our faith and hope. Brother Stephenson's book is a large, comprehensive and able statement of the leading phases of Bible theology. Our brethren will find this just the thing to read and circulate. The nature of man, the kingdom of God, and the obedience of faith, are ably and clearly set forth. Cloth binding $1.

New English Books.

Bible Triumphant. By Mrs. H. V. Reed. Paper 50c. A reply to "the self-contradictions of the Bible." By A. J. Davis. An able refutation of Infidel charges.

Hades, or the Intermediate State of the Dead. By Henry Constable, A. M. Cloth, $1.25. Presents the Bible doctrine of the state of man between death and the resurrection.

Discussion on the State of the Dead, between the Rev. E. C. Bradnan, Congregational minister, and W. Kelloway, editor of Bible Echo, and minister of the Gospel. Both of England. The propositions discussed were: 1. That the dead exist in a living, conscious state after their decease. Affirmed by W. C. B. 2. That the Scriptures teach that man in death are wholly unconscious, insensible, and unable to perform any act whatever; and that they rest in darkness, silence and the dust. Cloth, 60c; paper, 40c.

THE NEW TESTAMENT IN GREEK AND ENGLISH, ENTITLED THE

EMPHATIC DIAGLOTT,

Containing the original Greek text of the New Testament, with an interlinear word-for-word English translation, based on the renderings of eminent critics, and on the various readings of the Vatican Manuscripts, together with literal and explanatory foot notes, and a copious selection of references by Benjamin Wilson.

The different renderings of [illegible] passages in the New Testament are the foundations on which most of the cavils of Christians have been built up; with this work each reader may judge for himself whether the words [illegible] are so arranged in the common version as to express the exact meaning of the New Testament Writers. New improved edition on larger paper; One vol. 854 pages. Price, extra cloth, $4.00; Library Binding, $5.00 postpaid. For sale at this Office.

Address, THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth Ind.

MISTAKES of INGERSOLL,

Being a review of Col. R. G. Ingersoll's lecture entitled "Mistakes of Moses,"

By J. M. STEPHENSON.

This is a large size, 8 page tract, printed on fine tinted paper. Price 10c per copy or $1.00 per dozen

For sale at this Office.

POETRY.

Lost and Found.

In memory of Rhoda McKin, who died A. D., 1859. Selected by her husband, E. T. McKin.

I lost the brook as it wound its way
Like a thread of silver line;
Through green wood and valley, thro' meadow and fen,
'Twas hidden away from view;
But I found it again, a nobler river,
Sparkling, amid bread and tree,
Wider and larger growing ever,
Till it reached the boundless sea.

I lost the tiny seed that I sowed
With many a sigh and fear,
And vainly waited thro' sun-shine and cool
For the young green to appear;
But early after many long days
The blossom and fruit will come,
And the reapers on high the sheaves will raise,
For a joyful harvest home.

I lost the life that grew by my own
For a short sweet summer day,
And then it left me to wander alone,
And silently passed away;
But I know I shall find it further on,
Though God as it left me here,
For the shadows and ill-ts will have passed and gone,
I shall see it fair and clear.

I lost the notes of the Heavenly chime
That once came floating by,
I have listened and waited many a time
For the echo, though distantly;
But I know it shall find it further on,
Ever by day and night,
I shall hear it complete when the harmony
My soul with great delight.

I lost the love that made my life,
A love that was all for me;
Oh, vainly I sought it amid the strife
Of the stormy, raging sea,
But deeper and purer I know it waits
Beyond my wistful eyes,
I shall find it again within the gates
Of the Garden of Paradise.

I shall lose this life, it will disappear
With its wonderful mystery;
Some day it will move no longer here,
But will vanish silently;
But I know I shall find it again once more
In a beauty no song hath told;
It will meet me at the golden door
And around me forever fold.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Samuel.

The one striking characteristic of Samuel, is that described in the words —"Samuel ministered before the Lord, being a child girded with a linen ephod." His whole life was given by the dedication of his mother to serve the Lord. Such a childhood well became him, who bore before the world an unsullied manhood and a glorious old age.

The first child to bear the character of a prophet; from him we trace the commencement of a new era in Israel. He was the founder of the prophet office as a permanent institution among the Jews; and also by divine authority the founder of the kingly government.

We are told in the third chapter of Samuel that the word of the Lord was precious in those days; and that there was no open vision. Samuel came upon the scene at this time, when the spirit of prophecy had departed from Israel. It was no more as it was in the days of Moses and Deborah. And we find a parallel in these days; men care comparitively no more now for the voice of the prophets, than they were when the noble son of Hannah came, to direct and control Israel.

From the death of Eli, Samuel became the civil and ecclesiastical head of his nation. He became their statesman, their Jurist and their religious guide. He held the remarkable position as last of the Judges and first of the long line of prophets that terminated with Malachi the last representative of theocracy and the connecting link between it and the Jewish monarchy. A Levite by birth, he offered sacrifice as a priest.

When Israel was oppressed by the Philistines, they said to Samuel "cease not to cry unto the Lord our God, for us, that he will save us out of the hands of the Philistines. And Samuel took a sucking lamb, and offered it for a burnt offering wholly unto the Lord: and Samuel cried unto the Lord for Israel, and the Lord heard him.

In the administration of justice he made the annual circuit between Bethel, Mizpah, Gilgal and Ramah; oftentimes working miracles for the salvation of his people, and the vindication of the cause of Jehovah, as during the offering of the burnt sacrifice, when the Lord through the prayers of Samuel, smote the Philistines with fear and confusion in the crashing of the thunder.

But as a prophet, Samuel presents one of the grandest characters in the Bible. He was the unswerving messenger of God, whether his message was of life or death. He learnt from his youth that to serve God faithfully, is the highest and noblest aim of man. He had as an example of the folly of human ambition in the profligate Saul. He realized that God alone is true, and the rewarder of those who diligently seek him. And what more could he or any man desire than that he may be approved of God?

Samuel was the veritable Warwick of the Bible. As the interpreter of the divine will, and its executor, he set up kings and pulled down kings, yet sought no other recompense than the blessing of his God. The "Seer" as he was called in his old age, was the one all important person in Israel. He was consulted by all even on the small and trivial affairs of life. Confidence universal was reposed in him, and well did he repay that confidence This noble self-respect and conscientiousness of right, is one of the most beautiful traits of his character. What noble words are those of his recorded in the xii chapter. Not only do they speak the pure heart of Samuel, but they should be inscribed on the heart of every one who with him have consecrated their lives to the only true and living God, the creator and giver of all things. Hear them—"Turn ye not aside: for then should ye go after vain things, which cannot profit or deliver; for they are vain. For the Lord will not forsake his people, for his great namesake; because it hath pleased the Lord to make you his people. Moreover as for me God forbid that I should sin against the Lord, in ceasing to pray for you; but I will teach you the good and the right way. Only fear the Lord and serve him in truth with all your heart; for consider —(this should be the great incentive to right) how great things he hath done for you."

Again how majestically he executes the Lord's message to the disobedient Saul. Rising early in the morning to meet Saul—probably that their audience might not be disturbed; while the fleeing shadows of the night lingered with the mists in the valleys; before the sun had lit the top of Carmel with heavenly glory; we can imagine the prophets look as he listens to the false words that fall from the lips of Saul. Then, reads the Divine Record, "Samuel said unto Saul, Stay, and I will tell thee what the Lord hath said to me this night. When thou wast little in thine own sight, wast thou not made the head of the tribes of Israel, and the Lord anointed thee king over Israel?" How the words "when thou wast little in thine own sight" must have smote on the ears of the haughty and proud monarch, coming as they did from the Lord's emissary. A very striking lesson, also, this extract conveys. "The Lord anointed thee king over Israel" closes the verse. Now connect this with the first lines—"when thou wast little in thine own sight." Do we not have here embodied in different words the Savior's beautiful law—"Whosoever shall exalt himself shall be abased; and he that shall humble himself shall be exalted.

But continuing the address of Samuel to Saul, we come to the memorable passage—"Because thou hast rejected the word of the Lord, he hath also rejected thee from being king." Here let us contrast the two men thus presented to us. No characters could be more opposite. Saul as he stood before the prophet of God, with a falsehood on his lips—of magnificent personal appearance; of unquestioned physical courage; he was, by turns a despot, a fanatic, a murderer, a demon. Like a grand tower crowned by the glory of the sun, yet whose interior is the abode of misery and every vile and hideous sin, stood Saul; but like a towering mountain, bearing upon its brow the seal of God, and containing within countless treasures of pure gold, stood Samuel. One looked down on his followers and said—"I am great;" the other though tabernacling with Jehovah said by his life—"There is none great but God." 'Tis in this that the character of Samuel assumes the grandest phase of Christianity. The childlike obedience that he manifested everywhere, and sometimes under the most aggravated circumstances; the ample majesty with which he ruled in the office of Judge; all combine to make a man whom God loved to honor.

"Samuel," says Dr. Smith, "became the spiritual father of the Psalmist king." The idea is well expressed. Samuel recognized in David the "Lord's Anointed," and took especial care concerning him. A noble guardian of a noble ward. The fire of the youthful poet was tempered and made to glow in the service of God, through the venerable prophet who had learned the will of his Maker and followed it.

Samuel is presented to us in another character, besides that of prophet, that speaks his nobleness. He was an educator of his people, and established regular institutions of religious instruction.

Prophet, judge, statesman, jurist, priest, educator; such was Samuel. Well might "all the Israelites gather together and lament him." A bright light was gone out. A star that heralded the approach of a new era, and lingered awhile on its horizon, was set.

We might take this good man's life to heart. We, as did Samuel, have consecrated ourselves to God. We, like him, have announced our determination to leave after following "vain things." We, have experienced, as did he, "all the good things that the Lord has done for us." And we have the same blessed assurance that God will never forsake his people. With such consecration; with such determination, through the help of God; with such experience of his goodness, can we not say, "There is none holy as the Lord; for there is none besides thee; neither is there any rock like our God," and so shape our course that we, like Samuel, shall fall asleep lamented by the good, and accounted worthy to obtain the crown of glory that fadeth not away, when Christ our life returns.

I cannot better close this sketch, than in the words of the grand old prophet himself, when resigning all civil authority to Saul. "And Samuel said to all Israel, behold I have hearkened to your voice in all that ye have said unto me, and have made a King over you. And now behold, the King walketh before you; and I am old and grey headed; and, behold, my sons are with you; and I have walked before you from my childhood to this day. Behold here I am; witness against me before the Lord, and before his anointed; whose ox have I taken? Or whose ass have I taken? Or whom have I defrauded? Whom have I oppressed? Or of whose hand have I received my bribe to blind my eyes therewith, and I will restore it. And they said, thou hast not defrauded us, nor oppressed us, neither hast thou taken aught of any man's hand. And he said unto them, the Lord is witness against you, and his anointed is witness against you this day that ye have not found aught in my hand. And they answered, he is witness."

Glorious close of a useful career! Sublime old man! With no consciousness of having wronged his fellow man, he could go to death "sustained and soothed—by an unfaltering trust, —like one who draws the drapery of his couch about him, and lies down to pleasant dreams."

W. L. CROCKETT.

[New York Observer.]

The Sea of Galilee.

As the sun arose above the beautiful ridge of Carmel we were in our saddles, and leaving Nazareth, where we had passed a most interesting Sabbath, we continued our march over an undulating country enamelled with wild flowers of great beauty. In about an hour we came to Cana of Galilee, now only a small village, where at a marriage feast our Lord performed his first miracle. Shortly after leaving this place we passed through the field where, according to tradition, the disciples plucked the ears of corn upon the Sabbath day. Further on, my brother pointed out a hill supposed to be the Mount of Beatitudes, from which our Savior preached his wonderful sermon of wisdom and love. Here, too, on that long, dry ridge, July 5th, 1187, the great battle of Hattin was fought. In this conflict the mighty Sultan Saladin, leader of the Saracens, completely overthrew the army of the Crusaders under Guy de Lusignan, the last Christian king who ruled in Jerusalem. Proceeding onward up a gentle rising ground for a short distance, we came suddenly upon a view, one of the most striking in the Holy Land.

Dismounting, we headed over the horses to our dragoman, and directing him to lead the animals away, we sat down to gaze long and intently upon scenes which revive in the heart of the Christian many hallowed memories. A thousand feet below us, with no sail upon its surface and scarcely a sign of life upon its shores, lay in calm repose the dark blue waters of Galilee. Beneath us, on the shores of the lake, at the distance of about a mile, is the city of Tiberias. Across the lake, on the eastern side, rise the steep and wild shores of Gadara, mounting higher and higher, until at the height of 2,000 feet they terminate in the mountains of the Hauran. Beyond and hid from view by these high ridges, is the boundless desert stretching off toward Bagdad. Far away to the right, in the country beyond the Jordan, rise the mountains of Moab, on a spur of which Moses must have stood when he viewed the Promised Land. Turning to the left, our eyes easily discern at the distance of about forty miles (so clear is the atmosphere), Mt. Hermon towering grand and majestic, its hoary head covered with eternal snow. Directly to the north, perched on a high hill, is Safed, that city which cannot be hid—the mystic city of the future. All about us is a region of country deeply interesting as the land where first were preached the glad tidings of salvation and where were performed the miracles of our Lord. These hills now uninhabited have echoed his voice, these scenes now desolate once lay before his eyes, these waters now deserted were blessed by his feet, and these cities now in ruins have witnessed his triumphs.

Calling for our horses, we mount and slowly wind down the hill toward Tiberias. This city, chiefly inhabited by Jews, is a disgustingly filthy place. A Moslem tradition is responsible for the saying that the "King of the Fleas holds his court in Tiberias." The town, named by Herod after the Roman Emperor, was nearly destroyed by an earthquake in 1837, and to-day, in its present state, Tiberias is only a little better than a dirty ruin. The houses are built of uncemented stones, are mostly one story high, and have the universal flat roofs. The four holy cities of the Jews are Tiberias, Safed, Hebron, and Jerusalem; but many hold the former in special veneration as the home of Jacob and the place to which Christ will first direct his steps on his arising out of the lake at his second coming. To the south, a little way from the city, are the hot baths of Emmaus, built by Ibrahim Pacha when Syria was governed by the Egyptians. The water is salt, bitter and somewhat sulphurous, and is much used by rheumatic people, who take the baths during the summer season. The temperature is 143 deg. Fahrenheit, almost unbearable.

You obtain a fine view of the lake from this point, and according to the best authority it is about twelve miles long and six broad, with a depth of 165 feet. The surface of the water is 653 feet below the Mediterranean. The inhabitants believe that the waters, which are cool and sweet, possess some medicinal qualities. From Tiberias we follow the western shore nearly north, and in a little while pass Mejdel —the ancient Magdala and the birthplace of Mary Magdalen, to which our Savior once came. We are approaching, nearer yet nearer, to the cities where Christ performed his greatest miracles. The lake was here margined with the beautiful oleander—at this season in full flower.

"All thro' the summer night
Those blossoms, red and bright,
Spread their soft breasts."

Ducks and other wild birds could be seen skimming the surface of the lake. Soon we descry our camp in the near distance, and galloping up to it, we find that our tents are pitched very near the supposed site of ancient Capernaum.

What a strange charm there is in this nomadic life!—how totally different from anything we have before experienced! We bathed in the pleasant waters of the lake, and then sat down to a dinner of several courses excellently prepared by our Abyssinian cook, to which our appetites did full justice. After dinner, in the cool of the evening we walked down to the margin of the lake. What a flood of memories came o'er us! Within easy distance are the ruins of Capernaum—Christ's own city,—and you cannot but be impressed with the fact that God's anathema is fully accomplished: "And thou Capernaum, which art exalted unto heaven, shall be brought down to hell." Not a house, scarcely a wall or column remains to mark the site of a once busy and wealthy city. As we stood there, apparently "the world forgetting, by the world forgot," we recalled that it was while walking on the surface of this lake that our Savior spoke those words which quieted the trembling disciples and have since comforted so many Christian hearts during eighteen hundred years: "It is I, be not afraid!" To this sea when a great tempest arose, threatening destruction to the ship and all on board, Jesus addressed his rebuke, and immediately "there was a great calm." It was on these shores when the people were burdened with a sense of guilt that these words were spoken: "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

"How pleasant to me thy deep blue wave.
O Sea of Galilee!
For the glorious One who came to save
Hath often stood by thee!"

Leaving camp early the next morning, we took up our line of march toward Mt. Hermon en route for Damascus.—Sam'l S. Dennis.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Editor Restitution:—I have just received from my old class-mate, A. J. Eychaner, his new tract, which I have read with pleasure and profit, I wish to recommend it to one and all, as a tract which commends itself for its clear and logical manner of dealing with the skeptic. I have in my library Patterson, Thayer, Jenyns, Leslie, Loul, Littleton, Watson, Todd, Newton and others, which I have carefully read. I have no hesitancy in pronouncing Bro. Eychaner's little work entitled "God and the Bible Vindicated," in point of ability inferior to none of them. Brethren who live in communities afflicted with infidelity should avail themselves of the opportunity of scattering this tract, in fact all should read it whether infidel or Christian; it will do you good, I speak from experience, I intend to introduce it to my brethren, and also into infidel communities where I labor. I am truly glad that Bro. A. B. Magruder has accepted of Col. Ingersoll's challenge. I hope arrangements will be made to have the discussion published in a book, for the benefit of the masses. But, I fear that when Ingersoll learns that Bro. Magruder does not believe in the theory of "endless torment" and the "immortality of the soul" that he will refuse to discuss with him, as he did with Eli Crag, though a congregationalist. Yet I believe in conditional immortality I presume the Col. thinks if he can make the Bible responsible for these papish ideas, that he can defend this course better. If this discussion takes place I wish to attend it. I am satisfied that the cause of Christianity will not suffer in the conflict. I have read with increased interest, Bro. Weather's articles on the "coming age," also the articles on "trine immersion," written some time ago by the editor in response to S. McGlothlin. These articles and Bro. Weather's I should like very much to see in pamphlet form, and I know many others who have the same desire. As I of late years seldom write for THE RESTITUTION, I wish to say to my old friends and former associates of the faith and hope of Abraham, press on, the prize is in view, with unbroken trust and courage undaunted, march forward, the Kingdom is near, soon its glories will break in upon us. "Fight the good fight of faith" never give up the battle until victory is won. The warfare then over, we shall rest in the kingdom of God, let us grow in grace and in the knowledge of the truth, keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus, Rev. xiv. 12, the promise is "Blessed are they that do his commandments," they are to enter the city of God, and have right to the tree of life, Rev. xxii. 14. May we be among them. Your Bro. in the hope.

A. H. DEWEESE.

Hamilton, Mo.

The following will attract the attention of our readers as important in the complication of what is known as —The Eastern Question; especially when read in connection with another in this number on the almost absolute certainty of a war soon between Greece and Turkey on the boundary question between the two latter powers. We are nearing a momentous crisis in this world's history. The dissolution of Mohammedan supremacy is the startling signal of the nearness of Christ's second coming. The finger of destiny seems ominously to point to 1881-1883, as a most eventful period. Watch, work, pray.

[From the Utica Morning Herald.]

THE WAR IN PERSIA.

Now that there is a lull in the Turkish phase of the Eastern question, attention will be naturally drawn to another phase, which, though not now directly a part of it, is likely eventually to become one of its chief features. This is the invasion of Persia by the Koords. These people inhabit a tract of country partly in Asiatic Turkey and partly in Persia, and whose boundaries are not very definite. Of a population of 3,000,000, at least 2,500,000 are in the Turkish portion. In fact, the Persian portion is comprised mostly of wandering tribes, the few towns in their country being occupied largely by Persians. Again, as the prevailing religion of the Koords is Mohammedism, and as most of their trading is with the Turks, they may be called a Turkish people, although their language is of Persian stock. They are a fierce people, and, by their nomadic life, learned early the sweets of liberty. For years previous to the Russo-Turkish war they were a thorn in the side of the Sultan, resisting his authority when they chose with impunity. As the Porte has now its hands full with European concert, it can pay little attention to the Koords. The latter, therefore, have turned on the Persians. The movement, however, although accompanied by the customary outrages of Asiatic warfare, does not have plunder for its main object. Its leader is Shiek Obidullah. He is possessed of all the qualities admired in a Mohammedan commander. He holds a high religious position among Moslems, being next in rank to the Sheriff of Mecca. His people believe him to be their prophet as well as their prince, and obey him implicitly. For some time Obidullah has dreamed of an independent Koordish kingdom, composed of both the Turkish and Persian portions of Koordistan. A year ago he resisted the Governor of Oroomiah in the Persian portion when he came to collect the revenues. This year he insisted on controlling the Persian districts of Koordistan, guaranteeing their revenue to the Shah. Failing in both attempts he declared war. With an army of 15,000 he marched into Persia in three detachments, sweeping everything before him. Usually the Koords are armed with horn bows, javelins and a sling, the like of which Xenophon saw when he passed through the country. Obidullah's troops were armed with rifles obtained during the Russo-Turkish war, and for a while had it all their own way. Three weeks ago, however, they advanced 5,000 strong against Oroomiah and were met and easily defeated by the Persians. They are still in that neighborhood, while the Persians recently have been invading Turkish Koordistan. Obidullah is doing all he can to unite all Koords in one grand movement for independence. In case he succeeds, the Koordish becomes the most prominent feature of the Eastern question. It will unquestionably be made an international matter, in which Persia and England will not be on the same side. The Russians are already assisting the Persians, while the British Minister has asked the Porte to station a guard on the Persian's frontier to stop them from crossing. A conflict seriously involving European interests is, therefore, not improbable. Such a conflict would be of special interest to Americans, as it would occur in the Nestorian mission field of the American Board. Although menaced by both sides, the missionaries have thus far escaped harm. Should a general conflict be precipitated, however, they would be in imminent danger.

BREVITIES.

Advices from Honolulu describe the eruption of Mauna Loa, now in progress, as one of the grandest ever witnessed. It broke out on November 5, about six miles from the summit, the crater throwing out two great streams of lava, one of which is thirty miles long, 100 to 200 yards wide and about twenty feet deep. Terrible explosions accompany its flow.

THE JEWS IN MOROCCO.

The condition of the Jews in Morocco is deplorable. At Morocco itself, only six weeks ago, the Cadi ordered the crucifixion of a Jew accused of having lent money at a usurious rate of interest. A short time before this a band of dervishes, who exercise great influence over the native inhabitants, seized a Jew at Antifu, and, after flaying him alive, killed him and ate him. This crime was left unpunished.

DEATH OF TWO CENTENARIANS.

A despatch from Logansport, Indiana, of Nov. 29, says: Mrs. Mary Dillon, or as she was better known, "Old Mother" Dillon, died at her home in this city yesterday at the extraordinary age of 112 years. She was born in the county of Limerick, Ireland, in the year 1768, and came to this country near the year 1840. The colored woman, Mrs. Agnes Brown, died at Bronson, Ohio, last week, at the age of 120 years, and the funeral sermon was preached on Sunday, by an old time acquaintance from Xenia, O., who is in his 100th year, and has been in the ministry since 1803.

The carob bean is grown all over the Mediterranean seaboard and Islands, and 8,000 tons were imported from Cyprus by England alone in 1870. It forms an important ingredient in cattle foods, is now employed in France for making brandy since the continued failure of the vines, and is eaten by the peasants in Russia and the East. Last year was a wonderful year for carobs. The carob tree is a handsome evergreen with dark glossy foliage, which forms a grateful rest for the eye along the hot slopes of the Limasol, Paphos, and Kryania hills. In the spring the long, broad pods of the beans can scarcely be distinguished amid the leaves; but in the early autumn they turn to a dark chocolate color, and in an abundant year how the branches to the ground, presenting a striking contrast to the rest of the tree. The carob tree is hardy, flourishes well with but little rain, and attains a large size, much resembling the walnut in its spread and habit. It grows sparsely in Cyprus, often not more than twenty or thirty to the acre, for there is no regular planting.

A COUNTRY OF ROBBERS.

Macedonia is said to be in a terrible condition. Bands of brigands, strong in numbers and well armed, are infesting almost all parts of the country; taking advantage of the weakness of the authorities, and enriching themselves by the indiscriminate plunder of the inhabitants without distinction of race or creed. Beys and other high dignitaries are being seized, and there are even cases in which all the members of provincial councils have been carried off in a body and sent into the mountains. One of the bands demands the sum of £5,000 sterling as ransom for the liberation of two Turkish dignitaries and three Christians who hold the rank of councilors. Communication is everywhere interrupted. In Epirus incredible atrocities are reported to have been perpetrated. In one case two women are said to have been thrust alive into an oven. The inhabitants are powerless to defend themselves, and are looking for pity and protection from the West.

POETRY.

Messiah's Reign.

I have heard the glorious tidings
Of a Kingdom yet to be;
Over all the earth extending,
Lasting as eternity.
Of a King, whose reign of mercy,
Will the suffering nations bless;
Who will rule in truth and justice,
Who will judge in righteousness.

I have heard of earth's redemption,
From the ruin sin has brought:
Of the times of restitution,
By the holy prophets taught;
And my heart exults in prospect,
Of Messiah's glorious reign;
For I've heard creation's groaning,
'Neath its heavy load of pain.

I have seen the seal forbidden,
All earth's present sounds to hear;
And the blind, whose darkened pathway,
Earthly beauty might not cheer;
Yet I know there'll come a morning,
And I long to see its light;
When the deaf ear shall be opened,
And the blind receive their sight.

I have seen the lame and helpless,
Aided by some friendly hand;
I have seen the dumb conversing,
By the signs they understand;
And I thought of that sure promise,
When our Lord salvation brings;
Then the lame shall leap for gladness,
And the loosened tongue shall sing.

I have heard the call to battle,
Seen the brave go forth to die;
Heard of many a field of carnage,
Where in ghastly heaps they lie:
But when Christ shall reign in Zion,
He will make all wars to cease;
Man no more shall hate his brother,
But shall dwell in quiet peace.

I have stood beside the dying,
Watched the struggle with the foe;
I have seen death gain the victory,
And the wearied ones laid low:
But a mighty voice shall call them,
From beneath the cold, damp sod;
And they'll wake and live forever,
In the likeness of their God.

Hail, bright morn of restitution,
All creation waits for thee;
Hail Messiah, once rejected,
Rule the world in majesty:
Earth has never known such glory,
As shall rest upon her then;
When her King shall dwell in Zion,
And throughout her borders reign.

S. M. H.

East Baden, Mass.

COMMUNICATIONS.

"Wherefore He Saith, Awake Thou that Sleepest, Arise from the Dead, and Christ Will Give Thee Light."—Eph. v. 14.

The night is far spent, the day is at hand, let us therefore cast off the works of darkness, and let us put on the armor of light. Rom. xiii. 12.

Light, in the above texts, no doubt, means Divine wisdom, or knowledge. The first is followed by the injunction, "Wherefore be ye not unwise but understanding what the will of the Lord is." The second, "Put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ. Who of God is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption." 1 Cor. i. 30.

Therefore when we put on Christ we put on, or assume all that is great, and good, and glorious. Ignorance and wickedness, are figuratively called darkness, while wisdom and righteousness, are called light. Hence to walk in the light is to walk in these, and if we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin. 1 John i. 7. A man that is literally dead or asleep cannot be taught anything. Hence the exhortation, awake thou that sleepest, arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light, or knowledge.

We are told by our erring brethren, who plead natural inability to hear or understand anything that is good that men are dead, and therefore can't hear or understand, but perhaps almost the next breath, they will plead that the wicked dead, or literal dead know a great deal more than those that are alive, and according to their logic it would be far more consistent for a man to go on to the battle-ground and preach to the slain, than to preach to the living. The wicked in relation to heavenly wisdom and righteousness are dead (inactive), asleep, while to the wisdom of the world and wickedness they are "wide awake" and exceedingly alive; but we must bear in mind that this, really, is only the state or condition in which the living man acts, having the same natural ability to do good that he has to do evil. The Christian is liable to become like one dead or asleep in relation to the great plan and work of redemption, to such the apostle says "it is high time to wake out of sleep." "Let us not sleep as do others." "The night is far spent, the day is at hand." If the apostle means by "the night," this age of ingorance and wickedness, and "the day," the happy age to come, how much nearer "the day" now, than then.

Brethren, let us "arise from the dead," shake off our sleep, and as Samson showed his physical strength, let us show our moral power to do good. We can never hope to arouse sinners that are dead or asleep, unless we wake up to our duty and let our light shine. How can we emit or give light while we are in darkness? Remember we are "the light of the world, the salt of the earth." We must "hold forth the word of life." Bring our candle from under "the bushel" and let, or make its heavenly rays penetrate the dark recesses of the sinner's heart, and open his moral eyes, and chase away wickedness, and bring him to Jesus. Paul began the great and good work, he was sent to turn men from darkness to light, and from the power of Satan to God, and he exhorted his Philippian brethren to hold forth the word of life that he might rejoice in the day of Christ that he had not labored in vain, for if they were not diligent in the work of the Lord, and proved to be unfaithful branches in the great vine they would be cut off, and his labor lost and many more go down to death that might be snatched as brands from burning. Our salvation is indeed "a great salvation." There is none like it. "He that converteth the sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death and hide a multitude of sins."

Shall we, who have escaped from them who "live in error" (though they are dead and asleep), stand on the safe and happy shore, and see them go down to rise no more. Not only must our good works tell that we are in great earnest, but we must "hold forth the word of life." The church must hold it forth, and not say as some have said, Brother ——, if I could preach as you can, I would spend all my time; you are doing wrong, you ought to spend all your time in the gospel field, you must go and preach to poor sinners, but do nothing themselves. Perhaps the same poor brother has studied early and late, to learn "the will of the Lord" and therefore is able to preach it to others, while the brother who says, go because you are able, has been sleeping. What will he do for the brother who is compelled to labor at home to earn bread for his family? Will he say go and I will do all I can to sustain you, I can't preach, but you can, and it makes no difference which preaches, you or I, with the help of the Lord we will push the good work? I am determined to "be fellow-helper to the truth?" I fear there are many who say go that only utter it with their lips, while it is not the upheavings of a heart full of the love of God. God so loved the world—that he did nothing?—no, he gave his beloved Son to die, and if the love of God be shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Spirit given unto us, we can't be still, we must work. Jesus, when he was sent into the world, went about doing good, and healing all that were oppressed of the devil, for God was with him. Yes, God was with him, and if we have the love of God we shall be with every brother that is doing good. He will have our prayers, our sympathies, and our money to help him on.

Dear brethren, only stop and think a moment, of the feelings of that brother whose heart is full of compassion for sinners, and knows, or is fully persuaded that he might be an humble instrument in the hands of God to turn many from their wicked ways to him, and yet can get no time, all must be consumed in caring for his own family. How can he believe his rich brethren are in earnest when they say go, and don't lift the load off his back so that he can go. If the rich brother's son should fall into the water, and he was unable to swim to his relief or rescue, and a good swimmer close by had his hands tied, but was begging, Cut the cords and let me save your son! would he say go, and not cut the cords? No, indeed; how quick the hands would be cut loose, and the cry, Run and save him!

Brethren, the sons of many, if not your own sons, are now, to day, in the great sea of death—dark, deep, rough, and shoreless, and must perish unless they are saved. How can we, then, believe you are in earnest when you say go, and yet don't untie our hands? You are going to do something by and by, you are not quite ready, you are very anxious to leave your son a good farm, and you have gone in debt for it, and that must be paid, and you have use for all your money at present, so that you can't do anything to save sinners now. The apostle says, "He that soweth sparingly, shall also reap sparingly; and he that soweth bountifully, shall reap bountifully." 2 Cor. ix. 6. And "He that soweth to the Spirit, shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting," and yet your course is substantially like your neighbors who make no pretentions to Christianity but sows only "to the flesh, and will reap corruption." Gal. vi. 8.

Remember the apostle tells you not to be deceived, after saying "let him that is taught in the word communicate unto him that teacheth in all good things," and then promises the great reward, eternal life, to those who sow to the Spirit.

O, Brethren, let us sow, and bountifully, that the Lord may bless us with an abundant harvest. Let us wake out of sleep and put "on the armor of light" and fight the good fight of faith.

A word to sinners. Sinner! O, sinner! hear the voice of Jesus without delay. Hasten, hasten, the great and heavenly Master to obey, else to-morrow be everlastingly too late, and one day of misspent time seals your awful fate.

J. J. Warner.

(The foregoing letter is exactly to the point. The church is the light of the world, and each isolated congregation is a "lamp-stand" in the particular locality when it may exist. And, further, every individual can be at least a candle in this dark world. Of John the Baptist our Savior said:—"He was a burning and a shining light: and ye were willing for a season to rejoice in his light." Of himself he said:—"I am come a light into the world, that whosoever believeth on me should not abide in darkness." A dark, starless night will soon enshroud this world, and before its more than Egyptian blackness settles down into such midnight gloom, as never mantled earth before, let us light some lost wanderers to the climes of eternal sunshine.—Ed.)

A Valid Immersion.

It is a self-evident truth that immersion in water, is the one baptism, and is, by Divine authority, the appointed law for the remission of sins. But, in order that one sins be remitted in the act of immersion, we must have "the faith which was once delivered unto the saints." And this faith embraces the new covenant—the promises which God made unto the fathers and center in Jesus of Nazareth.

1. Pardon. Proof: "In whom we have redemption through his (Jesus) blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his (God's) grace."

2. Resurrection. Proof: Jesus says, "I am the resurrection."

3. He says, "I am the life. I am the way (out of the grave,) the truth, and the life." Saint John says, "He that hath the Son, hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life."

4. This life is to be enjoyed on this earth in its restored state. Proof: "I will give unto thee (Abraham), and thy seed all the land of Canaan for an everlasting possession." And, outside of this promise there is not a promise of life, either limited or eternal, for any of the human family. Hence none but those who are embraced in this promise (which is the new covenant) will ever have life or a resurrection to life. "For the promise that he (Abraham) should be the heir of the" kosmon—the habitable—"the world, was not to Abraham, or to his seed, through the law, but through the righteousness of faith."

As I, by turning to Gal. iii. 16, we learn that these promises of life and land center in Christ. "And now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He (God) saith not, and to seeds, as of many; but as of one, and to thy seed which is Christ." And in Psalm ii., we learn that God has promised to give to him the uttermost parts of the earth (all the earth outside of Canaan,) for his possession. Put this promise and the one made to Abraham—which centers in Christ together—and it gives him the entire earth by promise. And St. Paul informs us that, if we are the children of God, then heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ to this entire earth.

5. That Jesus of Nazareth is the rightful heir to the throne—the kingdom of David. Proof: "I have made a covenant with my chosen; I have sworn unto David my servant, thy seed will I establish forever, and build up thy throne (kingdom) to all generations .... my covenant will I not break, nor alter the thing that is gone out of my lips. Once have I sworn by my holiness that I will not lie unto David. His seed shall endure forever, and his throne (kingdom) as the sun before me. It shall be established forever as the moon, and as a faithful witness in heaven"—the heavenly state—earth restored. Psa. lxxxix. 3, 4, 34-37. "The Lord hath sworn in truth unto David; he will not turn from it; of the fruit of thy body will I set upon thy throne." Psa. cxxxii. 11.

And St. Peter informs us that this seed or the fruit of David's body, is Jesus of Nazareth. Please listen to him. "David being a prophet, and knowing that God had sworn with an oath to him, that of the fruit of his loins, according to the flesh, he would raise up Christ to sit on his throne"—kingdom. Acts ii. 30. And, inasmuch, as David's kingdom embraced the twelve tribes of Israel as the subjects—Palestine the territory—Jerusalem the metropolis; therefore the tribes of Israel must be restored to their own land and permanently settled in it—Jerusalem rebuilt and become the metropolitan city of Messiah's kingdom—the center of attraction—a praise in all the earth! The twelve apostles associated with Jesus in the rule of Israel, also those who overcome even as he overcame will share with him in the reign and glory of the coming kingdom and ages of conquest. Then the law will go forth from Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem, (see Isa. ii. 1-5; Micah iv. 1-4; Rev. xix. 6, 7,) the everlasting gospel—the oath and promise of God, which he made unto Abraham, and renewed to Isaac and Jacob, saying, "In thee and in thy seed shall all the families—the nations—of the earth be blessed"—saved! "All nations whom thou hast made shall come and worship before thee, O Lord; and shall glorify thy name." See Gen. xii. 3; xxii. 18; xxvi. 4; xxviii. 14; Acts iii. 25; Gal. iii. 8, 9; Psa. lxxxvi. 9. And, ultimately, under the reign of Jesus and his associated rulers, the effects of sin will be wiped out of the universe of God, and the earth peopled exclusively with his own family, sinless and immortal! His glory now fills the earth. The sky is clear, and the soil is free, the victor's song floats over the plains of Eden, and the anthems of seraphs blend with its strain; the sun rolls down its brilliant flood, and shines on a world that is fair and good!

All these promises are embraced in the oath and covenant which God made with Abraham, Isaac, Jacob and David, and have been made sure to all the seeds by the blood of Jesus of Nazareth, our elder brother. Hence they constitute the gospel—the good news—which must be understood and believed. Then a change of our course of conduct from wrong to right in order to qualify one for an immersion into the saving name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins.

H. V. Lyon.

Saugerties Bridge, N. Y.

Report of Quarterly Assembly.

The Quarterly Assembly of the Church of God commenced on Friday evening, Nov. 12, 1880, at Brother Daniel Berkilite's, in Frederick county, Md. The faith of Abraham was well represented both from Virginia and from Maryland. The usual introductory discourse was delivered by the writer; preached again on Saturday night. On Sunday morning lessons of instructions were read from the Scriptures by brethren Berkilite and Beck, much to the edification of the Assembly, after which we labored in word and doctrine for the further building up of the little flock in their most holy faith. In the run of the discourse we presented the exalted character of the true church of God, by showing that she is called by the holy seer in Patmos a golden candlestick, and by the wise man Solomon typically the king's daughter, whose raiment is of wrought gold etc. and that she is [redacted] spot or wrinkle, or any such thing; and as a candlestick has the candle placed in it, so that it may give light to all around, just so the church of the living God, being the pillar, and ground of the truth, or Jehovah's light stand, whose duty it is to let her light shine before men by holding up the word of life that they be constrained to glorify our Father who art in heaven.

Sunday night, by request of Brother John Wolf, read and preached from the 37th Psalm, by which we showed the eternal destiny of both the righteous and the wicked, that the reward of the righteous was eternal life, but the reward of the wicked will be eternal death. It was made plain that if eternal life was to live—never die, then eternal death was to die—to never live; and in our earnest contention for the truth we urged the brethren to ever exhibit the Spirit of Christ, remembering that if we have not the spirit of Christ we are none of his, and that he that hath rule over his own spirit is mightier than he that taketh a city. Although the people of the various schools differ with us, we should deal tenderly with them, bearing in mind that the most of us have passed right along where they are, and we were just as honest then as we are now, and therefore we dare not question their sincerity even if they become our enemies, as Paul's Jewish brethren did because he told them the truth.

Having by this time stirred up the pure minds of the dear brethren and sisters, by dwelling on the glowing promises made of God to the fathers, or the things concerning the kingdom of God, and name of Jesus Christ, in which all their faith, and hopes centered, we commemorated the death of him that was slain, but lives again to intercede for fallen man. While singing a hymn, according to the apostolic example, the assembly being in the faith gave each other the right hand of fellowship. Brother and sister Beck, of Frederick City, being with us for the first time, on being asked if they had got a crumb, replied, not only a crumb, but a whole loaf. They seemed to be inspired with new life in the cause of the Master. Such are some of the happy effects of our quarterly, and annual assemblies, in offering an opportunity to the brethren of the one faith to make each other's acquaintance, and thus encourage each other while in the waiting time (in the language of the prophetess Anna) for full redemption in Jerusalem.

It was considered the duty of the Church of God, in each state to see well to it, that none of the sick or unfortunate of the one faith lack anything while in a helpless condition, and to do good to all men, but especially to the household of faith.

The meeting closed on Monday night, with the understanding that the next Quarterly Assembly be held with the Church of God on Timber Ridge, Hampshire county, Va., in the fund hope of having another good time, in the name of the Lord.

N. J. Morgan.

We are living to the waiting time,
Still looking for our King;
His Word declares He will return
And full salvation bring.

Chorus:
He comes, kind friends,
To sit upon His throne;
He comes to reign,
And take His people home.

Jerusalem He will rebuild,—
The city of the Lord;
The nations, then, will do His will,
Or tremble at His Word.

The saints will then be kings and priests
To execute His law:
Earth's rulers they will bind with chains
And make them stand in awe.

He'll reign on earth a thousand years;
O happy, happy day!
He comes to banish all our fears
And wipe our tears away.

Sarah F. Morgan.

Winchester, Va.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Editor Restitution:—I herewith inclose a circular announcing a union meeting for worship on the last night of the year, of the various churches in Brooklyn who are waiting for the Lord from heaven. The object of the meeting is to stimulate all to a holier life, strengthen the bond of Christian love, and inspire greater zeal in the Master's service for the salvation of souls. You are at liberty to publish if you think it will promote love, union and peace among brethren in other places of like precious faith.

Yours, in hope of the coming One,

M. S. Dimock.

New York.

Watch ye, therefore, for ye know not when the Master of the house cometh, at even, or at midnight, or at the cock crowing, or in the morning; and what I say unto you, I say unto all, Watch.—Mark xiii. 35-37.

There will be held in the Cumberland Street Chapel, between DeKalb and Lafayette Avennes, Brooklyn, on Friday evening, December 31, 1880, a watch-night meeting of believers in the approaching second coming to earth [redacted] Jesus Christ [redacted] part[redacted] share with their adorable Redeemer in the unfading glory and honor of his everlasting kingdom.

Order of services—8 o'clock.—A sermon by Brother George H. Kramer, of Wilmington, Del., on the Lord's promise, "I will come again." Brother Kramer is an eloquent minister of the gospel of the Lord Jesus.

The Lord's Supper: "For as often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do shew the Lord's death till he come."

Prayer, praise and testimony—in which service it is earnestly hoped all will feel themselves at liberty to take part, as this service is in no manner sectarian, or held in the interest of any particular society of believers in the Lord's personal return to earth.

Dear brethren, let us lay aside every weight that would hinder us from "assembling together," and spend the closing hours of the year in magnifying the name of the Lord who has done so much for us; testifying to the peace and joy we have in the blessed hope—the glorious appearing of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ—and to pray "that the times of refreshing which are to come from the presence of the Lord" may quickly come to the "whole groaning creation, waiting for the manifestation of the Sons of God." Rom. viii. 19-23.

Your brethren in the blessed hope of the gospel,

John H. Cook,
Geo. W. Young,
C. A. Deckel,
M. S. Driggs,
John Donaldson,
Frost Johnson,
Jos. T. Howland,
Edgar P. Gordon,
John C. St. John,
L. B. Giles,
Geo. K. Carroll.

The eloquent and devoted French evangelist, M. Revellaud, who has made a number of addresses in this city, affirms that "not one-tenth of the French people are really Roman Catholic; that the peasantry are not in sympathy with the Roman Church, and that France is now open to the Gospel and will welcome it everywhere." He instances one town where three hundred heads of families, upheld by their wives, signed a declaration abjuring Romanism.

It is not until we have passed through the furnace that we are made to know how much dross was in our composition.

The Voice of Dead Nations.

Mr. Alger, in his celebrated oration, uttered the following impressive passage, which ought to be written on the statute books of every State in the Union:

"The dead nations, whose giant skeletons now lie bleaching and crumbling on the Sands of Time, all died of Sin. It was their crimes that dug their graves and pushed them in. Licentious luxury sapped the foundation strength and rotted the live virtue of one—and it disappeared beneath the green pool of its own corruption. Brutal war, made a business of and carried in every direction, drew upon another the combined wrath of the world—and it was dashed upon the rock of its own barbarous force.

"Domestic bondage, grown enormous, trodden under foot, and goaded to madness, rose on another—and it was buried in the conflagration and slaughter of its own provocation. Internal antipathies based on sectional differences, fed by selfish interest and taunting debate, finally exploded in the quarrelsome parties of another—and hurled its dissevered fragments to ruin by the convulsive eruption of its own wrong and hatred. Of all the mighty empires which have disappeared, not one ever sunk but its own fall was through internal iniquity in some way or other. Shall the sinful shade of Republican America, too, go down to join the doleful company of crowned spectres, moving them beneath to rise up at her coming with the sardonic mock, 'Art thou as we?' If we would avoid their doom of vengeance, we must not tread their path of guilt."—S. H. in Prophetic Times.

The Day Is at Hand.

My night is far spent, my day is at hand; the wilderness is nearly traversed; Canaan and Jerusalem are almost within my view; the summits of the everlasting hills are already appearing.

What manner of person, then, ought I to be in all holy conversation and godliness, looking for and hastening forward unto the coming of the day of God?

I must press forward; and so much the more, as I see the day approaching. I must be heavenly-minded, so walking worthy of my calling, and setting my affections on things above. For what have I, who have a crown in prospect, a kingdom in reservation, to do with the vanities or pleasures [redacted] It must seek to be like him, [redacted] low him more closely, as the night is hastening to an end, and the day about to break. If I am in sorrow, I shall call to mind that weeping endureth but for a night, but joy cometh in the morning. If I am in comfort, I must see that this prosperity which God has given me is making me a holier man, and a more self-denying worker for him who loved me, and washed me from my sins in his own blood. If I am poor, I shall rejoice that my day of wealth is just at hand. If I am rich, I shall take the gold my Lord hath given me, and lay it all at his beloved feet. Mine must be no half discipleship—no service of two masters, no divided heart. The night is far spent, the day is at hand. What remains of this brief life of mine must be wholly given to the Lord.—H. Bonar.

HYMNS OF THE ADVENT

In the name of a new Hymn Book, just out, compiled by Chas. C. Becker—compiler of the "Hymns of the Morning"—and published by W. N. Pile, Springfield, Mass.

Mr. Becker combines in this new work the "Hymns of the Morning" and a fresh and rare selection of music. As an appendix he adds a selection of "Favorite Hymns" (words only) whose merits is familiar as a household word. Those of our brethren who have been asking for "Hymns of the Morning" for some time, can now be supplied with this new book, which is superior to the old one in that it embraces all of it and many new and beautiful songs. Those having the "Christian Psalmodist" and no music book will find it exactly what they want.

Send to this office for them. Price only 40 cents.

NEW EDITION.

A LETTER TO A FRIEND

By MRS. C. C. WOODRUFF.

This little book is so well known that the announcement that an edition has been printed should be enough, without comment.

32 PAGES. PRICE 10 CENTS

Send for a Copy to this Office.

A NEW TRACT.

Christ's Kingdom!

Where is it? What is it?

Being a discourse delivered at Berwick, Pa., by Jos. Lecher, of Mauch Chunk, Pa. This is a 32 page tract, neatly printed and sold here a wide circulation. Send to this office for it. Price 10c.

Astronomical Etiology, or

STAR PROPHECIES

Concerning coming disasters on the earth from 1881 to 1885. By H. L. Knapp, Ft. Dr. and others. Published by Thomas Wilson. Also contains an appendix by the publisher. 32 pages. 25 cents a copy.

THE RESTITUTION.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

WHOLE NO. 692. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, DECEMBER 22, 1880. VOL. XXIX, NO. 49.

THE RESTITUTION
IS ISSUED
EVERY WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON,
By the Christian Publishing Association.

OFFICERS OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS.
E. S. DWIGGINS.....President.
CHARLES PALMER.....Vice President.
E. K. BARNHILL.....Secretary.
S. A. CHAPLIN.....Treasurer.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.
CHARLES PALMER, W. M. RAILSBACK,
E. K. BARNHILL.

S. A. CHAPLIN,.....Editor.

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTORS.
J. M. STEPHENSON, | BENJ. WILSON,
A. D. MARTINDALE, | G. M. ELLIS,
J. P. WEETHEE, | WILLY JONES,
JOEL A. SIMONDS.

TERMS—$2.00 PER YEAR,
Payable invariably in Advance. Subscriptions received for three months or six months at the same rate.

Address all Letters and Communications to
THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates, as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ; and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a Scriptural belief of the Gospel in permanence, and immediate, as prerequisite to the inheritance of this, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Coming Age—Its Probability—Things to Come—Four Living Creatures—1. Like a Lion—2. Like a Calf—3. Face of a Man—4. Like a Flying Eagle—Views.—No. 47.

J. P. WEETHEE.

First Scenic Vision.—John's first view was introductory to the whole book, furnishing him the evidence of its Divine authority. This vision introduces the Evangelist to the then future world, with its ruling, and subordinate agents. For sublimity of character and scenery, it has no superior. It may have its parallels. Please read the following: In the year that King Uzziah died I saw also the Lord 'sitting upon a throne, high and lifted up, and his train filled the temple. Above him stood the seraphim; each one had six wings; with twain he covered his face, and with twain he covered his feet, and with twain he did fly. And one cried unto another, and said, Holy, holy, holy (is) the Lord of hosts; the whole earth (is—shall be) full of his glory. And the posts of the door moved at the voice of him that cried, and the house was filled with smoke. Then said I, Woe (is) me! for I am undone; because I (am) a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips; for mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts. Then flew one of the seraphims unto me, having a live coal in his hand, (which) he had taken with the tongs from the altar; and he laid (it) upon my mouth, and said, Lo, this hath touched thy lips; and thine iniquity is taken away, and thy sin is purged. Isa. vi. 1-7. This vision is introductory to the great commission given to Isaiah: And I heard the voice of the Lord, saying, Whom shall I send, and who will go for us? Then said I, Here (am) I; send me. And he said, Go, etc. Verses 8, 9. A grand view to impress upon Isaiah the magnitude of his prophetic mission.

Read the surroundings of Ezekiel's commission: Now it came to pass in the thirteenth year, in the fourth (month), in the fifth (day) of the month, as I (was) among the captives (captivity) by the river of Chebar, (that) the heavens were opened, and I saw visions of God. And I looked, and behold, a whirlwind came out of the north, a great cloud, and a fire infolding (catching) itself, and a brightness (was) about it, and out of the midst thereof as the color of amber (a polished amalgam of gold and silver—yellowish) out of the midst of the fire. Also out of the midst thereof (came) the likeness of four living creatures. And this (was) their appearance; they had the likeness of a man. And every one had four faces, and every one had four wings. And their feet (were) straight feet; and the sole of their feet (was) like the sole of a calf's foot; and they sparkled like the color of burnished brass. And (they had) the hands of a man under their wings on their four sides; and they four had their faces and their wings. Their wings (were) joined one to another; they turned not when they went; they went [illegible] straight forward. As for the likeness of their faces, they four had the face of a man, and the face of a lion, on the right side; and they four had the face of an ox on the left side; they four also had the face of an eagle. Thus (were) their faces; and their wings (were) stretched upward; two (wings) of every one (were) joined to another, and two covered their bodies. And they went every one straight forward; whither the spirit was to go, they went; (and) they turned not when they went. As for the likeness of the living creatures their appearance (was) like burning coals of fire, (and) like the appearance of lamps; it went up and down among the living creatures; and the fire was bright, and out of the fire went forth lightning. And the living creatures ran and returned as the appearance of a flash of lightning. Now as I beheld the living creatures, behold one wheel upon the earth by the living creatures, with his four faces. The appearance of the wheels and their work (was) like unto the color of a beryl (pale sea-green); and they four had one likeness; and their appearance and their work (was) as it were a wheel in the middle of a wheel. When they went, they went upon their four sides; (and) they turned not when they went. As for their rings, they were so high that they were dreadful; and their rings (were) full of eyes round about them four. And when the living creatures went the wheels went by them; and when the living creatures were lifted [illegible] earth, the wheels were lifted. Whithersoever the spirit was to go, they went, thither was their spirit to go; and the wheels were lifted up over against them; for the spirit of the living creatures (was) in the wheels. When those went, (these) went; and when those stood, (these) stood; and when those were lifted up from the earth, the wheels were lifted up over against them; for the spirit (life) of the living creature (was) in the wheels. And the likeness of the firmament upon the heads of the living creatures (was) as the color of the terrible (sparkling—flashing) crystal, stretched forth over their heads above. And under the firmament (were) their wings straight, the one toward the other; every one had two, which covered on this side, and every one had two which covered on that side, their bodies. And when they went I heard the noise of their wings, like the noise of great waters, as the voice of the Almighty, the voice of speech, as the noise of an host; when they stood, they let down their wings. And there was a voice from the firmament that (was) over their heads, when they stood, (and) had let down their wings.

And above the firmament that (was) over their heads (was) the likeness of a throne, as the appearance of a sapphire (blue) stone; and upon the likeness of the throne (was) the likeness as the appearance of a man above upon it. And I saw as the color of amber, as the appearance of fire round about within it, from the appearance of his loins even upward, and from the appearance of his loins even downward. I saw as it were the appearance of fire, and it had brightness round about. As the appearance of the bow that is in the cloud in the day of rain, so (was) the appearance of the brightness round about. This (was) the appearance of the likeness of the glory of the Lord. And when I saw (it) I fell upon my face, and heard a voice of one that spake. And he said unto me, Son of man stand upon thy feet, and I will speak unto thee. And the spirit entered into me when he spake unto me, and set me upon my feet, that I heard him that spake unto me. And he said unto me, Son of man, I send thee to the children of Israel, to a rebellious nation that hath rebelled against me. Ezek. i. 1, to the end; chap. ii. 1, 2. What grandeur in giving his commission! The description is resumed in Ezekiel x.

We should look for a similar display of celestial drapery when John, the Ezekiel of the new covenant, is called up to the door opened in heaven to receive his commission, and prophetic chart of the Christian church and her enemies till the advent of the Redeemer, and establishment of his kingdom. John's description is as follows: "Behold, a throne was set in heaven, and (one) sat on the throne. And he that sat was to look upon like a jasper and a sardine stone. And there was a rainbow round about the throne, in sight like unto an emerald. And round about the throne (were) four and twenty seats; and upon the seats I saw four and twenty elders sitting, clothed in white raiment; and they had on their heads crowns of gold. And out of the throne proceeded lightnings and thunderings, and voices. And (there were) seven lamps of fire burning before the throne, which are the seven spirits of God. And before the throne (there was) a sea of glass like unto crystal; and in the midst of the throne, and round about the throne (were) four beasts (living creatures), full of eyes before and behind. And the first living creature (was) like a lion, and the second living creature like a calf, and the third living creature had a face as a man, and the fourth living creature (was) like a flying eagle. And the four living creatures had each of them six wings about (him); and (they were) full of eyes within: and they rest not day and night, saying, Holy, holy, holy, Lord God Almighty, which was, and is, and is to come. And when those living creatures give glory, and honor, and thanks to him that sat on the throne, who liveth forever and ever, the four and twenty elders fall down before him that sat on the throne and worship him that liveth forever and ever, and cast their crowns before the throne, saying, Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive glory, and honor, and power: for thou hast created all things, and for thy pleasure they are and were created.

And I saw in the right hand of him that sat on the throne a roll written within, and on the back side sealed with seven seals. And I saw a strong angel proclaiming with a loud voice, Who is worthy to open the book, and to loose the seals thereof? And no man in heaven, nor in earth, neither under the earth, was able to open the book, neither to look thereon. And I wept much, because no man was found worthy to open, and to read the book, neither to look thereon. And one of the elders saith unto me, Weep not: behold, the lion of the tribe of Judah, the Root of David, hath prevailed to open the book, and to loose the seven seals thereof.

And I beheld, and lo, in the midst of the throne, and of the four living creatures, and in the midst of the elders, stood a Lamb as it had been slain, having seven horns, and seven eyes, which are the seven spirits of God sent forth into all the earth. And he came and took the book out of the right hand of him that sat upon the throne. And when he had taken the book, the four living creatures and four (and) twenty elders fell down before the Lamb, having every one of them harps, and golden vials full of odors, which are the prayers of the saints. And they sung a new song, saying, Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof: for thou wast slain, and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation; and hast made us unto our God kings, and priests; and we shall reign on the earth.

And I beheld, and I heard the voice of many angels round about the throne and the living creatures and the elders: and the number of them was ten thousand times ten thousand, and thousands of thousands; saying with a loud voice, Worthy is the Lamb that was slain to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honor, and glory, and blessing. And every creature which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them, heard I saying, Blessing, and honor, and glory, and power, (be) unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb forever and ever. And the four living creatures said, Amen, and the four (and) twenty elders fell down and worshipped him that liveth forever and ever. Rev. iv. and v.

Such is the inspired introduction to this book of what was then future, what John was to write, and make known to the churches. Rev. i. 1). What is banishment to such a being? Banished from what? From the unrequited toils of his earthly diocese—to that in the holy sanctuary, where his audience is composed of the redeemed and the pure: from the age of strife, to that of endless peace.

Banished from whom? From the bloody persecutors of this age; from earth's nobles—its kings and emperors, to the companionship of heaven's hierarchy; to look upon the face of him on whose breast he reclined at the last supper; to view the great throne and its Divine occupant. Who could shed a tear, or heave a sigh at such a banishment?

Christianity!

The interpretation which is generally put upon the term "Christianity" is the reduction of the commands of Christ to practice; or the bringing out of the principles taught by Jesus Christ by precept, and also by his practice under those precepts and which is now required of his disciples. Then to be a follower, or disciple of Christ, means to be one who walks in the precepts of the Lord, blameless.

And as Christ has clearly taught in the Scriptures, all that his disciples are required to believe, and do, they are not at liberty to go outside of these instructions to learn their duties. We read: "All scripture (is) given by inspiration of God, and (is) profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: That the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works. I charge thee therefore before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom, preach the word." 2 Tim. iii. 16, 17, and iv. 1, 2.

From this teaching it must be apparent to every careful observer, that the Christian will be a living reflection before the world, of the things taught in the Scriptures, which belong to the time in which he lives.

There are at least three objects to be gained by reducing these precepts to practice. First, the purifying of their hearts by obeying the truth. Second, the influence which this manner of living will exert over others, inducing many to do likewise; and thirdly, as the great moral principles thus developed are to be continued in the world to come; and persons getting these things reduced to practice now, will be ready to occupy positions in the kingdom, because they in this life have overcome "the lusts of the world, the lusts of the flesh, and the pride of life." In other words, they are learning how to live in the world to come. They are now surrounded by opposition, and temptations, which steadily come around them, and with honeyed words try to induce them to diverge from the straight and narrow way, and not be so secluded, "Come," say they "go along with us and enjoy this world while you can; you will have plenty of time to serve the Lord also, you can go to church occasionally and hear a sermon preached, and that will do you more good than to be reading so much yourself. Come, go with us, we will get you an office in the world where you can have plenty of money, and can live in ease and splendor, and can exert an influence, and can aid our party by your abilities, so we can have control in the government of our Town, County, State or Nation." Such propositions are frequently made to men who are found to be of high attainments, and possess a commanding influence, which the world desires to turn to its advantage. How many have listened to and yielded to such glowing appeals.

We have an example where even more than these were offered. The devil offered to give all the kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them to Christ, on just one condition: "If thou will fall down and worship me." Did Christ yield to this temptation? No. But he rebuked the devil, and then he left Christ, and did not make the offer a second time.

If Christ would not accept of all the governments of the world, then as the Chief Executive, what right does this give his followers to accept of subordinate official positions in the governments which are yet under the influence of the same arch enemy? "The Prince of the power of the air, the Spirit which now worketh in the children of disobedience." Some say, we must put Christians in office so we can purify governments, what can a few subordinate officials do, while his Satanic Majesty is enthroned? Better first go to work to convert the devil. If you would have good fruit first make the tree good. The devil will hold his position over the governments of this world, until the angel binds him with a great chain, and shuts him up in prison where he must remain a thousand years. When this shall be done, then we read: "And the seventh angel sounded: and there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ: and he shall reign forever." Rev. xi. 15.

Until that time, the people of the Lord must wait for official positions. When the saints reign, it will be with Christ over the nations or kingdoms of earth. "And he that overcometh, and keepeth my works unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations." Rev. ii. 26. They will not reign with Christ until after the first resurrection. "And I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them; and I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and which had not worshipped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands; and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years. But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. This is the first resurrection." Rev. xx. 4, 5.

Now brethren let us search the Scriptures and learn our duties. And remember that Christ as our Leader refused an official position in this world's government. Let us follow his example. RICHARD CORBALEY.

Healdsburg, Cal.

The Savior's Love.

"The foxes have holes and the birds of the air have nests, but the Son of Man hath not where to lay his head."

I had not thought of this text, save as intimating that they who follow Christ must be as the Master, often without homes or source of income, until in reading the other day, Trench's Studies in the Gospels, I saw the Man of Sorrows pictured on the cross with no place for the poor, weary head to rest. The tears rushed to my eyes. My head can be pillowed on down when it aches. I can rest it when tired, but, oh, for him! His hands and feet pierced with cruel nails; his temples [illegible] agony—there was no [illegible] And for me, for me he endured it all! What love is here manifested! What return can I make? How show my love and gratitude to him? Only by giving myself to him, all that I have and am to his service. Whatever he asks—remembering that love—I cannot hold back. I must bring the offering and cast it at his feet, glad that I can do even this for his sake.

Oh, my brethren and sisters, have you forgotten the love of Christ? that you make no sacrifice for him? Have you forgotten that love when you see his suffering poor, unclothed and unfed, when all your worldly lusts are satisfied and nothing given for his cause? There is one that "searcheth the veins and hearts, and he will give unto every one of you according to your works." Let there be nothing against you. Leave not your first love.

S. ROXANA WINGE.

SENTENTIOUS PARAGRAPHS.

Our characters are determined more by what we love than what we know.

Every good deed is a grain of seed for the eternal harvest.

Those who live without faith, must die without hope, and stand in the judgment without it, too.

We cannot have fertilizing showers on the earth without a clouded heaven above. It is thus with our trials.

"Around a fable, not a tomb,
He willed our gathering place should be;
When going to prepare our home,
Our Savior said, Remember me."

A holy life has a voice. It speaks when the tongue is silent, and is either a constant attraction or continual reproof.

To give a man a full knowledge of true morality I should need to send him to no other book than the New Testament.

The whole question is not whether sin tempts or not, but whether it reigns or not.—Brownlow North.

The righteous man will do right—do right till he has no bread; do right till he has no drink. Chained to the stake, he sees the fagots piled about him; he sees the curling flames gnawing his quivering flesh. He will do right, clinging to the throne of God.—Goulding.

In palaces are hearts that ask,
In discontent and pride,
Why life is such a dreary task,
And all good things denied.
And hearts in poorest huts admire
How love has in their aid
(Love that not ever seems to tire)
Such rich provision made.
—Richard C. Trench.

An Italian Protestant woman was once asked to prove that the Bible was the Word of God. She was confused; she could not answer. Suddenly she asked her questioner, "How do you know there is a sun in the sky?" "I feel its warmth and see its light." "Just so," answered the woman joyfully, "the Bible lightens and warms my soul."

Almost every young person would like to be doing some "great thing," some heroic deed of goodness; but a little thing, a common every-day thing—such a thing as must be done out of sight, in daily home-duties or in school—that seems a poor kind of work to do for the Lord. Yet, to him who looketh upon the heart, the lowly common service may far outweigh, in value, the acts of splendid heroism. A selfish craving for glory may impel to these, while to be faithful in those one must have the love of God in the heart, breathing out in silent incense of obedient grateful service.

Earth, O, earth! the brightest treasures,
Like thy hopes and like thy pleasures,
Wintry winds are daily blighting;
Fate, and woe, and death plotting,
Youth and love and beauty crushing,
And the sweetest voices hushing;
Rich and poor, and old and blooming,
To one common mansion dooming;
While the cries of every nation
Mingle with those of creation;
Earth, O, earth! thus dark and dreary,
Cold, and sad, and worn, and weary,
Thou art not my home!

THE FORGETFUL WORLD.

How sad and yet how true it is that the memory of man stops at the open grave; for while wealth may carve in gilded letters, on marble obelisks or granite pile, its possessor's name and fame, 'tis but little less than mockery, and serves but to remind the passer-by of one who once ruled sceptered king on 'Change and in the busy marts of trade; but now, alas! his very name it is forgotten quite and out of mind. Even the majority of those who have made their lives noble [illegible] noble deeds [illegible] given number of revolutions around the candle, drops at the next into the flame and perishes, mark so many circuits around a given orbit, die and are forgotten. How empty a thing, therefore, is earthly fame and wealth after which the world is seeking, and how transcendantly important that our names be written in heaven where they will shine resplendent long after the gilded granite and polished marble have crumbled and mixed with their mother earth.

Make peace, if you will, with Popery; receive it into your senate; shrine it in your churches; plant in your hearts. But be ye certain—as certain that there is a heaven above you and a God over you—that the Popery thus honored and embraced is the very Popery that was loathed and degraded by the holiest of your fathers; and the same in haughtiness, the same in intolerance, which lorded it over kings, assumed the prerogative of Deity, crushed human liberty, and slew the saints of God.—Canon Melvill.

"Mr. Laurence Oliphant," says the Jewish Chronicle, "is about to publish a work entitled 'The Land of Gilead,' in which he will give an account of his recent visit to that district; and will 'advocate a beginning of the re-patriation of the Jews, by the settlement under the auspices of a land company of a considerable number of Jews from Eastern Europe and Asia, in an agricultural colony situated in the territory which formerly belonged to the tribes of Reuben and Gad.' He 'is of opinion that the region which comprises within its limits the luxuriant pastures of Jaulon, the magnificent forest-clad mountains of Gilead, the rich arable lands of Moab, and the fertile sub-tropical valley of the Jordan, cannot remain much longer neglected. Regarded from an archæological, a commercial, or a political point of view, this territory possesses an interest and importance unrivalled by any tract of country of similar extent."

A small outlying congregation of the Society of Friends consists of 100 Mexicans at Matamoras, on the borders of Mexico and Texas. A meeting of negro Quakers assembles at Helena, in Arkansas. A group of thirty Syrian Friends reside on Mount Lebanon near Beyroot. Small gatherings of the Society are also reported in Norway, Denmark, Germany, and France, while about 300 members are scattered over Australia.

THE RESTITUTION.

E. A. CHAPLIN, Editor.

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, DEC. 22, 1880.

NOTICE!

According to regulation, the Annual Meeting of the Stockholders of the Christian Publishing Association, will meet on the fourth Monday of December (27th) inst, for the purpose of electing a new Board of Directors, and such other business as may come before the meeting.

E. K. BARNHILL, Sec'y.

WITH the present number we close the Vol. of our paper for the year 1880 On the first week of Jan. 1881, we hope to greet our readers with THE RESTITUTION in an entirely new dress, and in an enlarged form.

THE December number of Our Rest has been received. Bro. Wilson states that the publishers have determined to issue this serial as a semi-monthly next year. The subscription price will be one dollar and fifty cents.

THE latest news leads us to conclude that the Jews in Germany will be forced to leave that country. In God about to compel them to return to their Father-land—πατρὶς—patrida—home-country! Heb. xi. 14. There is already a plan for the re-settlement of the rich country east of the Jordan with a Jewish colony.

To Our Readers.

With this number we close the fourth year of our connection with THE RESTITUTION as Editor. We have passed some very despondent hours in these departed years. As, is well known, the paper has been in part dependent upon the free-will, loving offerings of its friends for its continuance. By these sacrifices quite the larger share of its indebtedness, also, has been liquidated. In these four years we have learned what it is really to trust in God. We can say, with humble reverence, that we fully believe that God has been our helper, and, also, that if he had not helped, there would have been no such paper as THE RESTITUTION in existence today. When the weight has become too heavy for us to carry, we have "cast our burden on the Lord," and he has helped us over the hard places so far. He has prompted our sympathiz- ... sisters to ... friend. THE RESTITUTION has gone to the prisoner, immured within the gloomy walls, to tell of One that not only saves from sin, but who will deliver from the more gloomy prison of the grave. It has gone to the Asylum, to tell, those, whose grief-burdened hearts have enshrouded the mental faculties, of Him who will restore us all to our right minds when made like him. We have no moneyed capital to draw upon for the year to come. Like other years our bank balance will be small after paying some pressing dues. Still we trust. When Bank deposits fail, we shall check by prayer upon God our Heavenly Father as we have in the past. He will, in some way, signify our wants to his faithful stewards.

Papers heralding the coming of our Lord have but a very short mission to fulfill in the future. The outlook for two or three years, just next to come, is most startlingly ominous. If we pass the threshold of 1881 we shall feel that we enter the contracted circle of "a grand and awful time." The miracle of the resurrection and translation of the redeemed church is impending. The skirmishing parties of those mighty forces marshaling for the war of the great day, and the final conflict at Armageddon, have been thrown out, and are already commencing the preliminary contests. Earth's sister orbs are moving into that unwonted position from which the scientist foredooms the direst consequences—the pestilence waiting in darkness, and the destruction wasting at noonday. The powers of evil challenge the Omnipotent and the long pent-up judgments are about to sweep this world of iniquity with the besom of destruction. How blessed it will be in that day to "abide under the shadow of the Almighty"—to be hid "in his pavilion." With the handful remnant of the left-over pilgrims we elect to go forward. We feel—we know—that our paper is needed. At the commencement of each year, since our connection with the paper, we have not known whence its financial support was to come. God however knew, and we went forward. We do not now see how all its future demands will be met, but God does, and we trust him still! The solemn march of ages has brought us into "the time of the end." In the fragmentary part of this dispensation of grace that remains, a year measures much. Soon will soon be on the records of the past—as with the years beyond the flood. We bid it farewell to enter the years of destiny that close this gospel age. O church of God, wake from slumber—do thy last work—and prepare to meet thy God. May it not be ours to look back upon misimproved privileges and opportunities forever lost.

"Wherefore, beloved, seeing that ye look for such things, be diligent that ye may be found of him in peace, without spot, and blameless."

Adieu to 1880.

Thy last bell's strike, departing year,
The solemn tolls with awe we hear:—
Adieu, brief point in age's dow,
Sped like a shaft from bended bow.

O mystic time! no pause, no stay,
But coming, gone, of thee we say:—
Stream from a past infinity,
To flow the ages yet to be.

Far gone the year since glory-skies
Beamed brightly o'er lost Paradise;
Long past is that since Stars of Morn
In hymnals sang: —God's Child is born!

'Twas thine to see proud Babel stand
Queen City on Euphrates' strand;
'Twas thine to see each empire's sway,
And thine to see—all pass away.

Some coming year, now very nigh,
On shining pathway down the sky,
Earth's coming King our eyes shall view;
Departing year—Adieu, adieu.

S. A. C.

Dec. 26, 1880.

SELECTIONS.

[Louisville Courier-Journal.]

All About the Kurds and Their Intrusion of Persia.

The last important movement in Asia is the invasion of Persia by the Kurdish tribes.

Of course, it is known that for a long time Persia has had to keep up a small standing army of 30,000 men to repel the occasional descents of these wild tribes upon the Shah's territory, but the present movement, under Shiek Obidullah, who is next in rank in the Mohammedan church to the Sheriff of Mecca, is of some magnitude, and is well organized. Obidullah has under him 15,000 or twenty thousand men, armed with Martini-Henry rifles, to a great extent, and nearly all finely mounted. The invaders have been joined by a number of Persian Kurds, and they have experienced but one repulse so far. The strength of the invading army can be immensely increased, and so formidable is the outlook that Shah Nasr-ed-din has applied to Russia for aid, and it is reported the Czar has given a favorable reply. As the Kurds are mainly Turkish sub- ... resent such aid ... comply with ... Anglo-Turkish agreement, which requires England to come to the defense of Turkey when the latter is attacked in Asia. By the Gladstone Government, however, this treaty or agreement, which was one of Beaconsfield's curious arrangements, is not regarded as binding England to go into an expensive war to maintain the rotten Turkish power in Asia.

The Kurds are said to be possessed of an incurable ambition to erect an independent kingdom of Kurdistan and drive the Turks out, besides conquering Persia and whatever other territory they can get. The programme can be accomplished if none of the European powers interfere.

Kurdistan is a region of lofty terraces and mountains, separated by deep valleys, leading from the plains Mesopotamia and Assyria to the high tableland of Iran and ancient Armenia. These mountains are full of defiles and inaccessible fastnesses, and the scenery is described by travelers as perfectly magnificent. The mountains abound in plunging, roaring torrents, and ancient fortifications which no power dare assail. Far up in these retreats there are certain Kurdish tribes who have never acknowledged the sovereignty of any earthly being. Here these people have dwelt for ages. Xenophon describes them, living 400 years before Christ, exactly as they do now, speaking the same language, having the same customs.

In the Roman Asiatic campaigns these Kurds or Carduchi were encountered, but they were never conquered by either Greeks or Romans. The Kurds are believed, by some ethnologists, to have been the founders of the Assyrian dynasties and their successors. The Armenian writers refer to them as the descendants of the ancient Medes, the Armenian Kurds having originally been colonized in Armenia by King Tigranes, after his invasion of Media, six centuries before Christ. The Kurds are doubtless the remnant of the ancient Medes. Saladin, the great opponent of the crusaders, was a Kurd, and several Princes, now living south of Groomiah, claim to be descended from him. Two or three Persian Kings have been Kurds, and the language of the tribes is somewhat similar to the Persian, although it is only an oral and not a written language. Michaelis says that the Kurds belong to the great Medo-Persian family, and if they are the descendants of the old Chaldeans, who formerly inhabited these mountains, they are also related to the Medes and Persians, and are altogether a different people, in language and descent, from the Assyrians, Syrians and Babylonians."

The Kurds throughout Western Asia number about 2,000,000, most of them hitherto acknowledging allegiance to the Turkish or Persian Government. The Turks have been exceptionally cruel to them, and the Kurds entertain a profound hatred toward the Turks. The character of these people is predatory; they move swiftly on fine horses and "loot" caravans to supply their necessities. The Kurds of the plain are agriculturists and traders. The mountain Kurds are robbers, as brave and fearless as lions, and exceedingly formidable in a movement like that under Sheik Obidullah. A Kurdish chief's residence is almost inaccessible, and very strongly fortified. When on an expedition they gallop in large companies and make a good deal of noise and a great display of colors, owing to the bright, fantastic dress they wear. Their religion is a mixture of Mohammedism, Paganism and Christianity, some tribes, however, being very bigoted Mohammedans.

A few successes on the part of Sheik Obidullah would give him the support of all the Persian Kurds, and, in the decrepit condition of the Shah's Government, he might soon be master in Persia, if Russia does not interfere. Then, if she does not, the rebellion will be too formidable for Turkey to put down, occupied as the Porte now is with a struggle for the preservation of its European territory.

LETTER DRAWER.

Editor Restitution:—Now as I am a reader of your most excellent paper, I always like to drop a line to the benefit of others so far as my ability is concerned. I find that by history, for more than three hundred years after the death of the lovely Son of God that the whole topic of conversation whether in public or private was in reference to his death. Now should we not be concerned in reference to his return, for the purpose of winding up the great drama of human affairs and bringing about the Restitution of things spoken by the mouth of all God's holy Prophets since the world began. Therefore let us earnestly contend for the faith once delivered to the saints (which were, at Jerusalem). That we ... have a right to the tree of life, a... ter in through the gates into the ... is my prayer.

M. E. BOYD,

Ogden, I...

"Oh, how sweet it will be in that beautiful land,
So free from all sorrow and pain
With songs on our lips and with harps in our hands
To meet one another again."

Editor Restitution:—Enclosed will postoffice order $5.00, to be distributed as follows: My subscription for the next year, the balance $3.00 for the "Restitution fund," expect to send more during the season if necessary as I expect it will be. Dear RESTITUTION your weekly visits are welcomed every week, perused with satisfaction. I am seldom at church of any denomination, being so deaf, cannot hear preaching, but thankfully that I can see to read. I would be glad to meet the Brotherhood at the meeting of the quarterly conference, to be held at Plymouth, the last of this month, if I cannot be there in person I will be there in mind and heart and pray that good may result,

CHRISTINA JAMESON.

Eaton, Ohio.

Editor Restitution:—Enclosed find money order for $10.00, two dollars of this amount is from Miss Clara Fitch. Also give me credit on my subscription account for $2.00, and send me tracts to the value of one dollar, as per enclosed list. The remaining $3.00 to my contribution to the "Restitution fund." I have hoped to send you the names of several new subscribers, but have only gained one so far but may do more yet. I have hoped to help more myself, but have been building me a house this year and am therefore rather straightened financially. It is right I suppose for us to build habitations for ourselves and our families, but while doing so, we should not forget to contribute something to the upbuilding of "the temple of the living God," and by aiding THE RESTITUTION we are preaching the gospel and may be instrumental in God's hands, in adding lively stones to his temple. I enjoy THE RESTITUTION, and have I believe, read all that has been published in every number so far this year, and while I enjoy reading all, I find some articles more instructive than others, and these I enjoy most. I could wish there were more of the instructive sort sometimes. For example exegeses of passages of Scripture, by the Editor, which I believe, have not appeared as often as they otherwise would for want of space. Please do not allow this letter to crowd out anything of the kind. Fraternally yours,

J. T. SMITH.

Hillsboro, Ohio

Editor Restitution;—I want to inquire through THE RESTITUTION if there are any brethren nearer to me than Cleveland? I live twenty-two miles south of Cleveland and about fourteen miles from Akron. If there are any that take THE RESTITUTION, will they please write to me? My address is West Richfield, Summit county, Ohio. JUNIUS THORP.

Editor Restitution:—I write, begging you to renew your visits to this office, for I have been much depressed since your visits ceased. I hear no preaching in my neighborhood except what is based on man's supposed inherent immortality. I hear nothing about the kingdom of God or of the whereabouts of the saints' future inheritance, which is evidently a prominent part of that gospel of the kingdom which we must believe in order to be saved. I inclose you two dollars. I wish it were more. Nothing but poverty has kept us separate so long.

With many, many good wishes for your welfare and for your success in enlightening your readers on the glorious gospel of the kingdom of God, I subscribe myself in love and kindness, yours, etc., A. K. BOWLES.

Delaney, Lewis County, Va.

Editor Restitution:—In taking a look at my past work I sometimes become almost discouraged at seeing how slow the truth advances in this part of Kansas. I have been reasoning to the people on the subjects of Immortality and the Kingdom of God, and the Blessing of the Nations in the Ages to Come; but the only effect, as far as I can see, those glorious truths are only rejected—that is, by the mass of the people to whom I have preached, although I rejoice that one or two in each vicinity receives the truth. Two in the neighborhood where I reside, Brother McCalon and his wife, have become intelligent believers in the gospel of the kingdom and rejoice to learn the grand central fact that God is love. My prayer is, that they may go forward with boldness to meet the current of sectarianism, and finally gain a home with all true believers in the kingdom of God. Dear brother, I trust the Lord will give you health to discharge your editorial duties. I have read different religious papers lately, and, in my judgment, THE RESTITUTION teaches more Bible truth than any other paper that has come under my observation.

I remain as ever your brother in the One Faith, J. M. LEWELLEN.

Furnace, Kan.

Editor Restitution;—THE RESTITUTION is all the preaching we have. When I say we, I mean myself and wife. We are here all alone; no one to cheer us up but THE RESTITUTION. Oh, how welcome its weekly visits are to us! Oh, how consoling it is to us! We have taken the paper since Brother Marsh was the editor, and we hail the glad tidings it weekly brings. Will some brother call on us? Can't Brother Stephenson give us a call next summer? Our love to all of the One Faith.

Yours, in hope of unending life,

JONAS C. SHANK.

Frankfort, Ind.

Editor Restitution:—Once more I address you to let you know that I still live, as my time is about expired for our much loved paper—THE RESTITUTION. It is all the preaching I have. My age and infirmities keep me in doors this winter, so it gives me pleasure and delight to have its weekly visits. I read Brother Weethee's discourses on the "Coming Age" with light, also the precious Letter Drawer I read each week. I feel my time is short in this mortal life, but blessed be God my hope is in Christ and the resurrection—a hope that reaches beyond the confines of the tomb; a hope that, amidst the afflictions and tears of this life comforts and cheers my heart. O it is blessed to live by faith on the Son of God. Dear brother, may we ever enjoy his smiles here, and when this short life is ended here, may you and I with all the redeemed, have an abundant entrance into God's everlasting kingdom. I send you one dollar for another six month's, and may you still have health to perform the labors of editor; and may it be sustained till Jesus comes. I read with delight the Restoration of Israel. It is so often spoken of in the Sacred Scriptures. I see God's plan unfolded in his blessed Word, and see the time for its fulfillment is not far in the future. I see the need of full consecration by prayer and watchfulness, to be ready to meet him who suffered and died for us.

This from your unworthy sister in Christ, HARRIET OLVEY.

Grand, Mo.

NEWS ITEMS.

FOREIGN.

IRELAND.

LONDON, Dec. 17.—A tenant right meeting was held at Loughall, County Armagh, to-day. Those present were principally Orangemen. A mob of fifty persons took possession of the platform, which they destroyed. A meeting was then held in an adjoining field. Resolutions were passed in favor of a peasant proprietary.

The Daily Telegram says that the government contemplates proclaiming martial law in the disturbed districts of Ireland. Lord Kenmare, who has large landed estates in Killarney, has discharged 300 laborers for connection with the Land League. Trouble is expected to result.

ARMENIANS FIGHTING THE TURKISH TROOPS.

ST. PETERSBURG, Dec. 17.—An Armenian journal publishes an account of a sanguinary fight between the inhabitants of a village in Turkish Armenia and the Turkish troops. The Russian Consul at Van has gone to the scene of disturbance.

GREECE AND TURKEY—THE POWERS DISCUSSING ARBITRATION.

LONDON, Dec. 20.—A correspondent at Vienna says the idea of arbitration appears to engage the whole attention of the Powers who are seriously discussing it. The idea meets with no opposition whatever.

A dispatch from Athens states that none of the powers have put diplomatic pressure on Greece with reference to her warlike preparations. The French and German Ministers have merely personally advised prudence.

TURKISH FINANCES.

BERLIN, Dec. 20.—Herr Wiltendorf, the Prussian official who undertook to reform the Turkish finances, has given up the mission as hopeless, and he will quit Constantinople shortly.

LONDON, Dec. 19.—A St. Petersburg dispatch says: "Russia has ordered four regiments of cavalry and five battalions of infantry to proceed to the assistance of the Persians against the Kurds. The action settles all doubt as to Russian relations with Persia, and clearly outlines Russian purpose to make an ally of Persia in the matter of the route to India.

ST. PETERSBURG, Dec. 18.—The Kurds have returned to Turkish territory.

BERLIN, Dec. 19.—A meeting of 2,000 persons was held yesterday, at which resolutions were passed in favor of the suppression of the liberty of the Jews; to return no Liberal to Parliament who will not promise to vote for such suppression, and to buy nothing from Jewish shops or firms.

CALCUTTA, Dec. 19.—The Santhal tribes in India threaten a rebellion.

A terrible fire has partially destroyed Rangoon, the principal commercial town of the Burmese dominions.

DUBLIN, Dec. 18.—Parnell's effigy was burned in Portadown to-night amid wild excitement of the Orangemen.

CORRESPONDENCE.

Wherefore come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord, and touch not the unclean, and I will receive you, and will be a Father to you, and you shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty. 2 Cor. vi. 17, 18.

The apostle of the Gentiles presents five interrogative arguments against union with unbelievers, after having given the explicit command, "Be you not unequally yoked together with unbelievers." It may be a nice point, and require some grave reflection and attention to know just when and how far we may co-operate with the ungodly or unbelievers, and not violate this plain injunction; but one thing is certain, no contract can be made with any party to carry on any thing infidel or impure, and no society, social or political, can be joined by Christians, which is not of faith, "For whatsoever is not of faith, is sin." Rom. xiv. 23. The Divine command, in relation to all such is, "Touch not, taste not, handle not." Col. ii. 21. Loosing sight of all society or party yokes or bands, as friends or neighbors, we may unite with any man in the accomplishment of any deed or work which is good in itself, and right for any man to do; but, the moment we form or plant any society, made up in part, of unbelievers, professing to carry out the objects of faith or Christian works, which the church of God was founded to accomplish, we become disrespectful to Christ and to God, and evince more regard for the wisdom of man than God, and attempt to do in the name of man what should be done only "in the name of the Lord Jesus," giving honor to man instead of "glorying in our Lord Jesus the Christ." "Cursed is the man that trusteth in man, and whose heart departeth from the Lord," "but blessed is the man whose hope the Lord is."

If we want God to be our Father we must be his sons, or not like sons. His only promises to be our Father on conditions. "Come out from among them and touch no unclean thing." We have before us two fathers,—the Devil and God—and which shall we choose? God says he will be a father to us. O what wisdom, what power, what blessing cluster around that dear name! "As a father pitieth his children, so God pitieth them that fear him." Great should be our faith in him. "Our fathers trusted in him, and were delivered. They trusted in him and were not confounded." We should "cast all our care upon him, for he careth for us." How many there are who profess to believe in God that seem to think he will do nothing for them! While the wicked are without God and without hope God is our Father. Power, riches, wisdom, strength, honor, glory and blessing, all belong to him. We cannot doubt his ability to bless us, and shall we doubt his willingness or mercy? See that son who loves his good father, far away from the parental roof, in sickness and distress. Hear him. "If my father only knew my condition, how quick he would fly to my relief." "O send him a telegram and tell him where I am, and he will come for me." Could you make that son doubt his father's care? No, indeed. Just here we hear the loving apostle say: "Cast not away your confidence which has great reward." "He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all, how shall he not with him freely give us all things?" Our blessed heavenly Father has given us the greatest possible evidence that he loves us and will be a Father to us. But, alas! how hard it is to make some confide in his parental care! Are they sick? Tell them that he will raise them up if they will call upon him and follow his advice. Tell them to send for the ancients of the church and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord, and he will raise them up, and it seems like an idle tale to them. No, say they; this is not an age of miracles. Perhaps they will send for the doctor, and then for the minister to pray that God may heal them; but they must not believe he will. "This is not an age of miracles." How difficult to make them believe that God will do anything more for them than he would for an infidel.

Two men are sick; one an infidel, the other a Christian, worshipping God in spirit and truth. Having a family depending on him for support, his wife and little ones weep around his bed; his brethren pray God to raise him up, but, alas, "this is not an age of miracles." He must run his chance with the infidel. If God can, he will not do anything for him more than he would for the unbeliever. If the doctor can cure one, he may the other. If not, they must both die. What folly! We may as well have no Father, as to have one that will do nothing for us. What meaning in the endearing and happy promise, "I will be a Father unto you!" O what love on the part of God to call us sons! He is able, he is willing and always near. Let us say with David, "He forgiveth all our iniquities, and healeth all our diseases." "He is rich unto all that call upon him." "All things work together for good to them that love him and are called according to his purpose." "As poor, yet making many rich," said one of the apostles. Have they made us rich? God has chosen the poor of this world, rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which he has promised to them that love him. No matter how poor in this world, we have a rich Father who has everlasting wealth in store for us. May God give us grace and faith to look beyond these earthly trials, and to see his heavenly blessings through all the dark clouds that may arise in our horizon, and enable us to say, all is well. Our heavenly Father knows all our wants and will supply them. Praise his high and holy name.

J. J. WARNER.

THE HITTITE LANGUAGE.

"Of late years," says the Jewish Chronicle, "many fragments of Hittite art have been discovered, which contained characters which baffled all attempts at decipherment. The only hope of recovering a lost tongue from its inscriptions rests in obtaining some translation in a known language. The Rosetta stone offered this key in Greek for Egyptian hieroglyphics, and cuneiform was first deciphered by similar means. At last, by the sagacity of Professor Sayce, of Oxford, a similar help has been found for the mysterious Hittite inscriptions." The key consists of a small silver boss found some years ago in Smyrna, with an inscription in cuneiform and another in characters, which now turn out to be Hittite. Professor Sayce, at a recent meeting of the Society of Biblical Archæology, read a paper explaining his interpretation of this inscription, and "the secretary of the society announced that a font of Hittite ... had already been ...

POETRY.

Faith—A Parable.

J. T. GELLEELY.

I'll venture out on the waters dark
In my fragile bark,
And I heed not the sway of the swelling tide,
For I know that the pilot that sits at my side
Is cool and brave.

He telleth the trick of the treacherous waves;
His eye is keen, and His hand is sure,
And His hold on the rudder secure;
When weary, to rest I will calmly go
To the cabin below,
And sleep till the din of the storm is done,
And the shadows are shunning the sun;
For while my hammock swings to and fro
And the lamp burns low,
And the waters splash on the battened hatch,
There's a ceaseless watch
Above, on the deck, too dark to see.
There's one still on the look out for me,
And His restless eye and restless hand
Is bringing my bark to land.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Nevertheless When the Son of Man Cometh, Shall He Find Faith on the Earth? Luke xviii. 8, (Or this Belief).

Faith, or this belief, which amounts to a positive assurance. How few and lamentably few are the true believers in the second coming of Christ—literally, and personally, as he went away,—to set up his kingdom, to take the reins of universal government; to execute the judgment written, and to restore the revolted planet, earth, to its original glory and beauty, and to re-people it with a race of holy, sinless beings, governed by just and righteous laws; when the golden rule of the Bible will be strictly adhered to; no Canaanites, will be in the land, no Gentile customs and practices to usurp or take the place of the just and holy law that goes forth from Zion, but each will find a brother in every one as true as steel, no covetousness, no sharp practice, no lending on usury, nor taking unlawful interest, nor oppressing a poor brother; no one to lord it over God's heritage. All will stand on an even platform. Love, peace and harmony will reign supreme throughout earth's wide domain; when the Son of man cometh. This amounts to a virtual confession that he will come again, which fact runs through, and underlies the whole volume of divine inspiration. This fact is settled positively, and as sure as the laws that govern the universe, or that maintain the throne of the eternal Jehovah.

If it shall become a demonstrated fact that only eight persons, the number that was saved in Noah's ark, would be saved, as I now feel, I would strive with all the power of my being to be one of them. Find faith on the earth—in this is contained a strong intimation that there would be very little. Hast thou faith? have it to thyself before God. Happy is he that condemneth not himself in that thing which he alloweth. Romans xiv. 22.

Looking at the churches, beginning with their commencement, when they were an humble devoted people for faith and good works, and following them in their history down to the present, what a wide and fearful departure from the truth of God, and first principles. Take for a sample the Baptists, who were the most consistent in their faith and doctrines of any of the sects and denominations; compare their early history with their present, take the public declaration of faith, put forth by John Bunyan and forty elders of the Baptist church, 270 years ago. They set forth a statement of their faith viz: that Christ would come again to the earth, to set up his kingdom, to raise the dead, and reign in glory upon the earth for an age, which would be the millennium. They held strictly to an immersion in water—as the only mode of baptism taught in the Scriptures, and would not fellowship nor commune with any unbaptized professors. How is it to-day? they still hold to an immersion in water for baptism, which is Scriptural. But for a moment observe the contrast between Christ, his apostles, and the early church, and a fashionable baptism at the tabernacle at Brooklyn, N. Y. as stated in the N. Y. Tribune. Twelve women and six men were the number baptized. The first was a young lady tastefully dressed in white flannel, trimmed with white satin ribbon, white satin slippers, and careful to exhibit them to the audience.

I forbear any comment otherwise than to show a wide and fearful departure from the simplicity of the Apostolic, and early churches, this is only a fair sample of the modern sects and denominations. The tendency of the age is to get suddenly rich! to worldly mindedness, to be popular, to be like the nations around about. Happy indeed will it be for the little body of the Abrahamic faith if they maintain their integrity in Israel's God, continue to hold to sound doctrine, maintain good works and earnestly contend for the faith once delivered to the saints.

In the parable, from which our text is taken, strong, fervent, and importuning prayer, and its results, are set forth, as powerful motives for us to cultivate this virtue; Christ's teaching is backed up by his example. When the redemption and salvation of the world rested with ponderous weight upon him, and the faithful performance of his Father's will, he spent whole nights in prayer—"Cold mountains, and the midnight air, witnessed the fervor of his prayer."

God's servants, from the beginning, and through the ages that have passed, have been characterized as men of faith, and of much earnest, fervent prayer; and shall His servants, upon whom the end, the world, or age, has come, be less devoted, to save themselves and their fellow men from destruction?

It is when his elect cry day and night unto him; it is then he will avenge them speedily. We all believe that we are of the elect. Honest confession is good for the soul. Let us carefully review—each one, for even one year, his own individual condition. How much, and how earnestly have we prayed, and desired that Christ would come? Are we united in this one great theme, "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly?" It is then, and not till then, that he will avenge his dear chosen waiting ones. It is painful to know that many of the professed followers of Christ, never in their prayers utter or use the last words of the Revelator or our Savior's model form of words, given to his disciples at their request, "Lord teach us to pray, as John also taught his disciples."

We are to use the form of sound words, or the words of inspiration. These are proper and essential, but they will not avail without the earnest desires of the heart, accompanied by the unction, or influence of the Holy Spirit, uttered in humble confidence, with strong unyielding faith in the word and promise of God.

It is strongly intimated by the Savior that the elect just before their deliverance will be in very straitened circumstances, and will cry day and night unto him for deliverance—men, who are prospering in business, and who have an abundance of the good things of this life, will not be very apt to engage in this earnest, ardent struggle for Christ to come. There is a consistency which characterises our faith, our words and our actions; and the motive that prompts to act, cannot well be concealed. Many will mix and meet with the true servants of God, who are only nominally in the body; whose hearts are brimful of the world. Strange infatuation! men may deceive the church, and undoubtedly do; but who can be so presumptuous, or so stupid, as to imagine, or even think for a moment to meet the Judge of quick and dead whose eyes are a flame of fire. "Honest confession is good for the soul," yes, and an honest man is the noblest work of God. God will have none but honest men, therefore but few will enter into eternal life when Christ comes to gather the elect, don't be deceived my dear brethren, whatsoever a man sows, that shall he reap. There are three definitions to the word honest or honesty.

1. Moral honesty. Some would be highly offended if we were to charge them with immorality, yet they will make a good bargain, or take from a brother what the law of God strictly forbids. Oh, its the custom!

2. Dishonest dealing with the word of God, putting light for darkness, and darkness for light. How fearfully do men turn the truth of God into a lie to suit a theory, to sustain a creed, or a heathen dogma. They not only deal dishonestly with God's word, but they charge God with injustice, if not with blasphemy. God will hold the men of this generation to a strict account for a false belief, and a false application of his holy word and positive law.

3. Man's dishonest dealing with himself and the word, and positive law of God. Herein is made manifest the weakness, the folly, and the deception of the human heart. We are either not soundly converted from Gentileism, or we are blind as to the character and attributes of God and the requirements of his law. What blind infatuation to set the hypocrite and play the fool, deceive the church and ourselves—miss the kingdom and eternal life, and all the glories that are to be awarded to the pure, the good and the true at the revelation of Jesus Christ. No mathematical calculation can approximate or enumerate the true value of an honest man.

Find faith on the earth! Go where we may among the sects and denominations; attend their conferences, their general assemblies, their synods, their weekly gatherings for preaching the gospel, or their weekly prayer and conference meetings, you never hear one word about the coming of Christ or faith in his return to the inheritance of the purchased possession. It is all in the opposite scale—dying and going to heaven. Go into their meetings, talk about the coming of Christ, the resurrection of the dead—what a hubbub! You will be attracted as we have been, before you get out of the house. It is strange, Mr. Bond, that you cannot talk in our meetings without bringing up your peculiar views! Be it known to all the dwellers of men upon the earth, that the peculiar views we hold and teach, were those of God's holy prophets of Christ, and he witnessed a good confession before men, so says the word. The apostles bore not their lives unto death to preach Jesus and the resurrection, and his coming again in power and great glory, to set up his kingdom and reign on the earth. A long catalogue or list of ancient worthies enumerated in the eleventh chapter of Hebrews, these all died in the faith. What faith? The faith of Abraham. He was the father of the faithful. His faith embraced the whole scheme of redemption. The first promise God made to him. Gen. xii. 3: "And in thee shall all families of the earth be blessed." Verse 7: "And the Lord appeared unto Abraham, and said, Unto thy seed will I give this land: and there builded he an altar unto the Lord, who appeared unto him." "Thy seed, which is Christ." Gal. ii. 16.

In all the promises God made with Abraham and the fathers of the Hebrew nation, he says not one word about going to heaven at death, or at any other time. No, not one word within the lids of the Bible. How strange! The whole fabric of modern theology is built upon the false foundation of the immortality of the soul, upon which the Bible is as silent as the house of death. Can it be possible that great men, good men, yea, honest men, professing the Christian name, can be thus blinded! It has been and still is a mystery I cannot unravel. I know many who are patterns of piety, holy and godly living, who far outrank some who profess to be looking for Christ's second coming, who talk long and loud about the churches being the apostasy, can they become apostate from the faith if they never possessed it? That the Roman Catholic church was once the church of God and held the true faith, I think there is no doubt; and that the Baptist, in their early organization held the true faith, or nearly so, we believe. Did the Episcopalians, the Presbyterians, the Methodists, the Campbellites or Disciples, with many lesser lights, profess the one Lord, the one faith and the one baptism? What is he going to do with the good among the sects? This question we put to a fair-chance believer. He promptly answered: He will gather them into the kingdom as subjects. They will be saved so as by fire, but their works will be burned up. We want more than barely to escape being burned up. It is our privilege to so believe, and so live and do as to have an abundant entrance administered unto us into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Not of works, lest any man should boast, but through the righteousness of faith in Jesus Christ, doing and keeping his commandments. Verily, when the Son of Man cometh, shall he find this faith and these works in the professed church of God?

Dear brethren of the One Faith, do we realize our true state and condition? Are we right, and have we acted wisely in proclaiming to the men of this generation that the next event in God's arrangement is the coming of the Son of God? I would not be wise above what is written, nor would I have a zeal that is not according to knowledge, nor would I have a faith that is not well pleasing to God. So far as I am able with my limited knowledge of the deep things of God, as recorded in the Scriptures, to understand God's purpose and arrangement, all appears plain. I have had a long experience and many a hard fought battle with the Old Man of the flesh. The enemy we have to contend with is an old, arch, subtle foe; has had 6,000 years experince; he has out-generaled and mastered the saints many a time. He is not less skillful, I assure you, in these last moments of Gentile time than formerly. Don't be deceived. Give no place to him or his evil prompting. No, not for a moment. Courage, my dear brethren; the Lord will shortly bruise Satan under our feet. What an eternal age of peace and glory awaits the faithful who have made a covenant with God by sacrifice.

How sudden and unlooked for will his command be to the masses: yea, and to the foolish virgins. How few are crying day and night unto him, Oh, come and avenge thine elect. There is but little that seems to disturb the public mind at the present. Only a few steamboat accidents; only an occasional cyclone; a few fires. Well, the families in the old world are rather unusual. Crime is on the increase, but not much above the increase of the population. But, just see what an addition, both in number and in wealth, to the churches! Surely Christ is not coming under such circumstances as these. Said a doubting

By Works Was Faith Made Perfect. Jas. ii 22.

"It is not every one who saith Lord, Lord, who shall enter into the Kingdom of heaven." There must be more than a calling Jesus Lord. You must do the will of God, you must obey the requirements of Christ. "Therefore, said he, whosoever heareth these sayings of mine and doeth them not I will liken unto a foolish man who, without a foundation, built his house on the sand; and the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell, and great was the fall of it. And whosoever heareth these sayings of mine and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man which built his house upon a rock; and the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell not, for it was founded upon a rock." He builds on the rock of ages who is true to the convictions of truth and duty; who hears the words or the teachings of Christ and puts them in practice, by a patient continuance in well doing. He lays up a good foundation for the time to come, and becomes an heir of God, entitled to all the rights and immunities of the kingdom of heaven. He shall rise in the first resurrection, be immortalized and glorified and have an entrance administered unto him abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. He shall be a king and priest unto God, and forever associated with Christ in the government of the world. Obedience alone proves the truth of our profession, and establishes our title to the rewards of faith. Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city.

Wolves are threatening large districts within hail of populous towns on the northern shore of the Gulf of Finland. Eleven children have, during two months, near Hango, been carried off by these ferocious marauders, stealing down from the neighboring woods to the very thresholds of the peasants' houses. The Finnish authorities have offered a reward for the head of every wolf killed or captured. Two kinds of dogs are indicated as most serviceable in wolf hunting. These are sheep dogs and bulldogs; the former to drive the game and bring it into a circle, and the latter to pull it down.

LETTER RECEIPTS.

SUBSCRIPTIONS.

S.Noe	$1 00	J.M.Castle	50
D.Howard	1 00	E.D.Adams	1 00
E.A.Warner	1 00	J.Welshans	2 00
B.Cortsley	2 00	A.postorff	2 00
J.Harris	1 00	J.Richardson	1 00
A.K.Bowles	1 00	P.Price	1 00
I.Renner	1 00	J.T.Smith	1 00
J.Warner	1 00	L.J.McClure	2 00
J.A.Rinker	1 00	C.S.Hughes	1 00
Christian Lamson	2 00	Samuel and Moore	1 00
W.Alley	1 00	W.Platts	1 00
J.Horn	2 00	Catherine Mann	1 00
J.Thorp	2 00	Margette Clover	2 00
E.W.Tremillion	1 00	J.Stevens	1 00
T.Adams	1 00	J.Whitesting	1 00
Mrs.Crichfield	75	J.Murphy	1 00
G.Andrews	1 00	P.Sievers	2 00
J.Schlar	1 00	S.Collver	2 00

BOOKS AND TRACTS.

S.Collyer	10	N.Mills	31
E.D.Adams	50	J.Thorp	20
W.Davis	15	E.W.Tremillion	10
J.W.Cotton	50	Mrs.Crichfield	25
J.L.Wines	10	B.Keller	2 00
H.Ridlebark	75	J.M.Castle	1 80
J.H.Woodruff	13	Blanford	2 00
P.Tuttle and rest	21	J.Rowe	1 00
J.Walsh	1 00	P.Sievers	34
J.Martin	90	Mary Billmeier	15
W.D.Platts	40	E.Miller	1 20
W.Platts	20	J.Renner	19
A.Scopp	50	P.A.Strong	1 00
A.Cox	30

RESTITUTION FUND.

Amount published previous to this	$482 19
Christian Lamson	3 00
J.T.Smith	4 00
Linda Chrysler	4 00
W.Platts	1 00

The fifty-fourth number of the Western Farmer's Almanac, for 1881, has come to hand. It embraces a complete well-arranged ephemeris, and, in addition, contains a large amount of valuable information for the farmer, gardener, and stock-raiser. An article on the sun, by Prof. R. A. Proctor, is a most useful description of the great central source of the heat, life, and light of our planetary system. "The Tramps Story," by Will Carleton, is a real racy, characteristic tale. This Half Year-Book will sell itself. Published by John P. Morton & Co. Send 10 cents for a copy. Address Western Farmer's Almanac, 172 & 174 Main st., Louisville, Ky.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

My address is Room 66, Major Block, Chicago, Ill.
JOEL A. SIMONDS.

I will be at Antioch, Marshall co., Ind., the first Sunday in Jan. 1881, at 11 o'clock a. m., and give a series of lectures on the plan of the ages, or the vindication of the true character of God.
JOHN FOORE.

A NEW TRACT.

Christ's Kingdom!

Where is it? What is it?

Being a discourse delivered at Berwick, Pa., by Jos. Lacier, of Mauch Chunk, Pa. This is a 32 page tract, neatly printed and should have a wide circulation. Send to this office for it. Price 10c.

Astronomical Etiology, or

STAR PROPHECIES

Containing considerations on the earth from 1881 to last. By M. L. Sharp, D. D., and others. Published by Theresa Wilson. Also contains an appendix by the publisher. 72 pages. 25 cents a copy.

HYMNS OF THE ADVENT

Is the name of a new Hymn Book just out, compiled by Chas. H. Becker—compiler of the "Hymns of the Morning"—and published by W. N. Pile, of Rockford, Mass.

Mr. Becker complies in this new work the "cream of the Morning" and a fresh and rare [illegible] of music. As an appendix he adds a select [illegible] "Favorite Hymns" largely composed of [illegible] matter as a household word. Those of [illegible] who have been asking for "Hymns of [illegible] our brethren [illegible] a good time, can now be supplied [illegible] which is superior to other old ones [illegible] with this one book. [illegible] all of it and away we and [illegible] in that it embraces [illegible] having the "Christian [illegible] beautiful songs. The [illegible] book will find the exactly [illegible] Psalmodist" and he wants [illegible] them. Price what they want.

Send to this office for only 40 cents.

NEW EDITION.

A LETTER TO A FRIEND

By MRS. O. O. WOODRUFF.

This little book is so well known that the announcement that an edition has been printed should be enough, without comment.

49 PAGES. PRICE 10 CENTS

Send for a Copy to this Office.

SECOND EDITION.

THE GOSPEL OF THE KINGDOM

Advocated in a Series of

TEN DISCOURSES,

—BY—

WILEY JONES.

This edition is elegantly printed and bound by Lippincott & Co., clear type, good paper, 276 pages, sent by mail at the following prices: Plain cloth binding $1 00; cloth gilt edge $1 50; leather marbled edge $1 75. To obtain this valuable work, send the price by Postoffice order or registered letter to

WILEY JONES,
Norfolk, Va.

Something

GOD ESTABLISHED,

—AND—

The Bible Vindicated!

—BY—

A. J. EYCHANER.

The above is the title of a new tract, just out, and should be placed in the hands of every infidel in the land. Those who live in infidel neighborhoods will do well to get this work, as it will aid you in combatting this enemy. 24 pages. Price 6c each; 12 for 50c, or 30 for $1. Send to this office for it.

PICTORIAL DESCRIPTION

OF THE

Tabernacle in the Wilderness

ITS RITES AND CEREMONIES,

By the Late JOHN DILWORTH.

32 Pages. Price 10c. For Sale at this Office.

FOR CHILDREN!

THE NUSERY.

FIFTEENTH YEAR,

This Magazine will begin the year 1881 with a new and elegant cover and other improvements. It will continue to surpass all imitators. The January number will prove this. $1 50 a year, in advance. New Subscribers get an extra number by subscribing now.

NURSERY PUBLISHING CO.,
36 Bromfield St., Boston, Mass.

THE SUN FOR 1881.

Everybody reads THE SUN. In the editions of this newspaper throughout the year to come every body will find:

I. All the world's news, so presented that the reader will get the greatest amount of information with the least expenditure of time and eyesight. THE SUN long ago discovered the golden mean between redundant fulness and unsatisfactory brevity.

II. Much of that sort of news which depends less upon its recognized importance than upon its interest to mankind. From morning to morning THE SUN prints a continued story, of the kind of real men and women, and of their deeds, plans, loves, hates, and troubles. This story is more varied and more interesting than any romance that was ever outlined.

III. Good writing in every column, and freshness, originality, accuracy, and decorum in the treatment of every subject.

IV. Honest comment. THE SUN's habit is to speak out fearlessly about men and things.

V. Equal candor in dealing with each political party, and equal readiness to commend what is praiseworthy or to rebuke what is blamable in Democrat or Republican.

VI. Absolute independence of partisan organizations, but unwavering loyalty to true Democratic principles. THE SUN believes that the Government of the Constitution gives us in a good one to keep.

Our terms are as follows:

For the DAILY SUN, a four-page sheet of twenty-eight columns, the price by mail, postpaid, is 65 cents a month, or $6 50 a year; or, including the Sunday paper, an eight-page sheet of fifty-six columns, the price is 85 cents a month, or $9 70 a year, postage paid.

The Weekly edition of THE SUN is also furnished separately at $1 20 a year, postage paid.

The price of the WEEKLY SUN, eight pages, fifty-six columns, is $1 a year, postage paid. For clubs of ten at $10 we will send an extra copy free.

Address I. W. ENGLAND,
Publisher of The Sun, New York City.

BOOK LIST.

The following publications are kept constantly on hand and will be sent postpaid to any address in the United States and Canada, upon receipt of published price. Address all orders to

THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Ind.

The Princeton Hymn. A book of 343 hymns suited to all occasions. Cloth, 60c; leather, plain, 80c; leather, gilt, 90c.

Bible Tracts. Suitable for wide distribution: No. 1. The Gospel. 2. The Coming and Kingdom of Christ, by 30,000 Baptists, in 1860. 3. Immortality. 4. The Kingdom of God. 5. Nature of Man and Thoughts for Thinkers. 6. The Two Advents. 7. What is Religion. 8. The Restitution Age. 9 Destiny of the Wicked. 10. Baptism. Ten copies 6c or assorted packages of 100, 50c.

FOUR PAGE TRACTS.
25 for 30c; 50 for 45c; 100 for 60c.

The Nature of Man in Death. Contains an abundance of proof-texts.

Life and Death. A concise statement and contrast of the two states of the human race, with the theological and Bible use.

Human Government a Failure. By A. B. Maxwell.

Resurrection. By Austin Curtis. A careful examination of the query—"If a man die, shall he live again?" Job xiv. 14.

Is it True? By H. V. Reed. An examination of testimony as to who are subjects of salvation.

What is Truth? By H. V. Reed. An excellent contrast of the Bible teaching and modern theory. Should have a wide circulation.

The Perverted Parable. The Rich Man and Lazarus, by W. Lalor.

EIGHT PAGE TRACTS.
5c each, or $3 for 50c.

Is it Essential to Believe as to the Locality of Jesus? By Benj. Wilson.

Hymn of the Times. By Horatio Bonar, of Scotland.

The Scattering and Gathering. By H. V. Reed. Contemplates the facts in the threefold gathering of the Saints, Israel and the Nations. Is timely.

TWELVE PAGE TRACTS.
5c each, 25c for dozen.

Christian Union. By Joel A. Simonds.

Regeneration and the Kingdom of God. By E. Hoyt. Well suited to inquiring minds.

Immortality brought to light. The grand reality of redemption. By J. H. Cook.

SIXTEEN-PAGE TRACTS.
Five cents each, 15 for 50c; 35 for $1.

The New Birth. By Jonah Peirce.

The Hope for the World. By Joel A. Simonds.

The Kingdom of Messiah. By Joseph Seiss, D. D. Set forth in beautiful language and apt Bible quotations.

Which is Right? By T. Wilson. Showing the Bible teaching on the question as to whether Christ's kingdom is to be on the earth or in heaven.

The Seed of Abraham. By Joel A. Simonds. The promise made to Abraham, renewed to Isaac and Jacob, is so frequently referred to by Prophets and apostles.

A King to Old Russia. By H. V. Reed. Just the thing to circulate everywhere.

TWENTY-FOUR PAGE TRACTS.
5c each; 8 for 30c; 20 for $1.

Two Churches Contrasted. Touches the [illegible] Bible.

Dan Evangelium. By T. Wilson. An [illegible] true nature of God's [illegible] that the [illegible] Visible Church on Two [illegible] supports [illegible] argument from the Bible [illegible] of the [illegible] saith will not be annihilated, [illegible] but will be the everlasting [illegible] of God Against [illegible] saints. [illegible] too wide-

Witchcraft Unveiled; or, the Voice [illegible] Spiritualism. By H. V. Reed. Cannot be refuted.

The Scriptures. By Joel A. Simonds.

THIRTY-TWO-PAGE TRACTS.
Ten cents each; 15 for $1.

Evangelium concerning the reign of Christ over Israel and the Nations, or a brief statement of the things concerning the Kingdom of God and the Name of Jesus Christ. By Wiley Jones.

The Restitution of the World restored to its Primeval State, and this to be its everlasting condition. By E. Miller. A careful and satisfactory examination of Acts iii. 21.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS.

The Rich Man and Lazarus. By Thomas Wilson. The exposition throughout is in harmony with Bible teaching. Thirty-six pages, price 10c.

Persecutions of Christians. Being a concise history of the Primitive Christians, from the Gospel as [illegible]

MISTAKES of INGERSOLL,

Being a review of Col. R. G. Ingersoll's lecture entitled "Mistakes of Moses."

By J. M. STEPHENSON.

This is a large 4 to 8 page tract [illegible]

New English Books.

Bible Triumphant. By Mrs. H. V. Reed. Paper 50c. A reply to "144 self-contradictions of the Bible." By A. J. Davis. An able refutation of Infidel charges.

Hades, or the Intermediate State of the Dead. By Henry Constable, A. M. Cloth, $1.60. Presents the Bible doctrine of the state of man between death and the resurrection.

Discussion on the State of the Dead. Between the Rev. W. G. Bradman, Congregational minister, and W. Kellaway, editor of Bible Echo, and minister of the Gospel. Both of England. The propositions discussed were: I. That the dead of Man is a living, conscious state after their decease. Affirmed by W. G. B. II. That the Scriptures teach that men in death are wholly unconscious, insensible, and unable to perform any act whatever; and that they rest in darkness, silence and the dust. Cloth, 60c; paper, 40c.

THE NEW TESTAMENT IN GREEK AND ENGLISH,

ENTITLED THE

EMPHATIC DIAGLOTT,

Containing the original Greek text of the New Testament, with an interlinear word-for-word English translation, based on the renderings of each of its critics, and on the various readings of the Vatican Manuscripts, together with Illustrative and explanatory foot notes, and a copious selection of references by Benjamin Wilson.

The difference between the various passages in the New Testament are the foundations on which most of the sects of Christians have been built up; with this work each reader may judge for himself whether the words there literally translated are so arranged in the common version as to express the exact meaning of the New Testament writers? New improved edition on larger paper. One vol. 864 pages. Price, extra cloth, $4 50; Library Binding, $5 00 post-paid. For sale at this office.

Address, THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth Ind

Bible Echo. Vol. II. January to June, 1878. 7 volumes, formerly $1 05, now $1.

Bible Echo. Vol. III. July to September, 1878. 3 volumes. Completes the Bible Echo as a weekly. Former price $1 50, now 75 cents.

The Infidel Silenced by the most irrefutable evidence relating to the authenticity and credibility of the Holy Scriptures. By W. H. Wilson. Just the thing for General Circulation, as it meets and exposes in a clear, emphatic manner the infidel notions of the day, and is a plain defence of the Bible. 64 pp. Price 25 cents.

The Doctrine of Immortality. By James H. Whitmore. 300 pages. 30 cents postpaid. Everybody should have it.

The Doctrine of Baptism as taught in the Holy Scriptures, together with a collection of evidence upon this subject, from the most learned theologians critics, lexicographers and ecclesiastical historians 64 pages, on heavy paper. Price 25 cents.

New Tracts upon all Subjects. A book indispensable to everybody. 324 pp. Cloth bound. Worth 50 cents. Sent postpaid for 25 cents. Only 40 copies.

Future Punishment. Is nature and duration. By Henry Constable, Prebendary of Cork. 320 pp. Exactly the book for the times. Cloth $1 25.

The Destiny of Russia, as foretold by God's Prophets, together with an outline of the future movements and destiny of England, Germany, Persia, Africa, and the Jews. Contains a map of England and Asia. A work invaluable to every student of prophecy, and of intense present interest. 116 page, cloth, 75c.

The Rich Man and Lazarus. By C. F. Sweet. 1876. 24 pp., price 15c. A careful unfolding of Luke xv. and xvi., with an examination of Luke xix, and xxiii.

God's Plan of Salvation. By J. M. Stephenson. Over three hundred pp. For a long time our brethren have desired a work which would embody the leading points and arguments of our faith and hope. Brother Stephenson's book is a terse, comprehensive and clear statement of the leading phases of Bible theology. Our brethren will find this just the thing to read and circulate. The nature of man, the kingdom of God, and the obedience of faith, are ably and clearly set forth. Cloth binding $1.

POETRY.

[Watchword.]

The Fourth Watch.

M. E. SARGENT.

It is the fourth watch of the night,
The waves are tossed to foam;
The weary boatman's hope for light,
And long for rest and home.

All heavily they ply the oar,
The Master far away,
And far away the radiant shore
They trod but yesterday.

How like a dream that happy scene—
The fainting thousands fed,
The meadows green, the Face serene
That blest the morning bread!

Ah, pale disciples! could ye tell
How near the Master's feet,
How gladly o'er the billows' swell,
He comes your need to meet.

Your eyes would fly, your eyes would fill
With mist of thankful tears;
He sees you spent with rowing still,
Your groans and sighs he hears.

And we, so often vexed to-day
By many a care and grief,
Who toil along a shadowed way,
Because of unbelief—

Why should we cease to trust His love?
Why fear the midnight sea?
The storm that hurtles from above,
His chariot-throne may be.

While Christ is Lord of death and life,
No ills His own shall shroud;
Secure, we brave the utmost strife,
O'er yielding waters tried.

And in the fourth watch of the night
We hail the dawn of day,
If dearer than the rising light,
Christ, meets us in the way.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Is the Seventh Day Sabbath Binding During the Christian Dispensation?

J. M. STEPHENSON.

And he said unto them, the Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath. Mark ii. 27, 28.

When the charge was brought against Christ's disciples for having done that which was not lawful to be done on the Sabbath day Christ quoted the example of one who had violated the law regulating the observance of the Sabbath, to justify his disciples. We read: "And it came to pass that he went through the corn-fields on the Sabbath day; and his disciples began, as they went, to pluck the ears of corn. And the Pharisees said unto him, behold, why do they on the Sabbath day that which is not lawful? And he said unto them, have ye never read what David did, when he had need, and was hungered, he and they that [illegible] with him? How he went into [illegible] Abia- [illegible] And he said unto them, the Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath: Therefore the Son of Man is Lord of the Sabbath." Mark ii. 23-28. Please observe,—

1. That Christ endorses the charge against his disciples of having done that which was not lawful, by appealing to the high priest who had also done that which was unlawful to do on the Sabbath, but was guiltless, upon the principle that it was better that the Sabbath should suffer than that its Lord or his friends should suffer. Thus, the Sabbath being made for man's benefit, better far that it should suffer than he for whom it was made should suffer. As the Sabbath's Lord he had a right to set aside its claims. But Sabbatarians deny that Christ's disciples had violated the Sabbath. Why, then, did Christ refer to the example of a man who had done that which was not lawful to do on the Sabbath? In giving the original Sabbath law God commanded every man to abide in his place and not to go out of his place, as positively as he commanded them to rest on the Seventh Day. Exod. xvi. 29. Thus, the commandment which some of the people had transgressed and that called forth the reproof recorded at the 20th verse. We read: "And it came to pass that there went some of the people on the Seventh Day to gather and they found none." Verse 27.

The Sabbath law positively prohibited every Israelite from doing any manner of work on the Sabbath, even to picking up sticks or kindling fires. And yet professed Sabbath keepers will leave the place where the Sabbath finds them and be absent all day. They will pick up sticks and kindle fires on the Sabbath. The Sabbatic law required every subject to let his animals rest also; yet Sabbatarians force their animals to violate the Sabbath as well as their children to often violate the Sabbath law. If that law were in force every Sabbatarian would be put to death. But they make a safe thing of it by repealing the only penalty God ever affixed to that law—not heeding the fact that a law without a penalty is a nullity. As to any license from God to go out of their houses, much less to go a Sabbath day's journey, there is not a particle of Bible testimony to sustain it. It rests upon nothing but tradition—"[illegible]" which made void the commandments of God, even while they were in full force. [illegible]

Pharisees leading their horses to water on the Sabbath day proving that the law permitted such laxity, it only demonstrated the inconsistency of these hypocritical Pharisees in condemning Christ's disciples for doing no more work than they had done every Sabbath day. They had nothing but tradition to justify them, whereas the disciples had both Christ's precept and example to justify them. On what other principle could Christ appeal to law-breakers to justify his disciples? If the law had been binding, both Christ, his disciples, and the Pharisees would have been guilty of violating the law which required every man to abide in his place and not to go out of his place, nor to do any manner of work on the Sabbath. Christ as the authorized legate of God divested all the commandments involving moral principle, of their civil dress, and enforced nothing but moral principle. Neither civil law nor civil penalties are in accord with the genius of the purely ecclesiastical and moral law of Christ. Civil laws and penalties would have been in conflict with the civil codes of the world, and Christ and his twelve legates would have been tried and executed for treason before they had gone over half the Roman empire. Such policy would have inaugurated rebellion all over the world.

The fourth commandment being an exclusively positive precept, and having no moral principle in it when divested of its civil dress and nothing left to be incorporated into the Christian constitution. Thus it perished with all the purely civil commandments. The other nine commandments contained moral principle in them when divested of their civil dress; these moral principles were incorporated into the constitution of Christ. Abstract from a positive commandment there can be no more virtue or obligation to rest on one day more than another, therefore, with the precept the obligation to keep one day more holy than another began and ceases. Now, there was not one single precept in the constitution of Christ or all the commandments of Christ to observe the Seventh Day, or any rest day whatever. If so, the apostles must have proclaimed it in their teachings or they must have proved recreant to the high trust confided in them. Christ commanded them to disciple all nations, teaching them to observe all [illegible] commanded [illegible] Matt. 20.

Thus, the teachings of the apostles contain all the commandments of Christ, and yet, strange to say, there is not one single precept to observe even any day as holy time; and notwithstanding these epistles were designed largely for Gentile Christians, who had neither been taught nor accustomed to observe any day as holy time, yet there is not one commandment to keep any Sabbath, nor one note of warning against Sabbath-breaking, nor one reproof for Sabbath-breaking; but in every contention between Jewish and Gentile brother which arose, Paul, the apostle to the Gentiles, took sides with the Gentiles, affirming that all days were alike, or that the Jews should not condemn the Gentiles for not observing one day more holy than another. Such a contention existed in the church at Rome. The Jews took the position that one day was more holy than another. The Gentiles took the position that every day was alike. Paul wrote a letter to settle that mooted question. I will read the apostles' language. It is such as no Sabbatarian has ever written. He says: "One man esteems one day above another; (or more holy than another,—Campbell) another esteemeth every day alike. Let every man be fully persuaded in his own mind. He that regardeth the day, regardeth it unto the Lord: and he that regardeth not the day, to the Lord he doth not regard it." Rom. xiv. 5, 6.

It is claimed that Paul, by every day, meant every one of the six previously to each Seventh Day. Then, what was the contention between Jew and Gentile about? This is all the Jews or Sabbatarians to-day claim. No Sabbatarian ever claimed that one of the six days preceding the Sabbath is more holy than another.

Again, it is claimed that Paul had reference to festival Sabbaths, from the fact that he associated these holy days with meats and drinks. I take no issue with this, but will notice it when I shall have grouped it with a few other texts. The same divided the church at Galatia, and Paul gave them a piece of his mind on this mixed question between Jew and Gentile. Hear him as he magnifies his office as the apostle to the Gentiles. He says: "Ye observe days, and months, (moons) and times, and years. I am afraid of you, lest I have bestowed upon you labor in vain." Gal. iv. 10, 11. I feel just as a reference to some of my brethren at Battle Creek [illegible] ammunition as a teacher

SELECTIONS.

[illegible]

The Man of Sin.

[illegible] our Lord Jesus Christ, and by our gathering together unto him, that ye be not soon shaken in mind, or be troubled, neither by spirit, nor by word, nor by letter as from us, as that the day of Christ is at hand. Let no man deceive you by any means: for that day shall not come, except there come a falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition; who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped; so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God. Remember ye not, that, when I was yet with you, I told you these things? And now ye know what withholdeth that he might be revealed in his time. For the mystery of iniquity doth already work: only he who now letteth will let, until he be taken out of the way. And then shall that Wicked be revealed, whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming." 2 Thess. ii. 1-8.

In offering a few remarks on this subject, I desire to do so without attempting to identify "the man of sin" with any personage or power spoken of in other scriptures. If there is such identity (and I do not deny that there is) it need not be weakened by the view I take, whether that view be right or wrong.

Notice, first, the apostle does not define the terms he employs, probably because he had explained them in his oral communication to the Thessalonian disciples, mentioned in verse 5. We can therefore only guess the application of these terms, and form an opinion by gathering information as to their use from other Scriptures, and especially from the same writer.

In looking at the terms used by the apostle, observe, first, the word "sin," in the phrase "man of sin." This is a very general term, and includes all mean murder, robbery, or any of the grosser vices, as well as violations of law of a less heinous character. The term "iniquity," in the phrase "mystery of iniquity," as also the phrase "that wicked," are a little more definite. They both have the same signification, the first, a noun, literally "lawlessness;" the second an adjective, literally "lawless." The original of the latter is "anomos"—nomos, law, and alpha—a—privative, meaning without law or lawless. I presume it will be admitted that "that wicked" or "lawless" applies to "the man of sin," and also that "the mystery of iniquity," or lawlessness, applies to some state of matters preceding and leading to his being "revealed." If this be so, then we have so far a definition of the character of the "sin" pertaining to "the man of sin." He evidently assumes a superiority to the law of God or man, or both, and becomes a law to himself and to all such as place themselves under his authority. His actions may be of various quality as to inherent goodness or badness, but his "sin" is self-will as against the will or authority of some Divine or human lawgiver.

"The temple of God" is a phrase which has several uses in Scripture. It applies to the temple at Jerusalem, which existed at the date of the letter to the Thessalonians. It was used also to denote the Church of Christ, as in 2 Cor. vi. 16, "Ye are the temple of the living God." It denotes also the temple to be built in connection with the second appearing of the Messiah, and that under the express authority of God Himself. These seem to me to be the only clear instances we have in Scripture of the use of the phrase "temple of God."

"All that is called God" is a phrase which there seems to be no reason to think designates or includes Jehovah. If the apostle meant Jehovah, or even to include him, it is hardly possible to suppose that he would have contented himself with language which expresses only nominal objects of worship. Scripture usage is in favor of distinguishing between idol-gods and the supreme God. Thus Daniel (xi. 36), "He shall exalt himself and magnify himself above every god, and shall speak marvellous things against the God of gods." Here the distinction is plain between "every god" and the "God of gods." And it should not be overlooked that the exalting is only above "every god," while the act committed against "the God of gods" is of a less impious character—"speaking marvellous things against" him. But the usage of the Apostle Paul is perhaps of even more value than this, in determining the sense of his words in the letter to the Thessalonians. In his first letter to the Corinthians he puts in the strongest contrast those that are called gods and the "One God." He says: "We know that an idol is nothing in the world, and that there is none other God but one. For though there be that are called gods, whether in heaven or in earth (as there are gods many and lords many), but to us there is but one God, the Father, of whom are all things," &c. This language seems to include more than mere idols of wood and stone, because he speaks of them as possibly being in heaven as well as in earth. And it seems to be extremely improbable that such a writer as Paul, with such a [illegible] would ever [illegible] strong distinction in his mind regarding the great Jehovah and those merely called gods, should place in one [illegible] such widely separated classes of beings as the most do in 2 Thess. ii. 4, if, indeed, it is there spoken of. We have another illustration of this view from the teaching of our Lord in his conversation with the Jews as recorded in John x. The Jews had charged him with "making himself God." Jesus answered them, "Is it not written in your law, I said, Ye are gods." If he called them gods, unto whom the word of God came, and the Scripture cannot be broken, [illegible] of him, whom the Father hath sanctified, and sent into the world, Thou blasphemest; because I said, I am the Son of God?" We have here, on the best authority, the fact stated that those to whom the word of God came were "called gods." From these uses of the phrase "called gods," and "exalted themselves," we are at liberty to apply this sense to Paul's words in the passage under consideration, if other circumstances seem to agree with it.

All "that is worshipped." This term "worshipped" is apt to be misunderstood owing to its being so commonly associated in our minds with the worship given to the supreme God. But it is also used in a lower sense, of which we have even some instances in the New Testament. In the parable of the two debtors, the debtor who owed the king ten thousand talents is represented as "falling down and worshipping him, saying, Lord, have patience with me, and I will pay thee all." Again, in Rev. iii. 9, where the angel of the church in Philadelphia is addressed, it is said, "I will make them of the synagogue of Satan . . . to come and worship before thy feet, and to know that I have loved thee." From these instances it is plain the term worship is used to express that there is no absolute necessity for employing the term "worshipped" in 2 Thess. ii. 4, in any higher sense, or less the same is necessitated by other considerations.

"A falling away" is literally an apostasy. This is also without definition in the passage. It must have reference to some departure from a Divine institution. At the time the apostle wrote there were only two Divine institutions in the world—the Jewish theocracy and the Christian church. The former was already doomed to a suspension of the Divine favor on account of an apostasy lived up to the brim by the rejection of the Messiah. The only other Divine institution is the church of Christ; and it is presumably of a departure from the principles and practice of that institution that the apostle speaks. As we said of "the temple of God," that it can hardly be applied to that future temple to be built under Divine authority; so we might say in reference to "the falling away," that it surely cannot apply to any departure from that state of things established in connection with that "kingdom that cannot be moved"—unless indeed it would be extended to the end of the one thousand years, and the revolt of the nations in the four corners of the earth. This alternative is so very unlikely, that I content myself with the mere mention of it. We seem, therefore, shut up to understand the "falling away" here in relation to the church; and the more so, as there are many plain intimations in other places of the New Testament writings, to the effect that such an apostasy should take place, and was even then showing premonitory signs of its existence. A few quotations will serve to show the truth of this statement:—

Acts. xx. 29—"I know this, that after my departing shall grievous wolves enter in among you, not sparing the flock. Also of your own selves shall men arise, speaking perverse things, to draw away disciples after them." 1 Tim. iv. 1.—"Now the Spirit speaketh expressly, that in the latter times some shall depart (literally, apostatise) from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits, and doctrines of devils" (that is, demons). 1 Tim. vi. 20.—"O Timothy, keep that which is committed to thy trust, avoiding profane and vain babblings, and oppositions of science falsely so-called; which some professing, have erred concerning faith." 2 Tim. iii. 1, 13—"This know also, that in the last days perilous times shall come. . . evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived." 2 Tim. iv. 3.—"The time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears, and they shall turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables."

The application of these predictions and statements of fact will fall to be considered in the sequel.

The testimony of John, in his first and second letters concerning "the Antichrist," might be appropriately [illegible] that character [illegible] part of Baron Rothschild, the head of the French branch of the wealthiest family in the world, is usually at the bank in the morning before his clerks are. His wife wears but little jewelry, and his daughter has passed a successful examination as a teacher the apostasy instead of identifying any other person or power spoken of in Scripture with the "man of sin." Whatever "the Antichrist" be it is evident that one great feature of his character is a departure from the faith in denying that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh. And the test stated by John, that even then there were many antichrists, shows that one form of apostasy was well developed at the date of his letters. Although I hold that there is no identity between "the Antichrist" and "the Man of sin," I have no doubt that the element of apostasy which "the Antichrist" had introduced, even in the days of the apostles, formed part of that general apostasy indicated in the passage expressly quoted.

Reverting to the various terms in the passage under consideration—"the man of sin"—"The Temple of God"—"All that is called God"—"All that is worshipped"—and "A falling away"—it is evident that from the usage we have seen to characterise them in the Scriptures, there is some latitude allowable in giving a proper application of them in determining the question as to the identity of "the man of sin."

Coming now to the consideration of that question, it may be stated at the outset that it is well known to the readers of the Review that there are two principle views entertained as to "the man of sin." One of these is that generally held by the great body of Protestants, namely, that "the man of sin" is the Pope. The other view is that held by a considerable portion of those who believe in the personal reign of the Messiah upon the earth during the millennium—namely, that "the man of sin" is a single individual, who is to be manifested shortly before the public appearing of Christ and his saints, and who is to make a covenant with the Jews, in connection with which a temple is to be built somewhere in the East—and who is to usurp the authority that properly belongs to the Messiah, and be actually acknowledged by the Jews in the character of the true Messiah—who is to break the covenant with the Jews, oppose himself to the Messiah in person with an armed force, and be ultimately destroyed by the supernatural power he ought to bear against him by the God of Israel in the person of his Christ.

This off-hand outline will suffice for the present, and I shall conclude this part of the subject by inserting my preference for the first mentioned view—that which finds "the man of sin" in the official man at the head of the church of Rome, in whom is alleged to be invested all the authority of Christ and his apostles—and all the privileges which are the rightful possession of the members of "the body of Christ." The evidence of this must be left for another paper.—J. Cameron.

[From the Herald.]

MAUNA LOA'S FIERY OUTBURST.

The grand eruption reported as now in progress from the volcanic cone of Mauna Loa gives ample evidence of mighty forces at work under the bed of the Pacific. Mauna Loa towers over the island of Hawaii, the largest island in the open Pacific, 13,760 feet, and is marked by two distinct and apparently disconnected craters—one at the summit and the other, Kilauea, at a considerably lower level. A fearful eruption from the summit crater took place in 1832, and another in 1843 from the lower crater; but this was exceeded in August, 1855, when the "fire stream" continued to flow for many months until by July, 1856, it had traversed a distance of over sixty miles. The floor of the great crater of Kilauea is said to resemble "a lake of fire" having been scooped out a thousand feet deep and covering an area of twenty square miles. This enormous vent seems to have been for a benignant purpose planted in the central Pacific Ocean, whose "great basin," says Maury, "has its rim resting upon volcanic formations and set with volcanoes all the way round." One remarkable fact, which is confirmed by numerous eruptions, is that the discharges of molten matter, even in 1859, when slushes of white hot lava were thrown up to the estimated height of eight hundred feet, are attended by no earthquake shocks or other seismic signs. The burning lava, on reaching water, is shivered like glass into millions of particles which, rising in clouds, darken the sky and fall like a storm of hail on the surrounding country, while the glare from the fiery river converts night into brilliant day over all eastern Hawaii; but the vast terrestrial safety valve quietly performs its office, allowing the immense plutonic furnace beneath the mountain free and full vent.

A later despatch from Teheran states that several thousand pilgrims returning from Mecca are detained at Bagdad, owing to the Kurds having attacked the first three caravans and killed [illegible] of [illegible] plun- [illegible]

COMMUNICATIONS.

Is the Seventh Day Sabbath Binding During the Christian Dispensation?

J. M. STEPHENSON.

And he said unto them, the Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath. Mark ii. 27, 8.

When the charge was brought against Christ's disciples for having done that which was not lawful to be done on the Sabbath day Christ quoted the example of one who had violated the law regulating the observance of the Sabbath, to justify his disciples. We read: "And it came to pass that he went through the corn-fields on the Sabbath day; and his disciples began, as they went, to pluck the ears of corn. And the Pharisees said unto him, behold, why do they on the Sabbath day that which is not lawful? And he said unto them, have ye never read what David did, when he had need, and was hungered, he and they that were with him? How he went into [illegible] Abia-

[illegible] And he said unto them, the Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath: Therefore the Son of Man is Lord of the Sabbath." Mark ii. 23-28. Please observe,—

1. That Christ endorses the charge against his disciples of having done that which was not lawful, by appealing to the high priest who had also done that which was unlawful to do on the Sabbath, but was guiltless, upon the principle that it was better that the Sabbath should suffer than that its Lord or his friends should suffer. Thus, the Sabbath being made for man's benefit, better far that it should suffer than he for whom it was made should suffer. As the Sabbath's Lord he had a right to set aside its claims. But Sabbatarians deny that Christ's disciples had violated the Sabbath. Why, then, did Christ refer to the example of a man who had done

The fourth commandment being an exclusively positive precept, and having no moral principle in it when divested of its civil dress had nothing left to be incorporated into the Christian constitution. Thus it perished with all the purely civil commandments. The other nine commandments contained moral principle in them when divested of their civil dress; these moral principles were incorporated into the constitution of Christ. Abstract from a positive commandment there can be no more virtue or obligation to rest on one day more than another, therefore, with the precept the obligation to keep one day more holy than another begins and ceases. Now, there was not one single precept in the constitution of Christ or all the commandments of Christ to observe the Seventh Day, or any rest day whatever. If so, the apostles must have proclaimed it in their teachings or they must have proved recreant to the high trust confided in them. Christ commanded them to disciple all nations, teaching them to observe all [illegible] commanded [illegible] xii. 20.

Thus, the teachings of the apostles contain all the commandments of Christ, and yet, strange to say, there is not one single precept to observe even any day as holy time; and notwithstanding these epistles were designed largely for Gentile Christians, who had neither been taught nor accustomed to observe any day as holy time, yet there is not one commandment to keep any Sabbath, nor one note of warning against Sabbath-breaking, nor one reproof for Sabbath-breaking; but in every contention between Jewish and Gentile brother which arose, Paul, the apostle to the Gentiles, took sides with the Gentiles, affirming that all days were alike, or that the Jews should not condemn the Gentiles for not observing one day more holy than another. Such a contention existed in the church at Rome. The Jews took the position that one day was more holy than another. The shadows of Christ's body, I would answer his question. He answered by requesting me to answer my own question. I responded, that all the Sabbaths belonged to a system of types and shadows; and that this is the reason they are called a shadow. I understood him to say that it was the best answer he had heard. Anything that would make the annual Sabbaths shadows would make the weekly Sabbaths shadows also. Rest is rest, whether every week or once a year.

Again, it is claimed that Paul was speaking of festival Sabbaths, because they were associated with meats, drinks, new moons and holy days. I accept this issue as a fair one. Now, if I cannot prove that the Seventh Day is a festival Sabbath, and that burnt-offerings, new moons, and solemn feasts are associated with the Sabbath of the Lord, I will yield the point now and forever. The Seventh Day was not only a feast day, but the first of God's feast days. We read: "And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, speak unto the children of Israel concerning the feasts of the Lord, which ye shall proclaim to the holy convocations, even these are my feasts. Six days shall work be done, but the Seventh Day is the Sabbath of rest, an holy convocation; ye shall do no servile work therein; it is the Sabbath of the Lord in all your dwellings. These are the feasts of the Lord, even holy convocations, which ye shall proclaim in their seasons. In the fourteenth day of the first month at even is the Lord's passover. And on the fifteenth day of the same month is the feast of unleavened bread. In the first day ye shall have an holy convocation; ye shall do no servile work therein." Lev. xxiii. 1-7.

No language could affirm more unequivocally that the Seventh Day Sabbath is a feast day, an holy convocation, the same as the annual Sabbaths. They are all called feasts and holy convocations of the Lord. In Second Chronicles the Sabbaths of the Lord are associated with the new moons of the Lord, the solemn feasts of the opinion by gathering information as to their use from other Scriptures, and especially from the same writer.

In looking at the terms used by the apostle, observe, first, the word "sin," in the phrase "man of sin." This is a very general term, and might mean murder, robbery, or any of the grosser vices, as well as violations of law of a less heinous character. The term "iniquity," in the phrase "mystery of iniquity," as also the phrase "that wicked," are a little more definite. They both have the same signification, the first, a noun, literally "lawlessness;" the second an adjective, literally "lawless." The original of the latter is "anomos"—nomos, law, and alpha—a—privative, meaning without law or lawless. I presume it will be admitted that "that wicked" or "lawless" applies to "the man of sin," and also that "the mystery of iniquity," or lawlessness, applies to some state of matters preceding and leading to his being "revealed." If this be so, then we have so far a definition of the character of the "sin" pertaining to "the man of sin." He evidently assumes a superiority to the law of God or man, or both, and becomes a law to himself and to all such as place themselves under his authority. His actions may be of various quality as to inherent goodness or badness, but his "sin" is self-will as against the will or authority of some Divine or human lawgiver.

"The temple of God" is a phrase which has several uses in Scripture. It applies to the temple at Jerusalem, which existed at the date of the letter to the Thessalonians. It was used also to denote the Church of Christ, as in 2 Cor. vi. 16, "Ye are the temple of the living God." It denotes also the temple to be built in connection with the second appearing of the Messiah, and that under the express authority of God Himself. These seem to me to be the only clear instances we have in Scripture of the use of the phrase "temple of God."

"All that is called God" is a phrase which there seems to be no reason to [illegible] the New Testament. In the parable of the two debtors, the debtor who owed the king ten thousand talents is represented as "falling down and worshipping him, saying, Lord, have patience with me, and I will pay thee all." Again, in Rev. iii. 9, where the angel of the church in Philadelphia is addressed, it is said, "I will make them of the synagogue of Satan . . . to come and worship before thy feet, and to know that I have loved thee." From these instances it is plain the term worship is used to express that there is no absolute necessity for employing the term "worshipped" in 2 Thess. ii. 4, in any higher sense, unless the same is necessitated by other considerations.

"A falling away" (literally an apostasy). This is also without definition in the passage. It must have reference to some departure from a Divine institution. At the time the apostle wrote there were only two Divine institutions in the world—the Jewish theocracy and the Christian church. The former was already doomed to a suspension of the Divine favor on account of an apostasy filled up to the brim by the rejection of the Messiah. The only other Divine institution is the church of Christ; and it is presumably of a departure from the principles and practice of that institution that the apostle speaks. As we said of "the temple of God," that it can hardly be applied to that future temple to be built under Divine authority; so we might say in reference to "the falling away," that it surely cannot apply to any departure from that state of things established in connection with that "kingdom that cannot be moved"—unless indeed it would be extended to the end of the one thousand years, and the revolt of the nations in the four corners of the earth. This alternative is so very unlikely, that I content myself with the mere mention of it. We seem, therefore, shut up to understand the "falling away" here in relation to the church; and the more so, as there are many plain intimations in other places of the New Testament writings, generally held by the great body of Protestants, namely, that "the man of sin" is the Pope. The other view is that held by a considerable portion of those who believe in the personal reign of the Messiah upon the earth during the millennium—namely, that "the man of sin" as a single individual, who is to be manifested shortly before the public appearing of Christ and his saints, and who is to make a covenant with the Jews, in connection with which a temple is to be built somewhere in the East—and who is to usurp the authority that properly belongs to the Messiah, and be actually acknowledged by the Jews in the character of the true Messiah—who is to break the covenant with the Jews, oppose himself to the Messiah in person with an armed force, and be ultimately destroyed by the supernatural force brought to bear against him by the God of Israel in the person of his Christ.

This off hand outline will suffice for the present, and I shall conclude this part of the subject by indicating my preference for the first mentioned view—that which finds "the man of sin" in the official man at the head of the church of Rome, in whom is alleged to be invested all the authority of Christ and his apostles—and all the privileges which are the rightful possession of the members of "the body of Christ." The evidence of this must be left for another paper.—J. Cameron.

[From the Herald.]

MAUNA LOA'S FIERY OUTBURST.

The grand eruption reported as now in progress from the volcanic cone of Mauna Loa gives ample evidence of mighty forces at work under the bed of the Pacific. Mauna Loa towers over the island of Hawaii, the largest island in the open Pacific, 13,700 feet, and is marked by two distinct and apparently disconnected craters—one at the summit and the other, Kilauea, at a considerably lower level. A fearful eruption from the summit crater took place in 1840, and another in 1843 from the lower crater; but this was exceeded [illegible]

THE RESTITUTION
—IS ISSUED WEEKLY BY—
The Christian Publishing Association.

OFFICERS OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS:
H. S. DUGGINS.....President.
CHARLES FAGER.....Vice President.
E. R. BARNHILL.....Secretary.
S. A. CHAPLIN.....Treasurer.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE:
CHARLES FAGER, WM. RUSEBACK,
H. G. ROBERTS.

S. A. CHAPLIN.....EDITOR.

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTORS:
J. M. STEPHENSON, R. WILSON,
J. P. WEETHEE, J. A. SIMONDS,
WILEY JONES, D. M. MYERS,
A. H. MACRUBER.

The Restitution.

Keep Article By Brethren

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN.

VOL. XXX. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JANUARY 5, 1881. NO. 1.

THE RESTITUTION.

TERMS--TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR, Payable in advance. Three and Six Months at the same rate.

Address all Letters and Communications to THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the universe; the restoration of Israel; the "second" advention of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked, a resurrection only through Christ, and some other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief in the Gospel, Repentance, and Immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Communications.

COMING AGE.

Its Peculiarity.--Living Creatures.--What are they?--The subject as to their nature Investigated.--Are they the same as described by Ezekiel?

No. 18.

J. P. WEETHEE.

Before discussing the character of these living creatures, a few preliminary remarks may not be out of place.

We enter upon the investigation of John's prophetic visions for two principal reasons:

1. To induce others to take an interest in the events brought to view.

2. To secure for ourselves the blessings promised to those that investigate.

We seek to be a companion of the evangelist in his banishment; to see what he sees, hear what he hears, and to feel the same divine power.

There are two books devoted principally to Christ's priestly office: the epistle to the Hebrews, where Christ, as a priest, is compared to the Aaronic priest, as type and antitype; and is the priest of the better covenant, of which Melchisedec was the ty , and the Apocalypse, which speaks of events in transpir. under Christ's official priesthood. The book, as it is full of symbols, may be called the symbolic, scenic history of the Messiah's priesthood, a Pictorial History.

If leading symbol, in this book, is therefore, a Lamb. Wherever he is seen, before his advent, he appears as a lamb, or as one occupied in the duties of a high priest. When he comes in is in his regal office, and is represented as a conqueror — King of kings. In the new earth at the close of the age of subjugation, he is seen with the Father, in the joint-reign, sitting as a priest upon a throne, on his throne.

During his stay on earth, he was the prophet, like unto Moses. Since his ascension, and during the time covered by eighteen chapters of the Apocalypse, (except the last parts of the through lines) he is the great officiating antitypical high priest; he then appears as the King of kings, in the age of subjugation; then as the royal high priest (priest, king-priest on his throne) during the joint-reign. We study the Apocalypse with these three divisions before us.

In the first chapter John sees Christ officiating as a high priest among his churches on earth, holding his ministering servants by his almighty power; in his first vision of the future which we are now considering, through the door opened in heaven, he has a view of the workings of the priestly agency in heaven, the most holy place, the scenes beyond the second veil. It is necessary, in studying the Apocalypse, to keep in view the distinction between the location of the two classes of agencies; also whether the agents are civil, ecclesiastical, or divine. No one can understand the book of Revelation without classifying its scenery and its agents also.

This vision has its location in heaven. Heaven itself is the temple here opened. Celestial scenery occupies the prophet's view. The throne, and its occupant, first draw his attention; then their surroundings.

The terms used to designate the objects seen, both animate and inanimate; the actors and their actions, with explanatory notes appended, are the following; please read them attentively:

1. Heaven. John's first vision had its scenery on earth in the august presence of the Son of God, holding seven stars in his right hand as he walks in front of and around the golden lampstands, trimmings their lamps, supplying them with oil, and tempering their light; a trumpet voice calls his attention upward, not simply to a cloudless sky, but to heaven. The tabernacle, which Moses was commanded to make according to a pattern shown him in the mount, was a miniature universe, consisting of two departments; the one without the second veil represented earth, with its inhabitants, priesthood (chief priests) and worship (daily ministrations). That within the veil was a type of heaven and the true sanctuary. Into this most holy place John is called to look through an open

2. Door. The vail between earth and heaven is drawn.

3. A Throne appears. Not a throne of judgment, as in Dan. vii. 9, 10. Its throne was then the fiery flame, and his wheels burning fire. A fiery stream issued and came forth from before him, nor has it the same surroundings; there thousand thousands minister unto him, and ten thousand times ten thousand stood before him; but arched by an emerald bow, the symbol of covenanted mercy. Out of the throne darted lightnings and thunderings, and voices added terror to the scene. Seven lamps are seen burning before the throne. Twenty-four lesser thrones occupy the semicircle in front of the throne; within which semicircle and in front of the throne a sea like glass appears. Such is the amphitheatre that suddenly bursts upon the view of the holy prophet the throne with its twenty-four sub-thrones, its rainbow, its lamps, its lightnings, and its molten sea.

4. Its living agents draw his attention—the occupant of the (white) throne, like jasper and sardine stone—pellucid as light, and brilliant as the flame, emblems of purity and justice; the angels his swift and obedient messengers; the twenty-four elders clothed in white with crowns of gold; and in the midst of the throne, four living creatures, well supplied with wings and full of eyes; and in the midst of the throne, the elders and living creatures, stood a Lamb, as it had been slain, having seven horn and seven eyes, which are the seven spirits of God sent forth into all the earth. Such is this Celestial amphitheatre, with its occupants and drapery. Since heaven is represented by the inner tabernacle, called the most holy place; and the earth by the outer tabernacle or tent, the two visions, the one in Rev. i. and the other including Rev. iv. and v., were symbols of the universe under Christ's priesthood. Both visions enable to view during the entire prophetic history.

The occupant of the high throne is the Father, holding in his right hand a roll with seven seals. More of this hereafter.

As to the person symbolized by the Lamb there is no variety of opinion.

5. Who are the Elders? Who are the Living Creatures?

To give satisfactory answers to these two questions will be exceedingly difficult, if not impossible.

Who are the elders? A word is a medium of thought. John used the Greek word presbyteros to express the thought; that word is used sixty-seven times in the New Testament; it has, at least, three meanings. (a) It is used twenty-seven times to express the Jewish Sanhedrim. The great Sanhedrim consisted of seventy-one members, composed of the chief priests, or the heads of the twenty-four classes into which the priests were divided; three fagged persons) and Scribes.—Smith's Dict. of the Bible. The lesser Sanhedrim consisted of twenty-three members. These were located in small places. They sat on seats, in a half circle in front of the seat or throne occupied by their president,—in the days of Christ —their high priest.

(b) In eighteen passages it expresses a class of officers in the Christian church.

(c) It is used fourteen times by John. He calls himself presbyteros twice; his second and third epistles begin with, "O presbyteros the elder; meaning the aged or old man. The idea of ancient or aged is always found in the word.

(d) It is applied twelve times to this holy seen by John occupying thrones in a semicircle before the throne of the Deity. They are a part of that Celestial Sanhedrim, presided over by the Father Almighty.

Of what race are they? Of the human race, since in their song they say, "Thou hast redeemed us to God by thy (the Lamb) blood, out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation; and hast made us unto our God kings and priests; and we shall reign on the earth." Rev. v. 9, 10.

(e) They are officiating priests; for they had golden vials, full of odors, which are the prayers of saints; and they say: "Thou hast made us priests unto God." Verses 8, 10. They belong to a priesthood; evidently to the priesthood of the Lamb.

(f) They form a part of the antitypical priesthood, redeemed from the earth for that special work, to be chief priests during the high priesthood of Christ. Christ's high priesthood required such an official agency, as will appear by further investigation

(g) What were the elements of the Aaronic priesthood? Since it was formed after a pattern shown to Moses in vision by God, Ex. xxv. 40, in the mount, we shall learn the pattern by its imitation. God gave Moses a pattern for two reasons, at least: (a) To prevent his following the familiar pattern of Egyptian high priests. (b) That the worship of God's people on earth might be as it is in heaven. Moses is definite relative to the formation of the priesthood as he is in the construction of the tabernacle, evincing the fact, that in this also, he is working by a divine model.

David also seems, in his contemplated house of God which was to take the place of the wilderness tent, to follow a divine pattern. 1 Chron. xxviii. 11, 13. It is there said that David gave Solomon the pattern of all that he had by the Spirit, of the courts of the house of the Lord, and of all the chambers round about, of the treasuries of the house of God, and of the treasuries of the dedicated things; also for the courses of the priests, and the levites, and for all the work of the service of the house of the Lord, and for all the vessels in the house of the Lord.

The twenty-four courses are here formed which continued, except during their captivity in Babylon, till the destruction of Jerusalem and the temple by Titus. It was the order of the priesthood when Christ was on earth. Luke i. 5. There was a chief priest at the head of each of the twenty-four courses, who ministered one week, in his appointed order.

To this element of the priesthood we call special attention. Since it is an element in the pattern that David saw, and the element that Ezekiel saw, and which, we think, was seen by John in his Celestial vision. John calls them elders or old men, ancients. They call themselves priests, redeemed by the blood of the Lamb before whom they fall, and out of every kindred, tongue, people, and nation.

Here then, is an element in the pattern priesthood, without which Christ's priesthood could not be complete, the assistant priests, called chief priests, ministering under the antitypical high priesthood of the Messiah, the "Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world."

The common view relative to the elders is, that they are the twelve patriarchs and the twelve apostles. John, however, was then the beloved apostle, and did not, in that vision, occupy one of the twenty four thrones. Another author says: "We consider them the representatives of the church of God, under both dispensations."

This view is about the same as the one previously given. We prefer the explanation given by the elders themselves, officiating priests.

Christ's priesthood requires assistant priests, and they call themselves priests, and are officiating as such.

Objection. It may be said that the dead are unconscious till the resurrection, yet the elders are alive and working during a period anterior to the resurrection. How can this be?

This difficulty, in our opinion, is very easy of solution.

When Christ arose from the dead it was to enter upon the duties of his second office—the high priesthood in the most holy place—heaven itself. Paul, in 1 Cor. xv. 20, calls Christ's resurrection, the first fruits of them that slept. Did Christ come out of the grave alone? or were there other holy persons resurrected with him, but immediately after? Christ was the first that arose to die no more, but he was only the first of the first fruits, and not the whole of the first fruits. The sheaf was only a part of the first fruits. The first of first fruits were offered in God's house. Ex. xxiii. 19, xxxiv. 26. Christ's resurrection is the antitype of this; but what answers to the remaining first fruits? There must be a resurrection of others to complete the first fruits. Were others raised directly after Christ's resurrection?

In Matt. xxvii. 51–53, are these words: "And, behold, the veil of the temple was rent in twain from the top to the bottom; and the earth did quake, and the rocks rent, and the graves were opened; and many bodies of the saints which slept, arose, and came out of the graves, after his resurrection, and went into the holy, and appeared unto many

QUERIES ON MATT. xviii. 20.

R. WILSON

The Editor of THE RESTITUTION, some months ago, requested me to answer some queries proposed by F. G. North, of Leslie, Mich. Other duties were pressing upon me at the time, so that I could not comply with the request. At this late date, however, I send a few thoughts in answer to the questions presented.

In a letter to the Editor the writer asks for light on Matt. xviii 20. The passage reads as follows:

"For where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them." Then he asks, "Can there be such a gathering together in his name? If so, how can believers know for a certainty? and how is Christ in the midst of them? All religious bodies claim to meet in his name; but do they meet in his name? If they do, why shall we not join with them? If they do not, then it is a mere pretense."

The text above quoted, upon which the questions are asked, certainly refers to the assemblies of the saints. The context shows this, commencing at verse 15, where Jesus tells his disciples what to do in certain cases of discipline with offending brethren. After private interviews have had no effect in reclaiming the offender, then the command is "to tell the church." And if the church is disregarded, whom the authority and power is to be found, then the fractious person is no longer to be esteemed as a brother.

The decision of the congregation was to be considered as authoritative and final; for Jesus, who has become the Great Head of the church, has ordained, "Whatsoever ye shall bind on earth shall be bound in heaven, and whatsoever ye shall loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven."

This authority was given in the first place to Peter. See Matt. xvi. 19. But even there it is spoken of in connection with the church, which Jesus calls "my church."

The fountain of authority was in Jesus, whether it was afterward found in Peter or the church. When these words were spoken the church was only a prospective institution. It was not then in existence. The elements were then only being collected. Jesus told Peter on what kind of a foundation his church should be built—not on what it was already built—but on this rock I will build my church," proving that it was not yet organized.

A church or congregation is an association of immersed believers of the gospel. Such a congregation might number its thousands, as the Jerusalem church did; or its "ten or three," as the churches in the houses of Aquila and Priscilla, and Philemon. All of the individual members were "in the Lord," having put him on in the rite of baptism. The name of the Lord Jesus had been named upon them. By faith and baptism each one had been united to his name—was espoused to him as his bride—became part of his body, and thus in intimate and living connection with him as the head of the body—the church. Each individual member is thus in the Lord, consequently the church as a collective body must be also.

But in addition to this, the meetings or assemblies of the church are also in his name, or by his authority. When the Lord Jesus was taken up into heaven, he left his apostles invested with his authority. They were commanded to preach and baptize, and teach the converts all things which he had commanded them. This they did. They went forth and preached the gospel, baptized the believers, gathered the disciples into congregations, and taught the disciples ones the precepts and commands of Jesus. And when we read of the congregation at Jerusalem, that it "continued steadfastly in the apostle's doctrine, and in the fellowship, and in the breaking of bread, and in the prayers," it means that the church was under the guidance and direction of the apostles, both as to its meetings and order of worship, and consequently did these things as much by the authority of the Lord Jesus, as though he was personally present.

Whatever the apostles did or communicated in the church was under the guidance of the Holy Spirit, and was of equal authority with the commands of Jesus.

Did not their Master tell them, "He that heareth you, heareth me," and "He that receiveth whosoever I send, receiveth me. The apostles then knew that they had this authority. John said, "We are of God, he that knoweth God heareth us; he that is not of God heareth not us." 1 John iv. 6.

Paul wrote to the church at Corinth that the prophets and spirit-gifts then among them were to acknowledge that the things which he wrote to them were the commandments of the Lord 1 Cor. xiv. 37.

Peter also wrote to the brethren that they should be mindful of the words which were spoken before of the holy prophets, and of the commandments of us the apostles of our Lord and Savior. 2 Peter iii. 2. The congregations of those days were submissive to the appointments and ordinances of the apostles as unto the Lord. Hence their assemblies were by the authority, or in the name of the Lord, and also the order of their worship.

But now it is asked, "Can there be such a gathering in his Christ's name? If so, how can believers know for a certainty? and how is Christ in the midst of them?"

I presume these queries are asked with reference to the present time. The apostles are dead, but they being dead yet speak. They left no successors, nor did they delegate their authority. The church of God throughout this dispensation is obligated, or fails with their teachings, and practice their appointments, as from the Lord Jesus himself. We cannot legislate for ourselves, nor ought we to allow any one to usurp their authority. If they ordained that the baptized believers be gathered into companies, or if they themselves gathered them, their precept or example is sufficient for us now. Their ordinances, commands, etc., were obligatory upon the church as a whole.

Paul wrote to the Corinthians, "Be ye followers of me, even as I also am of Christ. Now I praise you brethren, that ye remember me in all things, and keep the ordinances, as I delivered them to you." 1 Cor. xi. 1, 2.

Again he says, "I beseech you be ye followers of me. For this cause have I sent unto you Timotheus, who is my beloved son, and faithful in the Lord, who will bring you into remembrance of my ways which be in Christ, as I teach everywhere in every church." 1 Cor. iv. 16, 17.

The brethren in Thessalonica became followers of the churches of God which in Judea were in Christ Jesus; and thus became a pattern to all the believers in Macedonia and Achaia. 1 Thess. ii. 14; i. 7.

The congregations in Judea were set in order by the apostles who were in Christ before Paul was ordained as the apostle of the Gentiles, and thus having a priority became examples to Gentile congregations. The body was one whether composed of Jew or Gentile; the organization was one whether in the land of Israel, or in Gentile cities; and the order of worship was common in all the churches. The body of Christ is not limited in its existence to apostolic times, but extends the whole of this dispensation. The whole body has only one Head—the Lord Jesus; it has only one foundation—the apostles and prophets; Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner," and consequently ought to be regulated and governed by the same laws and rules of discipline, and exhibit the same order of worship. If then the congregation of God at the present time follow apostolic precept and example, is it not of Christ, and are not its assemblies in his name, or by his authority? and what should hinder believers to know of a certainty that it is even so?

But it may not be so readily apprehended how Christ is in the midst, as he said he would be. One thing however certainly true is that Christ has not been personally present with the church since its organization on the day of Pentecost. He has been our High Priest at the right hand of the throne of God in the heavens ever since his ascension, and will be until he comes again. Then as this is true we must seek some other sense in which Christ is in the midst of those gathered together in his name.

Paul speaks about receiving Jesus Christ the Lord—not literally, of course. He says, "Walk ye in him," "rooted and built up in him," "that Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith," etc. The last expression shows how and in what sense Christ may dwell in us—viz: by faith.

In answer to the inquiry, "Lord, how is it that thou will manifest thyself unto us, and not unto the world?" Jesus said, "If a man love me, he will keep my words: and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him. John xiv. 22, 23.

The apostle John says, "Truly our fellowship is with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ;" and "if that which ye have heard from the beginning remain in you, ye also shall continue in the Son, and in the Father." 1 John i. 3; ii. 24

Thus the Father and Son may abide with us, and we with them, not literally, but by faith.

Again John says, "God is love; and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him." 1 John iv. 16. This cannot be understood in the literal sense, any more than the language of Jesus in Matt. xviii. 20.

John in Rev. i. 13, saw in symbolic vision the glorified Jesus in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks. "The seven candlesticks which thou sawest are the seven churches." Rev. i. 20. Thus he is represented as dwelling and walking in the midst of the congregations; and fulfills the promise which he made to his disciples, that "where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them."

Christ's promise to be present in the assemblies of the saints cannot be confined to the apostolic era, for that would exclude all believers in subsequent times. Some say that we are to find an answer or fulfillment of this promise in the presence of the Spirit. Undoubtedly the power of the Lord was present among the disciples, and was manifested in gifts of wisdom, knowledge, prophecy, tongues, interpretation of tongues, healing miracles, etc.

The church at Corinth was highly gifted in this respect, and those who witnessed their order were constrained to report that God was among them of a truth. See 1 Cor. xii.–xiv.

Those gifts of the Spirit ceased. They are not now in the church. Are we therefore to say that Christ is no longer in the midst? Was Christ any more present with the church at Corinth, than the church at Rome before Paul had imparted to them any spiritual gift? Rom. i. 11. Or with the believers of the present time?

There was one ordinance which was appointed by the Lord Jesus, which was one of the principal things that Jesus commanded his apostles to teach the converts to observe among the "all things" of Matt. xxviii. 20, and that is what is usually called the Lord's Supper. See Matt. xxvi. 26–30; 1 Cor. xi. 23–26.

This is Christ's memorial institution, in which he is representatively present. Of the bread he said, "This is my body," and of the fruit of the vine in the cup he said, "This is my blood." Whenever and wherever that representative body is broken, and that representative blood is poured out in the midst of those convened in his name, Christ is present. Not personally, but representatively by what he has appointed.

Jesus himself appointed the ordinance, and commanded his apostles to teach their converts to observe it. Its importance may be inferred from the fact that the apostle Paul received the same ordinance by special revelation from the Lord Jesus. All the apostles taught the disciples ones to observe all the commandments of the Lord, and praised them when they kept them as delivered to them.

The Jerusalem congregation continued steadfastly in the order of worship, of which the breaking of bread was one important item. The disciples at Troas made it their special business to come together on the first day of the week for the breaking of bread, and it is very evident that the Corinthians met regularly for the same purpose.

The Hebrews were exhorted "not to forsake the assembling of themselves together," and we know the promise of Jesus to such is that he will be in the midst.

Paul says that as "often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do show the Lord's death till he come."

Then the actual presence of the Lord will take the place of the symbols of his body and blood. Oh, how blessed and rapturous the meeting of the church and her Lord—the Bridegroom and the bride! when she will no longer see through a glass darkly, but see him face to face.

If there can be no gathering together of the saints in the name of Christ at the present time, then the church has ceased to shine as the light of the world; is no longer a witness for Jesus; does not openly exhibit his death, nor is it the pillar and support of the truth. Surely the gates of hades have not prevailed against the church. Jesus said that they should not prevail. If we can find men and women who believe and confess as Peter did, that Jesus is the Christ, and who, like the Jews on the day of Pentecost, have repented and been baptized in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, then we have found those who are on the rock, and who are in the name, and consequently qualified to meet together, and attend to the ordinances acceptably.

Such may know of a certainty that they are Christ's, and that he is theirs. And although there may be no spiritual gifts present in the assemblies of the saints at the present time, as in the apostle's day, for the very good reason that we have no apostle among us now to confer them, yet that does not cut us off from Christ.

The congregation at Rome seemed to be without spiritual gifts when Paul wrote to them, for he said, "I long to see you, that I may impart unto you some spiritual gifts, to the end ye may be established." Rom. i. 11, yet their faith was spoken of throughout the whole world. Spiritual gifts were not given to prove that Christ was present in the church, or that those who had them were approved of God, but rather for the edification of the body.

Little need be said about the claims of religious bodies in general who say they meet in the name of Jesus. Each one must be tested by the word of God. "Try the spirits whether they be of God." 1 John iv. 1. "To the law and testimony; if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them." Isa. viii. 20.

None but those who have put on Christ as the primitive Christians did, by faith and baptism, Gal. iii. 27, have a right to meet for worship in the name of the Lord. Honesty, sincerity, piety, earnestness, and sympathetic liberality, though all eminently good in themselves, are of no avail without obedience to the word of the Lord.

Jesus said to the Jews—and that class of whom he spoke represents the majority of the sects of this day—"In vain ye worship me teaching for doctrines the commandments of men." Matt. xv. 9. They are neither in the truth nor of the truth. It is hard to say this, but does not the word of the Lord justify it?

Hence it would be inconsistent for those who know the truth and are in it, to join in worship with those who are strangers to it, or who may be bitterly opposed to it.

LITTLE THINGS.

S. H. WINCE.

In the meeting for the election of a Board of Directors for THE RESTITUTION, yesterday, I felt a sort of awe creeping over me, looking at the sober, earnest faces of that little handful of men. The meeting had been opened by prayer, and the Great and All-wise One, to whom we have taken the oath of allegiance had been importuned to bless. The ballots were cast. The officers were elected.

It might seem a small thing in the eyes of the world, but what mighty interests are involved just here.

THE RESTITUTION is going out to over fifteen hundred homes. It is preaching the glad tidings of a coming kingdom and king, to more than two thousand persons. It is impelling those who have the truth, to go out into the highways and hedges and teach. It is reaching the hearts of those who have never known the true and living way. The results will only be known in the ages to come. Many, very many will bless the Lord in the kingdom, that they ever saw its pages, and so I had rather be an officer on the Board of Publication, than to take the highest place in the government.

Be faithful still brethren. You will soon hear the "well done" of your Master, and wear the crown of glory that fadeth not away.

Dec. 28, 1880.

The New Testament has been published in England at two cents (1d) per copy, and at this price over 400,000 copies have been sold: the publisher expects to increase this number to one million. It is said that there is pecuniary profit in the enterprise. What next?

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CHAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, January 5, 1881.

We send this number to all the names on our list. If we do not receive some notice from those considerably in arrears we shall be compelled to leave them off the list hereafter.

BALANCING up our books as treasurer, has taken a large share of our time since our last issue. Our correspondents must bear in mind that we have our hands full of very pressing demands on our time at this season of the year.

WE have not the time nor the space to particularly report our Annual meeting. The preaching was instructive, and our social meetings well attended, and the time fully occupied in mutual exhortation. The quite general expression was, that it was one of the very best meetings we have ever had.

THE necessity for short articles for awhile is now imperative. We have several that have been deferred for a long time, from brethren whose names have not appeared for months. To these correspondents we now propose to give a place. Some from our special contributors are necessarily delayed till next week. Some editorial and financial notes are crowded out. Let us be patient.

1880–1881.

The year-hand on the dial-plate of time has moved now at one more space, and now points to a number that may designate a very solemn epoch in world-history instead of a minute interval on the infinite circle of ages.

1880 with its joys and sorrows, its hopes and fears, its gains and losses, its glad gatherings and sad bereavements, its golden opportunities and wasted hours, has forever gone, and made its judgment records. The spring brought its sunshine and shower; the summer noon was made fragrant with incense exhaled from censers of living bloom, and the golden harvests waved in the splendors of noon-tide glory; when autumn's sun moved down to its pathway through southern constellations, and the birds of song left to warble in the magnolia and orange groves of climes that know no winter, the heart of man, in our favored land, was made to rejoice over the garnered plenty from vine and tree and the grain-field; although the flowers died, winter wept a few sad tears, wrapt her winding sheet of snow over the entombed beauties, and—the year vanished!

The bride and the bridegroom have stood at the altar, and the mourners have wept around the opened grave. The infant has been rocked in the cradle of innocency, and the locks whitened with the snows of time, have been placed on the pillows of clay. The shadows of a coming doom, also, fell darkly across the track of the departed year. The tornado, the cyclone, and the hurricane have swept over portions of this western hemisphere, and left desolated farms, ruined homes, and the mutilated dead, to publish the storm fiend's fury. Gaunt want has wasted the populations of Turkey, Persia, and Ireland, giving famine-year as a name to 1880. The volcano has poured out its rivers of wavy fire, and lands have trembled under the reeling tread of the shattering earthquake. The Sun itself has been in commotion; driftings in its fire-oceans have raised pinnacles of insufferable brightness to measureless heights, and left abysms of darkness to the astronomer's wondering gaze. As Jupiter rounds its perihelion, tremendous energies manifest their fearful activity on its belted globe. As we pass the confines of 1880–1881, the shadow of coming events deepens, and we take a firmer hold of the bright lamp of prophetic truth to enlighten our pathway through the fearful decade of the eighties. We are persuaded that this ten-year cycle will record a most wonderful history. In the coming revolutions we look for the extinguishment of the Crescent, and the uprising of Jacob's never setting star. The consummation of this age is now approximately near. We can not tell how far into the stormy future the work of the church may extend, nor can we tell in what mystic year of "the time of the end," our Lord will come, but an echo across the dreary past tells to the left-over remnant of waiting watchers—soon! With loins girded anew for the labors and sacrifices of the future we enter upon that part of our pilgrimage that the year, whose threshold we have crossed, will measure off. Whether we shall live to see the dawning of the day of God, or hether we shall find a grave opened for us a little further along in our pathway, we know not. But "we would see Jesus." If alive we would be changed; if asleep, we would wake in his likeness: for we desire to "be ever with the Lord." To the editors and publishers of our welcome exchanges we wish increased prosperity in their labor of love. To our patrons and readers we tender our heartfelt thanks, and pray God to reward them a hundred-fold for the kind helping hand they have extended toward us in all our trials and responsibilities. We near the borders of the glory-lands. Translation and resurrection intervene between us and the promised heavenly country. Let us walk circumspectly and thoughtfully as we near such wonderful subtilties. Commending all our dear readers to God and the word of his grace, we close with wishing all—A HAPPY NEW YEAR.

PERIHELIA AND CONJUNCTIONS.

It is perhaps well known to many of our readers that the period of time extending from the autumn of 1880 to the autumn of 1885 is remarkable for the singular position which the great planets belonging to the solar system will occupy both in reference to the sun as well as to each other. The perihelion of Jupiter occurred last October, and, as its motion is slow, it will not be very much removed from that position before more than a year. In November, 1881, Neptune comes into the perihelion position; in the spring of 1882, Uranus is nearest to the sun; in the autumn of 1885, Neptune makes its nearest approach; and Mars comes into perihelion in May, 1881. Sunday morning, June 13, 1881, will be remarkable for a very peculiar arrangement of the planets in regard to the sun and earth.

At that time the earth and moon will be on one side of the sun, and the following planets on the side nearly directly opposite: Mercury, Venus, Mars, Jupiter, Saturn, and Neptune. Uranus will not be so directly opposite, still its position will be in the same celestial hemisphere as the others. There is another feature worthy of attention: directly in range with those planets in the opposite celestial hemisphere will be Alcyone, the central star of the beautiful Pleiades. This star is said to be the grand center of that universe of shining orbs we see swinging around us on a clear night. It is claimed that this perihelion period will be a most calamitous time.

Pestilences, volcanic eruptions, cyclones, tidal waves, and earthquakes are anticipated by some who claim to reason from the analogies of the past. As to a cause of destructive influences, it is claimed also that the united attraction, in the same direction, of all these planets will be quite sufficient to produce the direct effect. We make no prediction. We may however be allowed to say that our Savior has connected signs in the sun, moon, and stars, with all the fearful calamities that are to come upon the earth at the close of this dispensation. We are told also of "men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking for those things that are coming on the earth; for the powers of heaven shall be shaken."

Whether this perihelion of the planets will so far disturb the electrical balance of our solar system as to produce this shaking of the heavenly powers or not we wait to see. At the present time we only subjoin two short extracts from other papers to illustrate our subject a little further.

"The great planets will not all be in perihelion in 1881, and they will not all be in perihelion together at any time. It is true that several of the chief planets will reach their perihelia within a few years, and that it is rare for them to be grouped so close together as they will be at one time next year. It is also true that remarkable coincidences have been observed between the existence of great storms on the sun, that produce electrical disturbances and possibly meteorological changes upon the earth, and the presence of Jupiter near his perihelion. Astronomers and all star gazers, will have plenty of phenomena in the heavens to occupy their attention for the next twelve months. The sky will not present such brilliant pageants again this century. There will be a remarkable series of conjuctions, and double and triple conjunctions. The most interesting of these is the great twenty-year conjunction of Jupiter and Saturn in April. This conjunction is one of the strongholds of the astrologers. As it occurs in the sign Taurus, which they say rules Turkey and Ireland, they feel safe, on account of recent occurrences, in predicting very momentous effects in those countries from the conjunction. There will also be conjuctions of Jupiter and Mars, Venus and Jupiter, Saturn and Venus, and the far-away giants Uranus and Neptune will play a part in this remarkable planetary levee.

"Venus will reach her greatest brightness in the spring, and will be so brilliant as to be visible at noonday. Her delicate crescent will be a favorite object in the amateur astronomer's telescope. Saturn will open still wider its wonderful rings, and will be one of the chief attractions of the evening sky for several months. Jupiter will not have much of his present brilliancy, but he will become a morning star in the early part of the year, and will be in April. Mars will begin to brighten in the latter part of the year, and then [illegible] magnificent tintings of the Aurora Borealis were the rosate hues of the Morning of the North, and these splendors were the out-shinings of the grand assemblage of heavenly personages in their palaces of light.

To a throne around which the bright constellations moved in majestic march, and over which the resplendent beamings of the Northern Dawning curtained, and upon which the incontrollable diverter of all earthly dominions, the Most High, was seated as sole monarch, the proud king of the Golden City—Babylon—aspired. And, in his own estimation, why should he not sway the sceptre of universal empire with no superior? Should not he—Child of the Dawning, and Day-Star among the orbs of heaven—wear earth's proudest diadem, and be seated on the world's supremest throne?

He would have his seat of empire where the infolding brightness pavilions the home of the Cherubim, and where the eternal Shechinah itself is pinnacled above the clouds in the mystic North.

But he fell and his dejection was to the vaults in the pit of sheol. In place of the beautiful throne on the bright mount of the North, canopied with never setting constellations, and centered in ceaseless splendors, he went down to the land of the shadow of death—the land of darkness as darkness itself, and without any order, and where the light is as darkness. The instruments of music were hushed in the stillness of the grave. Instead of the royal couch the worm was spread under him, and the worm covered him. Even sepulture was denied the proud aspirant after divine honors. In highest infamy he was cast out like an abominable branch to be consumed by worms above ground in horrible putrescency, and when thus reduced to dust, to be forever trampled under foot.

The monarch of the Great Mystical Babylon, the Papal Antichrist, may in this handwriting on the wall, read also a doom coming down. The man of sin, seated in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God, will meet a doom more dreadful than overtook the last proud occupant of Babylon's throne. To be thrust through with the sword, hurled down to the stones of the pit to be consumed of worms, and finally be trodden under foot as disreputable dust, was the doom of the one; to be consumed in the quenchless flames of perdition is the doom of the other. The Babylon of old has disappeared from the gaze of the world—the Babylon at Rome will "soon vanish from things that be."

Sententious.

No cross, no crown. No rain, no rainbow.

Borrowed thoughts, like borrowed money, only reveal the poverty that compelled the loan.

Think before you speak, and consider before you promise. Take time to deliberate and advise; but lose no time in executing your resolutions.

One hour of eternity, one moment with thy Lord, will make us utterly forget a lifetime's desolation.—Bonar.

Christianity proves itself as the sun is seen by its own light. Its evidence is involved in its existence.

> The little barefoot girl we meet,
> The maid where love was vain,
> The hopeless boy upon the street,
> And blind man with his cane,
> When they receive the humble mite
> Will feel their hearts so stirred,
> It, with the coin of value—light,
> We pass the pleasant word.

We are haunted by an ideal life, and it is because we have within us the beginning and possibility of it.

To fill the sphere which Providence appoints is true wisdom; to discharge trusts faithfully and have exalted ideas, that is the true mission of good men.

WE SHALL KNOW.

> When the silver have rolled in splendor
> From the beauty of the hills,
> And the sunshine, warm and tender,
> Dwells in slumber on the rills,
> We may read love's shining letter
> In the rainbow and the spray,
> We shall know each other better
> When the mists have cleared away.
>
> We shall know as we are known
> Never more to walk alone,
> In the dawning of the morning
> When the mists have cleared away.

FORMATION OF CHARACTER.—If you ever watched an icicle as it formed, you would have noticed how it froze one drop at a time until it was a foot long or more. If the water was clean the icicle remained clear, and it sparkled brightly in the sun; but if the water was slightly muddy the icicle looked foul, and its beauty was spoiled. Just so our characters are formed. One little thought or feeling at a time adds its influence. If every thought be pure and right the soul will be bright and lovely, and will sparkle with happiness; but if there be thoughts and feelings impure and wrong the mind will be soiled, the character depraved and darkened, and there will be final destruction. How important then that we decide for ourselves [illegible]

Brevities.

A mysterious star, called the Pilgrim, which was observed in 945, 1264 and 1752, is expected by astronomers to appear before long. It was described in 1752 as brighter than Jupiter, and "such was its brilliancy that persons were able to detect it at noon in a clear sky, and at night when the sky was so overcast as to hide all other stars." If it appears it will probably be visible for several weeks in the constellation of Cassiopeia.

Colonel Stephenson, of the United States Geological Survey, has turned another page in the long-sealed volume of American antiquities. A large village of cliff-dwellers has been discovered between the Jemez Mountains and the Rio Grande river, in New Mexico. The cliffs rise to a height of from fifty to 500 feet. Some of them contain two, some three, and others as many as five lines of dwellings, rising line above line, and back toward the mountain, tier above tier. The houses on the top of the cliff in the abandoned city are rectangular in form, but the caves are circular, being ten or fifteen feet in diameter, with arched roofs. Within the excavations are numerous small rooms. Before each line of dwellings there appears to have been pavements, sometimes four or five feet in width, on the broadest of which Colonel Stephenson found imprints of feet. Many pictures and hieroglyphics adorn the face of the rock.

Mr. Rosenberg writes from Adrianople, in Turkey. This country and its people have been fearfully desolated by the war of 1877-8. Widows and orphans, the aged and the young, are running about the streets begging for a piece of bread. But since the late war the Christians have taken the reins into their own hands, and are making wonderful progress in every department, whereas the Turks are gradually degenerating, so that in a few years they will quite disappear as a power and nation from Europe. Christian preachers, Scripture readers, and colporteurs are working very hard among Bulgarians, Greeks, Armenians, and Jews, and doubtless much good will in due time result through God's blessing. In this lies our hope.

The famine in Armenia is terrible. A correspondent of the London News writes that the population of Mardeu are reduced to despair by famine. Two thousand men attacked the houses of the wealthy inhabitants, and the Governor had great difficulty in dispersing them, although for that purpose he employed his troops. Fifty have been put in prison, and hundreds have fled from the town to avoid starvation. At Nisibin hundreds of persons are dying from dysentery, brought on by eating grass. In the district of Passan the people are living on grass. In the village of Kurdali a Kurd buried alive his son, 12 years of age, as he had no food.

News Items.

A BAD YEAR.

LONDON, January 3.—A Dublin correspondent says: A more repulsive and terrible year has never come upon this country. Its history may be written in two words—"Distress. Disturbance." It came in with the begging-box, and has gone out with the Budget-box. It will take many years to reconstruct the social system now in ruins, and few can be sanguine enough to hope that the task will be accomplished in the present generation.

GERMANY.

ANTI-JEWISH DEMONSTRATION.

BERLIN, January 3.—On the morning of New Year's Day, large crowds, mostly students, made a demonstration before a cafe much frequented by Jews. They smashed windows and mobbed all the Jews they met. The police were comparatively helpless. Another cafe was invaded and emptied of Jews. Large and stormy meetings continue to be held and the crusade seems to be gaining force. Fists are being substituted for tongue.

The famine in Russia, it is predicted will assume proportions altogether beyond previous estimates, and no steps are taken to meet it. The Russian peasant cannot afford at the best time to eat wheat, and this grain has been sold long ahead to the Jews and other middlemen. What is needed is an immediate importation of cheaper grain, if such can be obtained.

Earthquake shocks have been unusually numerous of late in all parts of Europe, and scientists boldly affirm that have been steadily on the increase during the past century. All kind of hypotheses are again being propounded to explain earthquakes in general and this alleged increase in their number in particular. Dr Novak of Pesth is the first learned man who has entered the lists and he boldly says that the earth [illegible] apart from its revolution around the sun and its rotation on its own axis, and that these other motions are shifting the equator and the pole, and that the earth's crust is cracking in the effort to adapt itself to the altered circumstances.

STARVING TO DEATH BY HUNDREDS.

The district governor of Orenburg has resigned, because the central authorities refused to provide the sum of 500,000 rubles to relieve the distress of Kirgus and other inhabitants of the province, who, because of successive bad cattle years, are starving to death by hundreds.

FIGHTING IN TURKISTAN.

A dispatch from Bergues reports that a carrier from Askabad has brought the news of severe fighting between the Russians and Turkomans near Geok Tepe. The losses were heavy on both sides. The Russians withdrew a short distance.

Letter Drawer.

ST. JOSEPH, Mo. Dec. 15, 1880.

Editor Restitution: Please find enclosed two dollars, as an offering to help enlarge the paper. We need a larger paper, and it seems to me that by a little sacrifice and exertion on the part of those who can, we may easily have it.

Brethren and sisters the time is short in which to work for the Master, and let us also remember that we are to work out our own salvation with fear and trembling. We may not idly fold our hands and say it is wrong. We have found the way of life. Let him that heareth say come.

I humbly beg to make a suggestion, which I have long thought of; namely. That part of a column or more, be given each issue, to making plain Bible doctrines for children or youth; and doubtless many children in the faith, but of riper years, would be benefited by such lessons, beginning at the very creation and leading on to the consummation. Perhaps a sort of catechism might prove as clear and instructive as any way. I only submit the idea for consideration, hoping some competent person may take hold of the work.

CARRIE WILLIAMS.

SOUTH BEND, Ind., Dec. 29, 1880.

Editor Restitution: I find it time to renew my subscription for THE RESTITUTION—the paper I read first of all the papers I take—and you will here with find P. O. order for five dollars. Apply two dollars on my subscription and the rest for the benefit of the paper.

My dear brother, I have been since Oct. 12, at 10:30 o'clock, wading deep in the cold and dark stream of affliction—the most sad affliction that mankind is heir to in this life's pilgrimage—the loss of a loving and lovely dear companion. How could I stand this woful grief was it not for hope and faith. She sleeps in Jesus, and her life is hid with him in God, and when Christ, our life, appears, then we can sing "O, how sweet it will be, in that beautiful land," etc.

My dear wife chose and marked the hymns Nos. 136 and 273, which were sung. Brother J. Lister preached the funeral sermon.

From your brother in the Good Hope.

W. W. BRICK.

WALKERTON, Ind., Dec. 23, 1880.

Editor Restitution: I hoped to be able to send you some new subscribers, but have failed. I will do what I can. We must not let the paper go down for want of help, when we see every day prophecy being fulfilled, and going into history. We have but a short time to work for the blessed Master, and we should use all ourselves of the means God has given us to promote the cause of Christ.

May we all prove faithful to the end that we may receive the crown of glory that will never fade away, is my prayer.

Yours in hope of the soon coming kingdom.

GEO. HENRY.

GIRARD, Kan.

Editor Restitution: Perhaps it will be of some interest to your readers to hear from the church here.

We have preaching once a month by Elder C. W. Herron. He is a good and worthy brother and an able defender of the faith. Brethren and sisters I some times feel like laying down my arms, and contend no longer for the faith, when I look back and bring to memory the good and glorious meetings we had at this place. We once numbered forty-five members and to-day there are only eight or ten. Now my dear brethren and sisters, what is the cause of this? Let me tell you as a brother that loves you, the church of God will never prosper unless we throw aside all coldness and selfishness and all speak the same things in Christ.

For a sample come one will come [illegible] holding to the one faith preaching things as matters of faith, such as holding to the Passover, throwing aside public prayer and church order. Now brethren these are inclined to tear down rather than to build up. Have we got so wise and learned so fast that we have got through the Bible, and are now preaching on the other side? we must remember that God is not mocked; whatsoever a man sows that shall he reap: if he sows to the flesh he shall reap corruption, if he sows to the spirit he shall reap life everlasting. We read in the last days some shall depart from the faith.

Oh where are some of those and what are they doing to-day, who once stood up boldly for the faith? Those who could speak forth in thunder tones the truths that yet shine forth like gold amid the darkness that now hangs over us? How hard in these last days it is to see those who once stood firm in the faith desert the standard of truth when they see the sword coming when they are so much needed to battle for that word which is to judge us in the last day.

May God be with you in your labor for truth.

G. W. LOVE.

MEXICO, Ind., Dec. 27, 1880.

Editor Restitution: I noticed in your last issue that the subscription of a great many would expire before another issue. Now brethren, let us try and be very punctual in renewing, and let every one of us try and get one new subscriber, and if we can't do that let us try another plan something like this: Each present subscriber pay for a copy for themselves and then pay for one to send to a father, mother, brother or sister, who may be living in a distant part, and perhaps never had the opportunity of hearing the gospel in its purity. Sometimes these silent messengers do a great deal of good, and who knows but we may in this way lead some in the way of life, and only think what a help it will be to the paper. It would be the means of putting it on a paying basis.

JOHN G. D. BENDER.

PARADISE.

When Paradise shall be re-established; then the hills shall laugh in their beauty, and the valleys sing the Redeemer's praise; then the "wilderness shall be glad," and the "desert shall rejoice and blossom as the rose;" then the whole earth shall be robed in garments of unfading loveliness, and become one broadway of holiness, one great Paradise with no spot on all its wide extent to send up the wail of sorrow; then "the throne of God and the Lamb shall be in it" and the redeemed shall "see his face, and his name shall be in their foreheads;" then the "ransomed of the Lord" shall "come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy;" then will all the divine promises be fulfilled; then will faith and hope be swallowed up in the full fruition of Paradisaic glory. The brightening streams that gild the eastern horizon tell us that the long dark night of waiting is almost over. Church of the living God! Take warning, "Behold I come quickly."

The sphere of Christian duty is not there or yonder, but here, just where you are.

Book Notices.

The January number of the Nursery, for 1881, has come to hand. This "Monthly Magazine for Youngest Readers," richly deserves the commendations bestowed upon it everywhere. It is a neat, chaste periodical, published at $1.50 a year. Address Nursery, 36 Bromfield st., Boston, Mass.

Babyland. This is the name of the only magazine in the world for the babies. The January number before us is well calculated to make little eyes sparkle with delight. If we were back in those days when the wee-ones were climbing our knees, we would subscribe for Babyland and let candies alone. A monthly, at 50c. a year. Address D. Lathrop & Co., 32 Franklin st., Boston, Mass.

Change of Address.

Newell Bond's address is 723 Eighth st., N. E., Washington, D. C.

J. M. Stephenson's address is 410 W. Madison st. Chicago, Ill.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The Lord willing I will be at King's Corner the second Sunday in January, commencing Thursday night before; the third Sunday at Steelville, commencing Friday night before. The first and second Sundays in February in Edgar county, Ill. Thursday night before the first Sunday at New Hope schoolhouse; the second Sunday at the Wells schoolhouse, commencing on Thursday night before.

J. H. HAVEN.

I am now residing in King City, Mo., and if any of the brethren pass through here, I will be happy to receive a call from them.

M. B. HOOVER.

Give thanks unto the Lord, for he is good: for his mercy endureth forever.

I for one feel like lifting up my heart in thankfulness to the Lord for what he has done for our paper during the years that are past, and particularly during the last year.

I do feel that thanks are due to him that in acknowledging him, and his guidance he will continue to bless.

The paper has had a hard contest since it came to Plymouth. The brethren who had charge of it during the first years of its life here, saw many dark and discouraging hours, but the Lord enabled them to stand by their posts, as he has those who have followed them in its charge. Steadily it has climbed upward. It is now getting more nearly free from debt, and its subscription list increasing. Give thanks to the Lord brethren.

S. R. WISE.

Exegetical.

How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer, Son of the Morning! how art thou cut down to the ground, which didst weaken the nations! For thou hast said in thine heart, I will ascend into heaven, I will exalt my throne above the stars of God; I will sit also upon the mount of the congregation in the sides of the north. I will ascend above the heights of the clouds; I will be like the Most High. Isa. xiv. 12-14.

The key to the explanation of this highly poetic language is found in the fourth verse, where the prophet uses the Hebrew word משל—mashal—which denotes a metaphor, a comparison, a similitude, or a proverb.

In that verse we learn that the proud king of Babylon is the subject of the highly wrought and beautiful rhetorical description contained in the verses we have selected for a short exegesis, and that the song of triumph delineates his proud aspirations and dreadful dejection in figures of surpassing beauty and grandeur. The allusion to exaltation upon the mount of the congregation, in the sides of the north, will appear very significant when we apprehend the full force of the expressions.

God first manifested his presence, and addressed himself to man in Paradise. It was therefore a conjecture that the glorious garden of delights escaped the waters of the flood, and was localized in some unknown region of the earth, on some eminence higher than any earthly mountain, where the seas and skies met. In the Greek Mythology, Mount Olympus was regarded as the residence of Jupiter and the chief celestial deities, and the clouds veiled its summit were supposed to conceal the entrance to the vault of heaven.

The Babylonians, like the Greeks, had their mythology, and the prevalent idea with them was that some mountain in the far away north was the residence of the gods, and that the abodes of the celestial congregation were on the sides of this delectable eminence. This, it is said, was the prevalent belief of the ancients, especially among Oriental nations. This mountain was supposed to be the center of the world. The starry constellations, that circle the pole and never set were only the heavenly appendages revolving around the mountain seat of exalted, most exalted divinity [illegible]

Poetry.

SOMETIME, SOMEWHERE.

ROBERT BROWNING.

Unanswered yet? the prayer you have pleaded
In agony of heart these many years?
Does faith begin to fail? is hope departing,
And think you all in vain these falling tears?
Say not, the Father hath not heard your prayer;
You shall have your desire, sometime, somewhere.

Unanswered yet? though when you first presented
This one petition at the Father's throne
It seemed you could not wait the time of waiting?
So fervent was your heart to make it known.
Though years have passed since then, do not despair;
The Lord will answer, yes sometime, somewhere.

Unanswered yet? nay, do not say unanswered,
Perhaps your part is not yet wholly done.
The work begun when first your prayer was uttered,
And God will finish what he has begun.
If you will keep the incense burning there,
His glory you shall see, sometime, somewhere.

Unanswered yet? Faith cannot be unanswered:
Her feet were firmly planted on the Rock;
Amid the wildest storms she stands undaunted.
Nor quails before the loudest thunder shock.
She knows Omnipotence has heard her prayer
And cries, "It shall be done," sometime, somewhere.

Communications.

THE HOUSE OF GOD.

S. R. WINCE.

"Not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as is the custom with some, but exhorting one another: and so much the more as you see the day drawing near."

We see from the Diaglott rendering of this passage, that we are not only to assemble ourselves together but that we are to exhort one another to it, and so much the more as we see the day drawing near. Mark that little word it. They were to exhort one another to come together. It had become a custom with some to forsake these gatherings. Gentile was prejudiced against Jew, and Jew against Gentile. This prejudice stood in their way. It was likely to work their spiritual ruin. It must be broken down. Hence the command, "Forsake not the assembling of yourselves together." It was a direct command. The voice was from heaven and could not be disobeyed.

As the children of Israel set out to go into another country, so have all who follow Christ, set out for a good and delectable land. Egypt is behind us; we are in the wilderness, but the land is nearing; we can catch glimpses of its beauty, "Pearl-bright portals," "jasper walls" and "golden pavements," flash before us, and our hearts leap at the thought that we shall soon be over yonder in that land of wonder, "in that land of cloudless sunshine where Jesus is the King."

What if we should be turned back to wander and die in the wilderness of sin? turned back now when but a space of time scarce as wide as the river Jordan, intervenes between us and the kingdom?

Israel had come to the Jordan. Spies had been sent over. A report had been brought back. Joshua and Caleb said it was an exceeding good land, and exhorted the people to go forward, that they were abundantly able to take it. But the ten men who had gone over with them were afraid. They had seen men of great stature. Anakims and walled cities. They discouraged the people. It was a land that would eat up the inhabitants thereof. They had been but as grasshoppers in the eyes of those giants. The whole host wept and cried all night. They no longer believed the Lord. They wished that they had died in Egypt or died in the wilderness, and were even going to choose themselves a leader that they might go back to the land of bondage. Had not the Lord a right to be angry? Had he not a right to exclaim, "How long will it be ere they believe me?" Mark the words, "believe me." In not going forward as the Lord had commanded them, they were not believing him; they were disobeying his word.

He had said, "I will give you the land, I will drive out the inhabitants from before you with a strong hand and with a stretched out arm" if ye remember all the commandments of the Lord to do them and seek not after your own heart and your own eyes." Yet they faltered, doubted and looked back, and the thing that they desired came upon them. They were not pardoned, even after confession of their sin. They said "We be here and we will go up into the land that the Lord hath promised, for we have sinned," but they were smitten before their enemies and perished in the wanderings of forty years.

Disobedience was accounted with God as unbelief. Whoever refuses to do, refuses to believe. The two are inseparably bound together. Whoever places himself under God's leadership and does not keep his commands has not faith. The report that Caleb and Joshua brought back, was God's report. These men were his servants. He spake through them. He had said before that it was a land flowing with milk and honey, and he confirms his words by the testimony of eye-witnesses, who describe it just as he had described it.

There is a lesson here that we do well to heed. "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man the things which God hath prepared for them that love him." The tabernacle of God will be with men. Earth's desolate places, will become like the garden of the Lord. No sorrow nor death will be there, neither shall there be any more pain. The land has been seen, the report has come back. John was an eye witness of what its glory will be. And the Master says, through the mouth of his servant, "He that overcometh shall inherit all these things. I will be his God and he shall be my son."

The report is good, "shall inherit." The condition is only that we overcome. "Lo I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." As God was with Israel, so is Jesus with us. He goes before us; he leads the way. The cities that we are to take, may be walled; the men that hold them may be mighty men, but "the weapons that we wield are not carnal; they are mighty even to the pulling down of strongholds." The enemy may come out against us in great force, but as God was on the side of Israel, when Caleb and Joshua crossed the Jordan, so is he on our side.

We can overcome. The land is to be ours for an everlasting inheritance. And "this is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith." We have preaching. We meet together. We fight for the truth. We send out our papers, all because we believe God. We go forward, because we do not doubt his word.

We believe that all the wicked confederations of earthly governments will soon be broken; that as the kings of Canaan once hid in caves to escape the wrath of God, so will the kings, the mighty men and captains flee into dens and caves of the earth to escape the wrath of the Lamb. The white, the red, the black and the pale horses of the first four seals have gone out, and have fulfilled their mission. The fifth seal has been opened, and the ashes of its martyrs are crying to God, "How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost not thou judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth?"

The great earthquake, the blackened sun, the moon clothed in blood, and the storm of stars of the sixth seal are things of the past. Mountains and islands are being literally moved out of their places. The great day of wrath is before us. Six trumpets have uttered their voices. The seventh is sounding. "In the days of the voice of the seventh angel when he shall begin to sound the mystery of God should be finished, as he hath declared to his servants, the prophets." "Who shall be able to stand?"

The day draws near. O how near! How solemn the exhortation now "Not forsaking the assembling of yourselves together." It is not a matter of choice. It is not as we will. The command is not a human command. The words are not human words. They are from heaven. "They escaped not who refused him who spake on earth. Much more, shall not we escape if we turn away from him that speaketh from heaven."

No matter what the command, it must be kept, if we would serve God acceptably with reverence and godly fear.

It is easier to do God's will, when we bring this matter home to our hearts, when we impress it upon our minds with solemn fervor, that we have no more right to disobey God in what he commands to be done in our journey to Canaan than had the children of Israel in their journey to the land. "Much more shall not we escape."

And again, it is easier to do God's will, when we know what he has commanded to be done, and why the commandment has been given. In reading the context of our text, this all becomes plain. We have been sanctified through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ, once for all. Our sins and iniquities are remembered no more. We have therefore boldness to enter into the holy of holies by the blood of Jesus. We can approach through the veil of his flesh, by the new and living way that he has consecrated for us. And having an high priest over the house of God, let us draw near, with a true heart, in full assurance of faith. Faith has made us sorry for our sins, it has brought us to repentance, it has caused us to be washed from our iniquity, there is no more consciousness of evil, we fear no coming judgment.

Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering. He is faithful that promised. And let us consider, or bear one another in mind, to provoke unto love and good works.

Our brethren and sisters are to be thought of, not with evil intent, but that they may be provoked into loving each other more. It must be a study with all of us, how this is to be done; how they are to be provoked into love, and how provoked to do good.

And right in here comes the command "not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together." We have been sanctified through the offering of the body of Jesus Christ, our sins have been taken away. We can therefore have boldness to enter the holy of holies by the blood of Jesus. We come together that we may enter. We can approach to God by the new and living way. We come together that we may approach him. Paul says and having an high priest let us draw near, assemble yourselves that you may draw near.

Let us hold fast the profession of our faith.

It is by assembling together that the profession of faith is held fast. We say to the world in these meetings, that we still believe in our God. We know him to be faithful. He will send his son to this earth to reign. it is in meeting together, that we provoke each other to love and good works.

We teach each other in psalms, and hymns, and spiritual songs.

"Whilst Christian is among his godly friends,
Their good words make his sufferings seem less;
For all his griefs; and when they let him go,
He's clad in northern steel from top to toe."

The early Christians continued steadfastly in the apostles doctrine and fellowship and in breaking of bread and in prayers." Mountain fastnesses, forsaken prisons, the Catacombs of Rome, hidden caves, vaults and lonely forests were the assembling places of their after-followers. In the face of the prison they met to exhort one another.

No considerations of safety kept them away, no plea of danger was put in. And there are no considerations in the command whereby we may neglect it. If these earnest ones in the days of persecution, found a place and time to meet and worship God, though followed by spies and dragged to prison and to death, we can find a place and time to meet.

The caution not to forsake the assembling of ourselves together is put with the greatest seriousness and is followed by the awful words "If we sin willfully after having received a knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for us."

These words would not have been put after the command if there was not in this forsaking of God's people, danger of apostatizing from the faith, a want of trust in God. God has said, "assemble" If we refuse to do this we disobey. We abandon God's people. We betray the cause which we have professed to espouse. We are it may be unconsciously going back into the world. Worldly things have more attractions for us than the vital questions that relate to eternal life.

They that feared the Lord in ancient times "spake often one to another, and the Lord hearkened and heard, and a book of remembrance was written before him for them that feared the Lord and that thought upon his name."

As we meet now, how it cheers our hearts to think that the Lord hearkens, that he has heard us, that a book of remembrance is written before him for us, and more than all, that we shall be his in the day when he makes up his jewels. We want to assemble ourselves together, that we may be remembered. We want to exhort one another, that we may be found written in the book, "that we may be spared," that we may be found to "have served God."

I am so thankful that the Lord has put it in your hearts dear brethren and sisters, thus to meet. The blessing of the two or three that are gathered together in God's name will be yours.

And he that hath called you unto his kingdom and glory will be faithful to his promise. Do his commandments and you will have a right to eat of the tree of life that is in the midst of the Paradise of God. Before you are aware, you will be come to the Holy Land. The clouds will soon reveal the Lord in glory. Continue to meet, continue to exhort one another and so much the more as you see the day approaching. It will bring all that God has promised. The great recompense of reward will be yours; the crown, the life, the glory, the kingdom.

And now, "May the Lord bless and keep each one of you. Make his face to shine upon you and be gracious unto you. May he light up his countenance upon you and give you peace." Amen!

THE YEAR 1880.

G. M. BYERS.

The year 1880 has come, has measured its days and its seasons, has been characterized by its momentous events, has brought its disappointments, its reverses and its sorrows upon the one hand, its realized hopes and its joys upon the other, and has at last emerged into the history of the eternal years of the past never more to return. Many are the words which have been spoken, and the actions which have been performed, that now, with all their influence as for good or for evil, stand engraven upon the eternal records. Reader, in view of the coming of the Master, in view of impending judgment, in view of possible heirship to the glorious kingdom with the Divine ruler, how is it with thee? Are you satisfied with your work and with your record of 1880? As for myself I desire not to chronicle for the public my reverses, my disappointments or my failures; I will leave these with him who knoweth all hearts and motives, and only mention that during the year 1880, for the Master's cause I have made 171 speeches: I have traveled to do this by rail 2,850 miles, and by horse and buggy, 1,200 miles. Our expenses and our wants have been more than met, and in harmony with our petitions our health has been unprecedentedly good. May God bless the word spoken and enable it to bring forth abundantly and unto perfection and enable us to do more in the coming year.

Selections.

THE BIBLE.

The book of books. It has outlived the degeneracy of all the preceding ages, and still reigns triumphantly supreme. Caval with time, it shall endure to eternity. Its pages, sweeter than the honey dew, contain the bread of life for weary, faint humanity. The sin-sick may be healed there, and the thirsty spirit may drink to fullness of joy. The lords and mighty men may obey it with honor, and the humblest dweller in tents may likewise sip from the full brimming fountain with gladness. Its contents are indescribable, surpassing by far all the productions of ages. While its teaching may confound the wisdom of sages and philosophers, yet the commonest mind can learn wholesome precepts from its pages. The highest order of intellect may find food therein, and those not above the point of mediocrity can learn of it. The aged man can grow young, as it were, while the child can gain the wisdom of mature years. Sweet innocence breathes in every page, and every syllable beams with the brightness of the Sun of Righteousness. It is all aglow with the freshness and beauty of its own truth. Every word is clearly stamped with the impress of God. He breathes and lives in every line. The Holy Bible, yes, it shines with his smile and is dark with the frowns of his wrath. It speaks in thunder tones from Mount Sinai, and the earth trembles with its power. From Mount Calvary it speaks in the soft tones of gentleness and love.

It is the source of the world's wisdom, the repository of its knowledge, and the unfailing guide of its holiness. The most ancient and authentic history is on its pages, while it contains histories of generations yet to come. It is a natural field where one may always find choicest fruits and fairest flowers. Yet it contains the pure gold, the sapphire, and the onyx stone. Every blessing accessible can be had there, and the entire list of goodness is there.

Men may boast of the mines of wealth, treasures of earth, crowns of gold, diadems of pearl, sceptors of power; but none are comparable to the Holy Book. It is general in its applications and universal in its teachings. What a sublime spectacle to see its work! Not confined to the perusal of the wise, and the halls of grandeur, it is a much-loved inmate of the humblest cottage. Oh! could we but read the history of its course. Many a heart, sore and weary, has it healed and refreshed. Ah! it has calmed many a throbbing breast. Many sighs has it quenched, and dried many a tear. It has bound up the heart, torn and bruised, of mothers weeping for their children. It has turned the dimness of despair into the full-orbed hope, and the weakness of faith into the strength of love.

It has led grief-stricken friends from the little mound that marked the last resting-place of the one they held dear, to the house of prayer and praise. It has turned the streaming eyes of the orphan to a kind Father in heaven, who will wipe away all his tears. It has led men from the cold and barren waste to the warm, rich valleys of God. Yes, it has called them from the abodes of misery, haunts of woe, sinks of vice, forums of sin, and haunts of iniquity, to the temples of righteousness, adorned with the beauty of piety. Not unfrequently has the foot-sore, sin-sick pilgrim sought refuge under its sheltering wing, and found rest from his journeying. When the decree of the ruler would forbid the reading of its precious pages, the eyes of faith, kindled by love, will seek the secluded nook, the remote and dismal cave, the cleft of the barren rock, and in deep silence and profound solitude, read its glorious truths, while tears of joy fall thick and fast down the careworn visage; and there, with emotion swelled too big for utterance, the heart finds a balm for all its woe. Again has many a humble child of God, perhaps a bereaved mother, by the dim light of her lowly cottage hearth, read her Bible in smothered tones, lest the sharp ear of the persecutor overhear her words. What a striking picture, yea, reality, of that faith that will remove mountains, and lead its possessor up to the beauties and realities of the highest heaven. What good and eternal truths to be followed by blessings indescribable and unfading. Precious, precious refuge! Are you weary, faint, and sore? It will rest, restore, and cure you. Have friends departed,—loved ones been cut down in death? or adversity been hard upon you? It is the only medium of refuge. If persecution has borne you down to the earth, and friends have failed, foes triumphed, disaster wrought sad havoc with you, and utter anguish taken hold on you; if you have despaired, and lie down to breathe your last, will you not look dimly but trustfully through the clouds of thick darkness that surround you, and view the sweet promises contained in the Blessed Volume? Let hope spring anew within you, and gladly take up again the burden of life, and carry it till the Author of the Blessed Word calls you like a wanderer home.

Glorious hope of immortality does the Blessed Book inspire. Hail, heavenly treasure! Thou stainless word of God, live and abide forever. Go forth conquering and to conquer, leading captivity captive and giving gifts unto men. Mighty, O mighty to save! Eternal be the praise of the Author, and everlasting the rest of his followers.

The Christian.

THE POWER OF AVARICE.

"I know of no disposition," says a writer, "which sooner or more effectually makes a man blind to his own character than avarice. The miser rarely, if ever, mistrusts that he is a sinner. He thinks himself only a rich man. He does not dream that he is an oppressor, a liar and a cheat; but merely supposes himself to be prosperous, sagacious, and skilled in business.

With these views he will naturally entertain no thought of repentance; and no suspicion that it is necessary for him. His conscience, it is to be remembered, has, in the meantime, lost its power to remonstrate, and to alarm.

His heart, also, is so entirely engrossed by schemes of accumulating wealth, or is rather so absolutely possessed by the demon of avarice, as to have neither time nor room for the admission of a thought concerning reformation. He is left, therefore, to the domination of this wretched appetite; and becomes fixed and hardened in all his sins, without a check and without resistance."

The conversion of a miser would be, indeed, "a miracle of grace." Who ever saw such an occurance? No idolatry is more debasing than covetousness, and yet it may be concealed and unsuspected. Avarice burrows in the darkness. Secrecy is essential to avaricious success. Hence the habit of concealment is fostered, the idol is enthroned in the chambers of the heart, and every power is prostrate before the golden calf.

The men who have been mighty through God, have spurned this glittering idol. Abraham, who would not have a thread nor a shoe-latchet from the king of Sodom; Moses, who spurned the treasures of Egypt to win the reproach of Christ: Samuel, who, after walking before Israel from infancy to gray hairs, could challenge the whole nation to point out an instance of fraud, oppression, or bribery in his entire administration; Paul, who without a murmur appointed himself to hunger and cold and poverty and nakedness; and finally our Lord Jesus Christ himself, who became poor for our sakes and had not where to lay his head, may serve as illustrations of a power that is stronger than wealth, of a worship of something higher and holier than the golden calf.

Another most notable feature in avarice is the final ruin of its votaries.

All have sinned, and some have repented. David, Manasseh, Saul of Tarsus, and Simon Peter, were all great sinners, but they repented and were saved. But what of covetous sinners? What of Balaam who loved the wages of unrighteousness? What of Achan who stole the golden wedge? What of Gehazi who lied for two talents of silver and two changes of raiment? What of Demas who loved this present world? What of Judas who sold his Lord? Peter denied and wept; Judas betrayed and died.

No sin is more deceptive than covetousness, and none more deadly. Let us flee from it, and by loving generosity and unworldly and unselfish diligence in well-doing, keep clear of its pollution and its dangers.—H. L. Hastings.

Sunday Magazine.

A JEWISH WEDDING.

It was when staying with a friend at Tangiers, on a brief visit from Gibraltar to the north coast of Africa, that I saw the ceremony of a Jewish wedding. One of the sons of a Jewish consul was about to be married to the daughter of a Hebrew banker and silversmith. My friend was invited to attend, and the invitation was kindly extended to me and to two English officers who had crossed over with me from Gibraltar, and who were also the guests of my host. The marriage took place in an open courtyard in front of the banker's house, before a large attendance of Jews and Christians.

The Jews do not think it necessary to be married in a synagogue, for, in their opinion, any place where prayers are offered up is by that act consecrated.

At the east end of the quadrangle, and facing the visitors, was a large white and yellow silk canopy, supported at each of its four corners by long poles which were held by four bronzed young Hebrews. Beneath the canopy was a table, on which were a massive silver goblet and some empty wine-glasses.

At the side of the table was a rabbi, with his white silk talith over his head, awaiting the arrival of the bride and bridegroom. He had not long to remain expectant for the bridegroom, attended by his father, very shortly afterward entered the court-yard, and took his stand under the canopy, all around crying out, "Blessed is he that cometh!" Soon after his arrival the bride appeared through the parting crowd of spectators, and was led under the canopy and then three times conducted round her future husband, thereby fulfilling the command of Jeremiah: "The woman shall compass a man."

The bridegroom, after this escorted his bride around the outside of the canopy, whilst the Jewish guests threw grains of corn upon them, saying: "Be fruitful and multiply." He maketh peace in thy borders, and filleth thee with the finest wheat."

The couple now entered again under the canopy, and stood facing each other, opposite to the rabbi. The marriage ceremony then commenced. The rabbi filled one of the empty glasses with wine from the silver goblet, and taking it in his hand, amid profound silence gave the blessing. The engaged couple then tasted the wine, and immediately afterward the bridegroom put a ring on the bride's finger, repeating in Hebrew after the rabbi: "Behold thou are betrothed unto me with this ring, according to the rites of Moses and Israel." And now the tedious proceeding of reading the Kethuvah—marriage contract took place. It was written in Chaldee, and was read aloud in that language; and as it was a tongue certainly "not understanded by the people," and the burning rays of an African sun were almost vertical, we were all greatly relieved when this most uninteresting performance was over. The rabbi, having ended, took a glass of wine, stood in front of the united pair, and pronounced the seven blessings.

These blessings uttered, the new husband and wife tasted the second glass of wine and then an empty glass was placed on the floor, upon which the husband stamped, crushing it to atoms. All cried out with one voice, "Mazel tov"—"Good luck!"—and the marriage ceremony was over. The crushing of the glass is to remind man that God can as easily crush him; and that, therefore, man should direct his thoughts not only to earthly things, but to those above.

THE PLANS OF GREECE.

The policy which has been adopted by the Greek Government may be summed up in three words—war in spring. If before the snow melts next year Europe fails to secure to the Hellenes the peaceable occupation of the territory marked off for them at Berlin, they will make the attempt to secure it themselves by force of arms. "Greece," M. Coumoundouros is reported to have said, "has but one course to pursue." She has now 50,000 soldiers. Sixty thousand are to be kept under arms during winter, and the remaining 40,000 of the reserves summoned for drill. M. Coumoundouros calculates that he will be able to put 80,000 men in the field early in the spring, and to maintain so large a force he proposes to raise a loan of 150,000,000 drachma by mortgaging all the resources of the country, including the funds of the richer convents. The Greeks are under no illusions as to the prospects of the war for which they are preparing; but M. Coumoundouros will probably be supported by the Chamber in declaring that even defeats in the field are preferable to the prolongation of the present suspense. The declarations of the Greek Premier, which accurately foreshadow the policy of Greece, afford a timely warning of what would follow if the Great Powers, paralyzed by mutual suspicion, were to adopt a policy of abstention, and leave matters to take their course in the East.

Pictorial Description

—OF THE—

Tabernacle in the Wilderness.

ITS RITES AND CEREMONIES

BY JOHN DILWORTH.

Thirty-two pages. Price [illegible] Send to the office of this paper

Youth's Column.

Fifth Restitution. We send many thanks for the package of papers, on Thanksgiving Day. We read and investigated, then gave to brother C. B. Longwich, with a promise that he would read them carefully and then give them to his neighbors.

The papers, or preachers, as we call them, I hope will profit them a hundred fold. We look around on the sleeping millions who do not even know that there is a promise of Christ's coming, much less the near approach of his glorious kingdom, and I think even little girls like me ought to do what they can.

I had occasion to speak of Christ's second advent to a group of my schoolmates the other day, and it was astonishing to see how many were ignorant of his coming. One little girl even asked me if we would have to go to school when he came.

Please excuse my many mistakes, for I am only a little girl fifteen years old, and a cripple too.

Yours truly,

MINNIE SOMERS.

[Four dollars accompanied this letter, to send THE RESTITUTION to different ones named in her order. May God bless our young sister. We only fear that she has done more than her part. We will start our children's department with her communication.—ED.]

Children's Record.

John Newton's Two Heaps.

"I see in the world," said good old John Newton nearly a hundred years ago, "two heaps, one of misery, the other of happiness. It is but little I can do to take from the one heap and add to the other, but let me do what I can. If a child has lost a halfpenny, and if by giving it another, I can wipe away its tears, I feel that I am doing something. I would gladly do a greater thing if I could, but let me do this little thing."

In all this, John Newton was just following his Master, who "went about doing good." Let us all seek to have the same spirit in us.

Who is this young girl, so gently helping the poor lame boy down the steps at the Sabbath School door? We do not know. But we think we know something about her. "By their fruits ye shall know them,"—and we know her by her fruits. She has the opportunity, and she is doing a little deed of kindness; so we are sure she has a kind heart within. That is the root, and this is the fruit.

Perhaps there are some of our readers (are you one of them?) who never did a kindness to anybody in their lives. They think of no one but self,—their own praise, their own comfort, their own pleasure, their own profit. But there are others, we know, who try, like John Newton, to be always taking a bit from the one heap and adding it to the other. Among their brothers and sisters at home, among their companions at school, wherever they go, they are always trying to be of use, and to show kindness to others.

Which of the two kinds of boys and girls is the happier? And which is most like Christ?

An Important Corporal.

It is related that during the American Revolution, the corporal of a little company was giving orders to those under him relative to a piece of timber, which they were endeavoring to raise up to the top of some military works they were repairing.

The timber went up with difficulty, and on this account the voice of the little great man was often heard, in regular vociferations of "Heave away! There she goes! Heave ho!"

An officer, not in military costume, was passing, and asked the non-commissioned officer why he did not take hold and render a little aid.

The latter, astonished, turning round with all the pomp of an emperor, said, "Sir, I am a corporal!"

"You are, are you?" replied the officer, "I was not aware of that," and taking off his hat and bowing, the officer said, "I beg your pardon, Mr. Corporal," and then dismounted and lifted till the sweat stood in drops on his forehead.

When the work was finished, turning to the commander, he said, "Mr. Corporal, when you have another such job, and have not men enough, send for your Commander-in-Chief, and I will certainly come and help you a second time."

The corporal was thunderstruck! It was none other than Washington who addressed him.

Married.

At the house of the brethren at Winchester, Va., Dec. 2, 1879, by N. J. Morgan, A. H. Mitchell and Sister Mary E. Good, daughter of John D. Good, all of Winchester.

Now may their life be long and clear
While passing the rough world of care,
And may they be the joy of home,
Share on that bright and blissful home.

Poetry.

THE BURDEN BEARER.

Christian, when thy way seems darkest,
When thine eyes with tears are dim,
Straight to God, thy Father, hastening,
Tell thy troubles all to Him;
Not to human ear sounding
Thy sad tale of grief and care,
But before thy Father kneeling,
Pour out all thy sorrows there.

Sympathy of friends may cheer thee
When the fierce wild storm has burst,
But God only can console thee
When it breaks upon thee first:
Go with words, or tears, or silence,
Only lay thee at his feet,
Thou shalt prove how great his pity,
And his tenderness how sweet.

Think, too, thy Divine Redeemer
Knew, as thou canst never know,
All the deepest depths of suffering,
All the weight of human woe;
And though now in glory seated,
He can hear thy feeblest cry—
Even hear the stifled sighing
Of thy dumb heart's agony.

All thy griefs by him are ordered,
Needful is each one for thee:
Every tear by him is counted—
One too much there cannot be;
And if whilst they fall so thickly,
Thou canst own his way is right,
Then each bitter tear of anguish
Precious is in Jesus' sight.

For too well thy Savior loves thee,
To allow thy life to be
One long, calm, unbroken summer—
One unruffled, stormless sea;
He would have thee fondly trusting
Closer to his loving breast;
He would have that world seem brighter
Which alone is perfect rest.

Though his wise and loving purpose
Greatly yet thou mayst not see,
Still believe, with faith unshaken,
All will work for good to thee:
Therefore when thy way is gloomy,
And thine eyes with tears are dim,
Straight to God, thy Father, hastening,
Tell thy sorrow all to Him.

Communications.

CHRISTIANITY.

RICHARD CORDALEY.

We are sometimes told that the devil had no right to offer the kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them to Christ. This objection is worthy of some consideration. In the Bible the devil is represented as being wise, and in his tempting Christ it is apparent that he was not ignorant of what was written in the Scriptures, and quoted more Bible than you will sometimes hear in a modern sermon. Do you think he would presume to offer to the Son of God, as he knew Christ to be, that to which he had no title or claim? Christ admitted the devil had a kingdom, for he said if a kingdom be divided against itself, it cannot stand. So if Christ by Beelzebub (as the Pharisees charged) cast out devils then was the devil's kingdom divided. If the devil had no kingdom it could not be in danger. But enough on this point.

We certainly can not claim the right to do a thing unless Christ or his apostles have given the permission. If we are the servants of God we are made such by obeying the demands of his law. It is not rendering service to God when we do things he has not commanded, or, when we are doing things he has positively forbidden.

The commands of God are definite. A present and future reward is made dependant upon obedience. When we become servants of the world and are at work for it, we are only entitled to what the world can give—which is only for the present. But we cannot serve God and Mammon. If we put on the armor of God, and then put the armor of the world on also, can we readily use both of them? Let us see: "Finally my brethren, be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might. Put on the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil. For we wrestle not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places. Wherefore take unto you the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all, to stand. Stand therefore, having your loins girt about with truth, and having on the breastplate of righteousness; and your feet shod with the preparation of the gospel of peace; above all, taking the shield of faith, wherewith ye shall be able to quench all the fiery darts of the wicked. And take the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the spirit, which is the word of God." Eph iv. 10–17.

From this Scripture we learn, what uses to make of the various weapons of our warefare, and that they are to be used for the Lord, and the armor is so arranged as to shield us from harm if we keep each weapon in its proper place.

Now go to the armory of any civil government, and call for the armor necessary to be used in fighting for it, and mark the contrast. At the latter place the weapons are for the very purpose of wrestling against flesh and blood.

I ask again can any man serve in this double relation?

Christ said: "My kingdom is not of this world, else my servants would fight."

God himself left his people to guess out a line of action, but has given clear instructions, positive and negative, and it is of very great importance that we should learn what things we can do, as also what we must not do. Each is imperative.

I will now call attention to some of the negatives. In the first place, when we become citizens with the saints and are of the household of God; we are aliens to every other government, but are under obligation to be subject to the government in which we live, and which for the time being gives us protection.

We must therefore pay tribute (or taxes) customs, honors, etc., as shown in Rom. xiii. The negatives in this chapter are verse 8, "Owe no man anything, but to love one another; for he that loveth another hath fulfilled the law. For this, thou shalt not commit adultery, thou shalt not kill, thou shalt not steal, thou shalt not bear false witness, thou shalt not covet; and if there be any other commandment it is briefly comprehended in the saying, namely, thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. Love worketh no ill to his neighbor: therefore love is the fulfilling of the law."

Those who believe in making common cause with the world, and stand identified with it, as elements will do well to read the following lesson to learn how they stand in the estimation of God: "From whence come wars and fightings among you? Come they not hence, even of your lusts that war in your members? Ye lust, and have not: ye kill and desire to have, and cannot obtain; ye fight and war, yet ye have not, because ye ask not. Ye ask, and receive not, because ye ask amiss, that ye may consume it upon your lusts.

Ye adulterers and adulteresses, know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God? Whosoever therefore will be a friend of the world is the enemy of God." Jas. iv 1—4.

Will it not be better for us if God be our friend?

"Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this: to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world" Jas. i 27.

We find some of the spots as follows: "Now the works of the flesh are manifest, which are these; adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, murders, drunkenness, revelings, and such like: of the which I tell you before, as I have also told you in time past, that they which do such things shall not inherit the kingdom of God." Gal. v 19–21.

If we fail to inherit the kingdom of God, or an interest in it, we fail in everything in the future world, but the second death.

It is high time we were looking closely after these things to learn the true status of a Christian. To live as God requires of us in this world will make us a peculiar people, and we will be zealous in good works. We must have a zeal for God and his truth.

Must contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints, and we must be doers of the work assigned us.

The signs bespeak the coming of the Lord as an event in the near future. Who then will be found able to stand?

Readers, will you and I be ready, or will we have our minds overcharged with the cares of this world?

In the next I will consider some things which are called "Christianity" by professors of religion.

Summary of Travels and Labors During the past Four Months.

J. M. STEPHENSON.

Since my last report I have visited Kansas twice, once to attend the annual conference which convened near brother Noe's, in Cloud county. Rainy weather prevented many from coming from a distance. The people turned out well considering. Good attention was given to the preaching of the word, and good interest was manifested.

I next visited brother Row's neighborhood, in Wilson county nine miles southeast of Elk City. Quite a number of good, zealous brethren reside in that community. The congregations were large and the best of interest prevailed.

I remained over two Sundays, and preached every evening and twice each Sunday. I was much pleased with my visit, and hope much good may be the result in the great ingathering. There are several investigating, who our brethren think, will obey.

I formed the acquaintance of brethren and sister Row, brother and sister Herron, and a number of others. I think good might be done there with a protracted effort.

I was sent for to discuss the question at issue between us and a distinguished Universalist preacher by the name of Shin. He declined discussing during my stay among them, on the ground of being worn out in a political campaign for office. We failed to agree on the questions to be discussed. He refusing to discuss unless I would affirm what I preach, alleging that we believe in the annihilation of the wicked. I denied believing in annihilation in the sense of reducing everything to nothing. I agreed to affirm that the Scriptures teach the everlasting destruction of the wicked. He would not agree to this because it is Bible language. I told him that all Bible ideas are expressed in Bible language. He demanded that I should affirm that the Bible teaches the endless extinction of the existence of the wicked. I responded that I would do so if he would affirm the endless existence of all men. Also that if he could sustain that point I would admit the final happiness and holiness of all men.

He would not do this. I predict that there will be no debate. My experience has been that when a man refuses to discuss a fair issue, he will not debate at all, his only object being to gain time.

Our brethren had formed a union with the Adventists, without a union of sentiment. The Adventists are so prejudiced against the future age that they will neither hear or investigate that subject. The Adventists in that locality are not an exception to this rule. They opposed and misrepresented our views more than any other denomination. A union in name without a union in faith generally genders strife.

To get rid of probation after Christ's second advent and the ushering in of the future age, they take the most ridiculous positions, such as the immortalized saints building houses and planting vineyards for amusement in the new heaven and earth state. This position was taken by an eminent Advent minister in Wisconsin. The passage referred to reads, "And they shall build houses and inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards and eat the fruit of them. They shall not build and another inhabit; they shall not plant and another eat; for as the days of a tree are the days of my people, and mine elect shall long enjoy the work of their hands. They shall not labor in vain, nor bring forth for trouble; for they are the seed of the blessed of the Lord, and their offspring with them. And it shall come to pass that before they call I will answer; and while they are yet speaking I will hear. The wolf and the lamb shall feed together, and the lion shall eat straw like the bullock; and dust shall be the serpent's meat. They shall not hurt or destroy in all my holy mountain saith the Lord." Isa. lxv. 21–25.

1. They build and inhabit, they plant and eat the fruit. That is just what mortals are doing now.

2. They shall not build and another inhabit; they shall not plant and another eat.

The foregoing language demonstrates that the design of building is to inhabit, and not for pastime or amusement, as boys build cob houses and demolish them for fun. They plant and raise fruit to eat and satisfy hunger, the same as mortals do now. Wonder if they bring forth children for amusement also.

3. With what propriety shall it be affirmed that the days of immortal beings shall be as the days of a tree? Immortality cannot be measured by days or the life of a tree. These similes limit the lives of God's chosen people, and plainly represent a more glorious and permanent state of things than has ever existed upon earth, and yet infinitely below the incorruptible and immortal state.

4. What about their immortal offspring, if these parents are immortal, as an Advent preacher in Kansas affirmed in a conversation with me? I should think that bringing forth immortal children would be a serious and responsible business.

I referred to the language of Christ in reference to the post-resurrectional saints neither marrying nor being given in marriage, and wished to know if Christ would inaugurate a system of miscellaneous intercourse, which would be a system of free love, filling the land with illegitimate children. He did not attempt to meet or remove these difficulties.

I refer to these things to show what insuperable difficulties are in the way of union and co-operation with these so-called First Day Adventists. They, like Sabbatarians, are always willing to debate with the so-called orthodox ministers, on the points at issue between them, but they will not discuss the question of the future age with those differing from them on this question.

I next visited our brethren in Edgar county near Paris, Ill. Though rainy and muddy we had good and attentive congregations, as we never fail to have if the roads are passable. There I met and enjoyed sweet converse with our good and faithful brother Malone. It was both pleasant and edifying to listen to the select words which expressed the matured thoughts of our very intelligent brother. It was refreshing to meet and enjoy the society of these zealous brethren and sisters in Christ. Two or three were immersed Sunday afternoon.

Twice have I visited Richmond and Geneo, Ill., speaking in the Baptist church at Richmond Sunday morning, and in the Congregational church at Geneo, in the evening. The pastor of the Baptist church and several of the leading members are quite liberal.

In the afternoon four intelligent believers were immersed, among whom was our beloved brother Wray's daughter. Good may be accomplished at Geneo. I propose visiting them again as soon as I can with my outstanding appointments.

I next visited the vicinity of Adrian, Mich., delivering six discourses in a schoolhouse about three miles from Adrian. Owing to the severe cold weather, and prejudice, the congregations were small at first, but continued to increase to the close. Those who attended, with a very few exceptions, seemed very much pleased. Our able and zealous brother L. C. Chase, purposes continuing the meetings. There is a fair prospect that with a protracted effort, before the cold of those interested abates, good may be accomplished.

Brother Levi Chase is very well spoken of, and has the confidence of all who are acquainted with him, both as an able expositor and a good citizen. The mantle of the father seems to have fallen upon the son.

I preached six times near Raisins, where brother L. H. Chase resided. In the forenoon of each Sunday the meetings were held in the little church built by the brethren, but in the evenings the meetings were held in a spacious schoolhouse near by. Both the church and schoolhouse were crowded with attentive, and I must believe, from what I saw and felt, interested hearers.

Their weekly meetings are well attended. More united and zealous brethren I have not met anywhere. There must be near forty who assemble every first day to break bread and speak and exhort.

Brother L. C. Chase speaks every first day when at home. Brother L. H. and sister Chase raised a family of ten children, five sons and five daughters. I think I was informed that they were all in the faith, and all residing in that community except one. And a finer choir of singers it has not been my privilege to hear amongst us, and belonging to one family. Long will this visit be remembered as one of the most pleasurable, and I trust useful, of my eventful life of thirty years in my Master's vineyard.

I next visited, by accident, our brethren in Clinton county, near Burget's Corners, and near brother Thurman's. With short notice the schoolhouse was packed on Saturday evening, and well filled for the cold stormy day the next morning and afternoon. There also I met our indefatigable brother Hatch.

On Sunday evening brother Thurman took me in his buggy through the snow storm to a schoolhouse six miles west. We found the spacious room filled to its utmost capacity. I remained over, speaking Monday evening to a good congregation, considering the cold weather.

I was favorably impressed with the prospect of good being done at the last place referred to. Brother Hatch is a faithful worker, and will cultivate that part of Christ's vineyard. The prospects are fair that good may be accomplished.

Burget's Corners is one of those old places where, apparently, all has been accomplished that can be. There are, however, quite a number of old veterans, who have passed through many storms and remain unmoved.

The last place I visited was Dundee, Blackford county, Indiana, where we have fifteen or twenty zealous brethren, with brother Roby as their pastor. Brother Robey's labors are very acceptable, both to our brethren and those without.

I preached Friday and Saturday evenings, and three times Sunday. Notwithstanding the rain and bad roads the congregations were quite large and the interest very good. Our brethren there, as well as every place I visited, are united and exert a good influence upon the surrounding community. I left on Monday, with a promise to return so as to preach the Friday evening before the second Sunday in January. I would say to my brethren there that I have so many call for preaching as soon after the holidays as possible, that I can only spend one solid week. Commencing Friday evening before the third Sunday in January, I will preach at Kirtland, Ind., as brother Castle may appoint; and the Friday evening before the fourth Sunday in January at brother Wray, of Richmond, Ill., may appoint, and Friday evening before the fifth Sunday in January at Kingsbury, as brother Clem may appoint.

At all the above named places I can remain over three or four evenings of the week following.

Cavaliere Nori, a retired Italian officer, has lately discovered in the vicinity of Herculanum the ruins of immense baths and various other edifices adjoining. They are still covered by more than thirty feet of volcanic matter from Vesuvius and about eighteen feet of the lava of 1631. As soon as permission is obtained excavations on a large scale will be commenced.

Selections.

[Christian World Pulpit.]

FITNESS TO LIFE.

Under Christianity the great and pressing question is not, "Are you fit to die?" but, "Are you fit to live?" and that is another question altogether.

Every one knows how the first question is urged on all sides in sermons and tracts and conversation, by those who imperfectly understand their work. The inquiry, Are you fit to die? is pressed on mankind with ceaseless iteration. Corrupted Christianity dwells altogether on the future, and mostly on its terrors, appealing mainly in support of piety to men's capacity for being frightened rather than persuaded. It mainly labors to set before men the future consequences of past transgression, and strives to concentrate attention upon a scene of existence, both in time and place, far removed from the present. Its incessant demand upon its followers is for fitness to die—by some change of thought and feeling which shall effectually protect the departing soul from judgment to come. And it often brings to bear the strongest motives for helping the poor souls to become "fit to die;" a ceremonial washing with water, to which God is supposed to have annexed some potent force of regenerating the soul—cutting off the entail of original sin—and effectuating the transference of the sinner into the covenant of grace. He is then supported in this safe state, or state of salvation, by instructions, catechisms, repeated confessions and absolutions, and specially by frequent eating and drinking, under the species of bread and wine, the very "body and blood, and soul and divinity," of the Lord Jesus Christ—whose life thereby became his, and partially fits him to die, but not wholly, not even with extreme unction, because there remains to suffer the secondary punishment of sin in purgatory, where suffering completes the purification "so as by fire."

Now, never once in the whole Bible is the question, Are you fit to die? pressed on sinful man as the chief concern. But it is always and everywhere the question of "fitness to live," because the law of creation and redemption alike is the survival of the fittest, and men can become fit to live hereafter only by becoming fit to live here, and that is a religion in which death is abolished, and the life here leads on to the life beyond.

I think we cannot even imagine Jesus Christ proposing to a sinful man this question. Are you fit to die? much less as pressing that on children as the most potent form of spiritual suasion—children, to whom the thought of death is distant and unreal. With him it is, "Ye must be born again"—not a word about death, except that some men shall "die in their sins." The life must be renewed, and that new life must come from him, here and now. "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of Man and drink his blood, ye have no life in you, in yourselves." We must now "pass from death unto life." "To-day is the day of salvation." Fitness to live for ever is the main question, and that is provided for by our being made fit to live now.

Under Christianity it is not. Are you fit to die? because an ungodly soul is even now in the shadow of death, is even now in the first stage of death. He is forsaken of God. He is half dead already, and the hell into which he sinks is an awful death-bed of the soul, racked with the agonies of remembered sin. He is not fit to live, and much less for ever; and Christ's work is, by bringing light, to make him see what he is—a creature worthy of death, "unworthy of eternal life"—just exactly what the Jews wrongly thought St. Paul to be, though he was a man full of that life of God that shall never die.

This, then, is the Divine test of the quality and value of every man's being: not fitness to die, but fitness to live. And this throws all the stress upon living—living here, and living unto God. A perverted doctrine results in perverse psalmody. Is it not shocking to see in the hymn-books of Christendom—even in children's hymn-books—so many unnatural hyperbolical expressions of desire to be gone into other worlds, to give up the ghost, and to become an angel in distant heavens? It is a monstrous development. This is man's world, here must he serve God, here true life is required, and there is no excuse for desiring to depart except when the energies of life are worn out, or the work is done. Indeed, there is no greater calamity than that some lives should end; as there is no better test of their value than a general intense desire for their preservation or recovery. All Judah mourned when the many-sided, glorious life of Hezekiah seemed ebbing away, and his sun to be going down at noon. All the Christians of Asia wept when they thought that they should see Paul's face no more. All Jaffa wept when Dorcas died—he had so lived that all loved her, and she made religion seem easy and beautiful to young men and maidens, who, otherwise, might have thought that their clever scoffs at the grimmer types of the godly life were unanswerable.

Let us settle it in our minds that our prospect of eternal life depends on our present possession of a life which in its essential quality is worthy of an endless duration. Let us sweep away the lying vanity of a rotten Protestantism which is not accompanied by the signs of a new creation. There are not a few who seem to suppose that justification is a special dispensation from the obligation of doing works meet for repentance, so that Christ is glorified by saving the chief sinners "just as they are." Under this view men become more afraid of good works than of bad ones; for good works might be trusted in, and so rob Christ of his glory in saving sinners; whereas bad works are a recommendation to him who saves the chief of sinners freely, and a sense of "utter vileness" keeps Christians humble and believing. This is a net in which it is disgraceful for any rational being to be caught by the powers of darkness. For every honest intelligence, even the humblest, can see that while we are taught that salvation is from first to last a free gift, and that the new eternal life bestowed by God on those "dead in sins" is a gratuitous bestowment, so that justification of life is not of works, but of grace only, the gift of God to sinners—while every honest mind can see this, every such mind can also see that it is a new life which is thus freely bestowed—a life in the Spirit, a life unto God; so that justification of life never occurs except when regenerate life has begun, and the work of the Spirit produces a life here which is fit to live for ever.

Hence we see why Christ, in conversing with Nicodemus, sets in the forefront of his teaching the necessity of being born again, of being begotten again of the Spirit, of the "incorruptible seed of the Word which liveth and abideth for ever." God is preparing new heavens and new earth, and is preparing new creatures to live in them, and none, not one, shall enter there "that worketh abomination, or maketh a lie." Hence, too, we see why errors on regeneration, on the necessity and nature of the second birth, poison Christianity in its very fountain. When that work of the Spirit which creates the germ of the new life in God is represented as in effect the work of a parish priest in baptism, the almost mechanical effect of a ceremonial form of unsound words, who can wonder if all that follows is confusion and error? Who can wonder if men become accustomed to claim to be "regenerate," and even "High Churchmen," in whom no sign sometimes appears of life which is worthy of everlasting duration. "That which is born of the flesh is flesh," and no mere application of water can convert it into spirit. "That which is born of the Spirit is spirit." Verily I say unto you, "Ye must be born again." Salvation is from sin in its power as well as its guilt, and there is no salvation from death except in the bestowment of the life of the Son of God. "We are complete in him," who "of God is made unto us righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption." If the Head shines in Divine splendor like the sun in its strength, it is impossible for the members to be iron and clay.—Edward White.

As water runs down from the swelling hills, and flows together in the lowly vale, so grace flows not but into humble hearts.—Augustine.

CHRIST'S KINGDOM!

WHERE IS IT? WHAT IS IT?

—By Jos. Lacier.—

A discourse delivered at Berwick, Pa. This is a 32 page tract, neatly printed, and should have a wide circulation. Price 50c.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

GOD ESTABLISHED

—AND—

The BIBLE VINDICATED.

—By A. J. Eychaner.—

A new tract, and one that should be in the hands of every infidel in the land. Those living in infidel neighborhoods will do well to get this work, as it will aid you in controlling this enemy. Twenty pages, price 5c., 10 for 50c., or 30 for $1.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

SECOND EDITION.

The GOSPEL of the KINGDOM

Advocated in a series of Ten Discourses

—By Wiley Jones.—

This edition is elegantly printed and bound by Hagenbuch & Co., clear type, good paper, 376 pages. Plain cloth binding $1; cloth gilt edge $1.50; leather marbled edge $1.50, post paid. To obtain this valuable work, send the price by postoffice money order or registered letter, to

WILEY JONES,
Norfolk, Va.

BOOK LIST.

The following publications are kept on hand and will be sent postpaid to any address in the United States or Canada, upon receipt of published price. Address all orders to

THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Indiana.

BIBLE PEARLS. Suitable for wide distribution. 1. The Gospel. 2. The Coming and Kingdom of Christ. 4 by 24,000 Papers, in 1875. 3. Immortality. 4. The Kingdom of God. 5. Nature of Man and Thoughts for Thinkers. 6. The Two Advents. 7. What is Religion. 8. The Restitution Age. 9. Destiny of the Wicked. 10. Repentance. Ten copies 6c., or assorted packages of ten, 30c.

FOUR PAGE TRACTS.
25 for 30c; 50 for 55c; 100 for 90c.

The State of Man in Death. Contains an abundance of proof-texts.

Life and Death. A concise statement and contrast of the two uses of these terms, both the Theological and Bible use.

Human Government a Failure. By A. R. Maxwell.

Resurrection. Austin Curtis. A careful examination of the query—"If a man die, shall he live again?"

Is it Popular? H. V. Reed. An examination of texts to see who are subjects of salvation.

What is Death? H. V. Reed. An excellent contrast of the Bible teacher and modern theory.

The Perverted Parable. The Rich Man and Lazarus. W. Lunn.

EIGHT PAGE TRACTS.
3c. each, or 25 for 60c.

Is it Essential to Believe in the Royalty of Jesus? B. Wilson.

Kings of the Tribes. H. Bonar, of Scotland.

The Scattering and Gathering. H. V. Reed, considers the future three-fold gathering of the Saints, Israel, and the Nations.

TWELVE PAGE TRACTS.
3c. each, or 12 for 25c.

Christian Union. Joel A. Simonds.

Resurrection and the Kingdom of God. E. Hoyt. Well calculated to inquiring minds.

Immortality Brought to Light. The grand treatise of redemption. J. R. Cook.

SIXTEEN PAGE TRACTS.
5c. each; 12 for 50c, or $3 for $1.

The New Birth. Josiah Peirce.

Hope for the World. Joel A. Simonds.

The Kingdom of Messiah. Joseph Seiss, D. D. Set forth in beautiful language and apt Bible quotations.

Which is Right? T. Wilson. Showing the Bible teaches on the question as to whether Christ's Kingdom is to be on the earth or in heaven.

The Seed of Abraham. Joel A. Simonds. The promise made to Abram, renewed to Isaac and Jacob, and so frequently referred to by prophets and apostles.

The King in His Beauty. H. V. Reed. Just the thing to circulate everywhere.

TWENTY-FOUR PAGE TRACTS.
5c. each; 8 for 25c, or 20 for $1.

Jew Evangelized the Jew's Gentile. Teaches the true nature of Christ's kingdom.

Will the Earth be Burned Up? T. Wilson. An argument from the Scriptures, showing that the earth will not be annihilated, as many suppose, but will be the everlasting inheritance of the saints.

Which am I Unveiled; or the Voice of God Against Spiritualism. H. V. Reed. Cannot be too widely circulated.

The Scriptures. Joel A. Simonds.

THIRTY-TWO PAGE TRACTS.
5c. each, or 12 for 50.

Evangelism, comprising the Reign of Christ over Israel and the Nations; or a brief statement of the things concerning the Kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ. Wm. Jones.

The Restitution; or the world restored to its primeval state, and this to be its everlasting condition. E. Miles. A careful and satisfactory examination of Acts 3d.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS.

The Rich Man and Lazarus. T. Wilson. The exposition throughout is in harmony with Bible teaching. 36 pages, price 10c.

The Rich Men and Lazarus. C. F. Sweet. A careful unfolding of Luke xv and xvi, with an examination of Luke xiii, and xxiii. 56 pages, price 15c.

Primitive Christian Faith. C. F. Sweet. A concise history of the Primitive Christian Faith, or the Gospel as held by the early fathers, in a small compass. 50 pages, price 15c.

The Gospel Silenced by the most irrefutable evidence. W. H. Wilson. 45 pages, price 20c.

The Doctrine of Baptism as taught in the Holy Scriptures, together with a collection of evidence upon the subject, from the most learned theologians, critics, lexicographers and ecclesiastical historians. 41 pages, price 20c.

Bible Triumphant. H. V. Reed. A reply to "One hundred and forty-four self-contradictions of the Bible," by A. J. Davis. An able refutation of Infidel cavilings. 8 pages, 5c.

Discussion on the State of the Dead. Between the Rev. W. C. Burnham, Congregational minister, and W. C. Kellogg, both of Garland. The positions discussed were: 1. That the dead exist in a living, conscious state after their decease. Affirmed by Burnham. 2. That the entire existence of the dead from death to the judgment is unconscious, insensible, and unable to perform any act whatever. And that they rest in darkness, silence and the dust. Cloth 75c., paper 50c.

Future Punishment. Its nature and duration. Henry Constable, Prebendary of Cork. Exactly the book to circulate. 250 pages, cloth $1.00.

The Destiny of Russia, as foretold by God's prophets, together with an outline of the future movements and destiny of England, Germany, Turkey, Infidels and the Jews. Outline Map of England and Asia. A work invaluable to every student of prophecy, and of intense present interest. 116 pages, cloth 75c., paper 50c.

Bible, or the Intermediate State of the Dead. Henry Constable, A. M. Presents the Bible doctrine of the state of man between death and the resurrection. 300 pp. $1.00.

God's Plan of Salvation. J. M. Stephenson. A comprehensive and plain statement of the leading features of Bible theology. Our brethren will find this just the thing to read and circulate. The nature of man, the kingdom of God, and the obedience of faith, are ably and clearly set forth. Over 300 pages, cloth $1.

THE NEW TESTAMENT IN GREEK AND ENGLISH!

—ENTITLED—

THE EMPHATIC DIAGLOTT

—By Benjamin Wilson.—

Containing the Original Greek text of the New Testament, with an Interlinear word-for-word English translation, based on the renderings of eminent critics, and on the various readings of the Vatican Manuscripts, together with Illustrative and explanatory foot notes, and a copious selection of references.

The different renderings of various passages in the New Testament are the foundations on which most of the sects of Christians have been built up; with this work each reader may judge for himself whether the words there literally translated are so arranged in the common version as to express the exact meaning of the New Testament writers.

New improved edition on larger paper, 861 pages, cloth $4.00, Library binding $5.00.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

HYMNS OF THE ADVENT!

Above is the name of a New Hymn Book, compiled by

—Chas. C. Barker.—

Mr. Baker combines in this book the "Hymns of the Morning" and a fresh and rare selection of music. As an appendix he adds a selection of "Favorite Hymns, whose music is as a household word. Those having the "Christian Psalmodist" and no music book will do well to get this work. Price 40c. cloth 50c.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

ASTRONOMICAL ETIOLOGY,

—OR—

STAR PROPHECIES

Concerning coming disasters on the earth from 1881 to 1885.

—By M. L. Knapp, D. D.—

And others. It also contains an appendix by the publisher. 72 pages, 25c. each.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

MISTAKES of INGERSOLL

A review of Col. R. G. Ingersoll's lecture entitled "Mistakes of Moses."

—By J. M. Stephenson.—

This is a large size eight page tract, printed on tinted paper. 10c. each, or 12 for $1.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

A Letter to a Friend!

—By Mrs. C. C. Woodby.—

This little work is not well known that it needs no comment. 32 pages, price 5c.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

THE RESTITUTION
—IS ISSUED WEEKLY BY—
The Christian Publishing Association.

OFFICERS OR BOARD OF DIRECTORS:
R. S. DWIGGINS, ... President.
CHARLES PALMER, ... Vice President.
E. K. MARSHALL, ... Secretary.
S. A. CHAPLIN, ... Treasurer.

EDITORIAL COMMITTEE:
CHARLES PALMER, WM. BAIRD-SMITH,
L. C. ROBERTS.

S. A. CHAPLIN, ... EDITOR.

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTORS:
C. M. ST. THERESA, R. WILSON,
J. F. V. GRETHER, J. A. SPOONER,
WILLIAM JONES, C. W. MYERS,
A. F. WALDO, M. D.

The Restitution.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXX. Read. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JANUARY 12, 1881. NO. 2.

THE RESTITUTION.

TERMS—TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR, Payable in advance. Three and Six Months at the same rate.

All Letters and Communications to THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all His holy prophets since the world began. It seeks to take God, the establishment of Messiah's kingdom, as the basis, with the first coming of Jesus, and the Second Advent connected with it, as the consummation. The doctrine of the restitution of all things, the literal resurrection of the dead, and the second coming of the Lord Jesus, the King of glory, to reign a thousand years on the earth, are the fundamental principles of the Christian faith. Man's hope of life is through Christ, and Christ only. "He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life." A brief belief of the things which pertain to the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, is necessary to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life.

Communications.

THE WORLD TO COME.

J. B. ROSS.

Mat. xii. 31, 32 says—"The blasphemy against the Holy Ghost shall not be forgiven unto men, neither in this world nor in the world to come."

In this text in Mark and Luke we have the world to come or the two worlds or ages spoken of, which apply to this world.

1. Though this Bible expression is unfamiliar to most yet the language is accurate and as readily understood as when we speak of the present age, the course of this generation are, that to come. We thus read of the world to come, a Saviour to come, a city to come, and in Revelations we have the account of redemption of all things made to the New heavens and a new earth.

2. This aion, or world or world or age, as in Eph. ii. 7; Col. i. 26, plural. It here denotes not dispensation, the gospel age, in the time of the Gentiles. It is the period allotted for preaching the gospel of Christ and gathering a people to his name, till its end.

3. The world to come (inhabitable earth) will be under Christ. Heb. ii. 5-14; Dan. vii. 14, 18, 27. In the prophecy we have the order of the kingdoms, but in our text we have the dispensations, or ages, so that the kingdom to come will be realized in the world to come, under Christ.

4. The end of the world, in Mat. xxviii. 20, applies to the end of the present state of human affairs. It is called this present evil world. Its evil state appears in the history of Jesus, of St. Paul himself, and of the church and race. Even the better class endure evil as did the patriarch. Few and evil, said he, have been the days of the years of my life. But observe

5. The world to come will be the good time for the good things to come. The re-genesis, the times of refreshing, the times of restoring, the dispensation of the fullness of times; the time of the blessed and only Potentate.

There is no mistake as to this order of the ages and the kingdoms, because it is the kingdom of the world to come which the gospel proclaims, the kingdom of the Christian's primal prayer, the kingdom when the blessed and holy will reign with Christ the one thousand years.

6. This present world or age belongs to time. This all know, yet such is the prevailing darkness, or want of faith, that only a very few seem to see that the world to come belongs to time also. Because the word aion, age or world, is as often plural, for a series of ages, as singular, in our text. In Dan. vii. 18; Eph. iii. 21, it occurs in both singular and plural. The saints take the kingdom and possess the kingdom forever, even forever and ever—for the age (to come) and the age of ages, to follow.

The only clue to this may be found in the shadow of good things to come, the sabbath, the seven sabbatic years, forty-nine years, and the jubilee, the larger cycle.

The Mosaic age as ordered or fixed, was but a prolonged series of sabbaths, sabbatic years and jubilean cycles. Now as these ordinances were all constructed on, and belonged altogether to their allotted times; nay more, as the service of the seventh day and the seventh and fiftieth years were never due except in their appointed time, therefore the time was fundamental and essential to the make up of the example and the shadow of good things to come. But not a jot or tittle of the law shall fail, therefore that primary order of seven days, and seven years, and seven times seven, or forty-nine, to the jubilee, seems clearly to outline the age and state to come.

7. The word aion for world, occurs in the New Testament over one hundred times. The Hebrew word olam, over five hundred times. Yet who regards the times before appointed, or God who determined them, as they stand us close on to the judgment? In this present evil world the prevailing disorder results from the want of the divinely appointed order. It ought to end. It must end, and so give place to [illegible] to be understood of the Christian Church?

2. Do facts bear out the idea that the Bishop of Rome as the head of the Roman Catholic Church throughout the world, has been developed out of an apostasy in the Christian Church, which had begun when the Apostle Paul wrote this letter to the Thessalonians?

3. Do facts bear out the idea that the Bishop of Rome has opposed and exalted himself against all civil or ecclesiastical rulers, or both?

4. Do facts bear out the idea that the Bishop of Rome is the "Man of Sin" in the sense of being the lawless one?

5. Do the facts bear out the idea that the Bishop of Rome sits in the temple of God showing himself that he is God?"

In regard to the first question, I have already pointed out three senses in which the phrase "temple of God" may be used. The first is the Temple which existed at Jerusalem at the time of Paul's writing the epistle. But it will hardly be maintained that the "falling away" spoken of by the apostle could apply to the Jewish institution, for the simple reason already stated, that the Jewish iniquity was already full, and doom pronounced, "Behold, your house is left unto you desolate." Execution was inflicted, by the instrumentality of the Roman power some thirty years after Paul's intimation. In these circumstances there need be little hesitation in setting aside this sense as entirely inadmissible.

Another use of the phrase "temple of God" is that future temple which is to be erected under express Divine authority, in connection with the re-establishment of the kingdom of God upon the earth under the Messiah. The question which here occurs is, Have we any intimation in the Scriptures that there will be, under that institution, any such usurpation of authority arising out of an apostasy, as shall answer to the description given by the apostle? I am not aware of any such intimation, or of any scattered hints, from which such an idea could be gathered. I must therefore pass from this sense as entirely out of the question.

But the idea is entertained by many that there will be erected in the future, without Divine authority, a temple which will answer to the requirements of Paul's description. So far as I am aware, the only evidence in support of such an idea is derived from the passage in hand, by insisting that the mere use of the language is sufficient to warrant the idea, if it be accepted in its literal sense. But there is no absolute necessity for the literal sense here. The usage of the apostle in other parts of his writings, and the reasonableness of the metaphorical sense, ought to satisfy the strongest advocate of literality. But granting the literal sense probable, not to say proved, would it be justifiable to call such a temple "the temple of God." The former Temple at Jerusalem could claim to be of Divine authority, and if other circumstances were favourable, it might so far be admissible. The Christian Church was also a Divine institution, and existed when Paul wrote. But the existence of a temple in the future under any other than Divine authority, and yet worthy of being termed "the temple of God," is so extremely improbable, that it is matter for wonder that is was ever seriously entertained.

The only remaining sense in which "the temple of God" is employed is that of its being applied to the Church of Christ. When the apostle penned the phrase in his letter to the Thessalonians, the Church was still in a state of comparative integrity; and though it has become corrupted in very great degree, it is still in a very important sense represented by the Church of Rome. This sense may be to a large extent only literal and historical, and to a very small extent either doctrinal, ritual, or constitutional; but it cannot be denied that the institution which now exists in the Eternal City, over which Cardinal Pecci, publicly known by the assumed style of Leo XIII., is bishop—has a pedigree of a certain kind which has been directly derived from that community of Christian disciples to whom the apostle wrote his letter, addressed to call that he is Rome called saints." The extent to which a departure from the original has practiced either now or at any former period in the history of the Roman Church cannot deprive it of the designation "the temple of God," for the very sufficient reason that the apostle in employing the term anticipated such a departure from some divine institution in which a personage collectively or individually, could occupy the position of "the Man of Sin."

So far there is fitness in applying the phrase "temple of God" in the passage under consideration to the Christian Church. But not only was apostasy matter of prediction by the apostle, but as matter of fact it actually began. It was only in the incipient stage, however, and as these letters to the church at Thessalonica are supposed to have been the earliest of the Apostle Paul's writings and none of the other epistles written by the other apostles are of so early a date, we cannot expect to find records of the fact. It was at an earlier date than this, however, that the Judaizing element came into operation in subverting the true faith and obedience of the gospel. The momentous character of this error may be estimated from the fact that a meeting of the apostles and elders at Jerusalem was held to consider it, and that Paul's letters to the Romans and Galatians were written with direct reference to it.

The further development of the apostasy, predicted by the apostle, was noticed in the first article, to which the reader is referred. The second letter of Peter and the letter of Jude are also full of testimony to the same effect. The case of Diotrephes, mentioned by John in his third letter, is also worthy of note in regard to that "love of pre-eminence" which forms so striking a feature in Paul's description of "the Man of Sin," as well as in the Roman Catholic Church.

From what has been advanced I submit that an affirmative answer has been given to the question, "Do facts bear out the idea that 'the temple of God' in 2 Thess. ii. 4 is to be understood of the Christian Church?" No other institution is to be found which answers to the description given by the apostle; and the Christian Church, especially under its Roman phase, furnishes ample evidence of identity with that description.

2. Do facts bear out the idea that the Bishop of Rome was developed out of a falling away of the Christian Church, which was begun when the apostle wrote? Here it is undeniable that the apostasy was first, and the Pope next. But the question is as to the second being the effect of the first. In the text it is plainly intimated that there is a close connection between the apostasy and the Man of Sin. The apostle says: "That day shall not come (or be present) except there come a falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed." And again, "For the mystery of iniquity doth already work; only he who now letteth (or hindereth) will let until he be taken out of the way. And then shall that wicked be revealed," etc. The words "only" and "then" in this quotation show very clearly that the working of the mystery of iniquity is only prevented from bringing about the revelation of "that Wicked" (one) by some intervening obstacle. Can it be shown that the Papacy was a growth, however slow and gradual, from the corruptions of the primitive Church? It is admitted on all hands among Protestants that there has been apostasy in the church; and although the "falling away" is left undefined in the passage under consideration, it is amply delineated in other places, and finds full illustration in the early centuries of the Christian era.

In treating a subject like this it is impossible to avoid repetition. I have already referred to the error of the Judaising teachers who sought to impose the law of Moses upon Gentile disciples as a condition of justification in the sight of God. And we know that one of the principal features in the Reformation from Popery in the sixteenth century was justification by faith without the deeds of the law. In addition to this, however, the faith was subverted. The kingdom of God, which was the theme of apostolic preaching, lost its Israelitish character, and found a substitute in a sort of spiritual kingdom. The Throne and Kingdom of David promised to the Messiah was exchanged for a kingdom in the hearts of men. "The Annunciation" of the angel to Mary has been made a prominent subject of pictorial illustration in the Roman Church, while the important matter which was announced has been lost sight of. "He shall be great and shall be called the Son of the Most High and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of David his father, and he shall reign" the house of Jacob for ever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end," is even according to the Roman Catholic English version, the concluding part of the promise. I need not dwell on the fact that this is "plain sense," which necessarily have been understood by Mary, has no place in the creed of the Pope. "Fear not, Mary, for thou hast found grace with God. Behold, thou shalt conceive in thy womb and bring forth a Son, and thou shalt call his name Jesus," is the first portion of the intimation and I need not say how exactly this is accepted and with what consistency, by the same persons.

And not only so, but how directly this simple announcement has been exalted into what is termed a "dogma," in which the correct of the immaculate conception of the Virgin herself is declared to be the belief of the Church.

I need not dwell on the way in which other important truths of Scripture have been subverted. The readers of the Reindeer do not need to be told how the great truth concerning eternal life has been set aside. Our Lord announced himself as "the resurrection and the life"—as "the way, the truth, and the life"—as the Father hath life in himself, so he hath given to the Son also to have life in himself," and "as the Father raised up the dead and giveth life, so the Son also giveth life to whom he will." "I am the living bread which came down from heaven. If any man eat of this bread he shall live for ever." "Except you eat the flesh of the Son of Man, and drink his blood, you shall not have life in you."

In direct opposition to this plain teaching, which I have quoted from the Douay translation, it is well known that the philosophical figment of Plato, that every man has life in himself, subsisting in that "immortal soul" which is never mentioned in the Bible is the faith of the Romish Church. On this has been grafted the doctrines of purgatory for departed souls in Hades, and of eternal suffering for the finally impenitent in the place of future punishment.

In a similar manner the simple ordinances of Baptism and the Lord's Supper have been corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ." The so-called "baptismal regeneration" of unconscious babes, has become the prevailing idea connected with Christian baptism in the Roman Church. The eating of bread and drinking of wine, as a solemn act of remembrance, has been degraded to a level with certain things, such as penance, extreme unction, etc., none of which can be Scripturally regarded as ritual in their character, but which are classed with Baptism and the Lord's Supper as the "seven sacraments." The doctrine of "transubstantiation" again, has deprived the elements of bread and wine of their simple representative character, and stamped them with a mysterious and supernatural significance, nowhere attributed to them in the New Testament. Only a blind credulity in the ministerial efficacy of a so-called priest (or sacrificer) and in his utterances at the so-called altar, could lead intelligent beings to give any countenance to such pretentions as being of Scriptural authority.

Another feature of the apostasy is seen in what is termed "orders" in the Church of Rome. This proceeds on the assumption that the apostles chosen by our Lord must have successors. I only touch on this point for the purpose of showing that one important privilege of unofficial disciples of Christ has been taken away. The primitive bishops were to be "apt to teach," but this was evidently not their principal duty. To a number of qualifications, all directed towards the true function of a bishop, which was simply overseeing, spiritual to teach is added [illegible]

Selections.

THE MAN OF SIN.

Number Two.

W. H. H.

In last paper I mentioned the two principal views which are held of this passage, namely, that held by the great body of Protestants—that "the man of sin" is the Bishop of Rome, of course, in his official capacity as the head of the Roman Catholic Church; and that held by many millenarians that "the man of sin" is to be a single individual man, who is to be revealed shortly before the time of Christ's second coming, and to be acknowledged by the Jews as the true Messiah etc.

It is right to mention that this latter view was originated by the Roman Catholic Church. In a note on the passage in hand in the Douay, or Roman Catholic translation, the following explanation is given: "Here must be meant some particular man, as is evident from the frequent repetition of the Greek article o the man of sin, the son of perdition, the opposer, &c." It agrees to the wicked and great Antichrist, who will come before the end of the world."

On the phrase "in the temple," it is added, "Either that of Jerusalem, which some think he will rebuild, or in some Christian church, which he will pervert to his own worship, as Mohamet has done by the churches of the East." This translation was "first published by the English College at Rheims, A. D. 1582." I presume the notes are of the same date, as it is not likely that an English version would be allowed to go to the public without such explanations. Peter Jurieu, a French Protestant minister, in a work entitled, "The Accomplishment of the Prophecies," which was published in England in 1687, refers to this in a very pointed manner. He says: "The term of apostasy, which signifies the Empire of Antichrist, evidently shows that the Antichrist of the Romish doctors is a mere chimera. According to them he must be a Jew that must style himself the Messiah, assemble all the Jews at Jerusalem, make war on the Christians, and destroy Christianity." The note in the Douay Bible shows that the "Romish doctors" held the Man of Sin and Antichrist to be identical, so that Jurieu's description will apply to the Man of Sin as well as to Antichrist. Bishop Newton, in his chapter on this passage, quotes Calmet's "Commentary and Dissertation on the Antichrist," as follows: "The fathers and the best interpreters understood this unanimously of Antichrist who will appear in the world before the great day of judgment, to combat religion and the saints."

In considering the general question as to the identity of "the Man of Sin" with the Pope of Rome, it might be well to do so in connection with the different terms in the passage which have been already passed under review. As far as possible we must be guided here by the facts of history, and we might frame our questions somewhat in the following manner:—

1. Do facts bear out the idea that "the temple of God" in this passage is

Selections.

THE MAN OF SIN.

Number Two.

W. H. H.

In last paper I mentioned the two principal views which are held of this passage, namely, that held by the great body of Protestants—that "the man of sin" is the Bishop of Rome, of course, in his official capacity as the head of the Roman Catholic Church; and that held by many millenarians that "the man of sin" is to be a single individual man, who is to be revealed shortly before the time of Christ's second coming, and to be acknowledged by the Jews as the true Messiah etc.

It is right to mention that this latter view was originated by the Roman Catholic Church. In a note on the passage in hand in the Douay, or Roman Catholic translation, the following explanation is given: "Here must be meant some particular man, as is evident from the frequent repetition of the Greek article o the man of sin, the son of perdition, the opposer, &c." It agrees to the wicked and great Antichrist, who will come before the end of the world."

On the phrase "in the temple," it is added, "Either that of Jerusalem, which some think he will rebuild, or in some Christian church, which he will pervert to his own worship, as Mohamet has done by the churches of the East." This translation was "first published by the English College at Rheims, A. D. 1582." I presume the notes are of the same date, as it is not likely that an English version would be allowed to go to the public without such explanations. Peter Jurieu, a French Protestant minister, in a work entitled, "The Accomplishment of the Prophecies," which was published in England in 1687, refers to this in a very pointed manner. He says: "The term of apostasy, which signifies the Empire of Antichrist, evidently shows that the Antichrist of the Romish doctors is a mere chimera. According to them he must be a Jew that must style himself the Messiah, assemble all the Jews at Jerusalem, make war on the Christians, and destroy Christianity." The note in the Douay Bible shows that the "Romish doctors" held the Man of Sin and Antichrist to be identical, so that Jurieu's description will apply to the Man of Sin as well as to Antichrist. Bishop Newton, in his chapter on this passage, quotes Calmet's "Commentary and Dissertation on the Antichrist," as follows: "The fathers and the best interpreters understood this unanimously of Antichrist who will appear in the world before the great day of judgment, to combat religion and the saints."

In considering the general question as to the identity of "the Man of Sin" with the Pope of Rome, it might be well to do so in connection with the different terms in the passage which have been already passed under review. As far as possible we must be guided here by the facts of history, and we might frame our questions somewhat in the following manner:—

1. Do facts bear out the idea that "the temple of God" in this passage is

Sententious.

When all is come all things come,
Not Rome, but Jerusalem; is to be
The eternal city.

Nothing is lawful to any man who doubts its lawfulness.

The age-long of the sainted days
I know, age-long from death to life
He will be dear, whose darkest ways
To light and love are leading.

RESURRECTION.

Resurrection shall prove the wondrous truth, that it is the grave—the place of bones and dust, that is the womb of the incorruptible, the immortal, the glorious, the undefiled.—Night of Weeping.

Revelation is very long and very broad and very deep, and life is very short. There is no time to waste. The man who thinks the circle of Biblical knowledge is soon run, is too ignorant to teach others.—Howard Crosby.

We have to judge our whole course down here in the light of his coming. To all I would say, are you in life and ways like people who wait for the Lord? Like the Thessalonians, occupied with that thing, can we honestly say, "If thou, Lord Jesus, hast thine heart set on coming to gather thy children home, the sooner the better for us."

JESUS THE CHRIST.

As Jesus he is the Savior of sinners, the helper of the weak; as the Christ he is anointed of the Father, the coming King, whose kingdom shall be from sea to sea and from the river unto the ends of the earth.

Many a storm-cloud, sweeping o'er us,
Never pours on us its rains;
Many a grief we see before us,
Never comes to cause us pains;
Oft! we see in the fearful to-morrow
Sunshine comes, the cloud has flown;
Ask not them, to foolish sorrow,
What shall roll away the stone?

The great mistake men make is in the idea that they must become holy to become heirs; the truth is they must become heirs in order to be holy. We do not serve in order to become sons, but we must become sons in order rightly to serve. It is those who believe on his name that have the power, and the privilege to become the sons of God.

Long ages ago a fern leaf grew in a deep valley. No eye ever saw its beauty, and it fell at last into the earth, and sank away, and was lost. Surely no record ever was made of its life and story. But the other day a man of science, with hammer in hand, was peering into the mysteries of nature, and breaking a rock, there lay, in perfect outline, the whole delicate traces of the little fern leaf. After laying thousands of years in the darkness, lost and forgotten, it came forth to be looked at by admiring eyes. In like manner obscure lives drop away and are forgotten, but in like manner, also, will they reappear. No smallest deed done for Christ shall be forgotten.

Brevities.

A colored woman, named Harriet N. Cooper, living in the Cheltenham suburb of St. Louis, died the other day, at the advanced age of 115 years. She weighed 300 pounds, and was the mother of twenty-five children. Her husband is 101 years old, and is as hale as the average man of 40.

A doll is worshipped in Rome. It is called the Holy Bambino, and is said to represent the baby Jesus. It is dressed in the most costly things, is covered with precious jewels, and is carried at the head of a procession, and the people go down on their knees, and adore it as it were a god.

JEWS IN THE UNITED STATES.

Under the title, "Statistics of the Jews of the United States," the Union of American Hebrew Congregations has published Mr. William B. Hackenburg's report. He has been engaged some five years in collecting and arranging the "Statistics," from which we obtain the following summary: Jewish population of the United States about 250,000; number of congregations 278, with a membership of about 13,000; value of real estate and other property (synagogues, hospitals, cemeteries, etc.) owned by congregations and beneficient societies about $7,000,000.

Mlle. de Montgolfier, who died December 16, at the age of 91, was the daughter of the inventor of the balloon, and his daughter survived him eighty-one years. She lived to see communication maintained by balloons during the seige of Paris. In 1870 Mlle. de Montgolfier resisted all persuasions, quit Paris on the approach of the Prussians. She lived on the south side of the city—the side exposed to the Prussian batteries; and she remained with her maid and a youth in her service, the only tenants of a large old house of many flats whence every other had fled. Old as she was, even then she went incessantly to visit the wounded in the ambulances, and was found at the end of the siege to have given away all of her household linen, and every article useful for the sick.

When Colonel Prejevalsky, the Russian explorer, who has just returned to Omsk after two years of exploration in Chinese Mongolia, asked permission of the Grand Lama of Lhassa to enter his territory, the whole population became panic stricken. The people believed that his only object was the abduction of the Grand Lama and the destruction of Buddhism. "It is very droll, but it is true," the explorer afterwards wrote, "that twelve Europeans had been able to strike terror to the hearts of those before whom the population of two hemispheres bow themselves! It is impossible for me to give expression to the regret with which I retraced my steps. May some other traveler, more happy than I, pursue my discoveries in Asia."

Dr. Schuhler, the distinguished botanist, of Christina, Norway, has shown that the seed of wheat brought from the most extreme point that wheat will ripen, produces plants which ripen their seed more quickly than more southern seed grown at the same place, and the plants grown from northern seed are richer in carbo-hydrates. The brightness of color, also, both in leaves and flowers, increases with the altitude, or the approach to the Pole, and this seems to result from the peculiar light of these regions. At Christiana the sun during the summer solstice remains below the horizon only about five hours. At Bodo, in Nordland, it does not fall at all below the horizon from June 2 to July 11. At Hamerfest it is above the horizon from May 15 to July 29. So that in these parts of the world the plants have a sort of "morning sun" to grow under continuously for nearly two months. This peculiar light seems to be more favorable to certain chemical elements in plants. The common caraway seed is found to be richer in the volatile oil which gives it the well known aroma when grown at Christiana than farther south. On the other hand the brighter light of more southern latitudes favors the saccharine products of plants.

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CHAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, January 18, 1881.

FOR communications on hand we will try to find room as fast as we can, and give our readers that variety that is indispensable to the character of all periodicals that aim to give general information.

IF some of our brethren should not be able to renew at once will they please write to us that we may know whether they desire to have the paper continued. We do not wish to deprive any one of our friends of the paper, who desire its continuance, and who will pay before long.

BROTHER John Foote of Kansas, appoints to meet the brethren six miles north of Plymouth, at what is known as the Baker school house, Friday evening, Jan. 14, and continue meeting over the following Sunday. Will some one of our brethren meet him at Plymouth on Friday, and convey him to the place of meeting.

EITHER some of Brother Westbee's articles have failed to reach us, or they have been incorrectly numbered. The last one we published was numbered 48, and its subject was The Living Creatures. The next one in our possession is numbered 53, and its subject is The Book with Seven Seals. The papers on hand are numbered from 53 to 58, both inclusive. We wait to hear from Brother Westbee before resuming the publication of his communications.

BROTHER Wm. Shepherd of Newark, N. J. writes — "Dear Brother Chaplin: I have been stricken down with a severe attack of sickness, and am completely prostrated as I write. I ask the prayers of the Church of God in my behalf that I may be raised up again if it seems good in his sight." "Brethren, pray for us," was the request of an inspired apostle, when writing to one of the churches. Let all the household of faith remember our afflicted brother at the throne of grace.

OUR time is so occupied at this season of the year in fixing up our accounts, as Treasurer of the Association, that we cannot write as fully as we would like about our prospects. We may say, however, in brief, that we have paid the larger share of our indebtedness, and that our subscription list is slowly increasing. If our list could be permanently increased to the amount of a few hundred more names, the publication of THE RESTITUTION would be placed on a paying basis. We thank our friends who continue their subscriptions, and we gratefully remember all those who so kindly give additional aid. We propose to share the burden with our dear brethren and sisters, both in paying for some copies of THE RESTITUTION for the poor, as well as contributing something to aid it as a missionary enterprise. More hereafter.

FROM our past experience we must say again that we are compelled to decline publishing general appeals for help from those with whom we have no acquaintance. We therefore once more refer the claims of Daniel Pike and Josiah Pike, of Stockton, Kan., to the consideration and Christian benevolence of our brethren in that state, if the condition of said brethren and their families should be found as destitute as claimed. We will however add that we can commend our dear brother Eld. S. G. Clark, to our Indiana brethren, as one worthy of aid, and we hope he will not be forgotten. This is addressed to our brethren in this state, without his solicitation. The only safe and proper rule is for brethren in each particular state to look after those of the household of faith who lack the necessaries of life.

Selections.

Chatham Herald.

PROPHETIC PROSPECT FOR 1881.

The beginning of 1881 shows us the world in a more alarming condition than it has appeared in even in years when a war has been imminent between two great nations. Were it not for the unfailing word of Scripture prophecy, we might be at a loss to account for the growing rampancy of wickedness and the hopelessness of the struggle of right against wrong.

It requires no small measure of humiliation to take a true view of human nature as it has been since the Fall. Consequently, worldly philosophers prefer to see in the spread of civilization and in the increasing justice of legislation signs that the love of truth is becoming universal, and that individual selfishness will not always dominate human affairs, while far too many Christian believers persist in putting a figurative interpretation upon every declaration of God's word which does not seem to encourage the hope that the Church is now on the way to victory. But the teaching of the Bible is that deliverance, not victory, is to be the hope of the Church.

There is something awfully certain in whatever God once declares will come to pass. At a time when the Israelites were flushed with conquest, and their name was a terror to the mightiest nations upon the earth, Moses recorded the decree that they would become "a proverb and a by-word among all nations." Deut. xxviii. 37. That has been literally fulfilled in the reproachful term "a Jew." Moses also wrote, "The Lord shall scatter thee among all people from the one end of the earth even unto the other." Verse 64. And that has literally come to pass. He said, further, "Ye shall be sold unto your enemies for bondmen and bondwomen, and no man shall buy you." Verse 68. And profane history tells us that even extraordinary prediction was literally fulfilled in the Alexandrian slave-market after the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus.

Once more, when Tyre was one of the magnificent capitals of the world, the Lord God declared, "I will make her like the top of a rock; it shall be a place for the spreading of nets in the midst of the sea." Ezek. xxvi. 4, 5. And these words, in no figurative or spiritual sense but exactly and literally, describe the sight of that great city to-day.

Again, when Babylon was "the glory of kingdoms, the beauty of the Chaldee's excellency," its doom was announced with minute peculiarity, viz., that it would be overthrown and never be inhabited again, that the wandering tribes of the desert and the shepherds on the plains would avoid it, and that it would become a habitation of wild beasts. Isa. xiii. 19-22. All that has come to pass, as any eastern traveller can see to-day, not in a spiritual or general sense, but literally and particularly.

Regarding the Lord Jesus Christ, it was foretold that he would come in the tribe of Judah and in the line of David, and that he would be born of a virgin. Events proved that "Judah" meant Judah, and not the Jewish race; and that "David" meant David, and not any royal line; while "a virgin" typified no social or spiritual condition, but simply meant Mary, the wife of Joseph, in her virginity. The numerous prophecies regarding the life and death of our Lord was equally literal.

These are a few examples of fulfilled prophecy; and they afford us an indication of the way to interpret unfulfilled prophecy.

The principal predicted but unaccomplished events are:

1. The restoration of the Jews to their own land, with an extension of territory; and their establishment there with pre-eminence among other nations.

See Isa. ii. 1-4; Jer. iii. 17, 18; Ezek. xx. 34, 42; Dan. xii. 13; Zech. xii. 6; etc. Some of these passages describe Jerusalem and the Holy Land after Christ comes, and when the Jews will have accepted him as their King and so placed themselves at the head of the Christian Church.

2. The growth of anarchy and irreligion till the foundations of authority are undermined and the very existence of the Church is threatened. The rise of a man, the Antichrist, who will do with the anarchy in Europe what Napoleon I. did with the revolution in France, and will then carry his assumption of authority to a greater length than any previous tyrant in the world has done.

See Isa. xxvi. 20, 21; Jer. xxx. 7; Dan. vii. 7; Matt. xxiv. 12, 13, 21; Luke xviii. 8; 2 Thess. ii. 3, 4, 8, 9; 2 Tim. iii. 13; Rev. xiii. 11-17; etc.

3. This tyrant's war upon the people of God and new-built Jerusalem. The appearance of the Son of God at the crisis of the siege, and his deliverance of his people.

See Jer. xxx. 7-10; Ezek. xxxix. 9-16; Dan. vii. 11; Zech. xii. 2-10; Matt. xxiv. 30; Acts i. 11; 2 Thess. ii. 8; etc.

We have only selected passages for reference in which the events spoken of are described with remarkable distinctness and uniformity; and it is a reasonable presumption that they are subject to the same rules of interpretation with the other prophecies which have been already so exactly fulfilled. Readers who have the patience to look up the verses we have cited may be surprised to find several particular and even trifling incidents foretold in almost the same words by different writers.

Now let us take a glance at the present state of the world, and see, on the one hand, how far it agrees with what the prophecies just quoted tell us is coming, and, on the other, with what we might expect if there were any power in education or civilization to overcome sin.

1. What is known in Europe as the Eastern Question has not advanced one step toward a solution since the beginning of 1880. The succession of the Liberal Government in England, to which many people looked for a speedy settlement of Turkish difficulties, has been followed by no measure of consequence in that direction. Matters seem to be standing still until the development of God's further purposes. There is no prospect whatever of an improvement in the financial condition of Turkey, and without such an improvement there can be no change for the better in its administration.

Meanwhile the insurrectionary spirit excited in the subject populations by the late wars gives safe promise of another outbreak at no distant day; and that will call for or lead to the armed intervention of some of the great powers of Europe, with the usual danger of a war between those powers themselves.

2. The imagination palls at thought of the next European war, for which twelve millions of armed men are waiting in silent mockery of the hope that the reign of peace is in a fair way to begin upon the earth.

A few days ago one of the daily papers, not over-well versed in the Bible, but with a shrewd practical view of the condition of public affairs, wrote as follows:

"The world has never yet seen war on a national scale. There have been, as in 1812-13-14, many armies, and those numerically as well as otherwise formidable, engaged simultaneously on one theatre. In 1870 the Germans employed several large armies, and the French, too, made considerable levies. But all the conditions of war are different from what they were in the Napoleonic era, and since 1870 several nations have turned or are turning almost their entire population into soldiers.

When war occurs again among the great Continental powers there will be such a sight presented as was never seen before. There will be in the first line a chain of armies furnished with superb material; in the rear will be the reserves of trained troops exceeding in number the biggest armies of former times: and these reserves will rest on a succession of strong fortresses and intrenched camps held by enormous garrisons."

If we remember with this that every year adds to the improvements in the torpedoes, mitrailleuses, Gatling guns, and other engines for wholesale destruction of human life, it will appear that God knew more about the nineteenth century before the Christian era than we know about it now.

3. The Afghan war is standing still like the Eastern question. In this swiftly-moving age twelve months more have gone past without a settlement of the relations between Afghanistan and the Indian Government. At the time we write this article it is uncertain what security the new Ameer, Abdurrahman Khan, has for his throne, and in what sense the British frontier is to be protected; while the rebel leader, Ayoob Kahn, is at large, able to boast of having destroyed a British force near Candahar, and to laugh over the slaughter in cold blood of a British officer whom he had captured as a prisoner of war.

4. Lastly, the condition of things in Ireland seems enough to open the eyes of the blindest to the gloomy prospect before the world and to the corruption which lies beneath the veneer of its civilization. It is for the first time in history that a Government has tolerated total insecurity of life, liberty, and property without the excuse of war or revolution. A large part of Ireland has been for months past in a state corresponding with the state of Paris during the Commune or of North India during the Mutiny of 1857, with this difference—that in the last two cases the murder and violence were stopped as fast as guns and soldiers could stop them, whereas to-day in Ireland the authorities seem to have neither the ability nor the disposition to interfere to any effectual purpose. A lethargy born of an increasingly blunted national moral sense has apparently taken possession of the Government. Even a few years ago such a condition of things would not have been possible; but the principle of the supremacy of the people above the law is gaining ground, and the world is hastening to the state in which it was before the flood—"corrupt before God and filled with violence." Gen. vi, 11.

It is doubtful if any nostrum of legislation can now restore civil order in the country. The leading London papers are agreed in expressions of opinion like the following: "Coercive acts a few months ago would have been effective, but now they will be useless.

The people have learned their power too well to be cowed. This revolution cannot end without bloodshed unless capitulation be made to the Land League, which is out of the question.

The rising may be small and ineffective, but it is considered inevitable by many who are familiar with the state of the country. It is beyond question that no land bill, however extreme, will satisfy the Land League, and the movement should be considered in all its significance. According to the clear and repeated utterances of members of the League Executive, the Land League movement is not a movement for the purpose of bringing rent down, but a movement for the purpose of making the tenants the owners of the land."

Thus it seems not unlikely that the priest-ridden and turbulent population of Ireland will be separated from the authority of the British Government, which reduced to peace and prosperity the cognate race of Scottish Highlanders; and this will be brought about, not by any peaceful method in conformity with the pretensions of civilization, but by outrage and bloodshed and other characteristic exhibitions of unrestrained lawlessness.

If this should take place, it will be a remarkable step in the fulfillment of the old prophecy in Dan. chap. vii. and Rev., chap. xiii. which says that a king of practically unlimited power will rise out of the ten kingdoms that constituted the Roman Empire, and will rule over the same territory. Now Ireland was not included in the Roman Empire, whereas England was; so we should be justified in considering the severance of the former from the latter at the present juncture as a significant occurrence.

Before concluding these observations on the civil and political indications of the New Year, we will remind our readers that the past year has been signalized on our own continent by an official protest of the United States Secretary of War against the defenceless condition of our seacoast, and against the shortsightedness of letting our fortifications and munitions of war fall far behind the standard required to meet the armaments of European nations who may one day be our enemies.

Is not this the beginning of an apprehension that America may not be able to keep out of the national convulsions that are to precede the coming of our Lord?

It also seems proper to note the continued rapid spread of the spirit of invention and discovery, and the increasing enterprise to explore every unknown limit of the globe. One Arctic expedition has recently returned from its eminently successful search, another has been for some months locked out from the world in polar ice; a third is to set out from England in the present year; while the greatest problem of modern geography, viz., the exploration of the Antarctic Circle, is also to be attempted this year by an Italian and an English expedition, both employing the latest resources of science and highest available talent to increase the chance of success.

We are entering the most remarkable period of this century for the display of signs in heaven. Four comets are now, or soon will be, visable through telescopes, and one at least of them is expected to show its strange torch in the sky. Four eclipses will occur in 1881, the dates of which will be found in the Almanac at the end of this number. A small black speck made its appearance near the edge of the sun in August last, and developed into a cluster of spots which was easily visible through a small telescope, and moved in fantastic shapes toward the centre of the sun's disk. The appearances was caused by a tremendous storm of some kind in the atmosphere of the sun, and it was attended with violent magnetic disturbances in the earth, interfering with the operation of telegraphs and submarine cables. Former experiences lead astronomers to expect that these magnetic storms will continue for a considerable time, and that there will be a magnificent spectacle of auroral streamers in the northern sky.

The intelligence of our readers will guard them against astrological or superstitious ideas in connection with these phenomena. The fact is sufficient that God, who foresaw the political history of the nineteenth century, foresaw also its meteorological phenomena; and He has declared that a combination of events and signs Luke xxi. 10, 11, 25—27. will precede the coming of the Son of man. Notwithstanding, these things will take place so naturally, and will be explained so plausibly by the wise men of the world, that the last day will come as a snare "on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth" ver. 35. Therefore the warning is seven times repeated in the Gospels. Watch.

N. Y. Journal of Commerce.

GABRIEL'S TRUMPET.

Figures do not lie. It is a great pity that so many men talk at random in books, reviews and public lectures, when they should learn wisdom from school-boys' arithmetic. A lecturer in Music Hall, Boston, on a recent Sunday evening—the Rev. Mr. Murray is reported as dealing in glittering generalities of figures to discourse the theory of a final judgment of all men, and it would appear that his audience accepted his arithmetic as solid truth. We have nothing to do with the theories of the assignment, but there seems to be a [illegible] in Boston of any man who [illegible] trash to an audience [illegible] ordinary common education. He is reported [illegible]

"Now the population of the earth [illegible] and every thirty years [illegible] years then, 1,000,000,000 [illegible] the period of the world, [illegible] Europe and America [illegible] which is the [illegible] 6,000 years old. She [illegible] to give some 300,000 years [illegible] the world is. Very well. What [illegible] be the population of the world since the race began? Who can estimate the number? By what arithmetic shall you compute the number [illegible]? Take the globe and flat on it [illegible] one vast plain. 2,000 miles [illegible] by twenty-four, and would [illegible] accommodate but a fraction of the human beings that have lived upon its surface! Where is the locality of the Judgment to be then? Can it have a locality?"

Now make the widest conceivable estimates. Suppose that the human race has existed on this earth 100,000 years, and that the population has never, from the first day, been smaller than this estimate for the present time, namely, 1,400,000,000. For the sake of easy calculation most of the estimate of thirty years to the generation call it three generations in the century. There will then appear to have been 3,000 generations of 1,400,000,000 each, who, being assembled, require standing room. Use a world-full meeting of men, women and children it would be ample estimate to give each two square feet of room. A square mile contains, in round numbers 25,000,000 square feet, and 12,500,000 persons could stand on it. Therefore eighty square miles would hold a generation, and 3,000 times that space would hold the population of 100,000 years. That is to say, 240,000 square miles would contain them, and, gathered in a parallelogram, they would stand in a space 600 miles long by 400 broad. They could be easily accommodated in one or two of our states.

Dead and buried side by side, they would require only five times their standing space, or, (say) 1,200,000 square miles, and the United States of America has ample wild lands, as yet unwanted and unoccupied, to give them a cemetery. If any one wishes, he may estimate how many thousand years of generations could find graves in this country without crowding each other.

Whoever will may imagine the population assembled in circle, or in a vast theater with floor above floor, each floor diminishing the surface area of the building. It will do people of vivid imagination good to reduce such imaginations to the facts of figures, and any school girl can do it.

But it is just as well before leaving the subject to say that the hundred thousand years of the reverend lecturer's imagination is wild talk as his figures. Men of uncertain faith are very fond of saying that other men have no faith. Nothing can be more absurd than what he says about the church. The confused man that fell off a stage-coach into the mud thought the coach had upset. Mr. Murray will soon find out that the church, whatever its denominational name, is a great deal more interfering with the operation of telegraphs and submarine cables. Former experiences lead astronomers to expect that these magnetic storms will continue for a considerable time, and that there will be a magnificent spectacle of auroral streamers in the northern sky.

In his lecture, as reported, he makes a sad jumble of two distinct subjects, the age of the world and the age of the human race on its surface. The men who hold notions about the extreme antiquity of the human race have been very few, and have produced no sensible effect on the faith of the church or the general opinion of the world; and among what are called scientists the present difference of opinion as to the age of the human race is limited to a comparatively short period. Bunsen's theory of a date B. C. 20,000 for Egyptian origins has vanished, and Mariette Bey's date of B. C. 5,000 for Menes (or Misraim) will satisfy the views of the most extreme among recognized men of sense.

The bone cave men have met with the simple rules of evidence, which apply to their supposed discoveries as they apply to all questions of fact; and it is found that they have just proved in a single instance that human bones have been lying fifty, forty or ten centuries in those caves. The theory that the Mississippi had been [illegible] years depositing drift over [illegible] found in the deposit disappeared in most when Humphreys and Abbot, United States [illegible] having the [illegible] also [illegible] that the Mississippi [illegible] have [illegible] for it [illegible] to [illegible] In the [illegible] [illegible] Boston of any man who [illegible] trash to an audience [illegible] ordinary common education. He is reported [illegible]

"Now the population of the earth [illegible] and every thirty years [illegible] years then, 1,000,000,000 [illegible] the period of the world, [illegible] Europe and America [illegible] which is the [illegible] 6,000 years old. She [illegible] to give some 300,000 years [illegible] the world is. Very well. What [illegible] be the population of the world since the race began? Who can estimate the number? By what arithmetic shall you compute the number [illegible]? Take the globe and flat on it [illegible] one vast plain. 2,000 miles [illegible] by twenty-four, and would [illegible] accommodate but a fraction of the human beings that have lived upon its surface! Where is the locality of the Judgment to be then? Can it have a locality?"

Now make the widest conceivable estimates. Suppose that the human race has existed on this earth 100,000 years, and that the population has never, from the first day, been smaller than this estimate for the present time, namely, 1,400,000,000. For the sake of easy calculation most of the estimate of thirty years to the generation call it three generations in the century. There will then appear to have been 3,000 generations of 1,400,000,000 each, who, being assembled, require standing room. Use a world-full meeting of men, women and children it would be ample estimate to give each two square feet of room. A square mile contains, in round numbers 25,000,000 square feet, and 12,500,000 persons could stand on it. Therefore eighty square miles would hold a generation, and 3,000 times that space would hold the population of 100,000 years. That is to say, 240,000 square miles would contain them, and, gathered in a parallelogram, they would stand in a space 600 miles long by 400 broad. They could be easily accommodated in one or two of our states.

Dead and buried side by side, they would require only five times their standing space, or, (say) 1,200,000 square miles, and the United States of America has ample wild lands, as yet unwanted and unoccupied, to give them a cemetery. If any one wishes, he may estimate how many thousand years of generations could find graves in this country without crowding each other.

Whoever will may imagine the population assembled in circle, or in a vast theater with floor above floor, each floor diminishing the surface area of the building. It will do people of vivid imagination good to reduce such imaginations to the facts of figures, and any school girl can do it.

But it is just as well before leaving the subject to say that the hundred thousand years of the reverend lecturer's imagination is wild talk as his figures. Men of uncertain faith are very fond of saying that other men have no faith. Nothing can be more absurd than what he says about the church. The confused man that fell off a stage-coach into the mud thought the coach had upset. Mr. Murray will soon find out that the church, whatever its denominational name, is a great deal more interfering with the operation of the faith of the church or the general opinion of the world; and among what are called scientists the present difference of opinion as to the age of the human race is limited to a comparatively short period. Bunsen's theory of a date B. C. 20,000 for Egyptian origins has vanished, and Mariette Bey's date of B. C. 5,000 for Menes (or Misraim) will satisfy the views of the most extreme among recognized men of sense.

The bone cave men have met with the simple rules of evidence, which apply to their supposed discoveries as they apply to all questions of fact; and it is found that they have just proved in a single instance that human bones have been lying fifty, forty or ten centuries in those caves. The theory that the Mississippi had been [illegible] years depositing drift over [illegible] found in the deposit disappeared in most when Humphreys and Abbot, United States [illegible] having the [illegible] also [illegible] that the Mississippi [illegible] have [illegible] for it [illegible] to [illegible] In the [illegible] [illegible] Boston of any man who [illegible] trash to an audience [illegible] ordinary common education. He is reported [illegible]

"Now the population of the earth [illegible] and every thirty years [illegible] years then, 1,000,000,000 [illegible] the period of the world, [illegible] Europe and America [illegible] which is the [illegible] 6,000 years old. She [illegible] to give some 300,000 years [illegible] the world is. Very well. What [illegible] be the population of the world since the race began? Who can estimate the number? By what arithmetic shall you compute the number [illegible]? Take the globe and flat on it [illegible] one vast plain. 2,000 miles [illegible] by twenty-four, and would [illegible] accommodate but a fraction of the human beings that have lived upon its surface! Where is the locality of the Judgment to be then? Can it have a locality?"

Now make the widest conceivable estimates. Suppose that the human race has existed on this earth 100,000 years, and that the population has never, from the first day, been smaller than this estimate for the present time, namely, 1,400,000,000. For the sake of easy calculation most of the estimate of thirty years to the generation call it three generations in the century. There will then appear to have been 3,000 generations of 1,400,000,000 each, who, being assembled, require standing room. Use a world-full meeting of men, women and children it would be ample estimate to give each two square feet of room. A square mile contains, in round numbers 25,000,000 square feet, and 12,500,000 persons could stand on it. Therefore eighty square miles would hold a generation, and 3,000 times that space would hold the population of 100,000 years. That is to say, 240,000 square miles would contain them, and, gathered in a parallelogram, they would stand in a space 600 miles long by 400 broad. They could be easily accommodated in one or two of our states.

Dead and buried side by side, they would require only five times their standing space, or, (say) 1,200,000 square miles, and the United States of America has ample wild lands, as yet unwanted and unoccupied, to give them a cemetery. If any one wishes, he may estimate how many thousand years of generations could find graves in this country without crowding each other.

Whoever will may imagine the population assembled in circle, or in a vast theater with floor above floor, each floor diminishing the surface area of the building. It will do people of vivid imagination good to reduce such imaginations to the facts of figures, and any school girl can do it.

But it is just as well before leaving the subject to say that the hundred thousand years of the reverend lecturer's imagination is wild talk as his figures. Men of uncertain faith are very fond of saying that other men have no faith. Nothing can be more absurd than what he says about the church. The confused man that fell off a stage-coach into the mud thought the coach had upset. Mr. Murray will soon find out that the church, whatever its denominational name, is a great deal more interfering with the operation of the faith of the church or the general opinion of the world; and among what are called scientists the present difference of opinion as to the age of the human race is limited to a comparatively short period. Bunsen's theory of a date B. C. 20,000 for Egyptian origins has vanished, and Mariette Bey's date of B. C. 5,000 for Menes (or Misraim) will satisfy the views of the most extreme among recognized men of sense.

The bone cave men have met with the simple rules of evidence, which apply to their supposed discoveries as

Exegetical.

A voice [illegible] "Prepare ye the way of Jehovah in the wilderness; [illegible] straight a highway for our God [illegible] the desert."

The Hebrew parallelism is said by competent critics to require the rendering given above in preference to the arrangement of the words found in our common version. In our present exegesis we only aim to bring out the primary fulfillment of these remarkable expressions, leaving the application of them, as made to John the Baptist, out of consideration in this article. In doing this we shall copy mostly from Barnes' commentary on the text.

"The time of the exile at Babylon was about to be accomplished. Jehovah was about to conduct his people again to their own country through the pathless wilderness, as he had formerly conducted them from Egypt to the land of promise. The prophet, therefore, represents himself as hearing the voice of a herald, or a forerunner in a pathless waste, giving direction that a way should be made for the return of the people. The whole scene is represented as the march or return of Jehovah at the head of his people to the land of Judea. The idea is taken from the practice of Eastern monarchs, who, whenever they entered on a journey or expedition, especially through a barren and unfrequented or inhospitable country, sent harbingers or heralds, before them to prepare the way. To do this, it was necessary for them to provide supplies, and make bridges, or find fording places over the streams; to level hills, and construct causeways over valleys, or fill them up, and to make a way through the forest which might lie in the intended line of march. This was necessary because their contemplated expeditions often involved the necessity of marching through countries where there were no public highways that would afford facilities for the passage of an army. Thus Arrian (Hist. liv. cap. 30) says of Alexander, 'He now proceeded to the river Indus, the army' i. e. a portion, a part of the army, or an army sufficient for the purpose 'going before, which made a way for him, for otherwise there would have been no mode of passing through that region.'

"When a great prince in the East," says Paxton, "sets out on a journey, it is usual to send a party of men before him to clear the way. The state of those countries in every age, where roads are almost unknown, and from want of cultivation in many places overrun with brambles and other thorny plants, which renders traveling, especially with a large retinue, inconvenient, requires this precaution. The Emperor of Hindostan in his progress through his dominions, as described in the narrative of Sir Thomas Roe's embassy to the court of India, was preceded by a great many men, who [illegible] to remove the trees, bushes, [illegible] and other [illegible] that might [illegible] the [illegible] of the [illegible]

[illegible] in [illegible] to [illegible] from the [illegible] of the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Poetry.

WATCH AND WAIT.

W. L. CROCKETT.

O let us watch and wait,
As early as we can,
With hope renewed and strengthened
For him whose [illegible] earth,
And who will soon come to gather unto
And who [illegible]
We know the Master [illegible]
He speaks [illegible]
Of all [illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]
[

Poetry.

National Repository.

SLIPPING AWAY.

They are slipping away—these sweet, swift years,
Like a leaf on the current cast;
With never a break in their, rapid flow,
We watch them as one by one they go
Into the beautiful past.

As silent and swift as a weaver's thread,
Or an arrow's flying gleam;
As soft as the lingering dews of eve,
That tell the willow's long golden veil,
And dapple the glassy stream.

As light as the breath of the violet sea,
As fond as a lover's sighs;
As precious the flash in the maiden's tresses,
As sweet as the woodchuck's merry notes,
So tender and sacred the years.

One after another we see them pass,
Down the dim light of each;
We hear the sound of their soft feet fall
In the depths of the mantle long since cast on,
As beautiful and as fair.

There are only a few years left to live;
Shall we waste the most in idle strife?
Shall we trample under our feet to-day
These beautiful blossoms, sacred and sweet,
By the dusty way of life?

There are only a few swift years at best;
No one has taught us to know;
Make life's fair pattern of tasteful fancies,
And fill up the meshes with love and truth,
While we can every hour!

Selections.

THE following, taken from the London Times of Dec. 10, 1880, will give our readers some account of the "Land of Gilead" east of the Jordan. Mr. Laurence Oliphant has recently published a book in London entitled—"The Land of Gilead, with Excursions in the Lebanon," from which the information in this article has been derived. The object in view, in making this exploration, has been "the repatriation of the Jews, by the settlement under the auspices of a land company of a considerable number of Jews from Eastern Europe and Asia, in an agricultural colony situated in the territory which formerly belonged to the tribes of Reuben and Gad." This article will be welcome to all who are looking for the restoration of Israel to the land of their fathers. Brother H. Heyes has our thanks for the London paper.

THE LAND OF GILEAD.

Mr. Oliphant's travels in Gilead, with the scheme in which they originated, were suggested by the signing of the Treaty of Berlin. The relations of the Porte to the European Powers had been essentially altered, and it had become evident that thenceforth there must be more active intervention in the internal affairs of the Ottoman Empire. It ought to be practicable to do something to reclaim some of the rich, but almost depopulated districts that lie in Southern Syria on the outskirts of the desert, but within easy reach of the Mediterranean seaboard. The Sultan, under the circumstances, might be in pliable mood, if he were sure that his sovereign rights would be respected. A well-secured and increasing revenue in place of an insignificant and precarious one would be a material argument that ought to carry weight in the exhausted state of his exchequer; while a practical proof of his willingness to encourage reforms must tend to stave off the foreign interference he dreaded. Mr. Oliphant, when he broached his ideas, found backers both in England and France in the most influential quarters. His scheme, we are told, was examined and generally approved by Lord Beaconsfield, Lord Salisbury, and M. Waddington; and, desiring to inform himself thoroughly as to local facts before submitting his proposals to the authorities of Constantinople, he left England in the middle of February, 1879, for an exploring expedition in Southeastern Syria. In furtherance of his scheme he was bound to push his survey at least to the limits of the practicable. Yet the romance of mystery, and of danger as well, hung over a land which had only previously been traversed by very few Europeans, and some of the remoter districts of which were almost or altogether unvisited. Everywhere there was an embarrassment of attractions for the student curious in archæology, in ethnology, or in the landmarks of history, sacred or profane. The whole country is as rich in traditions as in associations; the scenery varies from the stern grandeur of savage hills and rocky watercourses to the soft beauties of rolling pasture-lands enamelled with flowers; while the people in their habits are almost too picturesque to be pleasant, from the Bedouins, whether roving or settled in villages, to rough mountaineers who trace their descent to the original inhabitants of the Land of Canaan. It may be remarked to their credit, however, that many of these good people were so unsophisticated as to refuse payment for their rough hospitality and to resent as an insult the offer of backsheesh. Mr. Oliphant's mode of travel was as novel for an Englishman as at first sight it appear to have been venturesome. He dispensed with the services of a dragoman as well as of those attendants who usually swell a Frankish traveling cortege in the East, and, consequently he did not carry the bags of money that would have tempted robbery and been squandered upon escorts.

At his landing port of Beyrout he was fortunate enough in falling in with a gentleman admirably fitted in every way to be his companion and guide. Captain Phibbs was as familiar with the languages of the country as with the manners and habits of the natives. And the two Englishmen decided to find their own way, accompanied only by Captain Phibbs's servant in the capacity of cook, valet, and major-dome, with a muleteer in charge of a single camp-mule. They took no tents, intending to quarter themselves in the villages. In addition to their bedding and the simplest cooking utensils, they laid in a very modest supply of luxuries in the way of provisions, and as for the money, Mr. Oliphant says, "We decided upon putting only a few pounds in our pockets." Mr. Oliphant estimates that had they gone with tents and a dragoman each traveler must have paid two pounds per day, with something like fifty pounds additional expended in backsheesh to the predatory Arabs.

Starting from Beyrout, the route lay southward along the coast as far as Sidon, where they struck inland and southwestward, passing to the north of the Huleh, by the road commanded by the crusading fortress of Belfort.

At Banias, the old Cæsarea-Philippi, Mr. Oliphant does not ask us to linger with him, notwithstanding its great historical interest. For the fact is, that his volume from the first to the last is composed in the main of fresh materials. Carrying out his quest after knowledge in the least inviting quarters, he sought hospitality for the night, after the first day's ride from Banias, in the Ansariyeh village of Ain-Fit.

In religion as in blood, these Ansariyeh appear to have much in common with the famous sect of Assassins, whose head was known in the crusading chronicles as the Old Man of the Mountain. To this day, like the Jews, the Ansariyeh have kept themselves apart from their neighbors, by whom they are despised and detested.

Naturally the travelers could learn little on the spot of the religious tenets which have been distorted by common rumor into the most diabolical shapes; but Mr. Oliphant gives an interesting sketch of them, after the presumptions of the most reliable authorities.

Descending from the filthy, but picturesque hill village to the grassy plains, the travelers saw in the foreground of the landscape the encampment of the Fadl Arabs—an important tribe, numbering 2,000 fighting men. The neighborhood of those wild Bedouins in such force may have accounted for their coming upon neither wayfarer nor habitation for the next four hours, when they found themselves among the people of another nationality and scarcely less formidable than either of the other two. It was a settlement of Circassian immigrants who had come straight from Bulgaria, and who in all probability had played their part in the atrocities."

There, in Palestine, they were working industriously enough, building new houses and breaking up the ground for gardens. Indeed, being familiar with the signs of Western civilization, and being abundantly engrossed with their personal concerns, they hardly deigned to turn their heads to look at the little cavalade.

"Riding over plains which had been the battlefield of Chedorlaomer with the Rephaim giants, of the Israelites with Og, the king of Bashan, and the scene of sundry conflicts between the invading Assyrians and the Jews," they passed out of the land of Bashan into Gilead.

Roughly speaking, Gilead proper may be said to extend from the Yarmuk, an affluent of the Jordan on the north, southwards along the eastern brink of the great river to the border of Moab, on the east of the Dead Sea. Then and afterwards, among scenes of extraordinary natural beauty and districts of as wonderful natural fertility, what strongly impressed the travelers was the scarcity of inhabitants. It was in great measure explained by the constant incursions of the Bedouins, which have gradually been making a solitude as they have been keeping civilization at bay.

Some rough statistics may serve to illustrate the facts; the more strikingly when we remember the remains of populous ancient cities which are strewn broadcast over the whole region.

Thus Irbid, the seat of government for the province of Ajlun, contains but 3000 souls. Ajlun itself, the greatest center of population, and the best built village the travelers had seen to the east of Jordan, had but 500; while Meyarib, over the frontier of the Hauran, though a flourishing commercial entrepot near the great pilgrims' road, and described as relatively large, was estimated as containing about 900. A considerable proportion of the unfortunate fellaheen, who are pillaged alternately by the Arabs and the Turkish tax-collectors, burrow in the caves and rock dwellings which abound everywhere.

So whichever way one turns in these parts, in names, in ruins, in inscriptions, as in legends and traditions, you may trace, or fancy you trace, the story of successive civilizations, prehistoric, Canaanitish, Hebrew, Greek, Roman, Byzantine, Saracenic. Crusading—with the flow and ebb of the periodical tides of invasion from Assyria, Egypt, Mesopotamia and Arabia.

In the meantime, it may safely be asserted that the condition of the country was never more deplorable. The Turkish Administration is as corrupt as its system is essentially vicious. The people are numerously fleeced, yet little reaches the treasury.

Some wealthy man of commanding local influence bids for the farming of the taxes, which are knocked down to him at his own price. Generally he comes to a friendly understanding with the Caimakam, who receives a certain share of the spoil, in return for which he closes his eyes to any amount of extortion and peculation.

Then, in the districts most exposed to raids from the desert, the Arabs regularly levy blackmail or contributions. Yet the remedy is as easy as the evil is great. It seems certain that a very moderate display of force and steady resolution would suffice to keep these marauders at a distance. Now and then a courageous and honest official, with a mere handful of regular troops at his disposal, has extended effectual protection to the peasants under his rule. But the peasants are scarcely grateful for these fitful intervals of peace. They would give anything to be rid of their great tyrants. But their strong-handed protector may be withdrawn any day, and then the Beloubin will be back upon them more rapacious than before, to exact heavy arrears with compound interest. As for the Zaptiehs or policemen—who are often Kurds, and have almost always been Bashi-Bazouks—they are in reality wolves in sheep's clothing, and the peasants dread them ever more than the brigands. Mr. Oliphant points out that it is a mistake to believe that the Moslem is generally better treated than his Christian neighbor. Indeed, the reverse is the case for the most part; for the Christian can often appeal to some foreign consul or gain the good will of an influential co-religionist, whose complaints will be listened to at headquarters, while the only people to whom the Moslem can address himself are sure to be in league with his oppressors.

At Es-Salt, the ancient Ramoth-Gilead and the chief place of the Belka, they found 6,000 inhabitants. The population has nearly doubled with the increasing sense of security inspired by a comparatively firm Turkish rule. The place has been thriving on the trade between the Syrian merchants and the Arabs, but can attribute comparatively little of its prosperity to the extraordinary agricultural capabilities of the province. The fertile plains are given over to the grass which supports the vast flocks of the wandering Arabs. And it is to this Belka, altogether unsettled as it is, that Mr. Oliphant has turned his eyes in the location of his colony from the West. Any land grants that may be obtained from the Turkish Government need interfere with no vested rights, and there would be ample room for the flocks of the Arabs in reservations to the eastward which might be definitely assigned to them. It was never suggested by any one of the many Ministers with whom Mr. Oliphant communicated at Constantinople that the Arabs had acknowledged claims of any kind, or that there could be any serious difficulty in dealing with this "Bedouin question." A large portion of Ajlun, on the other hand, is village property held by formal title deeds. The appropriated district which Mr. Oliphant proposes to colonize lies between the Jabbok in the north and the Arnon in the south a sufficiently wide range of territory. It is bounded on the west by the Jordan and the Dead Sea, and includes a portion of the plains of Moab. Residents at Es-Salt who knew it well agreed that naturally it was the most favored district of Palestine. The broad stretches of alluvial soil are studded with isolated eminences and rocky ridges, to this day containing the reservoirs and cisterns built or hown in scriptural times and which have fallen but slightly out of repair. Mr. Oliphant has some striking remarks on the character of the vegetation as contrasted on the opposite shores of the Dead Sea. While the western banks, so vividly described, by the way, by Scott in the "Talisman," are forbidding, rugged, and waterless, "the wadies opposite teem with an almost tropical vegetation." During their stay at Es-Salt, Mr. Oliphant and his companion had made a most interesting, though somewhat disappointing expedition to Kalat Zerka, on the border of the desert, for they were compelled to renounce the plan of exploring the remarkable subterraneous cities of Derat, Bekoda, and Rabah. "Of these, the latter two have never been visited; and, indeed, their existence has never been suspected prior to the report which I received at Irbid of Bekoda from the Tunisian officer, and at Salt of Rabah from the Syrian merchant." But on the way back to Es-Salt, they cast a loop by Rabbath-Ammon. That famous stronghold of the warlike children of Ammon has "resisted all attempts permanently to change its name." One may still inspect the rough-hewn masses of stone that formed the foundations of the original defences. Since then the site has been over built and architecturally adorned successively by Egyptians, Romans, and Byzantines, who have left their marks in the ruins, which are once more being fenced in by another of the newly-arrived Circassian colonies. Mr. Oliphant observes that he knows no remains to compare with those of Ammon for picturesqueness of situation. And so bold is the configuration of the rocky ground that time has done nothing to efface its characteristic features. Leaning over the old Ammonite walls, Mr. Oliphant looked down many hundreds of feet into the wadies on either side that made the place impregnable. His fancy realized the scene and identified the very spot where Uriah the Hittite was sent to his death, when he was set by Joab in the forefront of the hottest battle.

If Mr. Oliphant did not follow the track of the Israelitish spies—indeed, he entered Palestine from the opposite direction—he went to survey the land with a view to colonization. But, as we have seen, he proposes to carry out the work by means of gold, instead of iron. We have no space to go into the details of his plans, and may possibly do them some injustice by summarizing. Briefly, his idea is to settle a favorable and accessible tract of Syria by means of a company which is to find the capital. For various reasons, for which we refer the reader to his book, he believes that Jews will be the most eligible colonists. He combats objections that may be suggested on the ground that the scattered races of Hebrew blood have shown anything rather than agricultural tendencies. He argues that the scheme is practicable, from the cases of the Circassian colonists, as well as from instances of speculators who, though they went to work single-handed, have thriven and done well in spite of the Arabs. He argues that the speculation can hardly fail to be profitable by quoting statistics and current prices for produce. He shows that the conditions of the cession of territory have been carefully considered so as to make the project logically acceptable to the Sultan and those who ought to be his disinterested and patriotic advisers. And, finally, he has the familiar story to tell of tedious and futile negotiations at Constantinople, in which smooth-spoken Ministers kept him dancing attendance, while putting him off with pipes, coffee, and promises.

The article below is important as showing a "new complication of the Eastern Question;" more especially when the latest news is to the purport that Turkey and Greece refuse to have anything to do with any scheme for an arbitration of the question of boundaries between the two latter powers. The Berlin treaty has resulted in scarcely more than an armed truce, of very short and uncertain duration. It is almost certain that all efforts for compromise will fail, and almost equally certain that a war between Greece and Turkey would involve the Great Powers in the conflict. We near the last acts in the great drama of the closing of Gentile times. Let us prayerfully watch the development of events for they are now fearfully significant.

Correspondence N. Y. Observer.

PERILS OF MISSIONARIES.

Persia, The War, The Brigands, Robbery and Murder.

SEIR, Persia, Oct. 26, '80.

Messrs. Editors: The mails and telegraphs have doubtless informed you of the sudden outbreak of war in this part of Persia. A new complication of the Eastern question has developed itself in an unexpected quarter. The wild Koords have set up the standard of independent empire. Twenty or thirty thousand (one estimate is 50,000) of these barbarians have swooped down on this province of Azerbaijan with all the terrors of uncivilized war. Several towns have fallen into their hands almost without resistance. Such as have tried to stay their march of conquest, have been overcome and punished with barbarous plundering and massacre.

For several days eight or ten thousand of these desperate robbers have invested the city of Oroomiah, fighting desperately at night and plundering the villages by day. We have watched them from the roof of our mountain house with intense anxiety, especially as Brother Whipple, of the Bible Society, is shut up alone in the beleaguered city.

This movement of the Koords is not a sudden "foray for plunder." It takes its character from the bold ambitious aims of their distinguished chieftain Sheikh Obeidullah has come to rank, at least in the minds of the Koords, as second in dignity and sanctity only to the great Sheriff of Mecca, whose rank is next to that of the Sultan of Turkey. He holds himself to be that either, and in real ability and fitness to govern, he does not err in his estimate. He took an active part in the war with Russia, and was prominent in the memorable siege of Bayazid, though I have been told by a Turkish official that his Government did not hold him responsible for the horrible massacre which followed as much as another Sheikh of a more fanatical spirit.

Since his return from that war Sheikh Obeidullah has been forming the ambitious project of an independent empire. The war, the Berlin Congress, and subsequent events have filled him with contempt for the Turkish Government, given him new ideas of self-rule by different nationalities, and inspired him with the notion that he could get the good will of Europe for his grand scheme. Last year he raised a revolt against the Turks, and was able to beat the small armies sent against him. For this he has been suitably honored and rewarded by special ambassadors from the Sultan. The whole of Turkish Koordistan has been virtually conceded to his rule. And now he turns to the east to take from Persia a part of her dominions. Here he is able to make it a kind of religious war, as the Sheah Musselmans are looked upon as heretics by the Soonnees. He is able, too, to bring quite serious charges against the Persian government for their oppression of his co-religionists under their rule. I do not know but what he can present quite as good causes of war as many Christian nations do for the wars they wage.

Doubtless, too, from this point of view, he thinks an autonomous government as proper for the Koords as for Bulgarians and the clamorous Armenians.

But Europe will hardly view it in the same light. The world knows that the Koords, as a people, are, and always have been, a curse to the world; one of the blotches on human society in Asia.

An independent empire of such a people, whose hand would be against every man, and every man's hand against him, established with such an able sovereign at their head, between the two weak powers of Turkey and Persia, should not be tolerated by the civilized world.

Enlightened government should combine to prevent such a pest. It is a question of far vaster consequence to the world than whether Montenegro have a seaport, or Greece a small addition to her territory.

It so happens that Sheikh Obeidullah has shown himself very friendly to us missionaries. His residence is from here a three days' ride up into the mountains. As the nearest "Inglees," he finds it convenient to reach the ear of English officials through us.

Last spring he sent urgently for Dr. Cochran to make him a professional visit in his mountain fastness. Dr. C. was received by him with great attention, and has ever since received frequent communications from him of a friendly kind. Two weeks ago he sent him his formal statement of grievances against the Persian government, to be communicated to the English Consul. Since his arrival a week ago in this district, we have met him, and he has renewed his assurances of friendship toward us and all the Christians, while he declares it his intention to overthrow the Persian government. He certainly has more capacity for government,—is an abler, shrewder chief, than any man I have met; but his ten thousand followers, habitual robbers, are too much for him. The very first day that he came with his hordes into Oroomiah, I encountered a gang of them on my way from town to Seir. One of them, with drawn pistol, induced me quickly to dismount and give him my horse. One of them, understanding my Turkish, saw the mistake they had made in taking the horse of an "Inglees," and induced the other robber to give back the animal. I had gone but a few rods when another robber, by the same unpleasant argument, got me on the ground and took my horse. Again the Turkish-speaking Koord befriended me. I was called to come and mount again. In doing which the brigand unbuttoned my coat and took it off my back. The next morning I called on the Sheikh with Dr. Cochran and represented the case. Shortly after reaching home, the coat and saddle-bags were sent me by the Sheikh, and I was told that the robbers had been nailed to a tree, by nails driven through their hands, as a punishment. We ourselves saw one fellow in that situation as we left the Sheikh's headquarters. But for one who has been punished for his depredations, thousands have made themselves rich without restraint. The resistance of the city against the furious attacks of the Sheikh's forces, many of them armed with Martini-Henri rifles, has greatly exasperated him and them. They make fearful threats of sacking the town and massacring the inhabitants when it does fall. Meanwhile the fair villages of the plain are being devastated. If resistance is not made to the demand for supplies, violence is not often used.

It is a sad, terrible time; mother famine and general ruin threaten the land. The Government has less than three thousand regulars, and can only act on the defensive. So the Koords sweep the country at will, burning and pillaging.

Meanwhile we are in a close place. The friendly attitude of the Sheikh toward us has embittered the Persians against us. Mr. Whipple remained in the city to encourage our Christians there, with the expectation that Dr. Sheold and the British Consul, Mr. Abbott (most providentially with us on a visit), would join him, but before they could get to him the fighting began. For the first time to-day we have received word from him. He reports very unpleasant talk about us among the inhabitants of the city, and his situation is not very pleasant. The Lord has wonderfully delivered us in times past, and we believe he will even now preserve us from the violent men "which imagine mischief in their hearts." But we earnestly ask the friends of the cause of Christ to pray for us.

Very truly yours,
BENJ. LABAREE, JR.

Western Farmer's Almanac.

The fifty-fourth number of the WESTERN FARMER'S ALMANAC, for 1881, is now in hand. It embraces a great variety of well-arranged reference, and, in addition, contains a large amount of valuable information for the farmer, gardener and stock-raiser. An article on the Sun, by Prof. H. A. Proctor, is a wonderful description of the great central source of the heat, life, and light of our planetary system. "The Tramp's Story," by Will Carleton, is a sad tale impressively told. This little Year-Book will commend itself. Published by John P. Morton & Co. Send 10 cents for a copy. Address Western Farmer's Almanac, 156 & 158 Main Street, Louisville, Ky

Pictorial Description

—OF THE—

Tabernacle in the Wilderness,

ITS RITES AND CEREMONIES.

—By JOHN DILWORTH.—

Thirty-two pages. Price 10c. Send to this office for them.

CHRIST'S KINGDOM!

WHERE IS IT? WHAT IS IT?

—By JOS. LACIER.—

A discourse delivered at Ferwick, Pa. This is a neat tract, neatly printed, and should have a wide circulation. Price 10c.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

MISTAKES of INGERSOLL

A review of Col. R. G. Ingersoll's lecture entitled "Mistakes of Moses."

—By J. M. STEPHENSON.—

This is a large size eight page tract, printed on tinted paper. 10c. each, or 75 for $1.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

SECOND EDITION.

The GOSPEL of the KINGDOM

Advocated in a series of Ten Discourses

—By WILEY JONES.—

This edition is elegantly printed and bound by Lippincott & Co., clear type, good paper, 275 pages. Plain cloth binding $1; cloth gilt edge $1.25; leather marbled edge $1.50, post paid. To obtain this valuable work, send the price by post office money order or registered letter, to

WILEY JONES,
Norfolk, Va.

A Letter to a Friend!

—By MRS. C. C. WOODRUFF.—

This little work is so well known that it needs no comment. 32 pages, price 10c.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

BOOK LIST.

The following publications are kept on hand and will be sent postpaid to any address in the United States or Canada, upon receipt of published price. Address all orders to

THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth Indiana.

TRACTS FOR FREE DISTRIBUTION.

1. The Gospel. 2. The Reading and Kingdom of Christ, by DAVID Baptist. In Doubt. 3. (omitted still). 4. The Kingdom of God. 5. Nature of Man and Thoughts for Thinkers. 6. The Two Advents. 7. What is Religion. 8. The Restitution Age. 9. Destiny of the Wicked. 10. Baptism. Ten copies (or assorted packages of 100, $1.

FOUR PAGE TRACTS.

25 for 25c.; 50 for 35c.; 100 for 60c.

The State of Man in Death. Contains an abundance of proof texts.

Life and Death. A complete statement and contrast of the two uses of these terms, in both the Theological and Bible use.

Heaven Government a Failure. By A. B. Maguire.

Restitution. Austin Cattle. A careful examination of the question "If a man die shall he live again?"

Is it Time? H. V. Reed. An examination of testimony as to who are subjects of salvation.

What is Death? H. V. Reed. An exposition of the Bible teaching and modern theories.

The Perverted Parable. The Rich Man and Lazarus. W. Luke.

EIGHT PAGE TRACTS.

25 cents, or $1 for 5c.

1, 10 Essential to Belief in the Reality of Jesus. H. Wilson.

Signs of the Times. H. Bonar, of Scotland.

The Scattering and Gathering. H. V. Reed. Contemporaneous the future three fold gathering of the Saints, Israel, and the Nations.

TWELVE PAGE TRACTS.

25 cents, or $1 for 5c.

Anti-Hell Theory. Joel A. Simonds.

Resurrection and the Kingdom of God. E. Hoyt. What relation to marriage in next life.

Immortality Revealed to Light. The grand reality of resurrection. A. B. Cook.

SIXTEEN PAGE TRACTS.

25 cents, or $1 for 50; or $2 for $3.

The New Birth. Joseph Pearce.

Hope for the World. Joel A. Simonds.

The Kingdom of Messiah. Joseph Pearce, D. D. Set forth in beautiful sentences and apt Bible quotations.

Which is Right? T. Wilson. Showing the Bible teachers on the question as to whether Christ's Kingdom is to be on the earth or in heaven.

The Seed of Abraham. Joel A. Simonds. The promise made to Abraham, renewed to Isaac and Jacob, and so frequently referred to by prophets and apostles.

The Elect in Bible Beauty. H. V. Reed. Just the thing for an elaborate reader.

TWENTY FOUR PAGE TRACTS.

25 cents for 50c.; or $1 for $3.

Das Evangelium der Reiche Gottes. Teaches the true puzzle of Christ's Kingdom.

Will the Earth be Burned Up? T. Wilson. An argument from the scriptures, showing that the earth will not be annihilated, as many suppose, but will be the everlasting inheritance of the saints.

Witchcraft Unveiled; or the Voice of God Against Spiritualism. H. V. Reed. Cannot be too widely circulated.

The Scriptures. Joel A. Simonds.

THIRTY TWO PAGE TRACTS.

50c. each, or $1 for 3c.

Evangelism concerning the Reign of Christ over Israel and the Nations; or a brief statement of the things concerning the Kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ. Wiley Jones.

The Restitution; or the world restored to its primeval state, and this to be everlasting consciousness. E. Miller. A careful and satisfactory examination of Acts iii. 21.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS.

The Rich Man and Lazarus. T. Wilson. The exposition thoroughly in harmony with Bible teaching. 36 pages, price 10c.

The Rich Man and Lazarus. C. F. Sweet. A careful unfolding of Luke xvi. and xvii. with an examination of Luke xix. and xxiv. 51 pages, price 25c.

Primitive Christian Faith. C. F. Sweet. A concise History of the Primitive Christian Faith, as the Gospel as held by the early fathers, in a brief compass. 50 pages, price 25c.

The Infidel Silenced by the most irrefutable evidence. W. H. Wilson. 45 pages, price 25c.

The Doctrine of Baptism as taught in the Holy Scriptures. Together with a collection of evidence upon the subject from the most learned theologians, critics, lexicographers and ecclesiastical historians. 48 pages, price 25c.

Bible Triumphant. Mrs. H. V. Reed. A reply to "One hundred and forty-four self-contradictions of the Bible," by A. J. Davis. An able refutation of infidel charges. Paper 50c., cloth $1.

Discussion on the state of the Dead, between the Rev. W. C. Brackbridge, Congregational minister, and W. Kelloway, both of England. The propositions discussed were: 1. That the dead exist in a living, conscious state after their decease. Affirmed by Brackbridge. 2. That the Scriptures teach that man in death is totally unconscious, insensible and unable to perform any act whatever, until that day he is quickened, cleansed and risen. 192 pp., paper 50c.

Future Punishment. Its nature and duration. Henry Constable, Prebendary of York. Exactly the book for the times. 340 pages, cloth $1.

The Destiny of Russia, as foretold by God's prophets, together with an outline of the future movements and destiny of England, Germany, Persia, Africa and the Jews. Contains a map of England and Asia. A work invaluable to every student of prophecy, and of intense present interest. 192 pages, 25c.; paper 50c.

Hades, or the Intermediate State of the Dead. Henry Constable, A. M. Presents the Bible doctrine of the state of man between death and the resurrection. Cloth $1.00.

God's Plan of Salvation. J. M. Stephenson. A comprehensive and able statement of the leading phases of Bible theology, that brethren will find this just the thing to read and circulate. The nature of new the Kingdom of God, and the obedience of faith, are ably and clearly set forth. Over 300 pages, cloth $1.

THE NEW TESTAMENT IN GREEK AND ENGLISH!

—REVISED—

THE EMPHATIC DIAGLOTT

—By BENJAMIN WILSON.—

Contains the Original Greek text of the New Testament, with an Interlinear word-for-word English translation, based on the renderings of eminent critics, and on the sacred readings of the Vatican Manuscripts, together with Illustrative and Explanatory foot notes, and a copious selection of references.

The different renderings of various passages in the New Testament are the foundation on which most of the sects of Christians have been built up; with this work each reader may judge for himself whether the words there literally translated are so arranged in the common version as to express the exact meaning of the New Testament writers.

New improved edition, on larger paper, 840 pages, cloth $5.00, Library binding $6.00.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

HYMNS OF THE ADVENT!

Above is the name of a New Hymn Book, compiled by

—CHAS. C. BARKER.—

Mr. Barker combines in this book the "Hymns of the Morning" and a fresh and rare selection of music. As an appendix he adds a selection of "Favorite Hymns, whose music is as a household word. Those having the "Christian Psalmodist" and no music book will do well to get this work. Price 40c., cloth 50c.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

ASTRONOMICAL ETIOLOGY,

—OR—

STAR PROPHECIES

Concerning coming disasters on the earth from 1881 to 1900.

—By M. L. KNAPP, D. D.—

And others. It also contains an appendix by the publisher. 32 pages, 25c. each.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

GOD ESTABLISHED

—AND—

The BIBLE VINDICATED.

—By A. J. EYCHANER.—

A new tract, and one that should be in the hands of every infidel in the land. Those living in infidel neighborhoods will do well to get this work, as it will aid you in combatting this enemy. Twenty pages, price 5c., 12 for 50c., or 40 for $1.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

THE RESTITUTION
—IS ISSUED WEEKLY BY—
The Christian Publishing Association.

OFFICERS OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS:
E. S. DWIGGINS..... Pr-sident.
CHARLES PALMER..... Vice Pr-s-dent.
E. M. DAYHILL..... Secretary.
S. A. CHAPLIN..... Treasurer.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE:
CHARLES PALMER, WM. RAILSBACK,
L. G. ROBERTS.

S. A. CHAPLIN.....EDITOR.

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTORS:
J. F. STEPHENSON, R. WILSON,
J. P. WEETHEE, J. A. SIMONS,
WILEY JONES, D. M. MYERS,
A. B. MAGRUDER.

The Restitution.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXX. Read PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JANUARY 19, 1881. NO. 3.

THE RESTITUTION.

TERMS--TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR, Payable in advance. Three and Six Months at the same rate.

Address all Letters and Communications to THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS!

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and baptism as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Communications.

OBJECTIONS TO "SOUL SLEEPING."

J. F. LAWYER.

Brother Wilson of the Prophetic Times, in March and Apr. Vol. 2, No. 3, page 97, and on, in reply to a tract entitled "The Bible Doctrine of Man in Death," by Frank Burr, and also in the January number, on the word Thou, says: "Some lay a great stress on the pronoun Thou, as comprehending the whole man," and refers to John vi. 24, to disprove it. "Verily, verily, I say unto you, except a corn of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone, but if it die it bringeth forth much fruit."

Here, he says, here it comprehends the whole grain, and tho it is said to die. But the whole grain does not die, for the germ does not die, but lives on, is quickened and continues to live, in a different manner indeed, until the grain or new body is formed in the ear with its germ again.

So also the Thou; the man is said to die or return to dust, but the whole man does not die and return to dust; the spirit lives on, in a different manner indeed, until in the resurrection the Lord shall give a new body in which the spirit shall again resume its former life. So Paul answers those who cavil at the resurrection in this way: 1 Cor. xv. 35, 38. "Thou fool, that which thou sowest, thou sowest not that body that shall be but bare grain, it may chance of wheat or some other grain. But God giveth it a body as it hath pleased him, and to every seed his own body."

Thus when the grain of wheat is sown in the earth, there is both a death and a quickening. The body of the grain dies, and it is said that it, the grain, dies; the germ lives, and it, the grain, is said to be quickened. Death and quickening are simultaneous: and quickening is a mode which the living germ takes consequent upon death of the body in which it is held, and is necessary to ensure future development and identity of the grain.

It is so with man. He dies; the body decays and returns to dust, but the spirit lives on, and quickening is a mode of existence which the living spirit takes consequent upon the dissolution of the body in which it was held; and is necessary to ensure future personal development and identity of the man in the resurrection."

The apostle's argument as to the grain is correct, but does brother Wilson's analogy hold good when he says the spirit goes to sheol a conscious thinking entity?

It seems to me, to make them analogous, would leave the entire man in the grave. As the corn of wheat or a kernel of corn is planted in the ground, germ and all, and in the dying process the germ does not disconnect itself with the body which rots and feeds the germ. The germ of the corn does not leave the kernel of corn and go to some other clime to germinate, but germinates, comes up out of the ground, and sprouts into a new life, a fit representation of the resurrection.

To make them analogous, with the generally accepted theory of my brother men, would have the germ leave the kernel of corn before it is planted, as it is said the spirit, the real man, leaves the body before it is planted, or buried in ground.

From the day that the kernel of corn is planted containing the germ, it lies still a short time before it starts to germinate. The germ does not leave the kernel during this dormant state, but might be said to sleep there until it starts into a new life. So the dead are said to fall asleep, lie dormant till they are called into a new life.

Now I understand the Bible to teach the resurrection of the body, yet it nowhere says "a resurrection of the body," but a resurrection of the dead, and as the spirit is said never to die, it must be that the body is meant, which is called man. "Dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return."

We read of a resurrection of the dead—not a resurrection of the living. Brother Wilson says, "If all there was of Abraham was his body, his body was buried in the cave of Machpelah. Is it there now? No Where is it? Nowhere. What has become of Abraham? He is no more. He is defunct. Blotted out of existence, for there can be no resurrection of that which is not."

Now you say that there is Abraham went to sheol, and did not die, but lived right on. Now brother Wilson, "That the dead are raised even Moses showed at the bush." Luke xx. 37. What was shown at the bush? The bush all on fire but not consumed. Abraham was dead but not forgotten. Not that Abraham was alive somewhere, for the fire and the bush were together.

I would infer, brother Wilson, from your writings that you do not believe in the resurrection of the body, but of the spirit, which you believe to be called dead, by being separated from the body. There seems to be some scripture to hold you out in this. In 1 Cor. xv. 35, 36. "Not that body that shall be," etc., yet to make the analogy hold good the new body grows out of the old body. "This mortal shall put on immortality." The germ taken out of the kernel of corn and planted in the ground would not grow into a new life. The germ grows the new body out of the old body, or kernel, and they stay together until this is accomplished. The germ never leaves the old kernel until an entire new kernel is made. Then the new kernel takes the place of the old one, which grows into the new one. The new one is, and the old one has perished by being grown into the new one.

So the separation process does not transpire until the new man is complete. So then the Bible teaches a separation at death, but it is when the mortal has grown into the immortal—I now allude only to those who put on immortality.

The Bible is silent on the resurrection of conscious beings from the place of departed conscious spirits, but it speaks of people coming out of their graves, and of opening graves, etc., and the sea shall give up the dead that are in it, seems to imply that the body is meant, as the place of departed spirits is not in the sea. It seems the same old body must be forthcoming, out of which is to grow the new body, as it is mortal and it is the mortal that is to put on the immortality. The immortal spirit or the immortal soul cannot [illegible] such. But you do not teach the immortality of either I say to your honor.

My dear brother Wilson, is not sheol a state or condition rather than a place or locality? If not where is the locality? The Bible certainly teaches such a state or condition, and our every day experience teaches such a fact. But a locality or place is contrary both to our reason and experience.

You intimate that some may believe that a body could not be living unless it breathed. This you say is not true. You say that there is not a man born into this world but lived before he breathed. I think this is a mistake, for the child in the mother's womb is not known to the world as a living being, for it is the life of the mother, in the blood that courses through its veins and organism, and the minute its connection is severed, it has to breathe or it never lives. Before it was a part of its mother.

Adam was not in the womb, but was created, and he was not a living man until he breathed, because it distinctly says that he became a living being after, not before, he received the breath of life.

Gen. ii. 7. "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and (then) man became a living soul."

It does not say that he was a living man before the breath of "lives" was breathed into him.

You quote Eccl. xii. 7. "And the spirit shall return unto God who gave it." The word it cannot mean a conscious human being, as it is in the neuter gender.

Again Paul to Timothy, in 1 Tim. vi. 16: "Dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto, whom no man hath seen nor can see." To have conscious human beings go direct into the presence of Jehovah would destroy the type, for only the High Priest was allowed into the Holy of Holies.

This passage in Eccl. xii, would rush good and bad, irrespective of character, into the presence of God, not in sheol, for God does not dwell there—the place of departed spirits. It does not read "The spirit shall return to sheol who gave it."

Now it (neuter gender proves it anything but a personal being) the spirit, it the power of life, could return to God who gave it, for it came from God; but man as a conscious being, never was with God.

But it reads "Let us make man." They made him, and gave him the power of life. This was done in the breathing process. This is proved in our every day experience. Take away the air from us, and the power to live is gone, and then return a man to the air again after he has been kept from it a short time, and he cannot live even then, unless some artificial means (as in the case of a drowned person) are applied, the lungs inflated, and the breathing, the inhaling and exhaling process, commenced.

So in Adam's case, God formed man and the air, for he created all things, then he expressly state, that he breathed into him—started the machinery, by inhaling and exhaling. Now no one that had never heard of the immortal soul theory, would for one moment conclude, that in the act of breathing into him the breath of life, he had made man a duality, that he had made Adam a possessor of an independent soul, or spirit, or entity. Adam became a living soul. Adam did not get an immortal soul or spirit. Call it immortal brother Wilson, for if it never dies it might be called such.

Again, brother Wilson, are you sure when Jacob said "I will go down into she-ol (hell) unto my son mourning," you say in Vol. 2, No. 5, page 213, "Sheol is not the grave," the word for grave is kever. Besides Jacob thought his son had been devoured by a wild beast, and was not then in the grave. But Jacob knew that the wild beast could not devour his spirit, and that his spirit would be in sheol, where he supposed his son to be, he would go.

Now brother, you assume too much here. How do you know that Jacob believed in the spirit theory? The record is as silent as the grave about "his spirit." "I will go down," not something that belongs to me. I will go down, is his language. Please let us not put words into the mouth of Jacob and make him say something he never said. Let us not add to God's word.

I will go down mourning. I think if Jacob had believed in the spirit theory he would have rejoiced, as many do now when they are about to die, at thought of seeing his beloved son Joseph.

I think Jacob mourned because he would not see him in sheol, but as Joseph had gone into the death state or condition, not place or locality, he, Jacob, would also have to go to the same place.

Ministers of to-day comfort the bereaved father at the funeral of his son by saying: Mourn not, rather rejoice; your son was torn to pieces by animals but it was the gate to endless joys. He is in heaven in the presence of God and the holy angels. Your son is happy, and when you die, or some beast comes along and tears you to pieces to-day, you will go to your son (not to mourn) rejoicing.

But Jacob understood going to sheol in a different light or he would not have said "I go down into sheol (hell) unto my son mourning."

Joseph too, was very particular to have his bones preserved, and to have them removed, etc.

On page 213, Vol. 2, No. 6. "The union of the body and spirit is dissolved, and man ceases to be a living soul or person, and exists no more as such until the resurrection of the body and its reunion with the spirit constitutes him a living soul again."

You said that if all there was of Abraham was his body, then there was now no Abraham; that he was defunct, destroyed, and that there could be no resurrection of that which was destroyed. What do you then reunite the spirit to, the old body being destroyed? The word reunite signifies a union with something it was a part of before. It could not reunite with a spirit-body, for it never had such a body before but a mortal body, that could waste away or be cremated and scattered to the four winds of heaven; and the same God who erected the particles and shaped them into an Adam, could do so again. Who can deny the power of God? Why not use the words of inspiration. He fell asleep. "He gave up the ghost." That is, he expired, and his soul went to hell, a state or condition of death, but not to a locality.

Stephen said, Lord Jesus receive my spirit, and when he had said this he fell asleep. Some ridicule this position by saying Stephen could not have intended for the Lord Jesus to receive his "breath." There is nothing ludicrous in this, unless it was ludicrous in saying "and he breathed into him the breath of lives." Here it does not say that he breathed into him the spirit.

Stephen meant by this, receive my life, for the Good Book teaches that our life is hid with Christ in God. Not hid in sheol. Jesus is our life thy said and when he returns who is our life, then shall we be made like him.

Now there is no such a doctrine as the reuniting of soul and body taught in the Bible. The kernel and the germ stay together until the one grows into the other. The mortal puts on the immortal.

But the Bible teaches that this spirit that returns to God who gave it, is called his spirit after it returns to him.

In Ezk. xxxvii. 12-14, it says: "Therefore prophesy and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God, Behold, O my people, I will open your graves, and bring you into the land of Israel: and ye shall know that I am their Lord when I have opened your graves, O my people, and brought you up out of your graves. And I shall put my spirit (not yours) in you, and ye shall live."

This disproves the union theory. God gives them the power of life again, the spirit, as he did at first. And I shall place you in your own land, not spiritual Israel; there, not while they are asleep, dead. "The dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence."

Silence is a condition, not a locality. The grave is the locality they go to, and their condition is silence—asleep. In God's sight they are not dead, but asleep, same as our children are at night to us. Asleep, unconscious, but not dead, for we can awake them. So we die in Christ. The Bible calls it "fall asleep." We are unconscious, and he has the power to awaken us again.

Time does not go on with the dead. "David is both dead and buried." Acts. ii. 29. We do not bury people in the place of departed spirits—we bury them in the ground. "David is not ascended into the heavens." Acts, ii. 34; yet we hear people quote Eccl. xii. 7; "the spirit returns to God (the real David) who gave it, not to sheol. This theory of "the spirit returns to God who gave it," as an intelligent entity, would crowd the presence of God with all the wicked whoremongers, murderers and cut-throats of all ages, as well as the good. It would be nothing but Universalism, as Universalism assumes to save all, irrespective of "former condition or servitude," and makes no distinction between the faithful and the unfaithful, while as our brother beautifully teaches, "The believer is glorified and the unbeliever is reconciled." The faithful are to be Kings and Priests, the body of Jews—Jews the head of that body, and the reconciled nations are to be the subject of that glorious Kingdom that is to take the place of all the Kingdoms of the earth. It will not be a Kingdom located beyond the bounds of time and space, but right here on this earth.

"But the meek shall inherit the earth and shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace" Ps. xxxvii. 11. "For the evil doers shall be cut off, but those who wait upon the Lord shall inherit the earth." Ps. xxxvii. 29.

"Blessed are the meek for they shall inherit the earth." Mat. v. 5. Let us not be wise above what is written. Let us learn to speak only where the Bible speaks and keep silent where it is silent.

The Bible nowhere teaches that "we have a hell to shun and a heaven to gain." It teaches us to do as we wish to be done by and to live justly before all men.

Paul warned us in his letter to Timothy iv. 3, that the time would "come when they will not endure sound doctrine; but after their own lusts shall they heap to themselves teachers, having itching ears." Then if you have "fought the good fight—finished the course and kept the faith," you may say; "Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day: and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing." (his second coming.) "For this we say unto you by the word of the Lord, that we which are alive and remain unto the coming of the Lord, shall not prevent (go before) them which are asleep (not awake.) for the Lord himself shall descend from heaven, with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first. Then we which are alive (not dead) and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord. Wherefore comfort one another with these words." Thes. iv. 15, 18.

So you see my dying brother men, we are taught to comfort one another with the fact of Jesus coming back to us, and not as going to him at death. When he returns, he will reward every one according to the deeds done, whether they be good or evil. He will right all our wrongs—he will be our King and Priest forever. Praised be his name.

REVELATIONS III. 17.

"There is," saith Solomon," that makes himself rich, and yet hath nothing." Prov. xiii. 7. This was the very temper of Laodicea; "Thou sayest, I am rich, and increased in goods, and have need of nothing; and knowest not." Pray mind this "that thou art wretched, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked." Thou knowest not; as bad as she was, she thought her state good: as poor as she was in grace, she thought she was rich; as miserable and naked as she was, yet she thought she had need of nothing. Now, there are several rises or grounds of this mistake. Let us consider a few.

First. "The desperate deceitfulness of the heart of every natural man." "The heart is deceitful above all things." Jer. xvii. 9. The Hebrew word is the same with Jacob's name. Now, you know, he was a supplanter of his brother Esau; "He is rightly called Jacob," saith he, "for he hath supplanted me these two times." (Gen. xxvii, 36. So the word signifies, to be fraudulent, subtle, deceitful, and supplanting. Thus is the heart of every natural man, "deceitful above all things." You read of the deceitfulness of the tongue, and of the deceitfulness of riches, and of the deceitfulness of vanity, and of the deceitfulness of friends. Ps. lii. 4. Matt. xiii. 22. Prov. xxxi. 30. Job vi, 15. But yet the heart is deceitful above them all; nay, you read of the deceitfulness of Satan, Rev. xx. 3. yet truly a man's heart is a greater deceiver than he; for he could never deceive a man, if his own heart did not deceive him.

Now, it is from hence that a man presumes upon the goodness of his case, from the desperate treachery of his own heart. How common it is for men to boast of the goodness of their own hearts? "I thank God, though I do not make such a show and pretence as some do, yet I have as good a heart as the best." O do but hear Solomon in this case, "he that trusteth in his own heart is a fool." Prov. xxviii. 26. Will any wise man commit his money to the cut-purse? Will he cheat? It is a good rule, remember to distrust; and it was Austin's prayer, that man that trusts to his own heart, shall be sure to find himself deceived at last.

Secondly. This mistake arises from the pride of man's spirit; there is a proud heart in every natural man; there was much of this pride in Adam's sin, and there is much of it in all Adam's sons; it is a radical sin, and from hence arises this opinion of a man's state and condition. Solomon saith. "Be not righteous overmuch." Eccl. vii. 16. This is not meant of the righteousness of a wise man, but the pride of the presumptious man. Now, in this sense, every carnal man is righteous overmuch, though he hath none of that righteousness which commends him to God, namely, the righteousness of Christ, yet he hath too much of that righteousness which commends him to himself, and this is self righteousness.

A proud man hath an eye to see his beauty but not his deformity; his parts, but not his spots; his seeming brightness, but not his real wretchedness. It must be a work of grace that must show a man his want of grace. The haughty eye looks downward, but the humble eye looks downward, and therefore this is the believer's motto: The least of saints, the greatest of sinners. But the carnal man's motto is: I thank God I am not as other men.

Thirdly. Many deceive themselves with common grace instead of saving, through that resemblance that is between them. As many take counterfeit money for current coin, so many take common grace for true.

Saul took the devil for Samuel, because he appeared in the mantle of Samuel; so many take common grace for saving, because it is like it. A man may be under a supernatural work, and yet fall short of a saving work. The first raises nature, the second only renews nature. Though every saving work of the spirit be supernatural, yet every supernatural work of the spirit is not saving; and hence many deceive their own hearts by taking a supernatural work for a saving work.

Fourthly. Many mistake a profession of religion for a work of conversion, and outside reformation for a sure sign of inward regeneration. If the outside of the cup be washed they think all is clean, though it be never so foul within.

This is the common rock that many souls split upon, to their eternal hazard, taking up a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof.

Lastly. Want of a home application of the law of God to the heart and conscience, to discover to a man the true state and condition he is in. When this is wanting a man will sit down short of a true work of grace, and reckon his case better than it is.

That is a notable passage, which the apostle hints concerning himself: "I was alive without the law once, but when the commandment came, sin revived, and I died."

Here, you have an account of the different apprehensions Paul had of his condition with and without the word.

1. Here is apprehension of his condition without the word. "I was alive," saith he, "without the law." Paul had the law, for he was a Pharisee, and had the "form of knowledge, and of the truth of the law." When he said he was without the law, you must not take him literally, but spiritually. He was without the power and efficacy of it upon his heart and conscience, convincing and awakening, and discovering sin; and so long as this was his case, he doubted not of his state, he was confident of the goodness of his condition. This he hinted when he said I was alive. But then

2. Here is his apprehension of his condition with the word, and that is quite contrary to what it was before. "When the commandment came," said he, "then sin revived and I died." When the word of God came with power upon his heart, when the spirit of God set it home effectually upon his conscience, that is meant by the coming of the commandment. "Then sin revived, and I died," that is, I saw the desperateness of my case, and the filthiness of all my own self righteousness.

Then my hope ceased, and my confidence failed; and as before I thought myself alive, and my sin dead; so when God had awakened conscience by the word, then I saw myself sin alive and powerful, and myself dead and miserable.

This is one reason why many go no further in the profession of religion, than to be almost Christians. They mistake their state, and think it good when it is not, which mistake is fivefold. Namely:

1. A deceitful heart.
2. A proud spirit.
3. Taking common grace for saving grace.
4. Outward reformation for true heart change.
5. Want of home application of the law of God to the heart.

H.

THE COMING AND KINGDOM OF CHRIST.

S. ROXANA WINCE.

"This same Jesus, who is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven."

"A certain nobleman went into a far country to receive for himself a kingdom and to return. * * * And it came to pass, that when he was returned, having received the kingdom, then he commanded these servants to be brought unto him, to whom he had given the money, that he might know how much every man had gained by trading."

That same Jesus, that disappeared in the clouds, is to come again; the nobleman is to return. Having received the kingdom, he will reckon with his servants, to whom his truth and his interests have been committed.

The citizens who hated him and who sent a message after him, saying we will not have this man to reign over us, may be under a supernatural work, and yet fall short of a saving work. The first raises nature, the second only renews nature. Though every saving work of the spirit be supernatural, yet every supernatural work of the spirit is not saving; and hence many deceive their own hearts by taking a supernatural work for a saving work.

Fourthly. Many mistake a profession of religion for a work of conversion, and outside reformation for a sure sign of inward regeneration. If the outside of the cup be washed they think all is clean, though it be never so foul within.

This is the common rock that many souls split upon, to their eternal hazard, taking up a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof.

Lastly. Want of a home application of the law of God to the heart and conscience, to discover to a man the true state and condition he is in. When this is wanting a man will sit down short of a true work of grace, and reckon his case better than it is.

That is a notable passage, which the apostle hints concerning himself: "I was alive without the law once, but when the commandment came, sin revived, and I died."

Here, you have an account of the different apprehensions Paul had of his condition with and without the word.

1. Here is apprehension of his condition without the word. "I was alive," saith he, "without the law." Paul had the law, for he was a Pharisee, and had the "form of knowledge, and of the truth of the law." When he said he was without the law, you must not take him literally, but spiritually. He was without the power and efficacy of it upon his heart and conscience, convincing and awakening, and discovering sin; and so long as this was his case, he doubted not of his state, he was confident of the goodness of his condition. This he hinted when he said I was alive. But then

2. Here is his apprehension of his condition with the word, and that is quite contrary to what it was before. "When the commandment came," said he, "then sin revived and I died." When the word of God came with power upon his heart, when the spirit of God set it home effectually upon his conscience, that is meant by the coming of the commandment. "Then sin revived, and I died," that is, I saw the desperateness of my case, and the filthiness of all my own self righteousness.

Then my hope ceased, and my confidence failed; and as before I thought myself alive, and my sin dead; so when God had awakened conscience by the word, then I saw myself sin alive and powerful, and myself dead and miserable.

This is one reason why many go no further in the profession of religion, than to be almost Christians. They mistake their state, and think it good when it is not, which mistake is fivefold. Namely:

1. A deceitful heart.
2. A proud spirit.
3. Taking common grace for saving grace.
4. Outward reformation for true heart change.
5. Want of home application of the law of God to the heart.

H.

Sententious.

They that love the longest, love the best.

It is the peculiar business of Faith to see in the dark.

It is no vanity for a man to pride himself on what he has honestly got and prudently uses.

Let him who regrets the loss of time make proper use of that which is to be in future.

He who stops to pick a flaw in another's knitting work, drops many stitches in his own.

There are strings in the harp of every life which, though covered with dust, give out music when the wings of truth stir the air.

True repentance has a double aspect: it looks upon things past with a weeping eye, and upon the future with a watchful eye.—R. South.

The darkest clouds give lightnings birth,
The pearl is formed in ocean's bed;
The gem, imperishing in earth,
Springs from its grave from the dead;
So shall the relics of the just,
In weakness sown, be rais'd in power:
The precious seed shall leave the dust,
A glorious and immortal flower.

You may depend upon it that enthusiasm is a liberal education for a Christian; I mean nothing makes a man so quick-sighted and intelligent in the service of God as enthusiasm.—Spurgeon.

For spiritual blessings, let our prayers be particularly importunate, perpetual and persevering; for temporal blessings, let them be general, short, conditional and also modest.—Bishop Taylor.

Let life be ennobled by a worthy purpose. To live simply for the sake of living or to pass the time, is preposterously unworthy. To so direct every thought and movement that it shall help bless the world and glorify God, is the duty of him who is created a little lower than the angels.

Still with Thee—when purple morning breaketh,
When the bird waketh and the shadows flee;
Fairer than the morning, lovelier than the daylight—
Dawns the sweet consciousness—I am with Thee!

Alone with Thee, amid the mystic shadows,
The solemn hush of nature newly born;
Alone with Thee, in breathless adoration,
In the calm dew and freshness of the morn.

My own experience is that the Bible is dull when I am dull. When I am really alive, and set in upon the text with a tidal pressure of living affinities, it opens, it multiplies discoveries, and reveals depths even faster than I can note them. The worldly spirit shuts the Bible; the Spirit of God makes it a fire, flaming out all meanings and glorious truth.—Horace Bushnell.

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CHAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, January 19, 1881.

QUITE a number of typographical errors escaped correction in both the last papers. We will try to improve in this particular hereafter.

BRO. John Foore has an appointment to preach at Argos commencing on Friday evening, Jan. 21, and continuing over the following Sunday.

THREE persons were baptized in Yellow River, at Plymouth, on Sunday, Jan. 16, by Bro. H. Barnhill. They have united with the little church which meets at a School House six miles north of Plymouth. May these sisters, so lately adopted into the household of faith, adorn their profession by a holy life, and finally share in the honors of God's everlasting kingdom.

THE PHRENOLOGICAL JOURNAL has come regularly to this office for several years past. It is one of the best literary journals that is issued from the teeming press of this periodical producing era. Its aim is to promote the mental, moral and physical elevation of the human race by improving the Individual. Like the Great Teacher, its appeals are to each person singly, and general reformation is only anticipated as individual character is transformed. The publishers may fault us for the scant notice we have given of this excellent Magazine in the past, but the smallness of our paper has afforded us but little or no room for Book Notices. A Prospectus and terms will be found on another page. The December number of 1880, had an interesting article on the Egyptian Obelisk, with a very handsome illustration of its four faces, covered with hieroglyphics. The January number for 1881 has not yet come to hand.

WE shall continue to send THE RESTITUTION to those of our brethren who have desired its continuance promising to pay soon. We shall also send awhile to some who are too poor to promise anything and reluctantly tell us they must discontinue from sheer poverty. We say to our brethren who may desire to do a little missionary work, that we will ourself pay the full subscription price for two copies of our paper which we will send to two different persons—one a poor minster of the gospel and one a poor widow. We will also pay for a copy for a loved child. Would not some others like to pay for some who are unable to pay for themselves? Look at our Letter Drawer department for this week. We will also contribute to the Relief Fund. We only say this much to let our brethren and sisters know that we will share with them in sustaining the cause.

THE following from the Inter-Ocean of Jan. 16, should suggest some thoughts to parents and others who have the responsible care of children. If the love of God could be impressed upon the trusting hearts of the little ones, how different might be the history of innumerable lives. But unfortunately the impression made on the confiding little learner's mind concerning the character of the heavenly Father is that he is an implacable despot whose vengeful ire can only be satisfied in the never-ceasing tortures of the vast majority of the human family. This grim Popish horror is branded into little hearts, and dread aversion to the most lovable of all Beings,—the God of love—is the consequence. How often the wish—never to have been born—has agonized the little wrong-doer, when heart-felt sorrow would have brought the peace of God to the poor child, could it only have felt that God was as kind and forgiving as a good man. Oh that children would realize that Christ Jesus came into this world to redeem from sin and death, and give eternal life to all who would love and serve him:

QUESTION.—WHO IS TEACHING YOUR CHILDREN?

Reference has previously been made in these columns to the union meetings controlled by the women of Evanston during the week of prayer. Any thoughtful attendant upon these and similar meetings must be impressed with the constant reference to the fact of the apathy and indifference of many young people to all philanthropic work.

Investigating this subject somewhat, one is startled at the carelessness with which many fathers and mothers treat the moral and spiritual education of their children.

That most sensitive and delicate instrument in the world, the heart of a little child, with all its possibilities of pain, fear, joy and love is given into the hands of the ignorant or superstitious, or left to wander in doubt, and affliction agony.

Nothing more surely indicates the false and artificial phases of much of the so-called religious life than to hear fathers and mothers assert that they cannot talk with their children upon religious subjects, and nothing is more startling, in view of the effect upon the child's entire life of such teaching, than the reckless manner in which these little timid ones are sent to the "infant classes" of our Sabbath schools.

When it is so difficult for older persons to reconcile all of the orthodox doctrines with the one distinctive characteristic of the Being described as "Love," why bring to little childish hearts, oftentimes in the most abrupt way, the dreadful doctrine of eternal punishment? Little children naturally love God if they are taught to thank him for the birds and flowers, for the clouds and sunshine, the frost and snow, for parents, home, love, and friends; but taught to think of him as a being ready to cast wicked children into a fiery furnace, there to burn forever and ever, their little loving hearts will turn from him in fear and hatred: and this is what the little children of Congregational Sabbath schools are taught by the lessons prepared for the past year. Remembering the agony of my own childhood over such doctrines, I cannot forbear to plead for the little children, and ask that they be taught love to God and to humanity, and their sweet, loving trustfulness be undisturbed by doctrines about which the greatest intellects of the world so materially differ.

Let us guard the children during their earliest years from hurtful influences. And how few realize the importance of the first seven years of a child's life. That blessed, beautiful time given to the mother for character-making, for laying broad and deep the foundation principles to be applied to all subsequent knowledge.

And how surprisingly indifferent to the moral-teaching of our children are many of our educational methods.

MRS. DIAS says in her charming little book entitled "Lucy Maria:" "Perhaps the moral nature will not always be ignored in our systems of instruction, as it is now, from the primary school, all the way up. Why does not this Christian community begin at the right place, and form its members rightly from the beginning?"

The committee-man says to the teacher: "There are your pupils. If you can't put into their heads so much spelling, so much reading, so much arithmetic, etc., in a given time, some one must take your place who can." To do this requires the teacher's whole time and endeavors. The committee-man comes in at the appointed time, examines the scholars in the branches named, and passes them on. Not a word about right and wrong principles of action. But when these children, grown to be men and women, prove false to their trusts, not even the committee-man will excuse them on the ground that they were quick at figures."

We also find in the Galesburg Register of recent date the following earnest thought upon this subject:

"Morality must be taught in the public schools if the nation would not become morally bankrupt. It might be difficult to determine the amount of culture for the head and heart. The recitation is the teacher's opportunity to teach the greatest of all lessons—how to live. It is the time in which to cultivate a taste for the beautiful in nature which pervades the whole universe, and to mark the deep and subtle distinctions between right and wrong. The strength, the peculiarities and duration of character, rest upon that of the individual who composes it. The foundations of character must be laid in youth. We are suffering to-day from a spirit that shuts out all moral obligations, and regards not the rights of others. Morals, as such, must be the center of any education scheme. It is impossible to indicate the methods by which these lessons may be inculcated. These virtues must be embodied in the teacher, and radiate in rays of light. The public schools should be long enough and wide enough to embrace the knowledge of morality and truth."

The work of the teacher in the school, however, in order to become permanent, must be supplemented by careful training in the home.

Communications.

JUSTIFICATION.

BY PHILOS.

Editor Restitution: I would venture a brief review of an article in THE RESTITUTION of June 23, headed "Justification," in which the writer seems to confound the terms Justification, Pardon, and Conversion, using those words interchangeably.

Now, I think that the term Justification, being a judicial term, is simply used in law with reference to a certain act, or number of acts, as a recognition of such act or acts, as being right, or just in the eyes of the law. Hence justified by the law, without any reference to the character of the individual with regard to anything else in the past.

James uses the term in regard to Abraham's offering up Isaac on the altar without any reference to his former character. He was justified in this act, because he did it in full faith in —not into—the God whom he loved and served.

The writer says: "Some think that we, as a people, hold that sins are washed away in the waters of baptism, or that pardon is suspended till baptism is performed."

Now, I know of none who believe the former of these items; but I must confess that we as a people, do hold to the latter, so far as my acquaintance with the views of the brethren goes.

I And again: "It is obvious that a matter so elementary as this should be clearly perceived and stated."

2. And still further: "In this, as in some other matters, the Scriptures in the case afford plausible grounds for opposite opinions."

3. In speaking of conversion he says: "In this, as in other things, we might expect to find the Bible eminently wise." That is, I suppose, very definite, explicit.

Now, in this last declaration I fully concur. It must of necessity be so, for how could we know what constituted conversion, if the Bible did not teach it plainly? But then, how can one harmonize these two opposite statements? In the first saying that the Bible affords plausible grounds for opposite opinions; and in the second, that it is eminently wise; on the same subject?

4. Justification is spoken of by the writer as being two-fold. Inward and outward. "Inward justification is by faith, outward by works; inward before God, outward before men; the inward unites to Christ, the outward to the church; the inward precedes, and produces the outward, and is necessarily genuine, and synchronous with pardon." Then it is added—"When a man is pardoned he is free from sin, and united to Christ: and the union with the church follows, by baptism."

Now where does one learn all this? Certainly not from the Bible. Is it not from the teachings and doctrines of men? For the Bible says nothing about inward and outward justification. Paul says, "It is God that justifieth." Rom. iv. 5; viii. 33. That is, he recognizes the justness of a righteous act. It is nowhere stated in the Bible that inward justification unites to Christ, and outward to the church. The same means that unites to Christ, also unites to the church, or body of Christ. But what is it to get into Christ? Can we be literally initiated into the literal body of Christ? Answer—Paul represents the church in figure as being Christ's body, of which, he says, Christ is the head. So that if we are in the true church of God, we are also in the Christ: and so by the same means that we get into the church, we also get into Christ. 1 Cor. xii. 13–14, 27; Eph. i. 22, 23; iv. 12–16; Col. i. 18, 24. How then does the sinner get into the church? The writer says, "By baptism." Is he right? Let us see. Paul, what do you say? "For as the body is one, and has many members, ... so also is Christ." "For by one spirit are we all baptized into one body, whether Jews or Greeks, whether bond or free; and have been all made to drink into one spirit." 1 Cor xii. 12, 13.

Now, as the word is the ministration of the spirit, (2 Cor. iii. 8, 9;) the sinner through faith in the word is influenced to accept, and obey the Gospel, and thus led, by the spirit, to obey from the heart, that form of doctrine by which he is made free from sin, and becomes the servant of righteousness. Rom. vi. 17, 18. And being freed from sin, and having become a servant to God, his fruit is holiness, and the end everlasting life. Rom. vi. 22.

5. But it is objected because Paul said, "Baptized into Jesus Christ;" and Peter had said, "Be baptized .... for the remission of sins;" and because Ananias had said, "Be baptized and wash away thy sins:" and James had said, "Abraham was justified by works;" it has been inferred that sins are pardoned, and remitted; and justification gained, only in the act of baptism: but there are many (sixty-five) texts which affirm with, at least, equal clearness, that the act of faith initiates into Christ. A conclusion should be consistent with all the testimony in the case.

I fully concur in this last sentiment. But in which of the sixty-five texts is it affirmed, with any degree of clearness, that faith alone initiates into the Christ? We should ever remember that when the enjoyment of a promised blessing is attributed to faith, a practical faith is meant. A faith made perfect by works.

"Behold, I lay in Zion a chief corner-stone, elect, precious: and he that believeth on him shall not be confounded. Unto you therefore which believe, he is precious: but unto them which be disobedient, the stone which the builders disallowed, the same is made the head of the corner, and a stone of stumbling, and a rock of offence, even to them which stumble at the word, being disobedient."

By this contrast we see that two classes are here referred to; the first, believers; the second, unbelievers. Showing that the disobedient are not considered believers. Else there is no meaning in the antithesis. Of the like import is the Savior's language. "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, and he that believeth not shall be damned (condemned)."

He that believeth not will of course not be baptized; and he who does truly believe the Gospel will not hesitate long. So we see by this, as by the foregoing text, that faith which does not lead to obedience is not recognized as faith, at all.

6. With reference to the language of Ananias to Saul, "Arise and be baptized and wash away thy sins," etc., it is asked, "Does anybody really think that water can take away sin?" I answer, No! "Then, why is this text used to prove justification in the act of baptism?"

Here I might retort by asking, Why did Ananias, under the direction of the Holy Spirit, command Saul to wash away his sins, if, as claimed, they had already been washed away? But I will answer the question by meeting the writer on his own premises. He says, "The blood of Jesus Christ cleanseth us from all sin." Granted. But how? Can the sinner go to Calvary, and there literally wash away his sins in the literal blood of Jesus? No; certainly not. Where, and how then, can he wash away his sins in the blood of Jesus? Answer: Jesus shed his blood in his death—in the event of his dying. Hence, in his death we get an application of his blood, and thus the guilt of our sins is washed away. With this view of the subject it is easy to understand what Paul means in saying that "We are baptized into his death," and "Buried with him by baptism into death." Rom. vi. 3, 4. Again, v. 9, 10: "Being now justified by his blood, we shall be saved from wrath through him. For if when we were enemies, we were reconciled to God by the death of his Son; much more, being reconciled, we shall be saved by his life." How beautifully this harmonizes with the admonition of Ananias to Saul. "Arise, and be baptized, and wash away thy sins." Acts xxii. 16. And John's testimony. "The blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin." Being introduced into his death by baptism, we get an application of his blood, and so are washed from all forms of sin.

"For this is my blood of the New Testament, which is shed for many, for the remission of sins." Is anything else necessary? O, yes! is the reply. "It is made effective by faith." Anything else necessary? O, no! Not even repentance, or reformation of life: no matter what the character of the individual may have been! Only believe and your sins are all obliterated!

But hold. By the same rule that "faith" is implied, I will also imply repentance and baptism. If it be said, It would not look reasonable for the sinner to be pardoned without faith, I reply, Neither does it look reasonable for him to come to that point without repentance.

"And the times of this ignorance God winked at; but now commandeth all men everywhere to repent: because he hath appointed a day in the which he will judge the world in righteousness, by that man whom he hath ordained." Acts xvii. 30, 31.

"When they heard these things, they held their peace, and glorified God, saying, Then hath God also to the Gentiles granted repentance unto life." Acts xi. 18.

Now if it require repentance unto, or in order to life, why say that faith is all that is necessary, on the part of the sinner, to insure pardon, or the remission of sin?

But again. When the Pentecostian converts were convinced that Jesus was the Christ, and convicted of having killed the Prince of Life, they, in the deepest anguish of their souls, and in contrition of spirit, cried out, and said unto Peter and the rest of the apostles, "Men, and brethren, what shall we do?" Now faith in them, as very truly said, had produced this state of feelings with them, and hence Peter did not demand faith of them; but he began where he found them, and told them what to do: saying, "Repent and be baptized, everyone of you, in the name of Jesus Christ." And we might ask, What for? Was it "Because their sins had been pardoned, and they united to Christ by faith?" But Peter says, "For the remission of sins." And be it remembered that Peter spoke this under the direction of the Holy Spirit, for he "spake as the Spirit gave him utterance."

Now, dare any one gainsay it? Dare any one professing to believe the Holy Scriptures, do so?

But with regard to Saul's conversion, it is claimed, "Paul believed—exercised this effective faith, when he said, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" .... and further that, "With the heart he had believed into righteousness, and with the mouth made confession into salvation." And finally it is asked, "Was he yet a sinner, and out of Christ?" Answer.—Although it cannot be said that he was still an actual sinner; as he had stopped sinning: yet he was still under the condemnation of the guilt of his former sins; and out of Christ. Hence Ananias, under the direction of the Holy Spirit, admonished him to "Arise and be baptized, and wash away thy sins." But more anon.

(To be Continued.)

News Items.

ATTEMPT TO BLOW UP AN ARMORY.

MANCHESTER, Jan. 14.—An attempt has been made, it is believed by Fenians, to blow up the armory of the infantry barracks at Salford, where the rifles of the volunteers were deposited. A meat store near the armory was blown to atoms. No other damage was done. An investigation is in progress.

The Fenian scare in England has extended to Portsmouth. The authorities have recieved various anonymous warnings of contemplated attacks on Government establishments. They do not attach much importance to these warnings, but in order to be on the safe side they have taken some extra precaution.

THE ANTI-JEWISH AGITATION IN GERMANY.

Berlin, Jan. 14.—The anti-Jewish agitation is spreading in the provinces. It has extended to Saxony, Bavaria, Leipzig, and Breslau.

The anti-Semitic petition to be presented to Prince Bismark has already received 40,000 signatures. The petition will be presented to the Prince about the middle of March.

Accounts from Athens state that two-thirds of the men subject to military service are now in the ranks. There are in all about 55,000 men on foot, and that figure will soon be raised to 65,000 or 70,000. The active army comprises twenty-two battalions of infantry, from 1,500 to 2,000 men strong; eight battalions of chasseurs, 1,000 men strong; two battallions of engineers, from 1,200 to 1,600 men strong; two regiments of cavalry, and eighteen batteries of Krupp guns, the sanitary corps and train, and 4,000 gendarmes.

A St. Petersburg despatch says: The investment of Geok-Tepe has been effected by Generals Kauropatkine and Skobeloff by an attack on the trenches of the Tekke-Turcomans which lasted three days. The Russian loss was small, while that of the Tekke-Turcomans is reported to be enormous.

A despatch from Berlin says: It is stated that the police have discovered a new secret organization of Socialists, extending over the whole of Germany.

The Boers of the Transvaal are arming the Caffres to fight in their behalf.

About 2,400 German students have signed an anti-Jewish petition, addressed to Prince Bismark.

Herr Strassman, an Israelite, has been reelected President of the Berlin Municipal Council, receiving 97 votes out of 120. Professor Virchow was elected vice-president.

TURKESTAN.

STRENGTH OF THE TEKKES.

ST. PETERSBURG, Jan. 17.—General Skobeloff estimates the Tekke-Turcomans at 40,000 strong. They have excellent rifles, but only a few old cannons.

MASSACRED.

The Russian artillerymen captured with their guns by the Turcomans were all massacred.

THE WAR IN CENTRAL ASIA.

ST. PETERSBURG, January 18.—General Skobeloff telegraphs under date of the 11th instant, announcing that on the 9th at 6 in the evening, 30,000 Tekke-Turcomans made a sudden sortie from Geok-Tepe, and assaulted the Russian trenches, which were manned by nineteen companies of infantry and 100 Cossacks acting as infantry, and three siege guns and twenty-one lighter guns. In spite of heroic defense by the troops, the Turcomans carried the Russian outworks and part of the second parallel, capturing four mountain guns and the three siege guns. The Russians then opened an artillery fire, and their reserve simultaneously attacked the enemy, who were dislodged from all the points they had captured. All the artillery was retaken, with the exception of one mountain gun, which had been carried off during the early part of the engagement.

The Russian loss was heavy. One company of the Apsheron regiment alone had thirty-two men killed, including a Major and a Captain, and ten wounded and one officer taken prisoner. The Turcoman losses are much greater. Their dead filled the Russian trenches.

Simultaneously with this attack a considerable body of Turkoman cavalry made a sortie on the Russian camp, which was successfully repulsed.

After the Turkomans had been repulsed, orders were given for laying a third parallel. As soon as the Turcomans saw the works commenced, they renewed the attack with their entire strength upon the whole Russian front, but were compelled to retire to their fortress by an artillery fire at close range from the Russian second parallel.

The laying of the third parallel was completed on the 10th instant, and on the same day the outworks of the fortress were bombarded. At 3 in the afternoon the Russian columns made an assault, and after a severe struggle, captured the outworks.

The bombardment by the siege artillery was proceeding on the 11th instant.

The total of the Russian losses in the actions on the 9th and 10th instances was 9 officers and 82 men killed, and 8 officers, 402 men, and 8 men of the medical staff wounded.

The behavior of the troops was admirable.

Brevities.

It is stated that a scheme for the construction of a grand eastern railroad from Pesth, through Belgrade, to Constantinople, under international auspices, has been submitted to the Austrian and Servian Governments and to a great London financial firm.

The Jewish Messenger says that a hundred well-to-do heads of Jewish families in Roumania have petitioned the Alliance Israelite to purchase land for them in Palestine, where they may found an agricultural colony: they offer to contribute 400 franks each, and pay the balance in annual installments.

Dr. Schliemann and his wife have been staying for some time past in Beotia, at the village of Skripa, near which they have been energetically pushing on excavations with a view to discover any remains of the prehistoric city of Orchomenos, the wealthy capital of the once famous kingdom of the Minyæ. Several shafts which Dr. Schliemann has sunk have afforded little beyond a few relics of tombs, some vessels similar to those found in Mycenæ, and several inscriptions in the Æolic-Boeotian dialect. These Dr. Schliemann regards as of great value to Greek philologists. While Dr. Schlieman has been comparatively unsuccessful in the excavations under his own special superintendence, his wife, who has been conducting researches in another portion of the ground, has been fortunate enough to find what is believed to be the remains of the Treasury of Minyas.

The Supreme Court of Madrid has recently confirmed, as in conformity with the spirit of the Constitution and the Ministerial circulars, two sentences of the Gibernia in Catalonia, the first condemning to two months imprisonment a man who had refused to take off his hat on meeting a religious procession of the State Church in the street; and the second to two months' correctional imprisonment, a minister who had delivered an address to some peasants assembled in a threshing yard, and after the address, had distributed tracts. These acts the Supreme Court holds to be public manifestations contrary to the State religion, and forbidden by the legislation of the Restoration exactly as the hawking of Bibles and tracts and the meetings of Protestants outside regularly authorized places of worship are prohibited.

THE CHURCHMAN.

THE APOSTATE'S CREED.

I believe in a chaotic nebula self-existent, ovolver of heaven and earth.

And in the differentiation of the original homogeneous mass; its first begotten product which was self-formed into land and water, self organized into plants and animals, reproduced in like species, further developed into higher orders, and ultimately refined, rationalized, and perfected into man; he descended from the monkey, ascended to the philosopher, and sitteth down in the rites and customs of civilization under the law of a developing sociology; from thence he shall come again by the disintegration of the heterogenited cosmos back into the original homogeneousness of chaos.

I believe in the wholly impersonal absolute; the wholly uncatholic church, the disunion of the saints, the survival of the fittest, the persistence of force, the dispersion of the body, and in death everlasting.

A very curious and interesting letter has just been found among the papers of the late Cardinal Antonelli, written by Victor Emanuel to Pius IX. at the time of the occupation of Rome by the Italian troops. The King says in it that he thought he was rendering a service to the Church by occupying the city in a regular manner, instead of leaving it a prey to the revolution. On this passage there is a marginal note in the hand of Pius IX., to the effect that he quite comprehends this reasoning, and is grateful to the King, but that before the world it is necessary for him to protest.

The influence of the persecution to which the Jews have been subjected, in Germany is visible in the attempt that has just been made by persons unknown, upon the lives of prominent Jewish residents of Triest, to whom letters have been sent through the Post Office of that city that exploded upon being opened. No serious injuries have been reported as the result of these attempts, but the fact is hardly to be attributed to the benevolent intentions of the persons by whom the missives were mailed. No clue to them has been obtained.

MILLENNIAL BLESSEDNESS.

There is no glory for creation, no deliverance from the curse, no lessening of the fetters of bondage, no millennial blessedness, until the Lord himself arrives. And who, save Him, can claim the honor of wiping off creation's curse, and as the last Adam, undoing the wrong which the first Adam wrought to this material earth, the seat of His royal dominion, which God at first pronounced so good? It was creation's curse as well as man's that he bore.

The symbol of that curse was the thorn, and therefore it was with thorns that he allowed himself to be crowned, that he might show himself to be the Redeemer of man's earth, as well as of man himself; the breaker of creation's bonds as well as of the fetters of the flesh; not merely the restorer of man to Paradise, but the restorer of Paradise to man.—H. Bonar, D. D.

THE Phrenological Journal

Is widely known in America and Europe, having been before the reading world more than forty years, and occupying a place in literature exclusively its own, viz. The study of Human Nature in all its phases, including Phrenology, Physiology, Ethnology, Physiognomy, etc., together with The Science of Health, and no expense will be spared to make it the best publication for general circulation, tending always to make better men physically, mentally, and morally. The Phrenological Journal has ever aimed to make the laws of mind intelligible to the common understanding, and specially to instruct the people in the methods that are available for self-improvement and the education of children.

To each subscriber is given the new improved
PHRENOLOGICAL BUST.

This Bust is made of Plaster of Paris, and shows the location of each of the phrenological organs. Is nearly life-size, and very ornamental, and sold recently for $2. This, and the illustrated key which goes with the bust, and the articles published in the Journal will enable the reader to become a successful student of human nature. One of these heads should be in the hands of all who would know

How to Read Character.

TERMS—The Journal is $2 a year (being reduced from $3); single copies 20c. When premiums are sent, 25c. must be sent to pay postage on the Journal and expense of packing the bust, which will be sent by express, or No. 2, a smaller size, by mail, postpaid, or the new book premium. Send for circular.

Send P. O. order, draft on N. Y. or registered letter. Stamps received. Agents wanted. Send 10c. for Specimen copy, premium list, etc., or send address on card for back No., which will be sent free.

FOWLER & WELLS, Publishers,
755 Broadway, N. Y.

A NEW HEALTH ALMANAC.—We have just received from the well-known Publishing House of FOWLER & WELLS, their ILLUSTRATED ANNUAL of PHRENOLOGY AND HEALTH ALMANAC FOR 1881. 72 octavo pages, price 10 cents. This publication, which has been issued regularly for a number of years, has become a necessity in many well regulated families, and well it should, for its suggestions relating to Health, Hygiene, Diet, Phrenology, Physiognomy, etc., render it very valuable. The Number before us, in addition to the usual astronomical notes, monthly calendars, etc., contains a Monthly Sanitarium, with special hints in regard to the care of the health during the changes incident from month to month, also Bills of Fare for each month, which would be very suggestive to our housewives, who do not know what to get for dinner. There is also a fine life-like portrait of Prof. O. S. Fowler, the veteran Phrenologist, with a Phrenological and Biographical sketch of his character. The Principles of Phrenology, together with the functions of each of the organs, are stated, with illustrations showing their location; also an interesting statement showing what combinations of organs go to make up given phases of character. Boys should read the article on "Tobacco and Evolution," and note the illustrations. "The People We Meet" are illustrated and described. There are also short articles on "Bathing Children," "Phrenology—Its Aid in Modeling," "Arrowroot as Food for Children," "Large Heads," "What is Gluten," etc. A feature which should be of interest is the Business Department, which contains Advertisements of all the leading Health Institutions in the country, also a full and descriptive catalogue of Phrenological and other works published by this house, all sent by mail for only ten cents. It will certainly have a large circulation, and we would say to our readers, send ten cents in postage stamps at once to Fowler & Wells, Publishers, 755 Broadway, New York.

Poetry.

LET US GO FORTH.—Heb. xiii. 13.

HORATIUS BONAR.

Silent, like men in solemn haste,
Girded wayfarers of the waste,
We gaze out at the world's wide gaze,
Turning our back on all its state;
We press along the narrow road
That leads to life to labor, to God.

We cannot and we would not stay:
We dread the snares that throng the way.
We fling aside the weight and sin,
Resolved the victory to win:
We know the peril, but our eyes
Rest on the splendor of the prize.

No lifting now, no backward sleep,
From Christ-like toil our limbs to keep
No shrinking from the desperate fight
No thought of yielding or of flight.
No love of present gain or ease
No reckless man or sin to please.

No sorrow for the loss of fame,
No dread of awakening our blame;
No terror for the world's sharp scorn,
No wish that taunting to return;
No hatred can our hatred move,
And cruelty but kindles love.

No sigh for friends left behind,
Or pleasures scattered to the wind,
No looking back on Sodom's plains,
No listening still to Babel's strains,
No tears for Egypt's sensual sloth,
No thirsting for its flowing Nile

No vanity for fair we wear;
No fading garland round our hair;
No heavy sweetness in the cup,
No pang of disappointment here,
With the brave heart and steady eye
We onward march to victory.

What though with weariness oppressed—
'Tis but a little, and we rest.
This throbbing heart and burning brain
Will soon be calm and cool again.
Night is far spent and morn is near,—
Morn of the cloudless and the clear:

'Tis but a little, and we come
To our reward, our crown, our home!
Another year, it may be less,
And we have crossed the wilderness,
Finished the toil, the rest begun,
The battle fought, the triumph won!

We grudge not, then, the toil, the way;
Its ending is the endless day!
We shrink not from these temporal fears,
With little of the calm between;
We welcome each descending sun:—
Ere morn, our joy may be begun!

Letter Drawer.

SYRACUSE, N. Y.

Editor Restitution: Enclosed you will find two dollars, to renew my subscription for THE RESTITUTION another year.

It looks by the news from the east, and the signs around us that it may be the last year we will need it, but God always takes time to accomplish his work; therefore we must have patience and wait his own time to fulfill all that he has spoken. It cannot be but a few years, before the Lord Jesus will come. God bless you in your perplexing task as editor, and may you have strength and wisdom to conduct the paper for the glory of God, and the instruction of the household of faith, until the King will say it is enough, come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world.

I am glad to hear that they contemplate the enlargement of the paper. It is just what we need. I hope it will be well sustained.

I remain your brother in the Lord's anointed, waiting and watching for his coming and kingdom.

C. P. ALGIRE.

OSKALOOSA, Kan.

Edito Restitution: I can say with Brother Jonas C. Shank, that THE RESTITUTION is all the preaching we have, and I would sooner do with the very coarsest of fare, than without the paper I so highly prize; and, as my subscription is part due—one week—I will send money order for five dollars, two for my subscription for another year, and the balance, please apply to The Restitution Fund.

Oh, I was so glad to see a letter from Brother Shank. It rejoiced me as much as it would to have heard that Bro. Stephenson was expected here to preach. How glad I am that he is still firm in the faith. We have been warm friends from our first acquaintance, which began some thirty-five years ago.

And now, dear brother, that you may be blest with life, health and ability to perform the arduous duties devolving upon you as editor, and that you may be preserved blameless unto the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, is my prayer.

WM I. CHURCH.

WYTHEVILLE, Va.

Editor Restitution: Enclosed you will find money order for five dollars and forty cents to be applied as follows: two dollars for my next year's subscription; one dollar to Sister Waddle's credit; two dollars for which you will send the paper to two new readers at this office, six months each,—W. H. Compton and Sally Williams, a niece of mine who has never walked a step in her life, being a cripple from birth. She likes THE RESTITUTION and says it is the best paper in the world. May it be instrumental in directing her to the Great Physician, who will heal all our infirmities at the restitution of all things, if we will only believe and obey him.

And now, dear Editor, be strong and suffer no uneasiness financially. We believe the Lord has a people, in this scoffing age, and if so, they will sustain his cause. I have not done much yet, but trust I will be able to do something more before the end of the year.

Give the trumpet no uncertain sound, but give us all the news from the land destined to become the glory of all lands—Palestine.

Say to them that are of fearful heart, be strong, fear not! Behold your God will come with vengeance, even God with a recompense—he will come and save you. Then the eyes of the blind shall be opened and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped. Then shall the lame man leap as a hart and the tongue of the dumb sing: and a high-way shall be there, and a way, and it shall be called the way of holiness: the unclean shall not pass over it; but it shall be for those. The wayfaring men though fools shall not err therein. No lion shall be there nor no ravenous beast shall go up there on, it shall not be found there; but the redeemed shall walk there; and the ransomed of the Lord shall return and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads. They shall obtain joy and gladness and sorrow and sighing shall flee away.

Come Lord Jesus, come quickly and hasten the joyful day. Amen.

F. H. ALBERT.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

Editor Restitution:—We take this method of offering to God our heavenly Father, through the only medium of access, our dear Redeemer, our humble and devout thanksgiving for his kind and merciful dealing with us. We came here on Christmas a stranger among strangers, the weather intensely cold; to move under such circumstances is anything but pleasant. On the third of January my dear wife was stricken down with paralysis. She recovered in a short time but had a second stroke, from which she has only partially recovered. She remained unconscious for four days, has lost the power of speech. She is convalescent, and we do hope and pray that she may be spared from the pangs of the king of terrors. When stricken down, we earnestly besought God if it was consistent with his holy will to spare her. We feel that he has heard our prayer, and has blessed the means used for her recovery. What a privilege under such circumstances; to go to him and ask in the name of his dear Son if consistent with his holy will, that her sickness may not be unto death, but for the glory of God. What a sweet heavenly consolation to know our prayer is heard! What a privilege; yea, what a blessing to hold sweet communion with our Father in heaven and with his Son Jesus Christ. Dearly beloved in the Lord, remember us in your prayers that we may calmly submit to the will of God, that whatever he has for us to do in his vineyard we may do it cheerfully and faithfully; that when the warfare is ended we may be found unto praise and honor and glory at the revelation of Jesus Christ.

NEWELL BOND.

P. S.—THE RESTITUTION is received, the improvement is very commendable. May it fill out its work and mission faithfully and the result be that many may be joined unto the Lord, who shall shine as stars in the kingdom of God forever and ever. Amen.

Enclosed is one dollar for THE RESTITUTION for 1881. N. B.

GALENA, Ill.

Editor Restitution, Enclosed you find one dollar which please apply on my arrears on the paper. I would state that I am very much pleased with the change in our paper. I am very sorry that I am not able to do more for it financially. I am calculating to change my way of making a living, and think I can do more then to help the progress of the paper than now. It seems quite discouraging at times in trying to follow our master's commands through this world of sin and sorrow.

While writing this communication, or in other words, while in the progress, a friend and near neighbor of mine by the name of C. L. Butcher was in my place of business, and picked up THE RESTITUTION, which generally lays on my table in my office, and he read the editorial, in your late issue, and after reading it he remarked that that piece, alone, was worth the price of subscription for six months.

I encouraged him to take our paper, telling him that it would be very interesting for the next few years to come. So he told me that he would take it for six months, and enclosed you will find one dollar for C. L. Butcher. His address is the same as mine. So much for a word of encouragement.

Brethren let us always be kind and generous to all men, speaking evil of no man—be not brawlers, but gentle, shewing all meekness unto all men; for we, ourselves also, were sometime foolish, disobedient, deceived, serving divers lusts and pleasures, living in malice and envy, hateful, and hating one another.

Let us as the members of the body of Christ, put on the whole armour of God, and be lovers of hospitality, lovers of good men; sober, just, holy, temperate, holding fast the faithful word, as he—Christ—hath taught us; that we may be able, by sound doctrine, both to exhort and to convince the gainsayers; for there are many unruly and vain talkers and deceivers, teaching things which they ought not, for filthy lucre's sake.

They profess that they know God; but in works they deny him, being abominable, and disobedient and unto every good work reprobate.

Therefore they testify in the name of the Lord but walk in the vanity of their own mind: having their understanding darkened, being alienated from the life of Christ through the ignorance, that is in them, because of the blindness of their heart.

Brethren let us be up and doing, and forever put off the old man, which is corrupt according to the deceitful lusts, and be renewed in the spirit of our mind, and put on the new man, which, after God, is created in righteousness and true holiness, grieving not the Holy Spirit of God whereby we are sealed unto the day of redemption; and let all bitterness and wrath and anger and clamor and evil speaking, be put away from us, with all malice. And be kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven us. Amen.

E. O. NELSON.

TEHERAN, Ill.

Editor Restitution:—I noticed in the last number of your paper a plan advanced by some of your correspondents to increase the circulation of THE RESTITUTION by sending numbers to friends. I, for one, like the suggestion, and now send you seven dollars for the paper, to be sent to the following persons: G. W. Scoville, Scioto, Montgomery county, Iowa; Ellen Johnson, Hope, Mercer county, Mo.; Louisa Scoville, Mason City, Ill.; William Coves, Teheran, Ill., six months. I am an old man, now nearly 75 years of age. I am a believer in the faith, and would be glad to have some of the preachers of the one faith come here and instruct the people in the things concerning the coming kingdom of God, and faith, and hope, as it is in the Gospel. If any of the preachers will come and labor with me, I will see that he shall be made comfortable and as pleasant as possible, and will not send him away empty. My residence is half a mile south of Teheran station, on the L. B. and M. R. R. Hoping you will have success in increasing the circulation of THE RESTITUTION, I subscribe myself, your friend.

PULASKI SCOVILLE.

VIROQUA, Wis.

Editor Restitution: I am sorry to say that I am not prepared to send you any money just at present, but I hope to soon be able to pay up for the year that is past and gone. I feel thankful and grateful, that you have sent the paper to me so long without money. It has been a great comfort and consolation to me, during the past year to read its pages. It has been to me like a very near and dear friend, and I am sorry to say I must bid it farewell. Of course I cannot tell what a day will bring forth, but judging the future by the past, I cannot see as I shall be any more able to pay this year than last and I cannot think that it would be right to take your paper and not be able to pay for it in so long a time; but, thanks be to God, I have got the great restitution, as it came from my heavenly Father and from his Son Jesus Christ, which tells me of an Eden restored—tells me of a new heaven and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness. May we all be among its heavenly inhabitants, is the humble prayer of your brother in Christ. Amen.

O. M. MITCHELL.

[Will continue awhile longer to our brother and look to God for means to meet our expenses.—ED.]

MT. CARROLL, Ill.

Editor Restitution: I take this opportunity to inform you of my inability to pay up for my paper. I have been laboring, hoping that I could spare my subscription dues. Since I have returned from the Pacific coast, I have had a good deal of sickness in my family and have also been sick myself. I have a large family to support by day labor. This last fall I rented a piece of land from one of the brothers, but there was no house on it and I had to put up a small one, which embarrassed me financially, but I hope by the help of God, to have something by next harvest, to help the cause of truth.

I prize THE RESTITUTION, and none can do so more than one who has been in the western wilds.

I hope and pray that those who are able, will feel it their duty to help along the cause of the blessed tidings of the gospel. I feel it my duty to forego the pleasure of perusing the paper until I raise a crop. The Lord's will till that time—till then I cannot pay up and rejoice.

Yours in hope of the speedy close of Gentile times, and the ushering in of the new era.

DAVID RUNNER.

CHICAGO, Ill.

Editor Restitution: I have so often resolved to write both a friendly letter to you, and, also, a communication for the paper, but, really, it is impossible for me to write anything worthy of publication as I am situated at present.

Once I would steal the hours from my night-slumbers and devote them to the cause and my friends, but now I can not do it. My health is all "my stock in trade" and that I must preserve. My cares are numerous and my time not my own.

For many long years I looked anxiously forward to a time of leisure, when I could devote a portion of my time to the cause of truth, in some way, thinking I might yet do a little good in the world, but I have almost abandoned the hope.

My present duty points in the direction of my aged parents. My mother has recently met with a great misfortune. She fell down stairs and they fear her hip is broken! She is some better now, but her physician says she can never leave her bed again! If she does not improve, I shall go home to help to take care of her.

I am thankful for health and strength to care for my aged parents, and that is, as I see it, my most imperative duty.

I should be most happy to have the privilege of visiting Plymouth before leaving the city, but I fear that pleasure will be denied me.

I wish to be regarded in the light of a friend both to yourselves, and the cause of truth, and as such I subscribe myself. L. M. STEPHENSON.

[We extract the above from a private letter which accompanied the obituary notice of little M. A. Trunkey. We are truly sorry to learn that so great a misfortune has befallen the mother of our esteemed sister; and we greatly regret that sister S. can not find time to write for THE RESTITUTION. When we realize how full the cup of affliction is filled for many of God's dear children, we are ready to cry out, "come Lord Jesus, and come quickly." But—blessed thought—"there remaineth a rest for the people of God." The coming of the Lord draweth nigh. —ED.]

ELM GROVE, Ill.

Editor Restitution:—I drop you a few lines, as I am considerable indebted to you for your most valuable paper. Brother, I am thankful to you for bearing with me so long. The paper is our preacher. It is strengthening to us, and I can say it is gaining the attention of a few around us. There are a few that love to read its columns and say they believe its teachings. I believe there are a few here that would obey if they had some able teacher to insist on their obedience to the faith.

Brother, I see in the last number of January those that are behind are required to report, or their paper will be stopped, and their names dropped from the list. I have thought from month to month that I would be able to send my subscription, but it has taken all that I could raise to keep us from suffering. I am poor in this world's goods. I have lost my health; am not able to perform much labor, but I will soon send you my subscription. I do not want to do without the paper if there is any chance for me to get it. Do as you think best, I am willing to abide. Brother, may the Lord bless you in your labors.

Your brother waiting and watching for the return of the Lord.

J. F. WRIGHT.

[We will be forbearing with our poor unfortunate brethren. We want all to write and let us know their circumstances. The paper will be continued to those who are doing all they can, and we will trust God for means to publish.—ED.]

WILSON, Kan.

Editor Restitution:—As I am in arrears on THE RESTITUTION from July 10, 1880, and seeing a notice in the paper to the effect that those in arrears must give notice of their intention to pay for the paper or it must be stopped, I hasten to write you on the subject. I hope soon to be able to pay up all of my indebtedness and do more than that for the paper, but for the present times are very hard here, money is scarce on account of the failure of crops last year, and we are poor, so we have hard work to get a living this winter, yet I am in hope of a change financially for the better soon. Mine would be a lucrative business in ordinary times, but we cannot eat marble or wear it for clothing, or pay debts with it until it is worked into such shape and finish as is demanded, and at present the demand is so small that it is hard to make more than the necessaries of life; yet I hope by the collection of some old bills, and some new ones, to deduct for soon, and will venture to ask for the continuance of THE RESTITUTION. It is all the preaching we have here, and you may have but a faint idea of its value to us. So in order that you may understand more of our situation I will state a few facts.

Since the annual conference near Brother Noess, in Cloud county, where Brother Stephenson preached, we have not heard a Gospel sermon, or lecture, or anything to strengthen the desire for truth or stimulate one to strive for it. We are surrounded with all kinds of theories; we have representatives of various churches, also Infidels, Atheists, Deists, Spiritualists, etc.; yet I would like to see what effect a few real Gospel sermons would have here. But you may now see at least partially to what extent we need such a help as THE RESTITUTION. It is a great satisfaction to read the kind words of those of like faith through its columns, thus writing us in faith and love although thousands of miles may divide us. We take much interest in the letters of J. P. Wyethe on the Coming Age, and many other things we find in THE RESTITUTION, which space forbids me to mention now. And surely our Savior's words, When ye see the trees putting forth their leaves ye know that the spring is nigh.

Hoping that all of our family of the one faith may hold out faithful and meet our soon coming Master. I am yours in hope.

M. D. EDWARDS.

[From this and other letters our brethren in good circumstances can learn how to do some missionary work. Let us send out THE RESTITUTION to those less fortunate than ourselves. The time is short.—ED.]

Exegetical.

Take the millstones, and grind meal. Isa. xlvii. 2.

The prophet contrasts the former exaltation of Babylon, as a queenly lady, with a subsequent degradation to the condition of the most abject menial slave. Once she was the virgin princess, and royal daughter of the proudest nationality, but in her fall she became such a castaway as to sit in the dust with her locks dishevelled and defiled, that formerly were plaited with the nicest care, adorned with a jeweled diadem, and covered with a most costly veil. The Lady of Kingdoms was taken captive, and suffered all the distressing humiliation that Oriental despots were so wont to inflict. Her golden crown, with its starry gems, was grasped by a conquering hand; her flowing veil, with all its inimitable beauty of delicate tracery in flowery needle-work, was torn from her head; and the robes of royalty were stripped from the princely form of delicate feminine royalty, and the ragged, tattered vestments of the meanest female drudge given in exchange as the fitting emblems of the despicable condition to which fallen royalty was reduced.

As an indication of contemptible servility to be set to grinding meal was regarded as marking the lowest degree of disgrace and ignominy. Among the rudest nations the grinding of grain was done by pounding it between two stones. As an advance of art beyond this method a hand-mill was invented, composed of two stones, the lower one of which is termed in the Bible the nether millstone, and the superior one the upper millstone. The lower or bed stone was stationary and the upper or running stone was put in motion by the hand. These mills were used by the Hebrews, Greeks, and other ancient nations, and were commonly worked by criminals or slaves, though draft animals were subsequently sometimes employed. The bed stone was made convex on the upper side, and the upper running stone was made concave and adjusted in its hollowed shape to the nether stone. The hole for receiving the grain was in the center of the upper stone which was rapidly revolved, usually by two women (compare Matt. xxiv. 41) who turned by taking hold of handles on the upper surface with one hand and, at the same time, feeding in the grain with the other. It is said that water-mills were not known till a short time before our era among the Romans, and wind-mills not till the reign of Augustus Cæsar. The hand-mills were used everywhere, and in the East they are still in general use. A writer says: "They are the female slaves that are generally employed in the East at these hand-mills. It is extremely laborious, and esteemed the lowest employment in the house." The sense of the words we are endeavoring to explain is therefore plain. Babylon is personified, and represented in her prosperity as a beautiful and delicately trained female citizen of queenly pomp, with beautifully plaited hair, wearing a crown of priceless magnificence, and a veil that was matchless for its richness of texture and beauty of ornamentation; and then as one degraded from all this illustrious splendor of supreme royalty to the hard and slavish condition of working at a hand-mill, sitting in the dust with uncovered head, and loose dangling locks of unbraided hair, than which nothing could be more highly humiliating and dishonorable. The force of Job's words will be apparent when he says, "Let my wife grind unto another." Job xxxi. 10.

An ancient poet depicts the feelings of utter despair that one expressed in this abhorred servitude.

——"One only from her task is set
Upward not, for she was feeblest of them all.
She rested on her mill and thus pronounced:
'Some, Father, Governor, of heaven and earth,
O grant the prayer of a poor handmaiden. Appoint their feast
This day the last [illegible]
[illegible] for whom I drudge
Grinding to wearisome of heart and limb
Meal for their use.'"

The idea is—the Lady of Kingdoms had become a menial slave, the Queen of the mightiest Oriental Empire, was divested of every semblance of former royalty, and working with female slaves, and condemned criminal women, at the hand-mill.

Youth's Column.

Buy the Truth.

Go then in life's fair morning,
Go in thy bloom of youth,
And buy, for thine adorning,
The precious boon of truth.
Spend this heavenly treasure,
And bind it on thy heart,
And let no earthly pleasure
E'er cause it to depart.

The Presbyterian Journal.

A Wayside Courtesy.

A minister says: "I walked a short distance behind a well dressed young lady, and thinking as I looked at her becoming apparel, 'I wonder if she takes as much pains with her heart as she does with her body.' An old man was coming up the walk with a loaded wheelbarrow, and before he reached us he made two attempts to go into the yard of a small house; but the gate was heavy, and would swing back before he could get through. 'Wait,' said the young girl, springing lightly forward, 'I'll hold the gate open.' And she held the gate open until he passed in, and received his thanks with a pleasant smile as she went on. 'She deserves to have graceful attire,' I thought, 'for a beautiful disposition dwells in her breast.

Youth's Companion

How Smoking Affects Boys.

An English physician has been investigating the effect of smoking on boys. He took for his purpose thirty-eight boys, aged from nine to fifteen, and carefully examined them. In twenty-seven cases, he discovered injurious traces of the habit. In twenty-two there were various disorders of the circulation and digestion, palpitation of the heart, and more or less taste for strong drink. In twelve there were frequently bleedings of the nose, ten had disturbed sleep, and twelve had slight ulceration of the mucous membrane of the mouth, which disappeared on ceasing the use of tobacco for a few days. The doctor treated them all for weakness, but with little effect until the smoking was discontinued, when health and strength were soon restored.

The Potent Bush.

At a Sabbath-school anniversary in Brooklyn some years ago, Rev. Dr. Hodge related the following interesting fact. During a visit he made to Bahama Islands, a shower of rain unexpectedly fell. Such an occurrence is very rare at the Islands except during the rainy season, and is regarded with great dread by the natives, who as rapidly as possible seek the nearest shelter.

On this occasion, a little colored boy was caught in the shower at a distance from home, and having no place to go for protection, crept under a bush that was near. Its foliage, however, was not dense enough to keep him from rain, and he was wet by the water trickling through the leaves. Unfortunately for him the bush was a poison bush, and the water falling on the leaves caused the poison to strike into his limbs, so that in a short time he was dead.

After the shower he was found and carried to his home. Dr. Hodge was requested to attend his funeral. The circumstances of his singular death excited his curiosity, and he wished to learn something more about the fatal poison bush. An aged negro told him that it grew abundantly upon the island, but that by its side there always grew another bush which was its antidote; and that if the boy had known it, and had rubbed himself with the leaves of the healing bush, the poison could have done him no harm.

What an illustration this is of the sad fate of those who have been poisoned by sin, and know not how to escape from its dreadful consequences. But for this fatal poison there is a sure remedy, provided by the same God who placed the antidote beside the poison bush. The Cross of Christ is the tree of life. Let the suffering and dying come to that and they shall be saved, for "its leaves are for the healing of the nations."—Eliot.

Concord (N. H.) Monitor.

Longfellow's Kindness to Children.

Professor Luigi Monti told me a pleasant story of Henry W. Longfellow. For many years this gentleman has been in the habit of dining with the poet every Saturday. On Christmas day, as he was walking briskly toward the old historic house, he was accosted by a girl about twelve years old, who inquired the way to Longfellow's home. He told her it was some distance down the street, but if she would walk along with him he would show her. When they reached the gate, she said: "Do you think I can go in the yard?" "Oh, yes," said Signor Monti. "Do you see the room on the left? That's where Martha Washington held her receptions 100 years ago. If you look at the windows on the right, you will probably see a white-haired gentleman reading a paper. Well, that will be Mr. Longfellow." She looked gratified and happy at the unexpected pleasure of really seeing the man whose poems she said she loved. As Signor Monti drew near the house, he saw Mr. Longfellow standing with his back against the window, his head, of course, out of sight. When he went in, the kind-hearted Italian said, "Do look out of the window and how to that little girl who wants to see you so very much!" "A little girl wants to see me very much—whose is she?" He hastened to the door, and beckoning, with his hand, called out: "Come here, little girl, come here, if you want to see me!" She needed no second invitation, and after shaking her head and asking her name, he kindly took her into the house, showed her the "old clock on the stairs," the chair made from the village smithy's chestnut tree, presented to him by the Cambridge children, and the beautiful pictures and souvenirs gathered in many years of foreign residence.

I am sure that child will carry all her life delightful memories of her Christmas call at Mr. Longfellow's.

Methodist Herald.

Baptism.

A little boy was learning his Sunday school lesson, which happened to be the eighth chapter of Acts. When he came to that part which tells of the baptism of the eunuch, he said to his mother (who was a pious pedobaptist.) "La, mother, this is a Baptist Bible." "No, my son, it is not: what makes you think so?" "Why, it says here, they went down into the water, both Philip and the eunuch, and he baptised him; and this is just the way I have seen the Baptists do."

Prof McGarvey, who visited Palestine in 1879, says of Solomon's Pools near Jerusalem; For immersing; they are just the thing. They all have stone steps reaching down to the bottom, on which you could immerse nicely when the water is at any stage, by placing your candidate on the step below you; and when the water is low, the benches made by the natural ledges of rock on the sloping bottom, would be the chosen place." One of the pools covers six acres.

JOHN NEWTON says: "I measure ministers by square measure. I have no idea of the size of a table if you only tell me how long it is; but if you also say how broad, I can tell its dimensions. So when you tell what a man is in the pulpit, you must also tell me what he is out of it, or I shall not know his size."

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The Lord willing I will be at King's Corner the second Sunday in January, commencing Thursday night before, the third Sunday at Hicksville, commencing Friday night before. The first and second Sundays in February in Edgar county, Ill. Thursday night before the first Sunday at New Hope schoolhouse; the second Sunday at the Webb schoolhouse, commencing on Thursday night before.

J. S. HATCH

Poetry.

"THERE REMAINETH A REST."

DR. B. F. W. URBAN.

When life's sorrows 'round me gather,
When my heart is dumb with woe,
When the chast'ning rod is o'er me,
And I faint beneath the blow,
How my soul with eager longing
Seeks the goodly land and blest,
"Where the wicked cease from troubling,
And the weary are at rest."

When the skies are black and low'ring
Angry waters 'round me roar,
And the winds beneath are trembling
From my weary feet, and sore,
Still my straining eyes are looking
Far beyond the billow's crest,
"Where the wicked cease from troubling,
And the weary are at rest."

When the flowers of hope are faded,
Chilled and dead before they're blown,
Fruits of pleasure turned to ashes
Ere their joys are felt or known,
To my soul there comes sweet comfort:
"Peace, be still! He knoweth best.
Soon the wicked cease from troubling,
And the weary be at rest."

If, perchance, the ire comes the anguish—
Comes the shroud, the pall, the bier—
Tired hands shall then be folded
O'er the heart then closed to fear
And my head shall sink in slumber.
Surely sleep on Jesus' breast,
"There the wicked cease from troubling,
And the weary are at rest."

Selections.

The Christian.

THE BIBLE AND PHILOLOGY.

One remarkable characteristic of the Scriptures is the facility with which they interpenetrate and intertwine themselves about the most vital interests of humanity. For example, the eradication of all traces of the Holy Scriptures would be the destruction of nearly all modern literature, so full is it of quotations, references, allusions, and forms of speech which are derived from the Holy Scriptures. But the influence of the Bible in its connection with our modern literature is not greater than its influence in connection with modern languages. Notably in the German and English tongues, the Bible has been for years an anchor which has held these languages from drifting no one knows where. This firstprinted book and oftenest printed book, has not only pervaded thought but moulded expression; and this is specialy true among the vast English speaking population of the globe. Therefore not only in general literature but specially in the realm of comparative philology, and in the general study of both ancient and modern tongues, there is no book comparable to this Bible. Through its various translations, we are led backward to an acquaintance with the Greek, the Hebrew, the Syriac the Ethiopic, the Coptic, the Armenian, and other tongues, acquiring such a knowledge of ancient and oriental languages as can be acquired through the agency of no other book. Among the living languages of to-day, with whatever tongue we may wish to acquaint ourselves, we may be sure of finding, carefully translated into that language, one Book—that is the Book of God.

Max Muller shows that the science of language itself owes its first impulse to the religion of the Bible, and moreover, that "translations of the Lord's prayer and of the Bible into every dialect of the world, form even now the most valuable materials for the comparative philologist." This fact confirms the wisdom of the suggestion of the learned Leibnitz, made in 1713, to Peter the Great, that to translate the Lord's Prayer and other portions of the Bible into the various languages of his dominions, would increase his majesty's glory, an' the study of language, as well as advance Christianity.

The dispersion of the nations was only accomplished by the confusion of tongues. This seems to have been necessary, that rebellion and revolt should not become universal. The introduction of the New Dispensation, and the proclamation of the gospel, were signalized by the gift of tongues—men from different nations hearing in their own tongues the wonderful works of God. Nothing tends more directly to the unification and fraternization of humanity than a knowledge of each others' tongues, and an ability to communicate with each other. What has infidelity ever done towards bringing about this desirable result? What colleges has infidelity founded to give instruction in different languages? What barbarous dialects has infidelity reduced to order and system? What unknown tongues has infidelity transcribed? What books has infidelity translated and sent forth throughout the wide world on their mission of instruction and pacification? What printers and dictionaries and philological works has infidelity produced, and what has their influence been? If we trace those steps by which the various languages of the world have been opened to mankind, we shall find first the Christian college, training students in the structure of different languages, and preparing them for the acquirement of unknown tongues. We shall then find the missionary, prepared by special training for his work, taking his life in his hand, and going to some distant heathen clime; we shall find him sitting down in his lowly habitation, and toiling with infinite patience to learn the language, write down the vocabulary, and prepare a grammar and lexicon for that tongue. Having done this his next work is to translate the New Testament, and, if his life is spared, to translate also the Old. Thus through a lifetime this pioneer toils in a foreign land, and when his life is finished he leaves behind him three books: a dictionary, a grammar and a Bible. These books being printed by the enterprise and charitable contributions of Christian men, the way is now open for others by scores and hundreds to press forward and enter into his labors, and to proclaim glad tidings of salvation to a lost world;—but the foundation for national amity and religious instruction is laid by that lonely Christian man who commenced with the study of the language, that he might translate the Word of God. Even infidelity itself is only able to send out its blasphemies and scoffings by taking advantage of the labors which Christian men have wrought for the purpose of diffusing the Holy Scriptures. Thus the first book printed in our own tongue becomes the first book printed in other tongues; and thus light and life flow out among the nations.

Surely it is by no accident that this Book is diffused as no other book has been or can be. In it the thoughts of heaven are borne through all the lands of the earth; and the voice of Him who speaks from the eternal throne sounds far and near among all the creatures whom his hands have made. This voice crieth in the wilderness, "Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight;" and thus "this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world, for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come."—H. L. Hastings.

The Messenger.

THE LORD JESUS CHRIST OUR HOPE.

W. LAING.

Many and varied are the terms used in Scripture descriptive of the relation which our Lord sustains to the Christian. To one of these the reader's attention is here especially invited. In the superscription of his first letter to Timothy, the apostle Paul describes himself as "an apostle of Jesus Christ, by the commandment of God, our Savior and Lord Jesus Christ—our hope.

This is an aspect in which it is of immense importance to consider our Lord and Savior.

There are many precious things which in the New Testament epistles, are spoken of as the object of the believer's hope; yet all these are only the consequences or results that follow from the fact of the Lord Jesus Christ Himself being "our hope." He is the ground, the basis—the source or cause of these precious things for which we hope. Without Him not one of these inestimable blessings could be to us an object of sure hope.

Thus Paul speaks of "The hope and resurrection of the dead," Acts xxiii. 6, but the resurrection of the dead is so much dependent upon the Lord Jesus Christ, that he claims to be "The Resurrection and the Life," and the possessor of "the keys of the grave and of death."

Again, we read of the "Hope of eternal life," but it is through him alone that we have such blessed hope. He is our life. The bread of God, which came down from heaven, that whosoever will may eat and live for ever.

Once more. We have "The hope of glory." Yes; but it is Christ in us the hope of glory; and it is "when Christ who is our life shall appear that we shall appear with him in glory;" and it is only those who are found in him, and in sole consequence of their being in him, that such become partakers of his glory.

Most emphatically, the Lord Jesus Christ is our hope. What a store of strength, comfort, and consolation there is for us in this fact! The Son of the eternal God—Jesus Christ. The same yesterday, to-day, and forever—He is our hope!

Let us realize this truth more than ever before. Too often are human apprehensions of the truth about Christ and his kingdom regarded and spoken of as the basis of our confidence; and it is not an uncommon thing to hear men speak of being "baptised into the kingdom," or "into the things of the kingdom," etc., but the phraseology is not found in the Scriptures, and it is unsound and misleading. There we read of being "baptised into Christ," or "into Jesus Christ."

Not our conceptions of divine revealed truth—however accurate these may be, and however important it may be to have them—form the ground of the Christian's confidence for safety and life eternal; but the strength, love and faithfulness of God's dear Son!

The apostles preached the Christ—a living, personal Savior, and called on men and women to believe in him. "Whom we preach, warning every man and teaching every man, that we may present every man perfect in Christ Jesus."

To preach the Christ it is necessary to tell something about him; but it is possible to preach a great deal of truth about him and not preach him, himself. And it is possible to believe a great deal about him without believing in him.

To believe in the Lord Jesus is to trust him—to have confidence in him for something relative to ourselves. "I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day."

Yes; to have confidence in a person we must know him. To trust in Christ for our eternal safety we require to know him, and none who know him as he is revealed in the Bible need hesitate to believe in him. He is faithful and true. Our faith in him may vary, but he is unchangeable.

Our apprehension of the prophetic word regarding him and his kingdom may require correction and adjustment, but he, in whom we trust, changeth never. The more we learn of him the more we love and believe in him; but the ground of our confidence is the Lord himself.

Such, reader, is my conviction, strengthened by more than thirty years experience. When I first trusted in Christ, I knew little of his coming kingdom and glory, but I read and believed that Jesus Christ came into the world to save sinners, and to him I gladly fled for safety. From what I had learned in the Scriptures I had confidence that he was anxious and "able to save me," and so I was led to believe in him then; and all that I have learned about him since increases my confidence and joy: and now, as then, he is my trust.

Forgive, dear reader, these personal references—their object is to lead you to believe more firmly and rejoice in Jesus Christ, without confidence in anything that is your own.

"God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him might not perish, but have everlasting life."

THE YEAR.

The Egyptians, it is said, were the first who fixed the length of the year. The Roman year was introduced by Romulus, 738 B. C., and it was corrected by Numa, 713 B. C., and again by Julius Cæsar, 45 B. C., who fixed the solar year as being 365 days and six hours. This was denominated the Julian Style, and prevailed generally throughout the Christian world till the time of Pope Gregory XIII. The calendar of Julius Cæsar was defective in this particular, that the solar year consisted of 365 days, five hours and forty-nine minutes, and not of 365 days, six hours. This difference at the time of Gregory XIII. had amounted to ten entire days. To obviate this error Gregory ordained in 1582 that that year should consist of 365 days only; and in 1751 it was ordered to be so used in England; and the next year eleven days were left out, the 3d of September, 1752, being reckoned as the 14th, so as to make it agree with the Gregory Calendar. The Russians still adhere to the Julian Calendar (called now, Old Style), which is twelve days behind the reckoning of the Gregorian.

The year 1881 will be a mathematical curiosity. From right to left and left to right it reads the same.

Eighteen divided by 2 gives 9 as a quotient; 81 divided by 9 gives 9; if divided by 9 the quotient contains a 9; if multiplied by 9 the product contains two 9s; 1 and 8 are 9; 8 and 1 are 9.

If the 18 be placed under the 81 and added the sum is 99. If the figures be added thus: 1, 8, 8, 1, it will give 18. Reading from left to right it is 18 and 18 is two-ninths of 81. By adding, dividing and multiplying, 1989 are produced, being one 9 for each year required to complete the century.

POWER OF A HOLY LIFE.

The beauty of a holy life constitutes the most eloquent and effective persuasive to religion which one human being can address to another. We have many ways of doing good to our fellow-creatures; but none so good, so efficacious as leading a virtuous, upright and well ordered life. There is an energy of moral suasion in a good man's life, passing the highest efforts of the orator's genius. The most silent beauty of holiness speaks more eloquently of God and duty, than the tongues of men and angels. Let parents remember this. The best inheritance a parent can bequeath to a child is a virtuous example, a legacy of hallowed remembrances and associations. The beauty of holiness shining through the life of a loved relative or friend, is more effectual to strengthen such as do stand in virtue's way, and lift up those that are bowed down, than precept, command, entreaty or warning. The beauty of that holiness which is enshrined in the four biographies of Jesus of Nazareth, has done more and will do more to spread his religion in the world than all that has ever been preached or written on evidences of Christianity.—Dr. Chalmers.

Communications.

RESPONSE TO H. W. BEECHER'S PROTEST IN BEHALF OF THE GERMAN JEWS.

Reported in the Tribune, Dec. 27, 1880.

J. H. CROOK.

DEAR SIR: Your profound and happy utterance, in protest against the persecution of the Jews in Germany is admirable—so far as it goes. Your recognition of the Jewish origin of all our loftiest and purest principles of thought and action, will delight all right-minded people. They are embodied in the Angel Anthem: "Glory to God in the Highest! On earth peace, and good will to men."

What more then remains to be said; are these views to be enforced and established in their worldwide adaptation to human welfare and the glory of God?

Surely the wisdom and goodwill that breathes through every promise of their triumph over the world announce the only all-sufficient agency. The author "will be the finisher of our faith."

From the first promise, that "the seed of the woman should bruise the serpent's head," Gen. iii. 15, to the last of Rev. xxii. 20, we find the deliverer, the royal priest, Melchisedec, the Lord-Messiah, overcoming and taking the gate, the seat of judgment, and in Sovereign love, overcoming obstacles, blessing all the nations of the earth. Gen. xxii. 18, Ps. lxxii. 17 20. Is. lx. 12 18. 1 Cor. xv. 24 27.

At every stage of the yet unfolding gospel plan, Divine intervention has been seen and known. It is the record. The excellency of the power has been of God—not man.

Thus it was to Noah, to Abraham, Moses, David and John the Baptist. At every stage man is subordinate and secondary, while the Divine hand has compelled recognition; hence it is mere history to repeat—"whose goings forth have been from of old, from everlasting." Mich. v. 2.

Now, as we approach the consummation of the gospel age, can he reverse his order by leaving the wayward creature to act alone—with the aid of general principles?

While man has never been able or allowed to inaugurate a single advanced age or stage toward the assured "salvation," is it right or rational—is it prudence or piety—in this relation—to lose sight of the past, and his promised "Judgment and Kingdom, yet to come? No, no, let us rather adhere to His plan; Amen.

There were obstacles to the exode from Egypt, to the kingdom of Israel, which yet were as trifles, compared to those far more profound and far-reaching that stand in the way of the greater gathering of the living and the dead in the ingathering of Messiah's Kingdom. Ezek. xxxvii. Jer. xxxiii. 14 26, Luke i. 33, Rom. xi 25 29; 15 8 13, Heb. xii. 12.

Dr. Lyman Beecher saw the great obstacle to our Christian triumph in the original power of the adversary—the god of this present evil world, and said; "that they wanted to make such a stir, that the Devil would take the hint and go straight down to hell!!!"

However, while our more prominent teachers omit all such reference to the powers of darkness, every thoughtful person must know that there can be no Millennium, no sabbatism, no prevalence of these gospel views as supposed to constitute "the Kingdom of God," while the Apostasy, Grand Turk and the Devil, hold their usurped dominion over the earth.

"The captain of the Lord's hosts" is revealed, Judge and Restorer, at His second coming. Rev. xi. 15 18.

Your protest will go, I trust, to Prince Bismarck, with all the moral force that Plymouth Church and its Pastor can impart.

All well so far, and all my faith affirms it; but I see, and you should see, that the Patriotchal, Mosaic and Christian protests against apostasy—against professing faith, while in works denying it—reach the believing heart with the authority of Almighty God. Father, Son and Spirit.

We should obey God rather than men. The apostasy is to end, the persecuting oppressor is to perish, by the coming and kingdom of Christ.

Hence this is my apology, if need be for addressing you. For, as all the promises are in Him, yea and amen, our faith must hold them in this relation to Him and in their dependence on His Sovereign reign, putting down all rule, authority and power, to the last enemy, death, to the end that all nations call Him Blessed." Gen xxii 17. 18.

If we may even in thought depersonalize Jesus, the Holy One of God anywhere, we should have done it as did the Jews, to human view, in his undeserved agony, death and burial. But, having so loved us and given himself for us, we should hail Him as "Lord, to the glory of God the Father." Amen.

REPORT OF MEETING.

A. S. LAWYER.

On Saturday night, Jan 1, 1881, Brother L. C. Goodrich and myself commenced a meeting at High Prairie School House, near Bedford, Taylor county, Iowa, and continued it until Jan. 6, when we closed it and returned home.

We sold eighty pamphlets on the kingdom, and got three subscribers to THE RESTITUTION.

Our preaching brother L. C. Goodrich, of Bedford, has been fighting against the errors of churchianity in that section for several years, and has been the cause of bringing many into the one faith. He is a fine speaker, a logical reasoner, of good address and excellent character, and mighty in the Scriptures.

He heard of me through the paper, and being only twenty-five miles away, he asked me to come over and help him. I agreed to do so, and took the cars and went to Bradyville, ten miles north of me, where he had a meeting in progress, and spoke one night for him. He followed me next night and closed the meeting, when some thirty odd came out and accepted the one faith.

The meeting near Bedford followed, brother Goodrich compelling me to do all the preaching, which I did to the best of my ability, causing great excitement in the neighborhood.

A general discussion followed between man and man. Many declared themselves on the side of the Bible once more, and accepting the one faith, which had been so faithfully preached by brother Goodrich.

As I preached "the restitution of all things" I gave offence to some who see fit to persecute and warn people against me, but it did no good; the people and brethren generally had minds of their own, and begged of me to promise to return and help brother Goodrich to stand up for the truth.

We indicted the whole immortal soul churchianity under sixteen special charges, every one of which we sustained by the word of God. We therefore asked the audience to pronounce sentence upon them, which the majority did. The sentence being that they end in the ditch, which is just this side of the other side, and where we leave them in the hands of that God who formerly winked at their ignorance, but who now asks men to believe, repent, and be baptised, as fast as they hear the good news, or else come short of eternal life.

We desire to name many of those who dare to believe and speak out boldly for truth in the face of persecution and ostracism, so that brethren abroad may be encouraged, and also that those of the one faith who may be desiring new homes, and to those who should travel through that country, to call and talk with them of the things concerning the name of Jesus Christ and the kingdom of God.

They will be welcome in the families of Valentine Reece, J. W. Dunlap, L. D. Hatfield, J. M. Bradley, Jos. Wilson, many others that I cannot now name.

All these and many others desired me to say that they have full confidence in brother Goodrich, who has been preaching among them for some time, and whose character has been assailed by the enemies of the Truth, when their vain traditions failed to silence him. He has a clear record, first-class abilities, and whom they can recommend to the world, that he preaches the blessing of all nations, the restitution of all things, and eternal life to the over-comer.

The red heart sends its instincts up to the white brain to be analyzed, chilled, blanched; and so become pure reason. The current should run the other way; the cold, calm thought should travel to the lips via the heart. —O. W. Holmes.

"IN HOPE OF ETERNAL LIFE."

S. ROXANA WINCE.

It is in this hope that we are fighting; in this hope, we are striving to endure. We want the deathless life, we are mortal now, our life is but a vapor that must soon vanish away. It is like a weaver's shuttle, so swiftly fly our days into the past. But in the service of Jesus we hope to win an incorruptible and undefilable existence. We suffer for this. We deny ourselves for this. We let the pleasures of earth go by that we may gain that which is enduring. Oh what a glorious hope! We shall soon be made like Jesus. We shall soon pass through that indescribable change. We shall soon wear the robes resplendent in whiteness.

Lay hold of the hope you who have it not. Let not your days go by in sin. Enlist in the army of Jesus. "Fight the good fight of faith" and secure a part in the Kingdom of God.

The world presents us with fair language, promising hopes, fortunes, and honors, and these are the outside of the bowl, but when it is swallowed, these dissolve, and there remains only bitterness. But when, after the manner of the purifying of the Christians, we fill our water-pots with water, moistening our cheeks with the perpetual distillation of repentance, then Christ turns our water into wine: first penitents, and then communicants; first water of sorrow, and then the wine of Chalice, for Jesus keep the best wine until the last.—Jeremy Taylor.

Pictorial Description

—OF THE—

Tabernacle in the Wilderness.

ITS RITES AND CEREMONIES.

—By JOHN DILWORTH.—

Thirty-two pages. Price 10c. Send to the office for them.

CHRIST'S KINGDOM!

WHERE IS IT? WHAT IS IT?

By JOS. LACIER.

A discourse delivered at Reynolds, Pa., This is a 32 page tract, neatly printed, and should have wide circulation. Price 10c.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

MISTAKES of INGERSOLL

A review of Col. R. G. Ingersoll's lecture entitled "Mistakes of Moses."

--By J. M. STEPHENSON.--

This is a large size eight page tract, printed on tinted paper. 10c. each, or 10 for $1.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

SECOND EDITION.

The GOSPEL of the KINGDOM

Advocated in a series of Ten Discourses

—By WILEY JONES.—

This edition is elegantly printed and bound by Lippincott & Co., clear type, good paper, 258 pages, plain cloth binding $1; cloth gilt edge $1.50; leather tanshed edge $1.50 post paid. To obtain this valuable work, send the price by post office money order or registered letter, to

WILEY JONES,
Norfolk, Va.

A Letter to a Friend!

—By Mrs. C. C. WOODRUFF.—

This little work is so well known that it needs no comment. 32 pages, price 10c.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

THE SUN FOR 1881.

Everybody reads The Sun. In the editions of this newspaper throughout the year to come everybody will find:

1. All the world's news, so represented that the reader will get the greatest amount of information with the least unprofitable expenditure of time and eyesight. The Sun long ago discovered the golden mean between redundant fullness and unsatisfactory brevity.

2. Much of that sort of news which depends less upon its recognized importance than upon its interest to mankind. From morning to morning The Sun prints a continued story of the lives of real men and women, and of their deeds, plans, loves, hates, and troubles. This story is more varied and more interesting than any romance that was ever devised.

3. Good writing in every column, and freshness, originality, accuracy and decorum in the treatment of every subject.

4. Honest comment. The Sun's habit is to speak out fearlessly about men and things.

5. Equal candor in dealing with each political party, and equal readiness to commend what is praiseworthy or to rebuke what is blamable in either.

6. Absolute independence of partisan organizations, but unwavering loyalty to true Democratic principles. Believing that the government which the Constitution gives us is a good one to keep.

Our terms are as follows:

For the Daily Sun, a 4-page sheet of 28 columns, the price by mail, postpaid, is 35c. a month, or $4.50 a year; or, including the Sunday paper, an 8-page sheet of 56 columns, the price is 45 cents a month, or $5.70 a year, postage.

The Sunday edition is also furnished separately at $1.20 a year, postage paid.

The Weekly Sun, 8 pages, 56 columns, $1 per year. For clubs of ten sending $10 we will send an extra copy free.

Address

I. W. ENGLAND,
Publisher of the Sun,
New York City.

BOOK LIST.

The following publications are kept on hand and will be sent postpaid to any address in the United States or Canada, upon receipt of published price. Address all orders to

THE RESTITUTION,
Physicians, Indiana.

BIBLE READINGS. Suitable for week-day meetings, 1. The Gospel. 2. The Coming and Kingdom of Christ. 3. Second Baptism. 4. Work. 5. Ministry, adult. 6. The Kingdom of God. 7. Nature of Man and Immortality for Children. 8. The Two Apostasies. 9. Word to Religionists. 10. The Resurrection. Book Ages. 12. Burning of the Wicked. 13. Baptism. Ten copies 50c., or assorted packages of 100, $1.

FOUR PAGE TRACTS.

2 for 5c.; $1 per 100; $2 per 500.

The State of Man in Death. Contains an abundance of proof texts.

Life and Death. A concise statement and comment of the Scriptures on these terms, by one of the ablest writers of the Second Advent faith.

Common Sense Theology a Failure. By A. B. Maxson.

Resurrection. Austin Curtis. A careful examination of this query. "If a man die, shall he live again."

Is Christ Coming? H. V. Reed. An examination of the Scriptures as to the subjective or objective coming of Christ.

Second Advent. H. V. Reed. An exercise confined to Bible testimony and designed to the point.

Life, Death and Paradise. The Rich Man and Lazarus. Nothing.

EIGHT PAGE TRACTS.

2 for 5c.; $1 per 100.

Last Generation to believe in the Royalty of Jesus. H. Grattan.

Sermon on the Armor. H. Homar, of Scotland.

Life and Death. A concise statement and comment of the Scriptures on these terms, by one of the ablest writers of the Second Advent faith. Immortality Conditional. L. A. Reed. Contains 66 texts. Extract from the Catholic Mirror, on the Sunday Sabbath, and the Antichrist.

TWELVE PAGE TRACTS.

5c. each, or $4 per 100.

Christian Unity. Joel A. Schooley.

Resurrection and the Kingdom of God. E. Heath. Word useless in supporting Infidelity.

Immortality stated in Law. The stated events of resurrection. J. H. Cook.

SIXTEEN PAGE TRACTS.

5c. each; $2 per 100; or $15 per 1000.

The New Birth. Joel A. Schooley.

The Atonement, or God, Christ and Sin. R. H. Neil. Death on the Cross Explained and not Bible or Scripture.

What is Repent? T. Wilson. Showing the Bible meaning of the term as understood by Christ's hearers, to be one in faith with us.

The Seed of Abraham. Joel A. Schooley. The promises cannot be fulfilled to Jesus and saints, and so frequently referred to by prophets and apostles.

The Jews in Hi Beauty. H. V. Reed. Jer. the Jews to circulate everywhere.

TWENTY-FOUR PAGE TRACTS.

5c. each, 3 for 25c.; or $2 for 50.

The Evangelium the Kingdom Entire. Teaches the true nature of Christ's kingdom.

Will the Earth be Burned Up? T. Wilson. An argument from the Scriptures, showing that the earth will not be annihilated, as many suppose, but will be the everlasting inheritance of the saints.

Witchcraft Unveiled; or the Voice of God Against Spiritualism. H. V. Reed. Calmest tone but widely circulated.

The Scriptures. Joel A. Schooley.

EIGHTY-FOUR PAGE TRACTS.

10c. each, or $4 for 25.

Evangelium concerning the Reign of Christ over Israel and the Nations; or a brief statement of the things concerning the Kingdom of God and the Name of Jesus Christ. Mary Jones.

The Restitution; or the world restored to its primeval state, and title to be its everlasting possession. E. Miller. A careful and satisfactory examination of Acts iii. 21.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS.

The Rich Man and Lazarus. T. Wilson. The exposition throughout is in harmony with Bible teaching. 36 pages, price 10c.

The Rich Man and Lazarus. C. P. Sweet. A careful unfolding of Luke xv. and xvi., with an examination of Luke xvi. and xxiii. 34 pages, price 15c.

Primitive Christian Faith. C. P. Sweet. A concise history of the Primitive Christian Faith, or the Gospel as held by the early fathers, in a small compass. 50 pages, price 15c.

The Inbred Sin-ess by the most irrefutable evidence. W. H. Wilson. 48 pages, price 25c.

The Doctrine of Baptism as taught in the Holy Scriptures, together with a collection of evidence upon the subject, from the most learned theologians, critics, lexicographers and ecclesiastical historians. 64 pages, price 25c.

Bible Tithemanism. Rev. H. V. Reed. A reply to "nine hundred and forty-four self-contradictions of the Bible," by A. J. Davis. An able refutation of Inbred claims. Paper 25c.

Discussion on the State of the Dead. Between the Rev. W. C. Boardman, Congregational minister, and W. Neilsway, both of England. The propositions discussed were: 1. That the dead exist in a living, conscious state after their decease. Affirmed by Boardman. 2. That the Scriptures teach that men in reality are wholly unconscious, insensible, and unable to perform any act whatever; and that they rest in that state until the resurrection. Cloth 50c., paper 25c.

Future Punishment. Its nature and duration. Hardy Constable, Freemasonry of Cork. Exactly the book for the times. 320 pages, cloth $1.25.

The Destiny of Russia, as foretold by God's prophets, together with an outline of the future movements and destiny of England, Germany, France, Africa and the Jews. Contains a map of England and Asia. A work invaluable to every student of prophecy, and of intense present interest. 176 pages, cloth 75c., paper 50c.

Hades, or the Intermediate State of the Dead. Henry Constable, A. M. Presents the Bible doctrine of the state of man between death and the resurrection. Cloth $1.25.

God's Plan of Salvation. J. M. Stephenson. A comprehensive and able statement of the leading points of Bible theology. Our brethren will find this just the thing to read and circulate. The nature of man, the kingdom of God, and the obedience of faith, are ably and clearly set forth. Over 300 pages, cloth $1.

THE NEW TESTAMENT IN GREEK AND ENGLISH!

—ENTITLED—

THE EMPHATIC DIAGLOTT

—By BENJAMIN WILSON.—

Contains the Original Greek text of the New Testament, with an Interlinear word-for-word English translation, based on the readings of eminent critics, and on the various readings of the Vatican Manuscripts, together with Illustrative and explanatory foot notes, and a copious selection of references.

The different renderings of various passages in the New Testament are the foundations on which most of the sects of Christians have been built up; with this work each reader may judge for himself whether the words there literally translated are so arranged in the common version as to express the exact meaning of the New Testament writers.

New improved edition on larger paper, 861 pages, cloth $4.50, Library binding $5.00.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

HYMNS OF THE ADVENT!

About to be issued in the name of a New Hymn Book, compiled by

—CHAS. C. BARKER.—

Mr. Barker combines in this book the "Hymns of the Morning" and a fresh and rare selection of music. As an appendix he adds a selection of "Favor in Hymns, whose music is as a honeycomb" word. Those having the "Christian Psalmodist" and no music book will do well to get this work. Price 40c., cloth 50c.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

ASTRONOMICAL ETIOLOGY,

—OR—

STAR PROPHECIES

Connecting coming disasters on the earth from 1881 to 1887.

—By M. L. KNAPP, D. D.—

And others. It also contains an appendix by the publisher. 72 pages, 25c. each.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

GOD ESTABLISHED

—AND—

The BIBLE VINDICATED.

—By A. J. EDYANER.—

A new tract, and one that should be in the hands of every infidel in the land. The—Being to infidel neighborhoods will do well to get this work, as it will aid you to overthrow infidelity. Twenty pages, price 5c., 10 for 50c., or 30 for $1.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

THE RESTITUTION
—IS ISSUED WEEKLY BY—
Christian Publishing Association.

OFFICERS OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS:
TOWGHINS.....President.
LEB PALMER.....Vice President.
BARNHILL.....Secretary.
CHAPLIN.....Treasurer.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE:
LEB PALMER, WM. RAILSBACK,
I. G. ROBERTS.

CHAPLIN.....EDITOR.

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTORS:
STEPHENSON, B. WILSON
C. WEETHEE, J. A. SIMONDS,
WILEY JONES, G. M. MYERS
A. H. MAGRUDER.

The Restitution.

Keep Brodwethers article

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN"

VOL. XXX. Read. PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JANUARY 26, 1881. NO. 4.

THE RESTITUTION.

TERMS--TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR, Payable in advance. Three and Six Months at the same rate.

Address all Letters and Communications to THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final extirpation of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a weekly bulletin of the gospel, repentance, and immediate baptism, requisites to the forgiveness of sins, and "holy life as a requisite for final salvation."

Communications.

COMING AGE.

oximity--Book with Seven Seals-- n of the Book--Its Scope--Its An-
--Its Contents--How Far Extend-- Seal--Scenery--Its Agents--Their cy--Duration.

No. 33.

J. P. WEETHEE

Book with Seven Seals.—Books, n days, were sheets of parchwritten within, and, on the out-aled, so as to hide the writing.
ook had seven sheets rolled up,
h secured with a seal like a
, so that its contents were into John, until the seal should ned. The curiosity of the
, and his desire to learn the s of the roll, were so intense began to weep. The Lion of e of Judah, came forward, and e book out of the right hand of at was seated upon the throne.
vi. 1.—"And I saw when the pened one of the seals, and I s it were the noise of thunder, he four living creatures, say-me and see."

sheet is distinct, and the seven inct, in their order; first, secird, etc. Why not the events itive and in order also? The of Daniel are consecutive, as in olic image, the four beasts, and s of the fourth beast; the nar-
f these same events by Christ
ob) to John as recorded in
iv. and Luke xxi. also, but, variation, that, then Christ
d the ear only; he now speaks es and the eyes and the ears of the evan-
"Our pattern for the proper nding of the contents of these s in Daniel, and in Christ's
, recorded by Matthew, Mark,
e. They are revelations of events connected with the onarchy, made by the Father n the Messiah.

Contents of this Book.—This ists of seven sheets, each sheet distinctive scene. The book as four chapters; the first has four scenes; the other o one, each. The agents of four scenes are four mounted
. The noted objects of the chapter, are an Altar, and der, and around the altar. The pter presents a physical scene errible sequences. In a sub-of that chapter, are four an-ing the four winds, and an of the east, sealing, out of of Israel, and out of all na-he fourth chapter has one ene, with subordinate views.
ty, however, is preserved,
ultitudes of events follow.
eals belong to the first chap-seal (the fifth) occupies the apter; one seal fills the third and one, the last chapter.
chapter covers the Pagan on; the second chapter opens he agency and fruits of those
ons. The third pictures the of the Pagan Priesthood, iumph of Christianity. The d last division of the roll, view seven angels with seven
; the book itself, then, has ough line, for the trumpets
the Advent and Kingdom of
ah. Such is the outline view s; and such will be the ir investigations.

Seal.—"And I saw, and be-ite horse, and he that sat on bow; and a crown was given and he went forth conquer-conquer." Rev. vi. 2.

The Horse and His Rider.—
ol is complex—a mounted
The horse is not an acting ly as a medium of transpor-
e horses were the favorites
ors. A horse is introduced h rapidity of movement, the s a triumphant Conqueror.
bols were seen on other oc-(See Zech. i. 8–11; vi. 2, 3, this horse, as that which poleon, simply the agent of conrey him swiftly into the onflict; his color an attribute of the rider—a mighty conqueror, rushing into battle.

The Roman empire fills the scene. Its political and religious aspect from the time of the vision of a few years after A. D. 100 is brought distinctly to the vision of the prophet, as he is allowed to trace that empire as Daniel formerly, through various panoramic scenes to its final judgment.

The view that he now has is one of triumphant prosperity. An empire, with a population of innumerable, whose eagles occupied nearly every portion of three grand divisions of the globe. Containing within its bosom, three religions, under the control of as many priesthoods, fills the horizon of the prophet's enraptured vision. The symbol is that of the head of a great empire in the midst of victorious conquests. This head of the Roman world, had, under him, a Pagan, a Jewish, and a Christian world—for though the Jews met with a second overthrow, they were still a powerful element in the empire. Christians were numerous everywhere; and the messengers of Christ, the great high priest of God, were active in gathering out from Paganism a people for His (Christ's) name.

Who is this Conqueror?—The general opinion has been that it is Christ. One author has the following:

"The rider on the horse certainly represents Christ as in Rev. xix. 11–14."

By that school, the first seal represents the success of the gospel under the apostles; the second seal refers to the wars between the Jews and the Romans under Titus, in which war nearly eleven hundred thousand Jews were destroyed and ninety-seven thousand were sold into slavery.

To this view we have objections:

1. It is contrary to the Revelation itself. It was said to John, "Come up hither, and I will show thee things which must be hereafter." Rev. iv. 1. "Must be hereafter"—must be after this date (A. D. 96). John was now in banishment by order of Domitian; not less than twenty-five years after the fall of Jerusalem. All these events, included, by this school of expositors, had become matters of history, and were well known to John since he was an actor in many of them, and an eye-witness. It is not by any means probable that they were any part of the sealed book; much less two of its principal scenes. John was first commanded, "Write the things which shall be hereafter." Rev. i. 19. He then received orders to write by the angels to the seven churches and was told what to write. This message included what John had seen while ministering to the churches; and what then existed. There then remained but one division, viz., the things that shall, and must be thereafter.

2. The character in Rev. vi. 2, and xix. 11–14, are not identical. Let the reader compare:

a. Under the first seal the rider has a (one) crown, in the latter place, "many crowns." Verse 12.

b. It makes the Lamb a royal conqueror too soon, while he is officiating as high priest, and before he receives the kingdom. Dan. vii. 14. This does not take place till after the supremacy passes from the little horn.

c. In the seal he is the Lamb; the officiating high priest; in Rev. xix. he is a judge, a warrior, the King of kings and Lord of lords. This does not agree with his priesthood.

d. Their appearance is quite unlike. In all other visions, Christ's personage is very similar. Compare his transfiguration, his revelation to Saul, his first manifestation to John, Rev. i. 14, and his manifestation to John in Rev. xix. 11–14.

e. In the seal, his bow, his crown, and his movements, are noticed. Nothing as to any personal attribute. It is impossible to read and compare the four with the one and recognize an identity. In the four places you realize the presence of a Divine personage, in the other one of earth's favored conquerors. He is not Christ.

Who is He? He is a Roman Emperor—Trajan.—We do not know that any rule of symbolization is violated in such an exposition. Objects and agents in the political world may symbolize objects or agents in the moral world; or they may represent themselves. If the empire is alone brought to view, then the chief ruler must be a symbol of himself since no other person occupies an analogous position.

That in Roman world is the territory occupied by the victims of the seals is quite evident from the language used. The animals named as well as the persons belong to the Roman earth, they are literal, the symbols are the same; or in a literal shape. The chief throne, the occupant, the elders their thrones, lamps in the shape of lamps. The Son of Man, though called a Lamb is in human shape, though in possession of symbolic members; the agents and objects seen in the seven seal book are all what we would call natural objects and agents, such as usually occupy the literal earth. The horses and their riders are the representatives of the same kinds, not other classes. Some words are personified, such as Death, and Hell (Hades). When it is said, Power was given unto them over the fourth part of the earth, land is intended; so also, with "sword," "hunger," "death" "beasts," "souls," (persons) "slain" "word of God," "testimony," "fellow-servants," and many other terms.

With these remarks, permit us to examine the character of our vision conqueror, that we may compare it with the one above named. We shall first give his outline history, and then compare it with the one seen in the vision of the first seal. If they agree, we shall conclude that we have found that part of Roman history that belongs to that seal; and in the same way identify all the seals with their literal histories.

Trajan.—Was born near Seville, in Spain, A. D. 53, and was the second Roman emperor of foreign extraction. (Nerva, the son of a native of Crete, being the first). He was adopted by Nerva. Nerva, passing by his own family, made Trajan his successor. He was a noted warrior from his youth. He was a skilful archer, he, through Nerva, having been trained in Cretian archery, the most expert of any people with the bow. In proof of their skill, David selected persons out of that people as his life-guards. 2 Sam. xi. 18; xv. 18; xx. 23; 1 Kings i. 38; 1 Chron. xviii. 17.

Trajan's distinctive symbol was a bow. So celebrated was his military skill, that, throughout the Roman territory, contrary to their usual custom on change, or elections of emperors, the barbarians remained quiet.

Though the boundaries of the empire were very extended, yet the conduct of the Dacians (dwelling across the Danube) who claimed from the Romans a tribute, which had been granted by Domitian offended him. The emperor, in his second campaign, threw a bridge across the Danube, and made an attack upon their warlike monarch, Decebalus. A terrible battle resulted in the overthrow of their nation and its annexation, as a province of the Roman empire. Two triumphs were decreed him, the war lasting five years.

An eastern expedition was now undertaken. Parthia fell under his displeasure. Trajan passed through Armenia, and, by his well directed operations, subjugated the provinces of Assyria and Mesopotamia. He extended his conquests in the east, obtaining victory over unknown nations; and when on the extremity of India, he lamented that he possessed not the vigor and youth of Alexander, that he might add unexplored provinces and kingdoms to the Roman empire.

At this moment, while Trajan had triumphed over the nations east and north, he rode up his white steed and paused a moment upon the highest pinnacle of the Roman empire. It was now an empire of one hundred and twenty millions of inhabitants, without a rival. It was a universal empire, in a sense more strictly true, than any nation that had preceded it. It was the beast exceedingly terrible, that had devoured, and broken in pieces, and stamped the residue with its feet; yet it had within its bosom the elements of its own ruin.

We have now sketched the military life of the emperor Trajan. Compare him with the rider on the white horse in the vision of the first seal. Wherein do they differ? Are they not similar in their attributes, their acts, their crowns, and in their acts? They each went forth conquering, and to conquer, and that he shall conquer. Went forth, or beyond the former boundary of the empire to conquer new nations.

Trajan's reign was nineteen years, six months, and one-half. He was a persecutor of the Christians. His letter to Pliny, the younger, preserved in Bithynia, contains an edict that was not repealed by any emperor till the reign of Constantine the Great. The edict was the following:

"They (Christians) are not to be sought for. If not are brought before you, and are convicted, they ought to be punished.

There was no emperor that defended the rights of Christians before Constantine.

LUKE xxiv. 36, 37.

G. M. MYERS

"And as they thus spoke, Jesus himself stood in the midst of them, and saith unto them, "Peace be unto you." But they were terrified and affrighted, and supposed that they had seen a spirit."

In introducing this text as a heading it is not my purpose to enter upon a full or critical exposition thereof, but simply to jot down a few notes made by way of reading others upon the text, which may be of benefit to some reader.

1. Greisbach gives for Pneuma in the text, Phantasma in the margin.

2. Olshausen says: "The term at Matt. xiv. 26 and Luke xxiv. 37 is to be understood in all its latitude like our word apparition."

3. Tertullian says: "When they were doubting whether he were not a phantom,—nay, were supposing that he was one," etc.

4. Bagster defines the word Pneuma at this text Spectre.

5. J. A. Spencer in his Novum Testamentum at this text says: "The Jews were formerly persuaded of the immortality of spirits, and of their appearance to men; a similar belief was common among the heathen. Without intending to sanction the popular notions on this point, our Lord shows plainly that according to their views of spirits, he could not be regarded as one."

Bloomfield also has a valuable comment on the text, which we have noted but have the note not now at hand.

Exegetical.

For the hope of Israel I am bound with this chain. Acts xxviii. 20.

In Horne's Introduction to the New Testament we find the following description, of the Roman Method of fettering and confining prisoners, which he derives from Dr. Harwood's Introduction in which the judicial proceedings of the Romans toward prisoners is explained.

This article is designed to elucidate several expressions made use of by the apostle Paul in his epistles. We quote the writer's own language:

"The Roman method of fettering and confining criminals was singular. One end of a chain that was of commodious length, was fixed about the right arm of the prisoner, and the other end was fastened to the left arm of a soldier. Thus a soldier was coupled to a prisoner, and everywhere attended and guarded him. This manner of confinement is frequently mentioned, and there are many beautiful allusions to it in the Roman writers. Thus was St. Paul confined. Fettered in this manner, he delivered his apology before Festus, King Agrippa, and Bernice. And it was this circumstance that occasioned one of the most pathetic and affecting strokes of true oratory that ever was displayed either in the Grecian or Roman Senate: 'Would to God that not only THOU but also ALL that hear me this day, were both almost and altogether such as I am, except these bonds!'

What a prodigious effect must this striking conclusion, and the sight of the irons held up to enforce, make upon the minds of the audience! During the two years that St. Paul was a prisoner at large, and lived at Rome in his own hired house, he was subjected to this confinement, Paul was suffered to dwell with a soldier that kept him. The circumstance of publicly wearing his chain, and being thus coupled to a soldier, was a very disgraceful and dishonorable, and the ignominy of it would naturally occasion desertion of former friends and acquaintance. Hence the apostle immortalizes the name of Onesiphorus, and fervently intercedes with God to bless his family and to remember him in the day of recompenses. For a rare instance of distinguished fidelity and affection to him when all had turned away from him and forsaken him. The Lord give mercy to the house of Onesiphorus, for he oft refreshed me, and was not ASHAMED OF MY CHAIN, but when he was out of Rome he sought me out very diligently till he found me. The Lord grant that he may find mercy of the Lord in that day. 2 Tim. i. 16–18

Sometimes the prisoner was fastened to two soldiers, one on each side, wearing a chain both on his right and left hand.

St. Paul was thus confined. When the tribune received him from the hands of the Jews, he commanded him to be bound with two chains. Acts xxi. 33. In this manner was Peter fettered and confined by Herod Agrippa. The same night Peter was sleeping between two soldiers, bound with TWO CHAINS. Acts xii. 6.

It further appears, that if the soldiers, who were thus appointed to guard criminals, and to whom they were chained, suffered the prisoner to escape, they were punished with death.

Thus, when Peter was delivered out of prison by a miracle, the next morning we read there was no small confusion among the soldiers who were appointed his guards, and to whom he had been chained, what was become of Peter.

Whence it appears that his deliverance had been expected, and his shackles had been miraculously unloosed, without their knowledge, when they were sunk in repose. Upon which Herod, after making a fruitless search for him, ordered all those who had been entrusted with the custody of Peter to be executed. Acts xii. 19.

In like manner also keepers of prisons were punished with death, if the confined made their escape. This is evident from what is related concerning the imprisonment of Paul and Silas at Philippi.

These, after their bodies were mangled with scourges, were precipitated into the public dungeon, and their feet were made fast in the stocks. At midnight these good men prayed and sang praises to God in these circumstances; when suddenly a dreadful earthquake shook the whole prison to its foundation, all the doors in an instant flew open, and the shackles of all the prisoners fell to the ground. This violent concussion awakening the keeper, when he saw the doors of the prison wide open, he drew his sword, and was going to plunge it in his bosom, concluding that all the prisoners had escaped. In that crisis Paul cried to him with a loud voice, entreating him not to lay violent hands upon himself, assuring him that all the prisoners were safe."

Thus in chains the apostle preached Christ, in chains he made his defence before the military commander, in chains he plead before the Roman tribunal, and in chains he urged the Messiahship of Jesus of Nazareth before King Agrippa Queen Bernice, and the Roman Governor.

Henceforth the crown awaits the noble apostle, once an ambassador in a chain. Eph. vi. 20.

Sententious.

True friends visit us in prosperity only when invited, but in adversity they come without invitation.

Farewell is a sad word, but if we could only contrive to say it to some of our bad habits we should be much happier.

Think upon sin and repent; think upon God and return; think upon grace and hope; think upon glory and press forward.

If we love God, the reward promised us is nothing less than the sight of God himself, face to face; not transiently, not as a glorious flash of light, but an abiding vision, a glory and a gladness, a marvellous rapture of the will, forevermore. Think how such a reward transcends all the expectations, all the possibilities even, of our nature! How God must love us, and how too he must love our love, to have prepared for us such joys as these, which eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, nor man's heart hath conceived.—F. W. Faber.

A man's elevated position in the church does not make him other than what he is. The raven cawing from the steeple is a raven still.

Where we see the darkness of the mine,
God sees the diamond shine;
Where we can only christen leaves beheld,
He sees the bud they hold.
We only see the rude and outer rattle;
God knows the force life,
And those from whom, like Pharisees, we shrink,
With Christ may eat and drink.

No man is born into the world whose work is not born with him; there is always work, and tools to work withal, for those who will; and blessed are the horny hands of toil.—J. R. Lowell.

SIMPLE FAITH.

The Source of Peace.—"Yet come the enlargement when it will, it must, I admit, come after all through the channel of a simple credence given to the saying of God, accounted as true and faithful sayings. And never does light and peace so fill my heart as when, like a little child, I take up the lesson, that God hath laid on his Son the iniquities of us all."—Dr. Chalmers.

Say, hast thou ever sought
God's help in vain,
E'en when his hand it was
That gave thee pain?
Ask the poor trembling heart,
Trembling from conscience' smart,
If with this truth 'twould part—
"He loveth me?"

Youth's Column.

Good Words.

An Evening Song.

The little birds now seek their nest;
The baby sleeps on mother's breast;
Thou givest all Thy children rest,
God of the weary.

The sailor prayeth on the sea;
The little ones at mother's knee;
Now comes the penitent to Thee,
God of the weary.

The orphan puts away his fears;
The troubled hopes for happier years;
Thou drivest all the mourner's tears,
God of the weary.

Thou sendest rest to tired feet,
To little toil-se slumbers sweet,
To aching hearts repose complete,
God of the weary.

In grief, perplexity, or pain,
None ever come to Thee in vain;
Thou makest life a joy again,
God of the weary.

We sleep that we may wake renewed,
To serve Thee as Thy children should,
With love, and zeal, and gratitude.
God of the weary.

Say Good Morning.

Don't forget to say "good morning" Say it to your parents, your brothers and sisters, your schoolmates, your teachers—and say it cheerfully, and with a smile; it will do you good, and do your friends good. There's a kind of inspiration in every "good morning" heartily spoken, that helps to make hope fresher and lighter. It seems really to make the morning good; and to be a prophecy of a good day to come after it. And if this be true of the "good morning," it is so also of all kind, heartsome greetings; they clear the discouraged, rest the tired one, and somehow make the wheels of life run more smoothly.

Nursery.

Noble Dogs.

The great Saint Bernard mountain is one of the high mountains in Switzerland. On the highest point of the pass over it is a large stone convent, which is used as a place of refuge for travelers. It is eight thousand feet above the sea, and is the abode of a number of pious men called monks.

They have a breed of large noble dogs that scent out people lost in the snow. They scratch away the drift, and bark loudly all the while so as to let the monks know what has happened.

One of these dogs saved forty persons, and among them was a little boy that the dog managed to restore from a frozen state, and carried on his back to the convent.

These dogs are all tall, with large limbs and broad chests. With a case containing food or cordials slung about their necks, they go out to seek for travelers. Sometimes the monks go with them.

Being able on their four feet to cross great sheets of snow where men could not venture, the dogs trace out any one who may be lost in the drifts. They supply him with food, and sometimes take him home on their back.

In winter there are what are called avalanches. A great mass of snow gathers on a high place, till it gets so heavy that it falls at once down the mountain. In doing so it makes a noise like the discharge of a cannon.

Sometimes the snow-drifts surround the walls of a convent to the height of forty feet. The deep little lake before it does not melt before July and freezes up in in September, and the snow falls almost every day in the year.

Not a tree is to be seen, but only patches of moss, grass and bright, hardy little flowers. The kind monks are cheered in their lonely life by the thought of doing good.

The Young Girl Whose Beautiful Face Appears on the Silver Dollar.

An interesting story in connection with the new silver dollar has just come to light at Philadelphia. The secret has come out, through the Record newspaper, as to who the young lady was that sat to Mr. Morgan, the designer, as a model for the head which appears on the coin. "The lady who has thus been raised to fame, and whose name will be chronicled in history, is," says the Record, "Miss Anna W. Williams, residing with her widowed mother at 1023 Spring Garden street, in this city. In 1876, when Mr. Morgan was making designs for the coin, he was introduced to the lady by Mr. Thomas Eakins, a friend of the family. He desired to have a true representative of American beauty emblazoned upon the coin, and the profile of Miss Williams appeared to him as the best approach to it she had seen. The lady, who is of a very modest and retiring disposition, was induced to sit, and after four or five interviews, sufficient sketches had been secured to proceed with the work. The artist wrought up the face afterward to its present appearance, as it is shown upon the coin. It would be impossible to recognize in it any resemblance to Miss Williams. The Grecian nose and delicate lips had their foundation in her features, but the full rounded chin resembles more that of the wife of Mr. Morgan. Miss Williams is a blonde and considered quite pretty. She is a teacher in the girls' department of the House of Refuge, and about eighteen years of age. This sets at rest the numerous stories which have been in circulation as to whom the face on the coin belongs to."

A Rumseller's Story.

A man named Stacy, the owner of a splendid drinking-saloon in New York, signed the pledge lately and closed his house. Hearing that a party of lads had formed themselves into a temperance society, he went to them and gave them his experience as a rumseller. We repeat some of his recollections for our larger audience.

"I sold liquor," said Mr. Stacy, "for eleven years—long enough for me to see the beginning and the end of its effects. I have seen a man take his first glass of liquor in my place, and afterwards fill the grave of a suicide. I have seen man after man, wealthy and educated, come into my saloon, who now can not buy his dinner. I can recall twenty customers worth one hundred thousand dollars, who are now without money, place or friends."

He warned boys against entering saloons on any pretext. He stated that he had seen many a young fellow, members of a temperance society, come in with a friend and wait while he drank. "No, no," he would say, "I never touch it. Thanks all the same." Presently, rather than seem churlish, he would take a glass of cider or harmless lemonade. "The lemonade was nothing," said the rumseller, "but I knew how it would end. The only safety, boys, for any man, no matter how strong his resolution may be, is outside the door of the saloon."

The physiologist Leo Baltzer has lately excavated from the alluvial stratum of the Steigerthal, near Nordhausen, Germany, the skeleton of an antediluvian rhinoceros in an excellent state of preservation. The height of the animal must have been nearly seven feet, and its bulk nearly that of an African elephant

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CHAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, January 26, 1881.

BROTHER John Foore will preach at LaPar, on Thursday evening, Jan. 27, and continue appointments over Sunday as brethren may appoint

OUR paper this week is issued under difficulties. We have been completely prostrated a part of the time since our last issue with a violent cold, but have tried to summon fortitude to place THE RESTITUTION once more before its friends.

FROM the Herald of Life we learn that Elder Wm. Shepherd, of Newark, N. J., fell asleep in Jesus on Saturday, Jan. 15, 1881, in the afternoon. Malarial poisoning caused his death. On the evening of the 11th, the Lord's Supper was celebrated at his place of abode, of which he partook full of joy and hope. His Son went down unclouded and his end was peace.

THOSE that remit money must exercise patience. It requires a great amount of time and labor to make all the changes in the mailing list at this time of the year. Every letter after which friends have enquired has been received and duly credited, and labels will be changed as fast as possible. Very few letters carefully mailed are lost. If your paper comes regularly, even if the label should not be changed at once, you may infer all is right.

THE SABBATH.

Most of the points made by the reviewer of President Seelye's article on "The Sabbath Question" are forcible and well taken. Both the writer of the article and the reviewer, however, seem to recognize "an original command for the Sabbath designed for all men." Where this "original command," enjoining the obligation to keep the Sabbath, upon all men, or upon any man, before the calling of Israel out of Egypt, is to be found is more than we know. It is true that the writer of Genesis says God "rested on the seventh day from all his work," and also, that "God blessed the seventh day and sanctified it;" but can anyone show that "from Adam to Moses," or "until the law was in the world," there was a Sabbath obligatory on all? That anyone in those Patriarchal times "when there was no law" ever observed the Sabbath, or, indeed, knew anything about such a day?

The Book of Genesis gives us a history of that age sufficiently full to have noticed the practice of keeping the Sabbath, at least once, if the ancient worthies observed it; and we have also the Book of Job containing a very full account of the religious doctrines and practices of the Patriarchal age, and in this book too the closest scrutiny will fail to detect anything like Sabbath observance. That wedding festivities lasted a week, or a hebdomadal period, is noted, Gen. xxix. 27, 28, but the festivities were kept up on the seventh day as much as on the other six. It is also noticed that there was a special mourning period of seven days, when death invaded a household, as when Joseph mourned for his father, Gen. l. 10; and Job's friends mourned with him for the loss of his children. Job ii. 13. We commend to both the essayist and the reviewer a re-review of this point.

The reviewer is correct in his statement that the word "Sabbath days," or rather "Sabbaths," refers to the weekly Sabbaths. There has been so much in the paper lately on the Sabbath question that we have deferred an intended article on Col. ii. 16, and on the expression "Lord's day" to the future. We have obtained a volume of the Lectures of Hessey, delivered in the Bampton Course, which gives the historical allusions to the "Lord's day" by Christian writers in the first centuries in their original language, and which more than confirms the statements of the reviewer in regard to historical expressions to which he alludes. The seventh day Sabbath was not enjoined upon the patriarchs, neither is it commanded by the apostles. It was exclusively an Israelitish ordinance. We now refer our readers to the article itself.

New York Observer.

PRESIDENT SEELYE ON THE SABBATH.

President Seelye, of Amherst College, has given in the November number of the Princeton Review a valuable article on "The Sabbath Question." His chief attempt, in which he is highly successful is to show that man needs Divine authority for the Sabbath, that its observance on the basis of mere expediency will never sufficiently subserve human wants. He also shows that the original command for the Sabbath was evidently designed for all men. But since that Sabbath was the seventh day of the week, we think he does not sufficiently show that the first day has, in substance, taken the place of the seventh in the Divine command. That is the point which emphatically needs light shed upon it in modern times.

One unsafe assumption he makes is this: That all commands of the decalogue except the Fourth are by all "admitted to be of perpetual and universal obligation." The fact is that a class of Bible believers claim that the whole decalogue, as such, is abolished; that no precept contained in it is binding except such as are taught in nature, and that the authority "for them is in nature and not in Scripture, unless repeated or given since Christ's death. Such views need to be overthrown, and should not be allowed to pass unnoticed.

A much more objectionable position of President Seelye is the following. He quotes Col. ii. 16: "Let no man judge you * * * in respect of * * * the Sabbath days," and adds: "But whether the Sabbath days here mean the weekly Sabbaths or the annual religious festivals of the Jews, to which the term Sabbaths was often undoubtedly applied, is a question to which different students of the Bible of perhaps equal piety and learning, have given different answers."

The foregoing statement has errors, we think, which ought to be noticed:

1. All of the more modern, able exegetes, we believe, including Meyer, Ellicott, Lightfoot, Alford, hold that the word "Sabbaths," in Col. ii. 16, means the seventh days. Their judgment is better than that of commentators of fifty years ago.

2. The statement that "the term Sabbaths was often undoubtedly applied" to "the annual religious festivals of the Jews," President Seelye does not attempt to prove, and we think no one can prove it.

3. Setting aside Col. ii. 16, there is no passage in the New Testament where the term "Sabbaths" is applied to Jewish feast days. The latter are called by their specific names—Passover, Pentecost, etc.

4. There is no usage of such application of the term in the Old Testament. The original word translated "Sabbaths," as applied to feast days, in Lev. xxiii. is not the same as that for the Sabbath, except in the single case of the Atonement. Its true translation is rather "Sabbatism," or "rest-day," signifying that those feast days were to be observed somewhat as Sabbaths, and therefore the day of Atonement wholly as such. The Septuagint makes a difference between the original term for Sabbath and for Sabbatisms.

5. We are confident that neither Josephus nor any other Jewish writer of his or any other age shows any usage of the term "Sabbaths" as applied to Jewish annual festivals.

6. Two of the most reliable and able of all the early fathers—Irenæus and Tertullian—distinctly quote Col. ii. 16 as indicating that Christians were not under obligation to observe the seventh day,—"Let no man judge you;" meaning, act as you choose about observing the seventh-day Sabbaths. They undoubtedly understood the term correctly, as referring to the seventh days, and not to Jewish annual festivals.

7. It is unreasonable to suppose that "Sabbaths" means the feast days of the Jews, because another word in the same sentence translated "holyday"—does mean feast day, and means nothing else. The phrase, "of a holyday, or of the new moon, or of the Sabbath days," is comprehensive, and contains an attractive climax,—meaning the annual festivals, the monthly ones, and the weekly and supremely sacred ones.

8. It leads to confusion and inconsistencies to suppose that "Sabbaths" may mean feast days, because, if it does, then those who keep the first day have no clear release from the seventh also, according to the Fourth Commandment; and having authority for keeping the first day as the chief, the two days would come in conflict, and six days in the week would not be left for labor. Besides, if "Sabbaths" does not mean feast days but seventh days, the seventh-day Sabbatarians are wholly without basis for their views.

President Seelye also says: "Equally scanty is the evidence respecting the views of the early Church about the Sabbath in the two or three centuries succeeding the New Testament times." We must demur to this also. The evidence seems to be clear that the early Christians, beginning with the Apostles, kept sacredly the first day, and in general did not deem themselves under obligation to keep the seventh.

1. During the first century after the Apostle John's death, there are about a dozen writers who testify or imply that in their time the Christians sacredly observed the First or Lord's Day. This is a large number, when we consider the smallness of the early Christian literature.

2. A considerable number of these writers call their sacred day the Lord's Day, copying, no doubt, from the Apostle John (Rev. i. 10), and thus signifying that it was a very precious day to them.

3. Nearly half of that number, during the same century, either signify or testify that the Christians did not generally keep the seventh as the Jews did. Among them are Ignatius, Barnabas, Justin Martyr, Irenæus, and Tertullian.

4. In the three centuries succeeding the New Testament times," of which President Seelye speaks as giving "scanty evidence respecting the views of the early Church about the Sabbath," there are about thirty-five writers who show that the Christians, in their time, kept the Lord's Day; and in the same three centuries we find about twenty authors declaring, or implying, that the Christians were not obligated to keep the seventh day as holy time, and that usually they did not so keep it. This is no scanty evidence for an age so distant from ours.

5. Neander, after citing two Scripture passages (Acts xx. 7, and Rev. i. 10,) as intimating in the New Testament age "special observance of Sunday in place of the Sabbath," cites, to the same point, the Epistle of Barnabas, and then says: "In the Epistle of Ignatius to the Magnesians it is presupposed that even the Jews who had come over to Christianity substituted Sunday in place of the Sabbath." Ignatius was contemporary of the Apostle John, and unquestionably knew his mind and custom, and those of the other Apostles, on this subject.

Ought not such testimony to be considered decisive? We refer to it not for the sake of controversy or discussion, but because it is due to the cause of truth and righteousness that the Christian public consider these things. Had President Seelye availed himself of the full truth in these respects, he would have much improved his otherwise excellent article. It is not necessary to show, and cannot be shown, that the Christians in the primitive era termed the Lord's day the Sabbath. Yet, in our circumstances, we may term it the Sabbath: for it is, and is designed to be, a rest-day, the Sabbath which we, in fact, have in the new dispensation.

WM. DELOSS LOVE.

South Hadley.

Selections.

The Messenger.

ON THE RESURRECTION.

J. MILL.

I would draw the attention of the readers of the Messenger to the manner in which favorite philosophical theories are sought to be deduced from Scriptures, which, by no play of the reasoning powers hitherto allowed as lawful, can ever be made to support what they emphatically contradict; and the passage to be commented on is that well-known one found in Matt. xxii. 23-24, where our Lord answers a question put by the Sadducees on the resurrection. On this, the Rev. J. C. Ryle, now Bishop of Liverpool, has the following remarks in his work, Expository Thoughts on the Gospels:—

"The text by which our Lord silenced the Sadducees, and proved the resurrection to be a scriptural doctrine, has been a cause of surprise to many Bible readers. Some have wondered that our Lord should have chosen this text, when others far more plain might have been adduced. Some have been unable to see the force and cogency of the text as any proof at all of the resurrection of the body. As to the particular fitness of the text, as a proof, compared to others, we are perhaps very poor judges. At any rate it is clear that to a Jewish hearer of the Lord the argument was as forcible as to be unanswerable. This quotation (Exodus iii. 6), and the famous one in John x. 34 (Ps. lxxxii. 6), go far to show that the Jewish mind saw a depth of meaning in scriptural expressions, which many of us in modern times have not at all seen yet. It is a matter in which we have much to learn."

It is open to doubt whether the writer of the above is expressing his own difficulties or those of others; so, let us suppose he is speaking for a large number of intelligent Christians, who, in their reading of Scripture, endeavor to understand the meaning of what they read. Notice their mental condition when they come to that passage in Matthew. Many are surprised at the reasoning of the Lord; some wonder that he did not use a plainer text; and others are unable to see how the citation from Exodus iii. 6 led up to a climax so overpowering, from a logical point of view, as to force his opponents to prudent silence and popular defeat. The argument must have been unanswerable, else the cynical, pleasure loving Sadducees would not have retired like poor poltroons; but how it rests on the text adduced is a puzzle! And is not this a remarkable confession to be made in an age so much bepraised for its clear acumen and "higher criticism?"

Now, in trying to discover the drift of the teaching on this occasion, we must keep in mind that the subject spoken of was the resurrection of the dead. This fact is so persistently overlooked that we are becoming accustomed to find a passage which proved the resurrection quoted by numberless writers as a foundation for their belief in soul-survival—a wonderful and sad perversion. Here, for instance, is the last example which has come under my notice. It is extracted from a volume of sermons recently published, written by the talented Samuel Cox, of Nottingham, editor of the Expositor, and author of many works on Bible exegesis, among which may be mentioned Salvator Mundi, a plea for the "larger hope." From one of the sermons I call the subjoined:—

"Surely we may adopt our Savior's method of argument, and by varying the application of it, reach with entire safety a still more recondite conclusion than his. He argues, as we have seen, that since God was still the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, long years after they were dead, they cannot be dead, but must be still alive. And what is to hinder us from arguing that if God is still their God, and they still live unto him, then God must even now be carrying on the discipline and training which he commenced upon them here, and carrying it on to still larger and happier issues? If they live, and live unto God, must they not be moving into a closer fellowship with him, rising to a more hearty adoption of his will, a fuller participation of his righteousness and love? . . . You will all gladly admit that since he still lives Abraham must by this time be a far greater and nobler man than he was when he left the earth, and must be engaged in far nobler discoveries and enterprises. You will all admit that since he still lives, and lives unto God, Isaac has grown more like his father—less weak, less timid, more capable of action, of authority, of service. You will all be glad to think that since he also still lives, and lives unto God, Jacob has purged himself of his old sins, has lost every trace of mean and selfish craft, has grown honest and frank and bold. And you will all, I trust, gather from this conviction a firmer and more animating hope for yourselves and for one another. For if God be your God, and if when you die to men you will still live unto him, then your training and discipline will be carried on and completed in the world to come."—The Genesis of Evil and other sermons.

The opinion expressed in the above is one which is shared by a large number of men and women in all denominations of the church, and its advocates are increasing in power. Stripped of all adventitious ornament, Mr. Cox's position seems to me to be this—Jesus produced an argument proving the resurrection to be unnecessary, and the Sadducees were silenced!

Let us look at this point more in detail. You will have noted that Mr. Cox is speaking of living persons, and Jesus answered a question concerning the dead. And, if Mr. Cox be right, how could the fact of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob being alive, prove the doctrine of a future resurrection? If they were alive the argument is groundless, for the reasoning proceeds on the assumption that they were dead. But God is not the God of the dead but of the living; and being the God of the living, these dead ones—Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob—must live again.

"All live unto him," and he could not be a covenant-keeping God unless these and all his other faithful servants live again. For was not the land from the river of Egypt to the great river Euphrates promised as an everlasting possession to Abraham and to his seed after him? And we learn from Stephen, who spoke under the direction of the Holy Spirit, that Abraham had no inheritance in the land—no, not so much as to set his foot on. Acts vii. 5. But he died "in faith not having received the promises but having seen them afar off." Then, are these plain, unmistakable promises ever to be fulfilled? They must be—God's word is pledged, his character is at stake. But dead men cannot inherit the promises, so they must rise from the dead. All this and much more is implied in "he is not the God of the dead but of the living." As Bishop Pearson says: "Now Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob had not received the promises which they expected, and therefore God, after their death, desiring still to be called their God, he thereby acknowledgeth that he had a blessing and a reward for them still, and, consequently, that he will raise them to another life in which they may receive it."

Although we know there will be a resurrection, we are not able to describe the miracle: it is something far beyond our powers, and we can only refer to the words of Jesus ascribing it to the "power of God." If we "know the Scriptures" we know that the resurrection will take place. If we have faith in the "power of God," we will believe that he, by his almighty arm, will fulfill his promise.

Let savant and philosopher annex themselves with the "difficulties" and "impossibilities" of communicating identity to concourses of atoms collected from all the quarters of the globe after having entered into the structure of plant and animal, fish and fowl. We leave all that in God's hand. With men it may be impossible; in their eyes it may be an "incredible" thing that God should raise the dead. But it has promised to raise his sleeping ones when "the Lord shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God." Then shall "the dead in Christ" arise: a statement which Mr. Cox does not seem to credit, for in his creed there are no dead in Christ: all are alive and approaching perfection. But "the hour is coming in which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice and shall come forth." "In the graves," strange place for the living to be! And, go by this system of miscalled "interpretation," the teaching of the Lord loses its point and Scripture becomes meaningless.

There is a large class of "advanced thinkers" whose minds are so catholic and tolerant that they are ready to call themselves, and to recognize others, as "Christians," although they do not believe either that the Christ has been raised or that the dead are to be raised. The miracles performed by our Lord—giving sight to the blind, cleansing the lepers, healing the palsied and infirm, granting life to the dead, speech to the dumb, and deliverance to Satan's captives—these, and the resurrection of the crucified Messiah, are spoken of as "mythical accretions," and "legendary tales," having their origin in the abnormally-developed imaginative faculties of untutored Galilean fishers, and invented for the purpose of perpetuating the sacred memory of one whom, in their inmost hearts, they considered an arch impostor!* They conceal his dead body in some secret spot, and then traversed the Roman world, suffering persecution, nakedness, famine, sword, shipwreck, prison, scourging, and horrid deaths devised by fiends, in order to propagate a gigantic lie! And the learned advocates of the above theory, which makes no demand on our credulity, to prove that belief in the resurrection is of no consequence, point us to . . . ? (of all places), the 15th of 1st Corinthians! "There," they say, with satisfaction, "you find persons in the church who had no faith in the resurrection. As it was then, so it should be now." Of course the verse referred to is the 12th—"How say some among you that there is no resurrection of the dead?"

In reply, I would demur to the assumption the "some among you" were in the church. But suppose we grant that some in the church held the idea imputed to them, I remark that they firmly cherished and maintained the fact of their Lord's resurrection, for the apostle rests his great argument on that foundation. "If the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised; and if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain, ye are yet in your sins. . . . But now is Christ risen from the dead." In other words, the resurrection of the dead stands or falls with the resurrection of Christ. If Christ be not raised, the dead in Christ shall never rise; but Christ is risen, and all shall rise through him.

Again, still granting that some in the church doubted the future resurrection, I ask, did Paul command them for so doing? Did he say, "it is altogether unimportant whether you accept or reject it?" He did not. On the contrary he demonstrated with irresistible logic that as their Master had triumphed over death by his resurrection, just as certainly would his people be ransomed from the grave. Thus, in the chapter under review, we have a crowning proof of the incomparable importance of the doctrine in question, not of its comparative insignificance.

No, brethren, we cannot afford to dispense with what we know to be the scriptural teaching on this topic; and, I fear, we must endeavor to live as best we may without being accounted "liberal" (with what is not ours), "advanced," and "abreast of the age." We have to face a denial, not merely of the resurrection of the dead or that of Christ, but a total denial of the miraculous. Modern thought is assuredly leading to that point, and with rapid strides leading us on into the gloom of atheistic night. Only the other week, in a document now historical, you read the melancholy confession of this negation of belief on the part of the Rev. Stopford Brooke, the eloquent London preacher and man of letters. He rejects the incarnation; he rejects all miracles; and still he says "My position is not only theistic but also Christian."

Thus, though you tear out the very heart of Christianity and cast it to the dogs, you are still a Christian! Yes, all faith in the supernatural is fast ebbing away. So let us be ready for the coming struggle; dreadful it will be, and fraught with issues of tremendous consequence.

Long or short, it must be fierce. But the result is decided before the event occurs, and we shall be more than conquerors through him that loved us and washed us from our sins in his own blood." Wherefore, let us be strong and quit ourselves like men, for beyond the gathering darkness, proclaiming the advent of an apostasy all but universal, and above the din of warlike preparations, the shrieks of outraged innocence, and the throes of anarchy, above and beyond all these, we can hear the gracious hope-inspiring words, "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life;" and under the shadow of his power there is safety, joy, and calm repose.

*Matthew Arnold, the High Priest of "sweet reasonableness," ascribes the cause to "moral therapeutics." ED.

News Items.

GREAT STORM ON THE BRITISH COAST.

LONDON, Jan. 18. The snow storm extends over nearly the whole kingdom. The weather is the severest experienced for twenty years. A heavy gale prevails on the Cornish coast. A French vessel has been wrecked at the Scilly Islands and there are no tidings of her crew. Two vessels are ashore at St. Ives.

GREECE'S WAR PREPARATIONS.

ATHENS, Jan. 18. The Greek Minister of War has ordered the brigading of the various regiments, and several Brigadier Generals have been appointed. All furloughs have been stopped.

ST. PETERSBURG, Jan. 18. Russia dissents from the contention of France that the powers are not bound to maintain the decisions of the Berlin Conference on the Greek frontier question.

The German Admiralty has resolved to dispatch a war vessel to the west coast of Africa for the purpose of punishing the negros who lately plundered the German steamer Carlos when stranded on their shore, and who maltreated the crew.

A frightful railway disaster is reported from Puerto Cortes, in Central America. A passenger train ran off the track and was precipitated down a hillside a distance of seventy feet. Nearly all those on board were killed, but the number is not stated.

SOUTH AMERICA.

GREAT SLAUGHTER IN THE LATE BATTLES.

LONDON, Jan. 24. A private telegram from Chili says: Lima surrendered unconditionally after Chorillos, Barraca and Maraflores had been taken. There was great slaughter in the battles at those places.

An earthquake lasting about ten seconds was felt throughout the vicinity of Bath, Me., at 8:45 Thursday evening. There was at first a loud report, followed by a rumbling sound as by a heavy team passing over frozen ground. Windows rattled and distinct oscillations were felt.

The snow-fall of the past two or three days covered a wide extent of territory. Throughout New England it was of unusual severity, and travel was almost suspended. At several points the drifts were so great that trains were snowed in. In Canada the same state of affairs prevailed, the drifts actually rising thirty feet. In New York the storm subsided Saturday, and much of the damage inflicted the previous day was repaired and telegraphic communication again opened with the metropolis. In the West, especially in Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa and Nebraska, the snow-fall was very heavy and the blockading of trains was frequent.

The snow-storm extended southward to New Orleans and Galveston, surprising the inhabitants thereaway. In the former city it fell to the depth of an inch, "the heaviest fall of snow for fifteen years."

This morning light snow is reported in New York, Indiana, Michigan, Kansas, Missouri and Louisiana. The coldest temperature reported was at Moorehead, Minn.—8 degrees below zero.

A WORD OF ENCOURAGEMENT.

BELLE PLAINE, Iowa.

Editor Restitution:—I am in receipt of the first number of the present volume of THE RESTITUTION. I am well pleased with its new dress. Its heading, its clean clear type, its make-up, and its size are all commendable.

Many heretofore have thought that in the quantity of reading matter they were not getting enough for their money paid, but I trust now that there will be no more grumbling from this cause. In short I do not see now but what the paper is all that we could expect and all that we could wish. For success it now only remains for its friends to swell its subscription list to where it will be self-sustaining and a little more remunerative to those who have long labored at low figures. I think money expended in putting the paper into new hands to read in the end is much better for the cause of the Master and for the ultimate success of the paper than direct donations. Let all work for the paper, and petition to the Great Giver of all blessings for the health and strength of its aged editor.

In hope.

G. M. MYERS.

There is a gateway at the entrance of a narrow passage in London over which is written "No burdens allowed to pass through." There is another gate over which is written the same inscription. It is the gate which leads into the kingdom. Through this gate Jesus would have no burdens pass, and yet how many of them we sometimes try to take along with us. The invitation is "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest." Lay it down at the foot of the cross. Lay it down at the entrance of the gate, lay it down at the gate—no burdens to pass through. O, how sweet the thought that there is a gate at which we can lay our burdens down, a place where we can find rest and a way through which sin cannot pass.

Holy habits are golden talent that must be employed and improved. Gracious habits are the candle of the Lord set up in us; and God hath set up those candles in heaven not to idle by, not to sleep by, but to work by and to walk by. Where there is holiness of disposition there must be—nay, there will be—holiness of conversation. A holy heart is always attended with a holy life. You may separate a man from his friend, but you can never separate, though you may distinguish, acts of holiness from the habits of holiness. Now it is certain without this holiness you shall never come to a sight or fruition of God in happiness.

Book Notices.

"Platonism versus Christianity. The Question of Immortality Historically Considered, with special reference to the Apostasy of the Christian Church." To which is annexed an "Essay on the Unity of Man." By J. H. Pettingell A. M. Published by J. D. Brown, (Agent Bible Banner Association), 505 Minor street, Philadelphia, Pa. Price 30 cents. This little book is a preliminary volume, of about 100 pages, to be followed by a larger work in course of preparation which will be entitled "The Life Everlasting: What is it? Whence is it? Whose is it?" This smaller monograph is complete in itself, and treats on the question of Conditional Immortality under four sections: 1. Heathen Speculations; 2. Belief of the Ancient Hebrews; 3. Doctrine of the Primitive Church; 4. Modern Belief. The author of this pamphlet has already become distinguished by a former publication entitled "The Theological Trilemma." We commend the little work as a very comprehensive illustration of the four separate topics ranged under the separate sections.

A new and complete Bible Commentary, Critical, Explanatory and Practical—on the Old and New Testaments. By Robert Jamieson D. D., of Glasgow, Scotland, A. R. Fausset, A. M., York, England, and David Brown, Professor of Theology, Aberdeen. In four large 12 mo. vols. of about 1000 pages each, with illustrations and maps. We have obtained the above work, but have not had sufficient leisure to give it more than a cursory examination. So far, however, as we have read its explanations, we are highly pleased with its expositions. The notes, though brief and compact, are sufficiently full to meet the wants of the majority of readers. The writers avail themselves fully of the new light that modern discovery has thrown upon the Scriptures. It has won unqualified commendations from the most distinguished scholars. Sold only by subscription. Price in cloth $8. In leather or half Morocco $10, for full set. Dr. G. W. Force & Co., publishers, Constantine, Mich.

Poetry.

NEW-YEAR HYMN.

DAVID LAWSON.

Cheer up, my friends and brethren dear,
And welcome in the coming year:
For, swiftly as the years go by,
Is your redemption drawing nigh.

Long and has been the state of things,
And every year more trouble brings:
But hours that lengthen out the night,
They also speed the morning light.

The earth must shake, the seas be toss'd,
The darkness call the heavenly host,
Men's hearts must faint and fall for fear,
But your redemption draweth near.

The signs that Christ will quickly come
Still brighten in surrounding gloom:
As stars peer out with clearer light
While deeper grow the shades of night.

Still in your hearts your Savior have,
Still with your lips his name confess:
And still lift up your heads for joy
That your redemption draweth nigh.

Newtonigh-on-Tay.

Communications.

MAN AS HE WAS, AS HE IS, AND AS HE SHALL BE.

Lecture Delivered Before the Liberal League, Pittsburgh, Pa., Jan. 10, 1891.

DR. J. H. THOMAS.

Mr. Speaker, Ladies and Gentlemen:

We purpose to examine this subject in the light of reason, and Scripture. In the light of Scripture, because it is generally believed that the Scriptures teach that man is immortal, and must therefore live forever in happiness or misery. In the light of reason, that we may show that reason and the Scriptures are hand in hand. Before coming directly to the consideration of the subject I wish to say: that out of a belief in the dogma of man's inherent immortality has grown two theories:

1. That known as the Augustinian theory—"Eternal conscious misery in hell fire for the wicked."

2. That of Origin—"Universal restoration."

Augustinian, the advocate of this theory of hell fire forever, was an ardent disciple of Plato. Plato flourished about 350 years before Christ, and taught that man has a soul which is a particle of the Divine essence, and therefore immortal. Plato held, therefore, that for the good there was an eternal abode of happiness, or "Elysium;" and for the worst of mankind a place of eternal pain and suffering with its streams of fire, called "Tartarus." He also held there was a medium place, or purgatory, which he called the Acherusian Lake into which all those too bad for Elysium but not bad enough for Tartarus were cast, from which they came forth again after a refining process in the fire. Clemens Athenagorus, it is said, was the first to introduce it into Christian theology. He was followed it is said, by Tatian in Mesopotamia, and still later by the famous Tertullian, called "the fierce African Theologian" who advocated the same theory. About thirty years after Tertullian, arose Origin "the great." He discarded the burning hell theory, or "Tartarus," and introduced the theory of "Universal Restoration." He held on to Plato's immortal soul theory, and refining process, but rejected his eternal hell fire.

Origin's theory of universal restoration did not take deep root, and some 160 years after his death, Augustine, Bishop of Hippo, in Africa, rose up in his mighty power and crushed it out of the Christian theology, and revived Plato's Tartarus, or eternal pain and suffering in hell fire.

Since which, the theories of Plato, viz., that man has an immortal soul, that there is "Elysium" or a heaven for the good, a "Tartarus," or burning hell for the very bad, and a "refining process," or purgatory for a medium class, have become the established doctrine of the "Orthodox churches" save the theory of purgatory which has been discarded by Protestant churches, but tenaciously held to by the Roman Catholic church.

The result is, that the world is divided into at least six distinct classes:

First, those who fully accept the theories of Plato, believing in a heaven beyond the bounds of time and place for the immortal souls of the good, a hell fire forever for the souls of the very bad, and a medium place, or purgatory for the souls of those whose friends can afford to pay the Priests for refining prayers, and are known as "Roman Catholics."

Second class, those who have discarded a purgatory, and send the immortal souls of the good directly to a "heaven in the skies" at death, and the souls of the bad to hell, and are known as Protestant Orthodox churches.

Third class, those who have discarded the theory of everlasting hell fire, and received the universal restoration theory of Origin and are known as "Universalists."

The fourth class are those who reject the monstrous doctrine of everlasting pain and suffering in hell fire and believing the Bible teaches it, reject it also and are known as Infidels.

The fifth class are those whose minds, being darkened by the ignorance that is in them, are without hope and without God in the world, and are known as Atheists.

The sixth class are those who hold the truth and believe the righteous will be rewarded at the resurrection of the just with eternal life, as kings and priests in the kingdom of God, yet to be established on the earth, that the unbelieving and disobedient will perish in their own corruption—cease to exist and be known no more for ever. They are not however recognized as Orthodox Christians, though they have always existed, here one, and there one, since the days of Christ.

Having set before you the various theories in reference to man, and their origin, we will proceed to examine the subject in the light of reason and the Scriptures; and we affirm, that man before he transgressed the law of God was sinless but mortal; that he possessed no inherent immortality, and could not live forever by virtue of his creation. These propositions we shall endeavor to sustain as we proceed.

That man was sinless will hardly be questioned, in fact it was a necessity, as sin is the transgression of law—a departure from known duty, or the doing of that which is known to be wrong. All children are sinless and innocent, but by no means virtuous, as virtue is the withstanding of temptation, or the practice of what is right. So man in his infancy, or primeval state, which was in the infancy of the world, was sinless, like a child, he was without character, that of necessity had to be developed. Having no knowledge of good or evil he could become a sinner only by transgression of the law of God, which was simple, and appropriate to his understanding—"thou shalt not eat of the tree of knowledge of good and evil." So long as he remained obedient to this command he was without sin. This will appear clear from Gen. iii. 22, "And the Lord God said, Behold the man is become as one of us to know good and evil."

But not only was man sinless, but he was mortal; though it is contrary to general opinion, and contrary to the universal teaching of the so-called Orthodox churches, yet I am bold to say, it is the truth, sustained by reason, by facts, and by Scripture. It is in accordance with science, it is philosophical and sound. I hold that it was impossible for man to have been created immortal, for immortality is the result of an incorruptible nature and life. Incorruptibility being the nature of God it is therefore the nature possessed by those who are the children of God, upon the universally acknowledged principle of like parent, like child in nature. Therefore, as man can become a child of God only by the development of a godly character, by well doing or belief and obedience, he could not be created incorruptible, as in that case he would have possessed the nature of God before he was godly, and not being incorruptible he could not have been immortal.

Again, there is no evidence outside of revelation, positively none, of man's immortality. Great minds have confessed to this fact. Therefore, if we find that revelation does not teach it we must conclude that man was mortal.

Plato who was among the first Greek philosophers who taught it, with all his reasoning failed to convince his greatest admirers. His argument was as "unsatisfying as it was flattering." Probably no one prized it more than Cicero, yet he says: "I have read Plato's book (the Phædo) over again and again; but I know not how it comes to pass. So long as I am reading I agree with it, but no sooner is the book out of my hands than I begin to doubt whether man is immortal." Why was this? Because as I have already said there is no satisfying evidence of man's immortality in the book of nature. Although the doctrine was taught by Plato, and other heathen philosophers, it does not appear that the mass of the people believed it. One of the Greek poets, lamenting the death of a friend, says:

"The meanest herb we trample in the field,
Or in the garden nurture, when its leaf
In autumn dies, forebodes another spring.
And from brief slumbers wakes to life again.
Man takes no more, man peerless, valiant, wise,
Once chilled to death, sleeps hopeless in the dust
A long unbroken, never-ending sleep."

Look about as we will there is no evidence of man's immortality. The Greek poet felt this, and not understanding that Jesus Christ brought life and immortality to light through the gospel, he naturally believes that man, "once chilled to death, sleeps hopeless in the dust a long unbroken never ending sleep."

All nature gives evidence that man was mortal. Decay, corruption and death, are in harmony with a mortal nature. All animal existence breathe out their breath of life and perish, and I hold it is reasonable with no evidence to the contrary that man was made alike mortal and corruptible—subject to death. Like other animals he lives by eating, drinking and breathing; like other animals he dies. With this the Scriptures fully agree. In fact Solomon is very plain and emphatic.

He says: "That which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts, even one thing befalleth them, as dieth the one, so dieth the other; yea they have all one breath, so that a man hath no preeminence over a beast: all go to one place, all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again.

So we find reason and Scripture in harmony. The Scripture teaches that in death man has no pre-eminence over the beast, that all are of the dust, therefore mortal, and that they all turn to dust again, and reason accords. Moreover the fact which none can deny, that man dies and we lay him away to mother back again to dust, in strict accordance with the words of the Eternal, "Dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return," proves the Scripture true and our reasoning correct.

But again, Man's desire for immortality proves his lack of it. How earnestly we long to live on, even subject to the almost innumerable ills of this present life. There is no desire to let go our hold on life. If there were a consciousness of immortality would this be so? And with many of us does not every atom of our being go out for some assurance of a higher life?

Here again, the apostle tells us (Rom. ii. 7), "That unto those who seek for glory, honor, and immortality, God will render eternal life."

Man certainly cannot possess that which he is commanded to seek for. Comment is unnecessary.

Again the Apostle says (Rom. vi. 23): "The gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord."

We think every reasonable mind will see that if God gives eternal life through Jesus Christ then man could not live forever by virtue of his creation—could not have been created immortal in any sense. This is in perfect harmony with what the apostle says in 2 Tim. i. 10, "That Jesus Christ abolished death and brought life and immortality to light through the gospel."

We see by this that in bringing life and immortality to light it was necessary that death be abolished—that death brought upon the world by Adam's transgression. Man, being mortal, he was locked in the prison house of death—the grave, until Jesus Christ abolished death and rose triumphant bringing with him the keys of death and the grave; thus opening up a way from mortality to immortality to all who believe and obey the gospel: but just here allow me to say, it will not do to accept and believe anything, or everything, that is called gospel; neither will it do to be indifferent as to what the gospel is. There is but one gospel, as there is but but "one faith;" and that is the gospel which Jesus and the apostles preached which was "the glad tidings of the kingdom of God and things concerning the name of Jesus."

Therefore one must have a comprehensive knowledge of the kingdom and things concerning the name, believe and obey them, before he can obtain that immortality brought to light through the gospel.

But to return, we find that reason and Scripture are hand in hand. Man desires immortality—desires to live forever, his own consciousness tells that he is wasting away.

This mystical dogma of immortal-soulism is unsatisfying, everything around him indicates that he is mortal, hence his longing for a higher and more enduring life. The Scriptures recognize this longing and assures him that death has been abolished, and life and immortality, which he so much desires, has been brought to light.

Glorious hope, who would not embrace it and live in the coming ages yet to be elaborated by a hand that's all Divine when the whole earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord, and men shall delight themselves in abundance of peace?

I submit then that man, before his transgression was a sinless but mortal being, that so far as we have examined the subject, the position is sustained by reason and Scripture; and we would say further, that there is not a passage of Scripture from Genesis to Revelations that sustains the dogma of immortal-soulism, but on the other hand the Scriptures abound with passages plainly teaching that man by nature is mortal. We call attention to a few. First to the account given of man's creation in Gen. ii. 7.

It reads: And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life (chayim—lives) and man became a living soul.

Here we are told that man was made of the dust, that is, he was of the earth earthy; and caused to inhale the breath of lives, that is, the breath of all lives, or the breath which all living creatures breathe that live by breathing; in other words, the breath that is common to all living creatures. Hence like all other living creatures, he was mortal.

Paul plainly sustains this position in 1 Cor. xv. 45. The first man, Adam, was made a living soul, the last Adam was made a quickening Spirit. The first man is of the earth earthy, the second man the Lord from heaven. Here Paul contrasts the earthy man, with the Spirit man; in other words, the corruptible mortal man, with the incorruptible immortal man.

I ask, what language could more clearly express man's mortality? But some have said the breath of life was the immortal soul. I answer, the word does not say so. It was, on the contrary, that which gave life to the man. Whoever will read it carefully will notice that Adam lived after receiving the breath: as soon as he inhaled the breath, he—the man, not the breath—became a living soul: therefore it was the breath that gave him life.

But we are left in no doubt on this point. Job says the Spirit of God hath made me, and the breath of the Almighty hath given me life.

Again Isaiah says, "Cease ye from man whose breath is in his nostrils." And David says, "Thou takest away their breath, they die and return to their dust."

We need no further evidence that the breath of life is not an immortal soul, but rather it is that which gives life to all creatures. However the mortality of man is plainly proved by one passage alone. We do not require to look further. It is found in Gen. iii 22, and reads as follows:

"Behold the man has become as one of us to know good and evil; and now lest he put forth his hand and take also of the tree of life and live forever, therefore the Lord God sent him forth from the garden of Eden, to till the ground from whence he was taken." Without partaking of the tree of life he had no power to live forever.

This must close the evidence on this point, being sufficient to show, not only that reason and Scripture are hand in hand, but that the Bible emphatically teaches that man in his primeval state, was sinless and mortal.

We will now proceed to notice man as he is since the transgression. We hold that a development of character was a natural and unavoidable sequence of man's existence. It was therefore necessary that he be placed on trial, and told what he ought to do. Accordingly this was done. He was allowed access to the tree of life, but forbidden the tree of knowledge of good and evil. Had he continued to believe and obey God he would have had constant access to the tree of life, which eventually would have constituted him immortal. His mortal and corruptible nature would have been changed to an incorruptible, immortal nature.

This is clear from the passage we have just quoted, Gen. iii. 23, for there we are told that after he sinned he was put out of the garden, and the tree of life guarded lest he should take of it and live forever, showing most clearly that the eating of the tree of life would bring a change from mortality to immortality. But man disobeyed God and done that which he was forbidden to do; he took of the forbidden fruit and so transgressed the law of God. Being cast out of the garden and his access to the tree of life cut off, he became at once a son of death, and being mortal he in time returned again to dust.

We see therefore that man gained nothing by the fall, but on the other hand he lost. Before he transgressed, by continuing in obedience he would not have died, for the reason already given; because he had access to the tree of life; but since he transgressed he must die, even though he walk in obedience to the law of God, yet he must die, and wait for a resurrection from the dead.

We see then, that Adam, by one act, brought upon himself and society, the dark oblivion of an endless night. But God, in the plenitude of his mercy, and loving kindness, provided a new way of life—an escape from the gloom and darkness of death to incorruptibility and life—to an endless existence in the Paradise of God.

Such then is man since he transgressed, a sinner corruptible and mortal. Let no one flatter himself that he is immortal and will live hereafter, unless he seek for immortality in God's own appointed way. He will be "brought to the grave and remain in the tomb."

I submit that this is reasonable, philosophical and in accordance with all we know of man, and the plain teaching of Scripture, as I have already shown, and will further show by asking you to note this fact, that the word immortal occurs but once in the Bible, and is applied to God.

It is found in 1 Tim. i. 17. "Now unto the King, Eternal, Immortal, the only wise God, be honor and glory forever and ever."

But you will notice again: the word immortality occurs but five times, and is never applied to man, but to God, or held forth as something for man to seek after.

It first occurs in Rom. ii. 7: "To them who by patient continuance in well-doing seek for glory, honor, and immortality."

Again 1 Cor. xv. 53: "For this corruptible must put on incorruption and this mortal must put on immortality."

Again 2 Tim. i. 10: "By the appearing of our Savior, Jesus Christ, who hath abolished death, and brought life and immortality to light through the gospel."

Again 1 Tim. iv. 15: "Until the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ, which in his times shall show who is the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings and Lord of lords, who only hath immortality, dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto; whom no man hath seen nor can see."

Such is the plain Scripture testimony concerning immortality, that it is inherent only in him who dwelleth in the light which no man can approach unto, and which is held forth for man to seek after. Is it not strange that men will continue to teach that man is immortal, and must by virtue of his creation live forever in happiness or misery in the face of such Scripture testimony?

But we must hasten to the consideration of man as he is in death. It is evident if man is mortal that he must be unconscious in death, for no dead man can think; as consciousness, or mind, is the result of brain power or force in a living organism; unconsciousness must therefore result when that organism falls into decay, or is chilled in death. Our every day experiences prove this to be the case: all thought and consciousness ceases with the expiring breath. This is also the plain teaching of Scripture.

David says Psa. vi. 5: "Return, O Lord deliver my soul, oh save me for thy mercy's sake; for in death there is no remembrance of thee; in the grave who shall give thee thanks?"

Job says: xiv. 11, 12. As the waters fail from the sea, and the flood decayeth and drieth up, so man lieth down and riseth not until the heavens be no more; they shall not awake nor be raised out of their sleep.

Again David says; Ps. cxv. 17, The dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence.

Again he says; Ps. lxxxviii 10, 13; Shall thy wonders be known in the dark, and thy righteousness in the land of forgetfulness?

Again, Ps. cxlvi. 4; His breath goeth forth, in that very day his thoughts perish.

And Solomon says; ix. 5, 6, 10; The living know that they shall die, but the dead know not anything, * * * their love and their hatred and their envy is now perished.

Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave whither thou goest.

No further testimony is needed to show that the Scriptures agree with me in saying that man in death, is unconscious.

What a fearful contrast with the ecclesiastical teaching of the day! I leave it with you to say which you will believe—God, or man.

We now proceed to the consideration of the last point. Having found that man was and is mortal, corruptible, "a son of death;" that in death, or the grave, he is asleep—unconscious—knowing nothing—that immortality, or eternal life is a gift of God to those who seek for it—who by faith and obedience develop a God-like character, it follows, that whoever fails to comply with the conditions—fails to seek for it in God's appointed way, must perish—cease to exist forever.

This also, is plainly taught in the Scriptures. Paul says; Rom. vi. 23; "The wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord."

Ezekiel says; xviii. 4, 20; "The soul that sinneth it shall die." James says: i. 15, "Sin when it is finished, bringeth forth death." Job says; xxi. 27-32, "The wicked is reserved to the day of destruction. He shall be brought forth to the day of wrath, * * * he shall be brought to the grave, and remain in the tomb." Paul says: 2 Thess. i. 6, 9, "They that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power." This agrees with the words of David; Ps. cxlv. 20; "The Lord preserveth all them that love him, but all the wicked will he destroy."

And Mat. iii. 12; "He will gather his wheat into the garner, he will burn up the chaff with fire unquenchable."

Thus shall be the end of that part of mankind who fail to obtain that immortality which has been brought to light through the gospel. "They shall go away into everlasting punishment, which is death, from which there is no release, a "land of forgetfulness" from which they never return.

What a fearful contrast with popular teaching, which consigns the wicked to conscious pain and suffering in hell forever; a doctrine founded on the lie of the serpent—"thou shalt not surely die," and that too in the face of thirty-two texts that say the wicked shall perish; thirty texts that the wicked will God destroy; forty texts that the wicked will be destroyed; eleven texts that the wicked shall be devoured; twenty texts that the wicked shall be consumed; fourteen texts that the wicked shall be burned up as thorns, as briars, as tares, as stubble and as chaff; fifty texts which say the wicked shall become extinct. In all, two hundred and thirty times declared in Scripture that the wicked shall be destroyed without remedy—root and branch—cease to exist and become as though they had not been.

But what awaits the righteous? I answer unspeakable joys, a wreath of life, an everlasting inheritance of all things. For says the apostle: "The wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." Rom. vi. 23. Paul says again "God will render eternal life to those who seek for glory, honor and (incorruptibility," Diog.) Rom. ii. 7. The Savior says: "This is the will of him that sent me, that every one seeing (discerning) the Son and believing into him may have eternal life, and I will raise him up at the last day." John vi. 40.

Again James says: "The man who endures temptation shall receive a crown of life."

Such is the Scripture testimony, and I submit that it is reasonable. Every atom of our nature goes out after a higher life; a consciousness that we are corruptible, mortal, begets within us a strong desire for more enduring existence. But not only is immortality, or eternal life the reward of the righteous, but more, far more. "He that liveth forever shall inherit all things."

Eternal life without a dwelling place, without a purpose, would be no reward; it is therefore inseparably connected with the "land" inheritance.

David says, Psa. xxxvii. "The righteous shall inherit the earth and delight themselves in the abundance of peace." Again David says: "The righteous shall inherit the land and dwell therein forever."

But this is not all, for Jesus says: "To him that overcometh, will I grant to set with me in my throne, even as I overcame and am set down with my Father in his throne." Again Rev. ii. 26: "He that overcometh and keepeth my works unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations." Again Rev. v. 10: "Thou hast made us unto our God kings and priests, and we shall reign on the earth."

Such shall be the reward of those who overcome evil with good; in other words, who obtain immortality by a willing obedience to God's appointed way of life. And such is the clear testimony of Scripture concerning man, as he was, as he is, and as he shall be.

In closing I submit, that it is a reasonable and philosophical solution of the great problem of man; not only sustained by reason, but emphatically taught by that book we call the Bible; which sets at naught the vain philosophy of men, and the foolishness of the Greeks, who attempted a solution of the problem by the dim light of reason alone; and instead of holding forth for the disobedient and unbelieving, a conscious existence of pain and suffering in the subterranean recesses of Tartarus, forever associated with spirites, hobgoblins and devils, the Bible exhibits a death from which there is no release—an everlasting cutting off from life. Instead of the gloom and darkness of an endless night for all of Adam's race, it exhibits for the believing and obedient, an immortal crown of life, radiant with all the glories of an age made perfect by a "hand that's all divine."

Instead of a visionary Elysium, "beyond the bounds of time and space," for the good, it exhibits for the believing and obedient, an eternal inheritance of the vine-clad hills of Judea's land, with a dominion which shall extend from the rivers that will then flow of Jerusalem, to the ends of the earth brought back from the blight of sin, and blossoming into the Paradise of God.

DIED.

UNDERWOOD—At St. Charles, Ill. Sunday, Jan. 18, 1891, Sister Emma Underwood, aged thirty years six teen months, of consumption.

Sister Emma was the eldest daughter of Brother and Sister E. Underwood. She was born in England, and came to this country the year following, settling at St. Charles, where she has since with her parents resided. She was baptized in the summer of 1883, at Geneva, three miles from St. Charles, on Fox River, by Brother Henry B. Pierce. Though living two miles from the place of meeting, she has been a faithful attendant, having to walk most of the time, and within the last year. As she said in the course of her death, her father and mother and brothers at first, then were appointed by their little sister's daughter, who, observing them to use in their prayers called "Grandpa, Grandma will bring Aunt Emma back again." Alas, too, her father and mother, her sister, and her brothers, are sad and were loath to have Jesus, the first-out of our fatally elect, have the blessed assurance that Jesus will bring her back again, given us hope, and we cannot but weep when we think of her sweet voice without expectation. Emma was one of the few of whom we can say: "Everybody who knew her loved her." The funeral took place at the family residence, on Tuesday, Jan. 20, Brother Thomas Wilson, of Chicago, speaking to the friends assembled.

A. R. UNDERWOOD.

Dec. 22, 1890, Jennie M. McCleary, aged 27 years and 4 days. She had been baptized about 26 years previous to her death and about 2 years before her marriage. Funeral discourse by the Editor. Her last end was peace and her rest the sweet sleep in Jesus.

TRUNKEY—In Chicago, Ill., Jan. 1, 1891, of Scarlet Fever, Little Margaret Ann, youngest daughter of brother and sister Trunkey, aged four years and five months.

This is the second time that this dread scourge of children has entered the happy house of our dear brother and sister, and robbed them of a lovely child. Death to them is nothing but an "angel of mercy", and their only hope lies in the power and promise of the Life Giver, to restore to them their buried treasures. The deepest sympathies of their numerous friends in Chicago, and elsewhere, are kindly extended to them in their affliction. Brethren Reed and Schoonover were present at the funeral and made appropriate remarks, offering Christian consolation and comfort from the Scriptures. May these precious promises soon be verified, by the return of our Redeemer, and the gathering of his redeemed from the hand of the enemy.

L. M. SHEPHERSON.

Fell asleep in the dear Redeemer, my beloved wife, Mary Reed, aged eighty-three.

Asleep in Jesus, blessed sleep,
From which none ever wake to weep;
A calm and undisturbed repose,
Unbroken by the dread of foes.

But few if any have more highly adorned the Christian name. Intelligent, earnest, faithful; possessing a loving heart, conscientiously honest in all matters, especially little truths, she was a perfect Christian as near as poor fallen humanity can be; sanctified through the truth. She was for many years a member of the M. E. Church, when the second advent of Christ was preached in 1843, she hesitatingly embraced it, went forward step by step, till she her was anchored in the one Abrahamic Faith, she was baptized by Brother Newman, at Seneca Falls, N. Y. Ten years ago last November we moved from Cleveland, O., to the mountains of North Carolina, where we performed the work of missionaries. How well our work has been done let the future and those who have been gathered out of the Gentiles testify. In all our pioneerings for ten years to proclaim the good news of the coming kingdom, she was my constant companion, my faithful and trusted friend; wise in counsel, prudent and kind in admonition, patient under hardship and fatigue, and they were not a few; but once in ten years did she miss going with me, and then on account of sickness. But those labors are over; she quietly sleeps, awaiting the silent message. The Master has come and calleth for thee. It will be but a very little while when she will hear the still small voice, Arise, come up higher, and enter upon a large reward. But I am left alone for a little while longer in an unfriendly world to do battle for the truth. It cannot be but a little while. The Master will soon come or else I must follow my dear companion into the dark and silent grave. You that are acquainted and love to pray remember us in our afflictions. We had been here but ten days, the weather being so very cold that we suffered much. January 3, she was stricken with paralysis (from which she soon recovered, but had a second stroke. She was unconscious four days, and when conscious—returned she was not able to speak. She remained till the 6th, when she calmly breathed out her spirit, the breath of life, to God who gave it. We regret that there was no one of like faith to speak at the funeral. The burial service of the Episcopal church was read—the best we could do. The neighbors have been very kind to us in our affliction. They have our gratitude and heart-felt thanks. We praise the God of Israel for his goodness.

NEWELL REED.

Washington, D. C.

RESTITUTION FUND.

Amount previously published	192 19
"Right hand"	2 10
F P Fairley	1 25
A Thompson	1 00
D H Lincoln	5 00
H Hitchcock	1 00
J H Bean	2 00
W W Brick	5 00
F Malcolm	1 00
E Sandell	2 00
Dr R V Hall	5 00
J D Calder	1 00
Geo Slade	50
Levi Bogle	1 00
"A friend"	50 00
E M Cox	1 00
Franklin Sharron	2 00
G M Shelby	25
T F Miller	2 00
Mrs H L Vickery	5 00
Wm I Chase	1 75
Rebecca McLain	5 00
Owen Coffin	5 00
Joel Coffin	5 00
Hubert West	5 00

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The Lord willing I will be at King's Corner the second Sunday in January, commencing Thursday night before; the third Sunday at Steelesville, commencing Friday night before. The first and second Sundays in February in Edgar county, Ill. Thursday night before the first Sunday at New Hope schoolhouse; the second Sunday at the Wells schoolhouse, commencing on Thursday night before.

J. S. HAYES.

Decisive Battles of the World.

Creasy's extremely interesting volume narrating the history of the fifteen decisive battles of the world, those few battles of which a contrary event would have essentially veiled the drama of the world in all its subsequent scenes, is highly esteemed by all readers of history. It has a long time been on Harper's list as one of their standard books, at the price of $1.50. Now it is issued in a very handsome cloth-bound volume, by the American Book Exchange, New York, at the nominal price of 50 cents. It forms one of their Acme Library of History, which includes Macaulay's England, $1.25 (reduced from $7.50). Gibbon's Rome, $2.00 (reduced from $5). Hollin's Ancient History, $1.75; Froissarts Chronicles, $1.50, and to which list will soon be added, at equally low prices, Grote's Greece, Green's (larger) England, Mommsen's Rome, Masson's Guizot's France, Carlyle's French Revolution, Schiller's Thirty Years' war, and others. Catalogues of the standard low-priced books of the Literary Revolution will be sent on application to the American Book Exchange, Tribune Building, New York.

Poetry.

THE COMING CONQUEROR.

BISHOP MEGER.

And who is he, the vast, the awful form,
Girt with the whirlwind, sandaled with the storm?
A western cloud around his limbs is spread,
His crown a rainbow, and the sun his head.
To highest heaven he lifts his kingly hand,
And treads at once the ocean and the land.
And hark! his voice, amid the thunder's roar,
His dreadful voice, that these shall be no more.
Lo! thrones are fell, and every realm is theirs;
Let cherub hands the golden centre pare.
Earth's utmost bounds own fear the awful sway.
The mountains worship and the seas obey.
Nor sun nor moon they serve, nor day nor night,
God is their temple, and the Lamb their light.
And shall not Israel's nurse, exulting come,
Shall the gla l beam and claim their ancient home?
On David's throne shall David's offspring reign,
And the dry bones be warmed with life again.
Hark! white-robed round the throne the harpers raise,
And the Seven Seals around the sceptre praise.
Ten thousand harps attune the joyful song,
Ten thousand thousand raise the exalting pæan loud:
Worthy the Lamb, omnipotent to save,
Who died, who lives triumphant o'er the grave!

Selections.

The Rainbow

LIGHT FROM THE EAST.

JAMES HOLDING

Even the secular news-paper is ever and anon throwing light on the Book and its story. And it is worth the labor of the Christian student to take up the scraps of intelligence from Bible lands which come to hand from time to time. Here is one from the Daily Telegraph:

"About five weeks ago a fire broke out in the little town of Urfa, better known to the European public by its Biblical name of Ur, and highly venerated throughout the Orient as the birthplace of Abraham. The house in which that celebrated patriarch was born is still standing in Urfa; it is called 'Bet Chalil Allah,' the house of God's friend—and hundreds of pious pilgrims visit it annually.

When the conflagration took place on the 24th of January, many of the inhabitants of Urfa took refuge in Abraham's dwelling, and carried thither all their valuables, persuaded that the flames would respect the structure in which so holy a personage first saw the light of day.

Strange to say, their faith in the inviolability of this ancient sanctuary was justified by events; for while the fire raged all night long in Urfa, destroying a large number of houses in the vicinity of 'Bet Chalil Allah,' that edifice, as well as one or two buildings immediately adjacent to it, remained absolutely unharmed. This triumphant vindication of its protecting virtue has, so it would appear, greatly enhanced its reputation for sanctity; and doubtless the pecuniary results of the present year's pilgrimages will enable the Urfites to surmount their losses by fire in a highly satisfactory manner."

Among the different names which the birthplace of the father of the faithful has borne three deserve notice: Ur, Edessa, and Urpha.

When Terah, the father of Abram, left it to go towards Canaan it bore the first name. It was "Ur of the Chaldees." When Christ and his apostles were engaged in the active ministry it was called Edessa, and was the royal residence of a race of kings called the Algari, a name which was common to them, like Pharaoh to the Kings of Egypt. The name bears on its front the meaning—Father of Strangers or Sojourners. Was it given them because of their paternal treatment of a people dwelling among their subjects, whose real home was far away in a distant land? It would seem so.

Now ever since the carrying captive of the ten tribes of Israel, and then the two tribes, Judah and Benjamin, a great many of the Hebrews clung to Mesopotamia, and in that land, what place was so likely to draw them to itself as Ur, where their venerated father Abram was born? Surely no spot, out of the Holy Land, could have such tender associations clinging round it as Edessa.

Nor could the men to whom the command was given, "Go ye to the lost sheep of the House of Israel," overlook that part of the flock which dwelt in and about Ur, alias Edessa.

Besides those ancient names there is the modern one, for the town is now called Urpha. This is a restoration with an added syllable, pha. Grecian dominion over those lands had given rise to the new name, Edessa; but the time came when the mixed race, whom we know as Saracens, cast out the Greek of the sons of Japhet with great ease, and restored the ancient language to its due place. Then it was the Ur reappeared in its modern form Urpha.

There are three classes of people who claim filial relation to Abraham. Traceable genealogy to Ishmael, the eldest son of Abram, the Arab upholders of Mohamedanism claim Abram as the "Father of the Faithful."

Then the literal seed of Jacob are most emphatic in the assertion, "We have Abraham to our father."

Besides these, the intelligent Christian has the authority of Paul for saying, "Since we are Christ's we are Abraham's seed and heirs according to promise." Gal. iii. 29.

Is it then a thing to reject with contempt, when we are told the house in which the great natural and spiritual patriarch of Arabs, Hebrews, and Christians, was born is held in such esteem that pilgrimages are made to it every year?

The relationship of that great man is not even exhausted when we have named the three people above enumerated. Besides Ishmael and Isaac he was the father of Zimran and Jokshan and Medan and Midian and Ishbak and Shuah. These settled in the east of Canaan, and we know that Midian became a very considerable people.

In an age like ours, when the solidarity of peoples is so much talked of, and special stress is laid upon breed and birth, as tending to seek unity, it ought not to surprise a thinker to learn that in a land where so much of Abraham's blood is circulating his name is held in honor. Since human nature is what it is, can we despise a pedigree which these Eastern people trace back nearly four thousand years? But this very pedigree takes its rise in Ur of the Chaldees, near the head waters of the Euphrates, and not far from the place where the Romans and Crassus their general met with a disastrous defeat from the Parthian army.

We shall perhaps be reminded that a very wide gap existed in the flow of this sympathy for Abram's birthplace, during the time from his leaving it, to the time when his posterity were carried captive int that region.

We are prepared to admit the fact, but this raises the question, How came the connection to be restored?"

In answer to this question we ask the reader to admit, just as a "working theory," that when the Hebrews found themselves captives in Mesopotamia they remembered that it was the land of Abram's nativity; that they found out the very place where he was born; and that when the Persians overthrew the Chaldean power the Hebrews became free to change their place of abode in the land, or to leave it altogether. We know that many of them chose to remain there. Then is it not reasonable that many of them would gather to the spot where their father was born and cluster around its site, or if the house was yet standing, for the art of building lasting edifices was early known in that land, would see to its repair? Is there any after light to support this view? We maintain that there is.

A Bible containing all the Scriptures accepted by Protestants as of Divine authority, with small exceptions, is now in our hands in the Hebrew tongue, as Luke, John, and chief Rabbi Adler all call its language, which the Syrian Christians have always stated to be the product of the joint exertions of Jude the apostle, whom they call by his surname Thady, and Abgarus, King of Edessa, his contemporary.

This Bible is called the Peshito, or the open, plain record of the Word of God. Nothing has ever induced these Syrian Christians to vary in their tradition of the origin of their Bible, or caused them to swerve from their attachment to it. For even now, where their congregations do not all understand its language, they have it read aloud and then interpreted to them.

The New Testament was finished last for this edition, and yet that part was completed before Peter wrote his second letter, before John's latter two epistles were written, and even before Jude, its editor, wrote his short original letter.

No scholar who contends strongly for its having been translated from the Greek, can produce the original from which it is said to have been made. Nor can he tell what became of it. Further, he can find no ancient author who says he had seen the Greek original which supplied the text of the Peshito. And, once again, we hold that none of the Greek critics can lay his hand upon one of the six hundred and seventy MSS. which have been collated to supply a Greek text for our revisers and say, "Here is a manuscript codex used in translating the Peshito." Well may it be so, when there never existed such a codex. It must be so, if not the preaching of the gospel only, but its collected writings were given to "the Jew first" as they must have been.

It was Jesus who spake the words, "Behold I send you prophets, wise men and writers, and some of them ye shall kill and crucify, and some of them ye shall scourge in your synagogues and persecute from city to city; that upon you may come all the righteous blood shed upon the earth, from the blood of righteous Abel unto the blood of Zacharias the son of Barachias, whom ye slew between the temple and the altar."

To whom were these words spoken? Not to Gentiles; they were never permitted between the temple and the altar. It is to the multitude at Jerusalem who had come to the Passover from every land of their dispersion, that Jesus Christ is speaking.

Writers were to appear in time to test their character as well as preachers before their overthrow; but the war which ended in that overthrow began A. D. 66. By that time they ought to have had the writings before them. And so they had in the Peshito.

But an edition suiting this prediction must have appeared too early for the Revelation, written A. D. 96. Nay, it would need to be out before 2d. Peter was written, which indicates that he had obtained a copy of "all Paul's letters and the other Scriptures." Does he not urge believers to be mindful both of the prophets' words and those of the apostles? But as the inner must be sought in their writings, does it not be one a natural conclusion that the words of the latter must be so too?

This is most reasonable when compared with 2 Pet. i. 15. 15. where he is intent on securing copies of both his letters to be perused when he is dead. Why then is the first epistle in the Peshito and not the second epistle? Simply because there was urgent reason to issue the Testament before he was moved to write the second letter. And that urgent reason, it seems to us rose out of the great cause Sanhedrin versus Paul the Apostle to the Gentiles which lasted five or six years, and moved the whole Roman Empire.

Then must the story of Christ's life, death and resurrection be sent forth for perusal where preachers could not go. And especially must the Hebrews have the means of testing his claims by comparing the New Testament with the Old.

Then such efforts had been made to damage Paul, even with Hebrew Christians, that the story of his labors and sufferings, with the writings of Peter, James and John were needed by the Hebrew believers to enable them to know his worth and appreciate his work. All this the Peshito would have to accomplish among them, and then remain of permanent service.

Now, this being so, we come upon the time of Jude's alleged activity in securing the edition in Syrine, so we may account for additional notes at the end of John, for these editors are inspired men; also for the "Acts" being sent out with such a tantalizing conclusion.

It could not wait to tell how Paul would fare at Rome when before the High Court.

A later document briefly notices his first appearance before Cæsar; but Luke's history was earlier in the work and could not wait for the trial. Even the last two verses of Acts, like the two last of John, may be from the Editor's pen, for they reach two years later than the verse before them.

Now, so noble a Bible would suit Hebrews at Edessa and enable them to become confirmed in the faith of Christ and to learn what that faith involved as taught by Paul.

Is there evidence that the written word bore marked fruit? Scholars who hold the view that the Peshito was only a translation made by uninspired men, nevertheless state that the Syrian churches flourished most in the latter part of the first century, and in the earlier part of the second, and the Christians at Edessa had a temple for divine worship erected after the model of that at Jerusalem." T. H. Horne, Vol. II., Part I, Ch. 3, § 5.

At this point may we not see the building forth of Hebrew interest in the native home of Abram?

Who but Hebrew converts would choose to build a temple like "the holy and beautiful house" now in ruins? Gentile converts might not have cared for such a model, but Hebrew ones would, and their influence is here seen. Then how comes this temple to be built on the ground once occupied by Abram's family?

We read not of any other reproduction of the ruined temple in any other city or country except that of Onias in Egypt long before, which never was cordially accepted by the Jews at large, nor by any of them until he had brought from the World seeming support for its erection and use.

Why, then, a Christian temple like the house of the Lord at Jerusalem, at Ur of the Chaldees, and not elsewhere?

Now admit that this place had become a favorite settlement of the exiled Hebrews, when the gospel reached Edessa, and that by the help of Jude's Bible, the Peshito, they had embraced Christianity, and that Abram became dear to all converts as taught by Paul, who found that they were all his children by faith, and then you only need security, and time, and money, and a good measure of enlightenment on their part, and the work can be done. Then even the Saracen or the Turk will spare the early home of Abram, and thus regard for it will be diffused all around.

When the Christian temple was destroyed by Ishmael's children, even then the Bet Chalil Allah, or House of the Friend of God, won't be protected from destruction.

The Presbyterian.

FORGOTTEN AND UNKNOWN.

Here is a picture of the scene at the New York wharf upon the arrival of the steamship "Amerique" from Europe lately.

A great crowd is gathered. Policemen are on duty keeping the people back of the space within the parallel lines marked by two cords. The crowd press roughly on each other. Several well-dressed but excited Frenchmen are on the qui vive of expectation. To the front of the wharf entrance are a number of private carriages, the boxes of which are occupied by liveried servants. A buzz of excitement is presently hushed by the approach of a tall, slender figure muffled in furs, followed by a train of a dozen of female forms, accompanied by gentlemen whose breath emits an odor of champagne. There is a great cheer and the first tall figure bows. There is another cheer, much kissing, and a general buzz of conversation mostly in French, signifies those of the spectators who are ignorant of the language. After the embracing and kissing are over the procession re-forms, and the fur-clad figure in front proceeds to enter an elaborately appointed carriage—the policeman on either side doing his best to keep the throng at a respectful distance.

Close by this elegant vehicle a sorrowful looking woman, whose face is furrowed by care and creeping age, whose hair is streaked with many silver lines, whose faded-looking silk cloak has a rent in it, newly made by the pressure of the dense throng, looks on in mournful wonder. It can be clearly seen that she is in failing health. She is supported by a plainly-attired gentleman who has come to meet her, for she also is a passenger by the same vessel. Her escort is anxious to get away from the scene, for the lady is suffering; but the policeman requests him to keep back until Sarah Bernhardt enters her carriage, followed by several others which drive off amid the cheers of the spectators.

Then Mrs. Lincoln, the widow of the murdered President of the United States, is permitted to pass on, and in company with her nephew enters a hack, and she also drives off, unrecognized, unknown, and ill. But there was more honor in being the escort of that sorrowful and grief-stricken lady than there would have been in any other act which demands the ordinary politeness of a gentleman. And to compare the two women as being in any sense upon equal footing would be an insult to every citizen who has a tithe of respect for the memory of Abraham Lincoln.

MEASUREMENT OF THOUGHT.

A Wonderful Invention—Some Highly Interesting Tests.

In the course of Professor Barker's remarks before the American Association of Science in Boston, he said:

An important fact concerning nervous action is that its amount may be measured by the quantity of blood consumed in its performance. Dr. Mosso, of Turin, has devised an apparatus called the plethysmograph—drawings of which were exhibited at the London apparatus exhibition of 1876—designed for measuring the volume of an organ. The forearm for example, being the organ to be experimented on, is placed in a cylinder of water and tightly enclosed. A rubber tube connects the interior of the cylinder with the recording apparatus. With the electric circuit by which the stimulus was applied to produce contraction were two keys, one of which was a dummy. It was noticed that, after using the active key several times, producing varying current strengths, the curve sank as before on pressing down the inactive key. Since no real effect was produced, the result was caused by the imagination, blood passing from the body to the brain in the act.

To test further the effect of mental action, Dr. Pagliani, whose arm was in the apparatus, was requested to multiply 267 by 8, mentally, and to make a sign when he had finished. The recorded curve showed very distinctly how much blood the brain took to perform the operation. Hence the plethysmograph is capable of measuring the relative amount of mental power required by different persons to work out the same mental problem. Indeed, Mr. Gaskell suggests the use of this instrument in the examination-room to find out, in addition to the amount of knowledge a man possesses, how much effort it causes him to produce any particular result of brain-work. Dr. Mosso relates that while the apparatus was set up in his room in Turin, a classical man came in to see him. He looked very contemptuously upon it, and asked of what use it could be, saying that it couldn't do anybody any good. Dr. Mosso replied, "Well, now I can tell you by that whether you can read Greek as easily as you can Latin." As the classicist would not believe it, his arm was put into the apparatus, and he was given a Latin book to read. A very slight sinking of the curve was seen him. This produced immediately a much deeper curve. He had asserted before that it was quite as easy for him to read Greek as Latin, and that there was no difficulty in doing either. Mr. Mosso, however, was able to show him that he was laboring under a delusion.

Again this apparatus is so sensitive as to be useful for ascertaining how much a person is dreaming. When Dr. Pagliani went to sleep in the apparatus, the effect upon the resulting curve was very marked indeed. He said afterward that he had been in a sound sleep and remembered nothing of what passed in the room that he had been absolutely unconscious; and yet every little movement in the room, such as the slamming of a door, the barking of a dog, and even the knocking down of a bit of glass, were all marked on the curve. Sometimes he moved his lips and gave other evidence that he was dreaming; they were all recorded on the curve. the amount of blood required in dreaming diminishing that in the extremities. The emotions too left a record. When only a student came into the room, little or no effect appeared in the curve. But when Prof. Ludwig himself came in, the arteries in the arm of the person in the apparatus contracted quite as strongly as upon a very decided electrical stimulation.

Brevities.

Dr. Schliemann has presented his collection of Trojan antiquities to the Emperor of Germany.

It is believed that the number of copies of the Bible in circulation has increased from 5,000,000 at the commencement of the present century, to 148,000,000 copies at the present time.

Innovations are creeping in among the Friends. For centuries the Yearly Epistles of Friends have spoken against the visible administration of the ordinances; now a prominent Friend in England has been baptized, and his monthly meeting, after due consideration of his case, retains him as a member. This is considered as giving sanction to the innovation.

The Protestants of Germany are beginning to prepare to celebrate the four hundredth anniversary of the birth of Luther, which occurs Nov. 10, 1883. The principal celebration will be held at Wartburg, where Luther completed his translation of the Bible. A general committee has been formed, of which Dr. Kuster, Burgomaster of Eisenach, is chairman.

The last Bible colporter has, for the present, been driven out of Tyrol, a province of Austria. A spy was on his track for days, until it was possible to prove that he had been guilty of selling the Scriptures. He was then arrested and fined, his books and license confiscated, and himself dismissed from court with the assurance that he could never again be permitted to labor in Tyrol.

The Turkish Minister of foreign affairs has officially announced that hereafter no Moslem shall be allowed to leave his religion and become a Christian, under penalty of death; that no one shall be allowed to teach doctrines subversive of Islam; and that any foreigner engaged in such teaching may be arrested and be imprisoned without consulting the foreign consuls or ambassadors.

A pamphlet written in Arabic is making a great stir in Constantinople. The work—which bear the character of a clandestine publication, since it is not to be found at any of the booksellers'—has been written by two sheiks from Mecca, who came to Constantinople on purpose to complete and publish it. It is destined for distribution in all Mussulman countries. Among other things, it demonstrates the sovereignty and legitimate authority of the Caliph over all Mohammedans, to whatever Government they may be subject. It may, therefore, be considered an essentially political work, intended to strengthen and extend the power of the Sultan. It is asserted that several millions of copies have already been sent to Algeria, Tunis, and Morocco, and that a large number are to be introduced into India and the eastern provinces of Russia.

The sea of Azoff has a new island about 100 feet in diameter, and ten feet above the surface of the water. This most recent addition to the territory of Russia is the result of some subterranean disturbance. The birth of the island was attended with a marine eruption and the appearance of a fissure in the land on the shore near by.

There is a strange rumbling noise audible upon the Red River, Texas, and as the locality is fifty miles from any railroad it cannot be attributed to passing trains. The inhabitants are much excited over it, believing that it presages volcanic action. It resembles the sound of a railway train, the roar of a distant waterfall and at night the meaning of the wind through a pine forest. Its range, which is not changeable, is from north to north-west, and it recalls the ominous sounds described by Humboldt as preceding the great earthquake of 1759 in Mexico, when the volcanic mountain of Jorullo was upheaved. Scientific investigation will probably be ordered by the State authorities.

Pictorial Description

—OF THE—

Tabernacle in the Wilderness,

ITS RITES AND CEREMONIES.

—By John Dilworth.—

Thirty two pages. Price 10c. Send to this office for them.

CHRIST'S KINGDOM!

WHERE IS IT? WHAT IS IT?

—By Jos. Lacher.—

A discourse delivered at Berwick, Pa. This is a 32 page tract, neatly printed, and should have a wide circulation. Price 10c.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

MISTAKES of INGERSOLL

A review of Col. R. G. Ingersoll's lecture entitled "Mistakes of Moses."

—By J. M. Stephenson.—

This is a large size eight page tract, printed on tinted paper. 10c. each, or 12 for $1.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

SECOND EDITION.

The GOSPEL of the KINGDOM

Advocated in a series of Ten Discourses

—By Wilny Jones.—

This edition is elegantly printed and bound by Lippincott & Co., clear type, good paper, 376 pages. Plain cloth binding $1.5, cloth gilt edge $1.75, leather marbled, due $1.50, post paid. To obtain this valuable work, send the price by post office money order or registered letter, to

WILEY JONES,
Norfolk, Va.

A Letter to a Friend!

—By Mrs. C. C. Woodruff.—

This little work is so well known that it needs no comment. 32 pages, price 10c.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

THE SUN FOR 1881.

Everybody reads The Sun. In the editions of this newspaper throughout the year to come everybody will find:

1. All the world's news, so represented that the reader will get the greatest amount of information with the least unprofitable expenditure of time and eyesight. The Sun long ago discovered the golden mean between redundant fullness and unsatisfactory brevity.

2. Much of that sort of news which depends less upon its recognized importance than upon its interest to mankind. From morning to morning The Sun prints a continued story of the lives of real men and women, and of their deeds, plans, loves, hates, and troubles. This story is more varied and more interesting than any romance that was ever devised.

3. Good writing in every column, and freshness, originality, accuracy and decorum in the treatment of every subject.

4. Honest comment. The Sun's habit is to speak out fearlessly about men and things.

5. Equal candor in dealing with each political party, and equal readiness to commend what is praiseworthy or to rebuke what is blamable in either.

6. Absolute independence of partisan organizations, but unwavering loyalty to true Democratic principles. Believing that the government which the Constitution gives us is a good one to keep.

Our terms are as follows:

For the Daily Sun, a 4 page sheet of 28 columns, the price by mail, postpaid, is 35c. a month, or $4.00 a year; or, including the Sunday paper, an 8-page sheet of 56 columns, the price is 45 cents a month, or $5.70 a year, postage.

The Sunday edition is also furnished separately at $1.20 a year, postage paid.

The Weekly Sun, 8 pages, 56 columns, $1 per year. For clubs of ten, sending $10 we will send an extra copy free.

Address

I. W. Enerson,
Publisher of the Sun,
New York City.

BOOK LIST.

The following publications are kept on hand and will be sent postpaid to any address in the United States or Canada, upon receipt of published price. Address all orders to

THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Indiana.

Bible Pearls, Suitable for wide distribution.
1. The Gospel. 2. The Coming and Kingdom of Christ, by 24000 Baptists, in print & 3 translations. 4. The Kingdom of God. 5. Nature of Man and Thoughts for Thinkers. 6. The Two Advents. 7. What is Religion. 8. The Restitution Age. 9. Re-Say of the Wicked. 10 Baptism. 100 copies by express, or assorted package of 100, $1.

FOUR PAGE TRACTS.
25 for 20c., 50 for 35c.; 100 for 60c.

The State of Man in Death. Contains an abundance of proof-texts.

Life and Death. A concise statement and contrast of the two views of these terms, from the Theological and Bible view.

Human Government a Failure. By A. B. Musgrove.

Re-creation. Judah Cattle. A careful examination of the query "If a man die, shall he live again?"

Is it True? H. V. Reed. An examination of testimony as to who are subjects of salvation.

What is Baptism? H. V. Reed. An exposition of the Bible teaching and modern perversity.

The Perverted Parable. The Rich Man and Lazarus. W. Kelley.

EIGHT PAGE TRACTS.
5c. each, or 25 for 80c.

Is it Essential to Believe in the Royalty of Jesus? B. Wilson.

Scene of the Times. H. Bonar, of Scotland.

The Scattering and Gathering. H. V. Reed. Contemplates the future Israelitish gathering of the Saints, Gospel, and the Nations.

TWELVE PAGE TRACTS.
5c. each, or $1.00 per 25c.

Christian Union. Joel A. Simonds.

Regeneration and the Kingdom of God. E. Hosk. Well suited to inquiring minds.

Immortality Brought to Light. The grand reality of resurrection. J. H. Cook.

SIXTEEN PAGE TRACTS.
5c. each; 10 for 35c. or 25 for $1.

The New Birth. Josiah Pelree.

Hope for the World. Joel A. Simonds.

The Kingdom of Messiah. Joseph Seiss, D. D. Set forth in beautiful language and apt Bible quotations.

Which is Right? T. Wilson. Showing the Bible teaching on the question as to whether Christ's kingdom is to be on the earth or in heaven.

The Seed of Abraham. Joel A. Simonds. The promise made to Abraham, renewed to Isaac and Jacob, and so frequently referred to by prophets and apostles.

The Home in His Beauty. H. V. Reed. Just the thing to circulate everywhere.

TWENTY-FOUR PAGE TRACTS.
5c. each; 5 for 20c. or 25 for $1.

Das Evangelium des Reiches Gottes. Teaches the true nature of Christ's Kingdom.

Will the Earth be Burned Up? T. Wilson. An argument from the Scriptures, showing that the earth will not be annihilated, as many suppose, but will be the everlasting inheritance of the saints.

Witchcraft Parelled; or the Voice of God Against Spiritualism. H. V. Reed. Cannot be too widely circulated.

The Scriptures. Joel A. Simonds.

THIRTY-TWO PAGE TRACTS.
10c. each, or 11 for $1.

Evangelism concerning the Reign of Christ over Israel and the Nations; or a brief statement of the things concerning the Kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ. Wiley Jones.

The Restitution; or the world restored to its primeval state, and this to be its everlasting condition. E. Hiller. A careful and satisfactory examination of Acts iii. 21.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS.

The Rich Man and Lazarus. C. P. Sweet. A careful unfolding of Luke xv. and xvi., with an examination of Luke xix. and xxiv. 24 pages, price 10c.

Primitive Christian Faith. C. P. Sweet. A concise history of the Primitive Christian Faith, or the Gospel as held by the early fathers, in a small compass. 50 pages, price 15c.

The Infidel Silenced by the most irrefutable evidence. W. H. Wilson. 48 pages, price 10c.

The Doctrine of Baptism as taught in the Holy Scriptures, together with a collection of evidence upon the subject, from the most learned theologians, critics, lexicographers and ecclesiastical historians. 44 pages, price 10c.

Bible Triumphant. Mrs. H. V. Reed. A reply to "One hundred and forty-four self-contradictions of the Bible," by A. J. Watts. An able refutation of infidel cheapery. Paper 50c.

Discussion on the State of the Dead. Between the Rev. W. C. Boardman, Congregational minister, and W. Kelley, both of England. The propositions discussed were: 1. That the dead exist in a living, conscious state after their decease. Affirmed by Boardman. 2. That the Scriptures teach that man in death is wholly unconscious, insensible, and unable to perform any act whatever; and that they rest in darkness, silence and the dust. Cloth 50c., paper 25c.

Future Punishment. Its nature and duration. Henry Constable, Prebendary of Cork. Exactly the book for the times. 320 pages, cloth $1.25.

The Destiny of Russia, as foretold by God's prophets, together with an outline of the future movements and destiny of England, Germany, Persia, Africa and the Jews. Contains a map of England and Asia. A work invaluable to every student of prophecy, and of intense present interest. 168 pages, cloth 75c., paper 50c.

The New Testament in Greek and English

—ENTITLED—

THE EMPHATIC DIAGLOTT

—By Benjamin Wilson.—

Contains the Original Greek text of the New Testament, with an interlineary word-for-word English translation, based on the renderings of eminent critics, and on the various readings of the Vatican Manuscripts, together with Historical and explanatory foot notes, and a copious selection of references.

The different renderings of various passages in the New Testament are the foundations on which most of the sects of Christians have been built up; with this work each reader may judge for himself whether the words have been literally translated are so arranged in the common version as to express the exact meaning of the New Testament writers.

New improved edition on larger paper, 956 pages, cloth $4.00, Library binding $5.00.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

HYMNS OF THE ADVENT!

Above is the name of a New Hymn Book, compiled by

—Chas. C. Barker.—

Mr. Barker combines in this book the "Hymns of the Morning" and a fresh and rare selection of music. As an appendix he adds a selection of "Favorite Hymns, whose music is as a household word. Those having the "Christian Melodist" and no music book will do well to get this work. Price 40c. cloth 80c.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

ASTRONOMICAL ETIOLOGY,

—OR—

STAR PROPHECIES

Concerning coming disasters on the earth from 1881 to 1886.

—By M. L. Knapp, D. D.—

And others. It also contains an appendix by the publisher. 72 pages, 25c. each.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

GOD ESTABLISHED

—AND—

The BIBLE VINDICATED.

—By A. J. Eychaner.—

A new tract, and one that should be in the hands of every indeed in the land. Those living in (or the) neighborhoods will do well to get this work, as it will aid you in combatting this enemy. Twenty pages, price 5c., 12 for 50c., or 30 for $1.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

THE RESTITUTION
—IS ISSUED WEEKLY BY—
The Christian Publishing Association.

OFFICERS OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS:
R. S. DWIGGINS.....President.
CHARLES PALMER.....Vice President.
E. K. MARSHALL.....Secretary.
S. A. CHAPLIN.....Treasurer.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE:
CHARLES PALMER. WM. RAINSBACK.
I. G. ROBERTS.

S. A. CHAPLIN.....EDITOR.

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTORS:
J. M. STEPHENSON. B. WILSON.
J. P. WEETHEE. J. A. EDMONDS.
WILEY JONES. G. M. MYERS.
A. B. MAGRUDER.

The Restitution.

Keep Bro Weethees Articles

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXX. Read PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, FEBRUARY 2, 1881. NO. 5.

"THE RESTITUTION."

TERMS—TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR, Payable in advance. Three and Six Months at the same rate.

Address all Letters and Communications to THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken, by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief in the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Communications.

COMING AGE.

His Proximity—Summary of Events Under the First Seal—Second Seal—Scenery—Agent—His Acts—The Empire—The Emperor—Elements at Work—Third Seal—Chief Agent—Review of the Empire to the Close of the Third Seal.

No. 54.

J. P. WEETHEE.

Summary.—Our writings, being designed, principally, for instruction; and, having no time to copy, it cannot be a matter of surprise, that our Nos. should be faulty in expression as well as in style. We aim to be understood. To secure this we are required to repeat and sum up. We are anxious that the reader should have a distinct picture of the vast empire during each seal, and at the close of it; that he should be made familiar with all the agents, and their agencies; that he should see the events themselves, and know their causes. If the empire is extending its conquests, and developing a higher order of intellect; or if it is declining, the causes of such changes should be known.

The agents that were either making, or destroying the empire, were of two classes:

a. Those that were visible.

b. Those that were invisible.

The visible workers were the emperor and his subjects; the invisible agents were God, the supreme ruler of all things; his Son, the Messiah, and Redeemer, and the great High Priest and King in the new order of things.

These Divine beings carry on their work by the aid of a vast number of invisible messengers, human and angelic.

This work to be accomplished by God, and his beloved Son, is fully set forth in the Scriptures:

God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever (in any nation) believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life. John iii. 16.

Christ came and gave his life for that purpose. To that end Christ arose from the dead; and, as he was about to leave the earth, and to enter upon the work of his priesthood, he said to his apostles, All power is given unto me in heaven, and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach (disciple) all nations, baptizing them in (into) the name of the Father, and the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you: and, lo, I am with you alway, (even) unto the end of the world (age). Matt. xxviii. 18–20.

They, on the day of Pentecost, were endued with power from on high, by the advent of the Holy Spirit. They went everywhere preaching; at first to the Jews, who persecuted them from city to city, while they had a nation and a temple. Paul then said to them, Seeing you judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life, lo, we turn to the Gentiles. For so hath the Lord commanded us (saying) I have set thee to be a light of the Gentiles, that thou shouldst be for salvation unto the ends of the earth. Acts xiii. 46, 47.

After this, James said, "Men (and) brethren, hearken unto me: Simeon hath declared how God at the first did visit the Gentiles, to take out of them a people for his name." Acts xv. 13, 14.

The Roman empire being then universal into its bosom they had to carry their operations. Their mission was first principally to that empire. In it they found Idolatry; they encountered the Pagan priesthood. Paganism had been the established religion of the Romans since the days of Numa. They (the apostles) could find no people that did not profess some religious belief. The people to be gathered and instructed in the Christian religion, had to be taken out of some other church, and away from some other god and his priesthood.

They found Jewish synagogues in every city, who manifested deadly hatred to Christianity. The Jews every where stirred up the Gentiles to persecute the Christians. Heathen temples were very numerous, and their priesthood, high in authority, the emperor himself, being, by law, the "Pontifex Maximus"—high priest.

The apostles, therefore, did what is now considered by the ministers of popular denominations, disreputable, viz., to gather members out of old, and popular churches. They went into the Jews' synagogues and preached Christ to their members, and they also told the rulers that they were murderers. They got away from the synagogues everyone that they could persuade to leave.

As a necessary consequence, they brought down upon themselves and the Christian cause the fierce anger of the Jewish rulers.

They followed the same in heathen assemblies; teaching the people to abstain from the pollutions of idols. Acts xv. 20. That they should turn to God from idols. 1 Thess. i. 9.

Paganism being established by law, and an immense number of priests being dependent upon that system for a living, as also many craftsmen who were occupied in building and furnishing their temples, and in providing sacrifices. The enmity of the heathen was a natural consequence. The work was a continued warfare between God and idols. Between these, and, consequently, between their priesthoods, and those that sustained them, there could be no possible compromise; at least, none on the part of the Deity.

Christ, therefore, foreseeing the results of his mission to the earth said, I came not to send peace on earth but a sword. Matt. x. 34. "I am come to send fire on the earth." Luke xii. This fire, says Christ, seeing it will come I would that it were already kindled. This fire was kindled, first, among the Jews, in the Jewish nation; then among the Gentiles, through the great empire. Nero, having set fire to Rome charged it against the Christians, and a bloody persecution followed. This was called the first heathen persecution, sanctioned by an imperial edict, though there were many Christians that suffered from mobs before that time.

The second persecution was in the reign of Domitian. A. D. 95, when about 40,000 Christians suffered martyrdom. It was under that persecution that John suffered banishment.

The third persecution began in the third year of Trajan, and continued with more or less severity till the reign of Constantine the Great, when the Christian was made the popular religion of the empire, though Paganism was more or less tolerated.

We have been considering the state of the empire under Trajan, or during the first seal. We have examined the extent of its territory, covering a large portion of three grand divisions of the globe, Asia, Africa, and Europe: the greatness of its population 120,000,000; the military skill of its emperor, Trajan, who wore its diadem on the highest pinacle of its glory as a civil monarchy. The religious state of the empire has now been considered. It hold in its bosom three religions, headed by three opposing priesthoods:

a. The Jewish religion, with its Aaronic priesthood.

b. The priesthood of Christ at the head of the Christian religion.

c. The religion of Numa, under the priesthood of Paganism, the emperor himself, being its "Pontefex-Maximus."

These three religions were hostile to each other.

The Christian religion in its very nature, was uncompromising, totally distinct in its elements, and exceedingly aggressive. Its commission was broad as the human family:

Go disciple all nations. The field is the world.—Salvation in no other name, and in no other way.

Where, then, could there be any peace except in unconditional surrender?

Such, then, were the religious elements, pent up in the bosom of this mighty empire; all the subjects of and ruled by one government, one class worshipping their emperor as a god and high priest; while the Jews and Christians, though hostile to each other, regarded him as the head of the persecution.

These elements, uncompromising foes to each other, we must keep in view as we progress. If the chief officer of the civil empire and the high priest of Paganism persecutes, we can understand the influence which is brought to bear against him, the interests of rival priesthoods.

Rev vi. 3, 4.—Second Seal.—And when he had opened the second seal, I heard the second living creature say, Come and see. And there went out another horse (that was) red: and (power) was given to him that sat thereon to take peace from the earth, and that they should Kill one another and there was given unto him a great sword."

The Red Horse and Its Rider.—The mission of this agent is seen in the color of the horse. He is a shedder of blood, he had power to take peace from the earth. The sword is a symbol of the power given to the agent, by reason of his official position, as the head of the empire, and the head of the national religion.

It is not said of this rider, that he went forth; or that he was a conqueror. He did not go forth beyond the bounds of his empire, nor put the crown of a conquered nation on his head, as did the rider of the white horse. He took peace from earth: and set people to fighting each other. The expression, "power to take peace from the earth" signifies that he had power to take peace from the empire, since the empire was considered universal. He was, therefore, engaged in a bloody civil war. No other kind could answer the condition of the terms. It should succeed the other and be consequent on the success of the one immediately preceding. If each be over the same subjects such being the position of successors in the same empire, then the one that follows a great conqueror, will have the unruly elements let loose upon him. The conqueror on the white horse held the "winds," held these wild elements in check. His successor is plunged into the uprisings and wades in blood, civil blood. In quelling such uprisings peace, for a time, takes its flight.

Let us now examine the state of the Roman empire under Adrian the successor of Trajan.

Slaughter of the Jews Under Adrian.—The causes which led to this bloody overthrow are the following:

A false Messiah, by the name of Caziba, being displeased with Adrian's domination, formed the project of placing himself at the head of the Jewish nation. To that end he proclaimed himself their predicted, and long-expected Messiah. He was one of the banditti that dwelt among the mountains of Judea; he had, with others, plundered, and committed all kinds of violence against the Romans. He became so powerful that he was, by the Jews, proclaimed their king and Messiah. He changed his name to Barchochebs, the star foretold by Balaam; he called himself the star to come out of Jacob to restore his nation to its ancient liberty and glory. He chose a forerunner, raised an army, was anointed king, coined money inscribed with his own name, and proclaimed himself Messiah and Prince of the Jewish nation.

Adrian raised an army, and sent it against him. He retired into a town called Bither, where he was besieged. Barchochcba was killed in the siege, the city was taken, and a dreadful havoc succeeded. The Jews themselves allow that, during this short war against the Romans, in defence of this false Messiah, they lost five or six hundred thousand souls.—Buck.

The Jews in Egypt and Cyprus made an insurrection and slew about 460,000 men; and, yet, their loss was still greater—in these three risings they lost nearly one million, with nearly an equal number of Gentiles (citizens of the empire).

The state of the empire, during his reign, was in such a state of unrest as to require his presence in all parts of his vast dominions; yet by his personal visits, and by the power of the sword, he kept the empire from falling to pieces.

A full history of this emperor would, perhaps, give better satisfaction; still, this outline reaches all the points. A slaughter of more than a million and one-half of citizens in civil war will satisfy the terms of the prophetic vision.

One point we desire to notice. Christ had predicted the coming of false Messiahs. It must be admitted that Christ, under his priesthood, (as he was at that time) would follow that people (the Jews, since he prayed for them) with interest. It is not probable, in showing the great movements of the empire, that he would omit this second terrible slaughter of that people, as it was an executive judgment on that nation for rejecting, and putting to death their true Messiah and accepting an impostor.

The religious elements of the empire, during the reign of this emperor, continued in advance in their hostility. The edict of Trajan was still in force in some parts of the empire. This seal covers the state of the empire from A. D. 117 to 138

CHRISTIANITY.

RICHARD CORBALLY.

A very large percentage of the religionists of the present age have reached the conclusion that it makes but little, if any difference, what people believe or do, if they mean right. With such whatever suits them is accepted as truth, whether the things are taught in the Bible or not makes very little difference. With this idea prominent it is not at all strange they should reach different conclusions as to faith and works. Hence creeds and confessions of faith have been produced, and in such variety that all can be accommodated who desire any direction outside of the Bible. A very important question is: Has God presented to the world a definite plan of Salvation? If the Scriptures teach what we are to believe, do, and hope for, then why go to the creeds to learn things? Is it not conceded by all religionists that God has presented to the world a definite plan of Salvation? Then why go elsewhere to find his word?

The tendency of creeds is to keep up strife and divisions among professors. One great object of the churches has been to convert the world to these systems of religion, and they often work against each other to gain numbers in order to obtaining power and position; therefore, are not always on terms of friendship with each other.

The world and the churches have had a long contest—the churches trying to convert the world, and insisting that they will finally gain the victory. The world has resisted, and proposed compromises, many of which have been accepted, so that it is frequently asserted that a man need not change any of his worldly relations, nor compromise any of his worldly enjoyments by attaching himself to a church.

That the churches resort to the same kind of practices the world does, to raise means to build houses to worship in, or to carry on the business of the society, pay the preacher, etc.

We find very many churches resorting to festivals, social parties, including dances, in order that the devil's party may come in and contribute of their money to aid in building up the Lord's cause. As festivals have become so common and so popular, that very few preachers are heard saying anything against them; and why should they? For a considerable portion of their wages are raised in this way.

At some of these festivals business is carried on very systematically. Each department is supplied with persons possessing energy and zeal, to make a financial success.

There must be a general pandering to the tastes in many ways to attract the people. The fee at the door must be light, the supper must be inviting, the articles for sale must at least appear well,—the young lady who attends the postoffice, must be fascinating,—the music for the dancers must be good.

Just take a look for a moment when a fashionable church festival is in operation. Hear the calls—"Come and eat." The cries auctioneering the goods—calling letters in the postoffice. Music and dancing—all to raise money for the Lord.

Reader, is this Christianity?

Has the Lord called upon the church to engage in such practices to raise money for sending the gospel to a famishing world?

We can learn just how the Lord regards such things, by reading what he did with such a company he once found occupying the Temple at Jerusalem. He said to them: that they had made his house a den of thieves, whereas it should be for prayer. And he upset their tables, and drove them out. Has the Lord changed? Some of the churches are very accommodating. They will say by their official, come and go with us, and if you have any choice in the mode of baptism we can accommodate you. We will immerse you, or we will sprinkle or pour water on you. Whatever way you think is right, to you will be right.

Truly this is very accommodating. But from whence come the authority? Is this of God or of men? "One Lord, one faith, one baptism." Eph. iv. 5. Does the Bible authorize but one faith? Then from whence came so many? Each creed is the basis of a definite faith. Are any two of these creeds alike? No. Is either one just like the Bible? No. Then which is reliable, and by which will we be judged? The Bible. If that is the Book to which we will all be held amenable, is it not wisdom on our part to acquaint ourselves with the law God has given us to live under now, and which contains the promises of reward, pointing out clearly what things are necessary for us to believe, what we must do and how to obey each precept? I conclude if God had intended to save men on any other plan than the one contained in the Bible, it would have been given at an earlier date than the creeds came. Heretofore when God made a change of law to man, he selected the persons to make the change. Can the creed-makers give such demonstration of God's approbation, as did the apostles?

Our eternal destiny is at stake. If we make a mistake, and are taught by the wrong book—one that will not be brought up at the judgment at all, what a sad affair, and it will then be too late to make any change.

How do we know these books will not be in the judgment? Because Christ said, "The words which I speak unto you they shall judge you."

Healdsburg, Cal.

(To be Continued.)

LIFE AND DEATH.

W. I. CRICKETT.

Life the reward, the crowning glory of eternity! Death the penalty, the greatest evil.

Life the gift of God. Death the wages of sin.

The real enlightened student of the Bible will acknowledge these truths; 'tis only those who revel in the gross darkness that covers the land, acknowledge them not.

There is no life in death, nor can there be death in life. Separated on the inspired page by the hand of God they present two wonderful pictures.

The one so grand when looked at by the eye of faith, is life; but life so sublime that it has not entered into the heart of man to realize it, except as an overwhelming weight of glory that rests on the boundless shores of infinity.

The other hideous, dark, terrible, is death. Alike life's glory, its awfulness unrealized.

And yet these things are confounded. Death is painted as an angel of light. Death is made to represent life. And alas, how many are deceived; how many are beguiled by the fascinating garb thrown around the monster.

But blessed be the great, just, and merciful God. He hath undeceived us; he hath made known the true revelation of life and death. And through him 'tis ours to pluck away the beautiful garment of death and reveal it in its naked deformity. And ours to show the way of life, through the word of God. To point out the glories of the greatest work of the Great Master Hand.

Let us do this; and let us remember for our own guidance—"The wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord."

They that are of a froward heart are abomination to the Lord; but such as are upright in their way are his delight

Selections.

THE JEWS IN PALESTINE.

W. G. HOLMES.

It is a noticeable fact that a great increase has taken place within a few years in the number of resident Jewsin the city of Jerusalem. Within a quarter of a century the Jewish population has doubled, and during the past ten years probably five thousand have immigrated there, chiefly from Spain and from Poland. In the estimmation of intelligent residents, there are now fifteen thousand Jews in the Holy City and in its immediate suburbs. What has drawn them there it may not be easy to determine. Some of the older ones declare their desire to die in Jerusalem, and to be buried near its walls. Their service on Friday afternoon at the Jews Waiting Place, along side of what is believed to be a portion of the old wall supporting the platform upon which the Temple was built, is an impressive one to every thoughtful Christian observer who has not a preconceived idea that it is a show.

The "Jewish Quarter," lying within the walls at the northern end of the Tyropean valley, and near to the old Temple area, is filthy in the extreme, and every visitor seeks to escape from its limits as quickly as possible; for, undeniably as many of the streets are, in this district the atmosphere is noxious.

In some other portions of the city there can be found Jewish families in dwellings more attractive, and in less repulsive streets. The new houses erected within a few years under the patronage of the society of which Sir Moses Montefiore, of London, is the chairman, are built of the limestone of the region and are attractive in their cleanliness.

With satisfactory arrangements for drainage and for water supply they make comfortable homes. They are situated near the city, on the roads leading to Damascus, to Jaffa, and to Bethlehem. If the movement should continue further provision would be needed for dwellings, as there are now but very few vacant tenements.

The Turkish government makes no careful provision for a census, but it is probable that the proportion of Jews in the entire population of Jerusalem is about two-fifths. These people congregate in the cities or in the large towns in Palestine as well as in Europe and America. None are found in smaller villages. In Hebron is found a small colony. In Bethlehem there are probably none but temporary residents. In Nazareth there is only a single Jew, and he is a carpenter named Joseph. In Hafed, the "city set on a hill," northwest of the Sea of Galilee, there are many, and here can be seen a wire surrounding their portion of the town, as an imaginary wall, to determine the limits of a Sabbath day's journey. In Damascus there are about five thousand Jews, and in Beirut nearly as many more, but these cities are outside of the limits of Palestine. It is reasonably probable that the whole number of Jews in the Holy Land does not reach twenty thousand, which is not quite one-tenth part of the entire population.

In Jerusalem there are at the present time about four hundred Jews, adult males, who belong to the ancient sect of the Pharisees, and are often seen walking the streets carrying a volume, presumably a portion of the Talmud, with phylacteries on their arms and foreheads. About one thousand more belong to their families, constituting about one-tenth of the Jewish population. Many Jews have adopted the Christian faith, and about ninety of them are communicants of the English Church under the charge of Bishop Barclay, the successor of Bishop Gobat.

The Montefiore Society has erected a substantial stone building in the city near the northern wall for a school for Jewish boys. Near Jaffa there is an agricultural school for the same, where the pupils are taught to work upon the ample farm grounds on the western side of the Plain of Sharon, and are drilled in various kinds of work, such as blacksmiths, carpenters, shoemakers, etc. In the British schools for boys and in the Rev. Mr. Schneller's Orphanage are a few Jewish boys, who are receiving an education in practical science and in the various trades.

It is not a cheerful sight to see so many of these people listlessly idle in the streets, seemingly without a care for employment.

They are quickly distinguished by their long loose coats with a band of fur at the edges, and by the sause around the rim of their hats, even if their facial characteristics were not readily determined. The great mass of them are subjects of charity. It is an undisputed fact that about eight thousand pounds sterling per month, or more than four hundred and sixty thousand dollars per annum are received in Jerusalem from London, and distributed by the Rabbis among this unemployed population. It is a matter of the simplest observation that there is no work for these people in Jerusalem.

There is very little for any one to do in such eastern cities where the wants are so few. The shop-keeping and olive-wood manufacture, with the small amount of building, are absorbed by the more active Latin or Greek Christians, while a little peddling, or little petty jobbing, and a little money-changing, if they have a small store of wealth therefor, is all that is left for the poor Jews. It is a well known fact that the Jews are not an agricultural people, and to become farmers and to till the ground is wholly unnatural to them.

Besides, the real tillage land around Jerusalem is very small. A portion of the hillsides, the plain of Rephaim and some acres north and west of the city can be cultivated, and are so now; in a poor way, it is true.

The Jew has not the necessary ambition to clear these fields from their innumerable stones in order to produce bread.

He prefers to depend upon the charitable support of his European and American countrymen. Were they disposed to work, the beautiful plains of Sharon, of the Philistines, and of Esdraelon and the wonderfully fertile valley of the Jordan, are open to them. But there must be a complete revolution in their natures before the restoration of these fertile lands will be accomplished by the Jews who are returning to the Holy Land.

At Jaffa, and Haifa, a port of the Mediterranean about fifty miles further north, are agricultural colonies of Germans. The one at Jaffa is the most numerous, and succeeded the unfortunate American colony, the remnant of which was brought away by the United States Government about twelve years ago,

They have thrifty orange groves and gardens, and have established wagon communication between Jaffa and Jerusalem, and between the latter city and Bethlehem. The few Germans who are in Jerusalem work in connection with their brethren of the Jaffa colony, and as artisans, but are not cultivators of the soil.

Until there is a favorable change in the government little progress can be made by these new-comers.

THE QUESTION BOOK.

WILEY JONES.

In response to the suggestion of Sister Williams (in THE RESTITUTION of January 5th,) I beg leave to say that I have nearly finished the manuscript for a little volume of questions and answers (to be entitled "Nurture and Admonition,") for the instruction of young persons; and that if the brethren and sisters will subscribe for 500 copies, I hope to be able to deliver them within two months, the Lord permitting. The work will be neatly gotten up, in paper covers, will contain about 32 pages, and the size of the pages will be about 3x5 inches. The price will be ten cents per copy. So let the readers of THE RESTITUTION order promptly of me or of THE RESTITUTION as many as they want, and I shall endeavor to deliver the books within the time specified. You need not send the money until you receive the books, and feel satisfied that they are worth the price.

Norfolk, Va.

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CHAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, February 2, 1881.

THOUGH suffering under the influence of a severe cold, we have been enabled to place one more number of THE RESTITUTION before our readers. If imperfect we have done what we could.

ALL letters, about which inquiries have been made, have come to hand. As the mailing list has been corrected nearly up to date, our friends will learn from the changed figures on the directing slips that their remittances have been credited. As some mistakes are unavoidable, any error that may occur, will at once be corrected when pointed out by any one of our friends. We take this as the shortest way of answering all queries, and hope it will be satisfactory.

FOR the encouragement of our friends we would say that our list of subscriptions is increasing. We have been enabled to surmount all difficulties thus far, by the blessing of God, and the extra assistance rendered by the kind, sacrificing lovers of the Redeemer and his cause. Our indebtedness has been diminished, and our prospects are becoming more favorable. We will employ all the means sent, with conscientious prudence. While we slowly approximate a self-sustaining position with the paper, we have not as yet reached it. Free will offerings will still be needed to a greater or less extent, till our list numbers more names.

WE have copied several articles from the Rainbow written by J. Cameron, of Edinburgh, Scotland. He has kindly furnished one for THE RESTITUTION on "Jesus both Lord and Christ," which, in part, appears in this number. We thank him most sincerely for what we hope will be only an installment of much more in the future if he can possibly find time to write for the brethren here in the United States. To a kind, private note we will soon respond. Could not Brother W. Laing, of the same city, write once or twice a year at least for us? Remember that—"As cold water to a thirsty soul, so is good news from a far country." We well know, however, that writing labored articles for periodicals on their own side of the ocean is a heavy tax on the time of both the brethren. We will not be too exacting, but we say, brethren, whenever you can—write.

FROM the following, clipped from a foreign journal, sent us by Br. H. Heyes, the fallen Despot at Rome seems not to have passed a very merry Christmas. It will probably make but little difference in this age of the world whether the Roman Pontiff ever ceases from complaining and from claiming the liberty and independence of which the Holy See has been despoiled by the violent usurpation of its civil power" or not. It might be as pleasing to the present Pope, as it ever was to any of his predecessors in the bloody Seat of Satan, to have a St. Bartholomew massacre re-enacted, or to have the fires of the Inquisition rekindled, but the judgement has already set upon the case of this monster system of iniquity, and the sentence, that "they shall take away his dominion to consume and to destroy it to the end" has been receiving its fulfillment at the hand of God's vengeful executioners. Querimonious whining will avail nothing.

THE POPE'S TROUBLES.

The following is the text of the Pope's reply on Friday to the address of the Cardinals:—

Amid the afflictions with which the incessant war directed almost everywhere against the Church fills our hearts the devoted feelings and the hopes you again this year express to us in the name of the Sacred College are supremely welcome and a consolation to us. We receive them with the warmest satisfaction, and we reply to them by the best wishes of felicity, praying the Author of all good to show them favor in his goodness and to grant them full realization.

But while we take part in the holy joy which the yearly celebration of the nativity of the Divine Redeemer brings to the world, we cannot help expressing to you our griefs at the condition to which even here in the city of Rome the Supreme Head of the Church is reduced. But recently we publicly expressed our complaints on this deplorable situation, and we showed that neither true liberty nor real independence is allowed to the Roman Pontiff; that his authority, far from being surrounded with the respect due to it, is with impunity exposed to offences and outrages; that the Divine power conferred on it to govern the Universal Church is limited and restrained in numberless ways; lastly, that in this very city of Rome the means have not been allowed him of applying an effective remedy to the so numerous evils the Faith has to endure. Of these words and complaints which went forth spontaneously from our heart an inimical Press at once made a pretext to vent their anger upon us. Now persons do not fail at public meetings to accuse our words of asperity, and, under the specious appearance of defending the rights of the State, again affirm the unfortunate design of prolonging and aggravating, in Italy, the servitude of the Church. Such is the fate prepared for us. Even the manifestation of the most legitimate grief is not to be allowed to the Vicar of Jesus Christ.

But what is required of us? Are we expected to be brought to conform to the desires of the enemies of the Church or to remain a tacit and tranquil spectator of what is being done and said against it? Is this the liberty to be allowed to the Sovereign Pontiff? And the facts we denounced were manifest and notorious, and consequently our complaints were very just.

If we resort to some of these facts we still see the pretensions to patronage over several churches of Italy reaffirmed, and the iniquitous subjection of the Pontificial bulls to the exequatur maintained, whence result unjustifiable delays, which are seriously injurious to the regular administration of the dioceses. The Sovereign Pontiff is thus deprived of that liberty, limited as it was, which it was formerly proposed to allow him. But we are forced to deplore fresh measures still more hostile, which are being prepared and are already displayed by bills contrary to the rights and doctrines of the Church.

These schemes tend to exclude works of charity, by means of a fresh form of ality from all ecclesiastical interference, and to lay hands on the patrimony still remaining to priests, which but scantily provides for their wants. It is sought, moreover, to open the door to divorce in Italy, to the ruin of domestic and civil society. And, pushing these iniquities still further, the aim is to strike a blow at the Church in its very constitution by beginning to introduce laymen into its government contrary to the law of its Divine institution.

Such is the state of things in the city of Rome; such is consequently the position of the Supreme Pontiff in the very place where his See is established; and that position is evidently irreconcilable with his dignity, the free exercise of the Apostolic ministry, and the Divine mission confided by Jesus Christ to the Roman Pontificate. Therefore, on this fresh opportunity we are anxious to declare before the Sacred College that, so far from acquiescing in what has been committed to our prejudice, we shall never cease complaining and from claiming the liberty and independence of which the Holy See has been despoiled by the violent usurpation of its civil power. Therefore, amid the very serious difficulties surrounding us, we shall continue, with the divine help, to perform our apostolic mission, following in the steps of our valiant predecessors. In this arduous task we shall be greatly strengthened by the assistance of the Sacred College, which shares our sentiments. We are also sustained by the certain hope that the present conflicts, painful and numerous as they are, can only pave the way of the Church to the most glorious triumphs.

Exegetical.

My brethren are faithless as a brook,
Like the streams of the valley that pass away;
Which are troubled by means of [melted] ice,
In which the snow is hid [by being dissolved].
In the time when they become warm, they cease to exist.
When the heat cometh they are dried from their place.
The channels of their way wind round about;
They go into nothing—and are lost.
The caravans of Tema look;
The travelling companies of Sheba expect [water] in them,
They are ashamed that they have relied on them;
They came even to the place, and they are confounded.
—Revised Translation of Job vi. 15-20.

This is a transcendently beautiful simile regarded only as a description of what actually occurs in Arabian and African deserts. In Arabia there are but few rivers that flow throughout the year. Most of the streams are winter torrents that become dry in summer. During heavy rains, or when the mountain snows are melting, the rivulets in the wadys, and the channels from which the flowing waters had entirely disappeared, become dark turbid, swollen streams, noisily, and tumultuously rushing down to be lost in the hot desert sands that spread the plains below.

Thus these valley streams may flow in very full volume while the dissolving snows supply the fountain springs, and may even flow onward in winding channels into the desert sands, but these wandering streams become smaller and smaller till they wholly disappear. The caravans of Tema, or the travelling companies of Sheba, would find water abundant at certain points in the desert when dissolving snows replenished the evaporating streams, but at other seasons, when fainting from thirst, they would find, when coming to these same places, only dry, dusty channels to mock their expectations. In their bitter disappointment they would look upon one another with consternation and dismay. So Job most poetically describes his own disappointments.

He had looked for consolation from his friends when crushed with overwhelming afflictions and agonizing grief, but his expectations had all been blasted. Their protestations of unchangeable friendship had been loud and outspoken in times of prosperity, like the noisy dashings of the flushed torrents; but all these professions were as empty of consolations, when the time of need for sympathy had come to Job, as the dusty beds of the dried-up streams were of water for the fainting caravans. In the fair spring time of the year the desert was channeled with floods, pouring down from the valleys, that bade fair to be perennial streams; but in summer's oppressive heat, the returning caravans found that the waters had gone to nothingness. The clamorous professions of undying love, made in prosperity by unstable and deceitful friends, had become vain empty nothingness to Job in his time of surest need.

News Items.

THE EASTERN QUESTION.

TURKEY.

LONDON, Jan. 29.—In the event of war the Porte intends exercising to the fullest extent its rights at sea as a belligerent, the instructions for the guidance of naval commanders to be based on English and American precedents.

A commission has been formed for considering the projected naval prize law.

GREECE.

In Greece a new army corps is forming. Several regiments have been ordered to Voulza and two regiments of artillery are ordered in readiness for the frontier.

The Minister of the Interior has instructed the provincial authorities to prepare the rolls of the national guardsmen from 30 to 40 years of age.

ENGLAND.

has accepted the proposal for negotiations on the Greek question on the condition that the decisions of the Berlin Conference and the TREATY will not be considered as dropped.

RISING IN TURKISH ARMENIA.

LONDON, Jan. 29.—The Standard says there is a report current that the Government has received information of a serious rising in Turkish Armenia, which has been in an unsettled state for some time.

GREEK TROOPS ORDERED TO THE FRONTIER.

LONDON, Jan. 29.—A despatch to the Standard from Athens says several battalions have been ordered to be ready to march to the frontier at any moment.

ST. PETERSBURG, Jan. 28—News from Arrapez of the 18th inst. says that in a sortie on the 10th the Turcomans captured sixty prisoners, whom they immediately murdered. Ashkabad Turcomans captured and killed a hundred Persain raiders.

THE GREEK FRONTIER.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Jan. 31—Greece having sent troops to the frontier, Turkish transports are conveying 27,000 men from Smyrnia to the Gulf of Volo as a precaution.

THE WAR IN CENTRAL ASIA.

ST. PETERSBURG, Jan. 31.—General Skobeloff pursued the Tekke-Turcomans to Ashkabad, sixty kilometres from Greeke-Tepe.

San Francisco, Cal., Jan. 31.—At Windsor, Sonoma county, thirteen inches of rain fell in seventeen hours. Much damage was sustained by the people in that vicinity.

In Placerville, Eldorado county, in twenty-four hours up to noon yesterday, 7 60-100th inches of rain fell. From other places in the northern part of the State some almost incredible accounts of the amount of the rain-fall during the storm.

A dispatch from Santa Cruz, says Capitola, on Soquel creek, four miles from Santa Cruz, has been washed out to sea. Only four houses are left of the town. No lives were lost.

The Oroville Railroad is submerged for a long distance. The damage cannot be ascertained until the water goes down.

The snow-drifts in New England are from ten to fifteen feet high, and railroad trains are having a very hard time.

The expectation of future happiness is the best relief for anxious thoughts, the most perfect cure for melancholy, the guide of life and the comfort of death.

Letter Drawer.

SUSPENSION BRIDGE, N. Y.

Editor Restitution:—Thinking it may be a comfort to the friends of Jesus to know what their pilgrim brother has been doing for many months past, therefore I write:

1. I have attended exclusively to my own affairs.

2. Subsequent to my Grove meetings, I was laid upon the shelf for six weeks with rheumatism—suffered much, but it was all right. Then our grapes, plums, pears, quinces, etc., required my whole time for six weeks to gather and market them. Hence my preaching was confined from the middle of July until the middle of October, (except one Sunday spent with the church at Fonthill,) to those who came to visit us, and they were not a few.

Since the close of our harvest, I have spent one Sunday with church at Fonthill, Ont. Spent twelve days with the brethren in Brantford, Burford, Norwich, and Sweaburg. Our public meetings were excellent, visited nearly all the brethren at their own homes, conversing upon the great plan of human redemption, and the proximity of the return of Jesus our Life Giver. Have spent one Sunday at Sanborn, N. Y.; gave two discourses. But the devil has the most of the people under his control in that place, hence it is impossible to get their ears, unless we can break down the priestly or clerical power.

For the last nine weeks I have been laid up with a lame leg—have had three large carbuncles upon it. Have suffered much, but it is all right. But if nothing new takes place, I shall soon be well. But I have a number of theological pupils, and much company to preach to. Have read and written much, the result of all I leave with the Omnipotent Deity. But how sweet it is to have a home and one to care for you, when disease is preying upon one.

Fraternally,
R. V. LYON.

DECATUR, Neb.

Editor Restitution: I see that the time of my subscription for the paper has expired. I have delayed remitting hoping to send in the names of some new subscribers, but so far have failed, yet I hope to be able to induce others to take the paper.

The doctrines advocated in THE RESTITUTION are so new and strange to most persons who are taught by the popular preaching, that they are slow to subscribe.

I see that The Watchword, which is published in Boston, is sounding forth the cry—"behold The Bridegroom cometh, watch, be ye ready," etc., showing that there are those of most all denominations who are awake to the signs of the times, and who will not be circumscribed in their investigations by sectarian lines.

I rejoice that there is one like David of old, who does not fear to go out to meet the infidel giant when he defies the armies of the living God. But, perhaps Col. Ingersoll believes that discretion is the better part of valor, and that retreat is better than defeat, and will not bring his theories to the test, "honor bright," as he calls it.

I have been well pleased with the articles on Christianity, by Brother Corbaley and hope we may have many more such, believing that people should be taught what to practice as well as what to believe, in order to salvation.

I was glad to see the paper in its new dress, and having added the Youths' Column, which I have no doubt will be interesting and instructive.

I wish some competent brother would undertake the task of filling about one column, each week, with an explanation of the text upon which the International Union Sunday School lessons are based.

I have been anxious that some of the preaching brethren would come and present the "Gospel of the Kingdom of God," to the people here, and if any should contemplate coming here to remain, or are passing through this section, I would be happy to see them or correspond with them; or, if brethren wish to locate near here, I will give them such assistance as I can.

I trust the Lord will bless you Bro. Chaplin in your endeavor to "publish salvation abroad," and that the paper may be instrumental in holding forth the word of life—leading many from error and darkness to the light and liberty of the gospel of Christ.

Inclosed you will find one dollar, as a renewal of my subscription.

Please send as before.

L. L. WILKINS.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.

Editor Restitution: I herewith enclose five dollars to pay subscription for RESTITUTION.

The improved appearance of the paper must gratify, and I hope this, and the many excellent articles therein presented, may win for it many new subscribers.

I have reason for thankfulness that it was ever put into the hearts of those, who having ready pens, and quick perceptions, have penned thoughts that have burned out much that was gross.

I feel sorry for those who say they have no time to throw away, on the writings of men, and who say that they prefer the simple and pure Word! I have watched that class of men, and I'll tell you what I have seen. On public conveyances they must read the daily papers—they must know all about the last murder, suicide or hanging. They must know how the stock market ranged yesterday. How excited they become when they discover their favorite stock has risen or fallen, especialy if they have invested therein: and how glibly will they talk of the current affairs of every day life, even though you may feel little or no interest therein, because what they talk of, chiefly concerns themselves.

I am often reminded of a remark an old sister in Christ, now fallen asleep, used to make: She had not the time to read the daily papers, because they revealed so much that was evil and corrupting.

While I do not fully endorse what she said, yet there is something in it.

Yes, these lovers of the "pure Word," and who discard the religious paper, and who do not believe in tracts, etc., are, when the time for Bible Class comes around, either taking their ease alongside their chimney corner, or attending some lecture, or may be, worse than that!

It is true, we all have to answer for ourselves; and yet it is also true, as brethren in Christ, we have duties and responsibilities which make or unmake our brother.

I read—"Ye are not your own," etc., and if that be true, whose are we? "Ye are bought with a price!" Who bought us and thus constituted us his? It was none other than the Lord Jesus, and he calls us his brethren; but O, my brother, how little we seem to realize this truth and how little we lay to heart, and practice the wholesome, "love as brethren."

The word "watch," is ringing in my ears to-night. "Watch unto prayer—watch, for ye know not at what hour," etc.

Last week, I listened to three out of ten discourses given in this city, by A. D. Jones, Pittsburgh, Pa.

His effort was chiefly to show the closing times in which we live. His position is, that we are in the "day dawn"—Christ has come but has not made himself visible—that the resurrection is going on, and has been since 1874.

This belief, as expressed in one of his lectures, that the major part of the saints have already been resurrected, and this year, 1881, will reveal much that has been hoped for. I am free to admit great plausibility in much said by the lecturer, but I have not so learned the order, as he lays it down, and he speaks for many holding the same views as himself.

I pass no judgment on this at this time. I have learned, I trust, after many years of experience, to show moderation in this matter of judgment, as I am admonished by the apostle to be "swift to hear and slow to speak."

There are those who are ever learning and never able to come to a knowledge of the truth—there are those who virtually say, because they act it—"I will not investigate, and those new things only trouble me, and I will not be troubled."

I wonder if the Berean spirit is in them! and if they had so acted when for instance, the subject of future life through Christ was presented to them!

We need to be watchful—we should always quit ourselves as men; and we may ever have before us these words: "Let God be true and every man a liar!"

My wife joins me in loving regards to you, hoping we may all wait the coming of our Lord, in patience possessing our souls, doing his will by obeying his commands, and thus through grace, for it is all of grace—enter the celestial city, even the city of the Great King.

GEO. W. YOUNG.

SCRANTON, Pa. Jan. 26, 1881.

Editor Restitution: Enclosed find two dollars which please place to my credit on subscription to THE RESTITUTION, as we appreciate its weekly visits very highly and cannot think of doing without it, nor of depriving ourselves of its fountain of religious knowledge, and words of cheer and encouragement, with which its columns are ever well filled.

The time is drawing near—very near—when we shall not read its admonitions—when we shall not say; "know ye the Lord, for all shall know him from the least to the greatest."

O, joyful day, when the saints of God shall be caught up to meet their blessed Savior, as he comes to receive his waiting bride, and be thus ever united to and associated with Jesus Christ, the Lord of Glory and the Son of God.

It cheers my heart to know that we are almost there. The evidences are thickening on every hand, and soon the opening heavens shall reveal the King of Glory.

We have every reason to lift up our heads and rejoice, for our redemption draweth nigh. I feel, for one, as though I wanted to be free from every hurtful encumbrance—waiting to hear the joyful sound of the trump of God, to awake the sleeping saints and call the living with them, to meet the Lord in the air.

May the reader and the writer so live that we may be among the happy number that shall be redeemed, out of every kindred, tongue and people, and be made unto our God, Kings and Priests, and reign on the earth.

T. FINN.

WALLACETOWN, Ont.

Editor Restitution: Inclosed find one dollar to apply on subscription to THE RESTITUTION. We would like to send more if we had it by us. We live in Dunwich, Elgin Co., Ontario—post office, Wallacetown and would like to know if there are any brethren in this part of the country who take your paper, if so, would be happy to make their acquaintance. Our people have taken the paper under its different names since it was first printed in Rochester, N. Y., and think we cannot get along without it—have given up all other papers.

We admire the forbearing, Christian disposition that Brother Chaplin has manifested in his position as editor.

We are pained to see so many who profess to believe, and hope to share in those blessed promises, do without a paper which advocates them, and still persist in taking the secular papers that slander and berate one another.

Yours in hope of immortality.

L. E. LENT.

STRONGSVILLE, OHIO.

Editor Restitution:—You will receive enclosed one dollar on my subscription. I will try to send more very soon. I am now in my eightieth year. I hear no preaching but the Restitution. Bless the Lord! it guides me on my journey to my destined place of abode. It is my daily prayer that my Redeemer will soon come and set up his everlasting kingdom on the earth, where the righteous shall inherit the land and dwell therein forever. Like David of old, I can say, Bless the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me bless his holy name. If you have retained any numbers, it is my prayer that you will send them. I take great delight in reading Brother Weethee's writings on the coming age. I think I can send soon to pay my indebtedness. How can I travel on my journey without the Restitution to guide me?

Yours, truly, C. M. TEBBITS.

MOSCOW, PA.

We are as yet but few in number, but are strong in the one faith. Brethren Miller and Clouse and their wives were all members of other churches, but through the feeble efforts of man, with the mighty power of the word, they have been led to cry out, "Let God be true though all men be liars." They were all baptized by Brother C. F. Sweet in November last, and are bidding fair to be zealous workers in the vineyard of their Lord.

Yours, in hope of the soon coming kingdom,

C. J. WILBER, M. D.

Sententious.

Nothing is ever done beautifully which is done in rivalship, nor nobly, which is done in pride.—Ruskin.

If the end of one mercy were not the beginning of another, we were undone.—Philip Henry.

"But many a crime deemed innocent on earth
Is registered in heaven: and there, no doubt,
Have each their record with a curse annexed."
—Cowper.

One may do a very good action and not be a good man, but he cannot do a very bad action and not be a bad man.

The further removed we are from certainty and a faith resting on sight, the more deeply we enter into the faith of God stripped of other support.

What does anything belonging to this life matter, when compared with a peaceful heart? Commend all to God, and then lie still, and be at rest in his bosom.

No shattered box of ointment
We ever need regret,
For out of disappointment
Flow sweetest odors yet.

The discord that ensueth
Some startling change of key,
The Master's hand resolveth
In richest harmony.

God's agency does not exclude nor supersede our instrumentality. He gives the increase, but Paul must plant, and Apollos water. He furnishes the wind, and we are to spread the sails. He gives, but we gather. Prayer and diligence, dependence and activity, harmonize in the Scriptures, and are only inconsistent in the crudeness of ignorant and foolish men.

Wm. Jay.

BELIEVING IN GOD.

Every reasonable manifestation of effects necessarily implies a reasonable cause of that manifestation, is precisely the same as the argument of Socrates, that I have as much cause for believing in God by his manifestation in the world as I have for believing in myself or any of my friends by the expression of their character in their features and in the dramatic process of their life. This is the language at once of all profound thinking, of all sound theology, of all high poetry, and of all healthy instinct.—Prof. Blackie.

Selections.

Evangelical Messenger.

O RUM! WHAT HAST THOU DONE?

A. W. DRURY.

O thou Invisible Spirit of Wine! If thou hast no name to be known by, let mortals call thee—Shakespeare.

A short time ago one of the most shocking tragedies occurred in this city (Cleveland, Ohio,) of which it is possible to conceive. It was, however, only the culmination of a series of acts of the most painful and inhuman character; and all the result of that diabolical traffic and insatiable thirst for rum which so often converts human beings into devils. The main facts in the case I give below; and may they nerve anew every moral and Christian person to wage a ceaseless and remorseless warfare against the demon of intemperance!

A father and daughter constituted the little and unhappy family. The former is an habitual drunkard, and compelled his only child, a young lady, to support him and herself by hard labor. This she did by going out sewing. From her meager wages he daily wrenched a portion with which to buy strong drink. In time, however, by the strictest economy, she was able to purchase a sewing machine, and do her sewing at home. The poor creature, as well as some of her neighbors, did all in their power to induce the brutal father to renounce his wicked life, but all to no purpose. The gutter was frequently his bed at night when he did not remain in the dens of sin till morning. The wretched daughter was thus most of the time left alone at night in a cold, cheerless and desolate home, her pillow often being drenched with tears, and her heart wrung with the bitterest anguish.

One day while the streets and sidewalks were covered with ice, this victim of sorrow and abuse tripped and fell; and so great was the injury received that she was at once taken to one of the city hospitals, where gentle hands ministered to her wants. For a number of days and nights she endured a scorching fever, to which the frail body, rendered so by a toiling and sorrowful life, soon succumbed in death. And oh, what a funeral! The undertakers and beastly father alone went to what was supposed would be the last resting place of her mortal remains. A wreath of flowers that had been given to the father by some sympathizing ladies, for the coffin, was sold by him for rum.

Very soon afterward the sewing machine was pawned for the same purpose. But these two acts are not to be compared with the horrible deed committed by that heartless man a few nights afterward. Seized with an appetite that maddened him to desperation, he went to the grave of his daughter, and as if goaded on to his infernal deed by infernal spirits themselves, ruthlessly tore her wasted body from the earth, took it to a medical college, and sold it for a few dollars! And then, with the price of that faithful daughter's body he again debased and glutted himself with the fiery liquid that murdered his offspring, and which will doubtless soon bring his own vile carcass to the grave, and his soul—oh, where!

If such a shocking circumstance as this, the direct fruit of the accursed liquor traffic, does not arouse our indignation against it, and lead us to fight it to the bitter end, may Heaven pity us and forgive our stupidity and indifference! But, knowing as we all do, the dreadful havoc this gigantic evil is making with mankind, how can we expect to escape the responsibility, to say the least, attaching to such a neglect of duty?

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The Lord willing I will be at Ring's Corner the second Sunday in January, commencing Thursday night before; the third Sunday at Shipleyville, commencing Friday night before. The first and second Sundays in February in Edgar county, Ill. Thursday night before the first Sunday at New Hope schoolhouse; the second Sunday at the Wolfe schoolhouse, commencing on Thursday night before.

J. B. HAVEN.

Brother John Moore, who has been in Indiana for a few months past, can now be addressed at his old home, Galesburg, Ill.

Poetry.

Sunday Afternoon.

IN HIM WE LIVE.

O Master, let me walk with thee
In lowly paths of service free;
Tell me thy secret; help me bear
The strain of toil, the fret of care;
Help me the yoke of duty to wear
By some clear vision's constant ray.
Teach me thy patient way to-day.
Are I unable the truth, the manner and way

O Master, let me walk with thee
Before the humble Pharisee;
Help me to walk at the side of spite,
The hate of men who like the light;
The sore distress of needy hours
When cannot read the joyful strains clear
The coldness of the multitude who blindly ... that those ... good

Teach me the path to ... still win ...
In silence, day by ... day,
In work that keeps faith sweet and strong,
In trust when clouds ... are ...
In hope that sends ... hence, ray
For down the future's broadening way,
In peace that only thou canst give,
With thee, O Master, let me live.

Communications.

FIRST LOVE.

ELIAS STYLES.

Dear Brethren and Sisters: Permit one who loves you, and the cause of our blessed Redeemer, to address a few thoughts to you in this way. Is there not a special message addressing itself to us, and calling loudly on us to repent of our coldness and indifference, and do our first work?

Where is that first love we had in the cause? It is time for us to arise, for the glory of the Lord has shone upon us. We must be like the Church in her first love, full of faith and good works. "I have somewhat against thee," says Christ, "because thou hast left thy first love." Not less worthy of warning than departure from fundamental doctrine, or from scriptural morality, is leaving of first love.

The charge is not falling from grace, nor that love is extinguished, but diminished. No zeal, no suffering, was atone for the want of first love. The summons to attention:—"He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches." A solemn manner of calling universal attention to that which is of general and most momentous importance.

The same language is used to every one. Christ, when upon earth, made use of the same form of speech in calling the attention of the people to the most important of his teachings. He used it in reference to the mission of John; Mat. xi. 15; the parable of the sower; Mat. xiii. 9; and the parable of the tares; setting forth the end of the world.

It is also used in relation to an important prophetic fulfillment in Rev. xiii. 9. The promise is to the victor, the overcomer; it is promised that "he shall eat of the tree of life, that grows in the midst of Paradise, or garden, of God." Where is the Paradise? Paul writes in 2 Cor. xii. 2, and in the 4th verse he calls the same place Paradise. It appears in this Paradise is the tree of life. There is but one tree of life brought to view in the Bible. It is mentioned six times, three times in Genesis, and three times in Revelations, but it is everywhere called the tree of life.

The Lord planted it in Eden, and no doubt the Lord translated, or removed it with Eden; and that it will be brought back in the restitution of the new earth.

Esdras says 2 Es. vii. 26; "Behold the time shall come that these tokens which I have told thee shall come to pass, and the Bride shall appear, and ... coming forth shall be seen that now ... withdrawn from the earth,"—but which will in due time appear, and be the Eden restored.

To the overcomer is promised a restoration to more than Adam lost. Then let us strive to be overcomers, for he who gains access to the tree of life, will die no more. "Be thou faithful unto death," and being thus faithful, when the time comes that the saints of God are rewarded you shall receive a crown that will never fade away.

Blessed promise to the overcomer. He shall eat of the hidden manna and receive from his approving Lord a white stone, with a new and precious name engraved thereon.

On the new name Wesley very appropriately says: "Jacob after his victory gained the new name of Israel. Wouldst thou know what thy new name will be? The way to this is plain; overcome. Till then all our inquiries are in vain. Then will then read it on the white stone, but now we are exhorted to hold fast till he comes. He that holds fast to the end the same shall be saved, saved; yea, forever saved into the kingdom of God.

In this world the wicked bear rule, but the time is coming when righteousness will be in the ascendency, when all ungodliness will be seen in its true light, and be at a heavy discount; and when the scepter of power will be in the hands of the people of God. This promise will be explained by the following facts and Scriptures.

The nations are to be given by the Father into the hands of Christ, to be ruled with a rod of iron, and dashed in pieces like a potter's vessel. Psa. xi. 8, 9. Then we shall reign as kings and priests unto our God. During all the saints' weary night of watching they have the word of God to shed its needful light upon their path, but when the Day Star shall arise in their hearts, then no longer will we need the sure word of prophecy, which now shines as a light in a dark place.

Hasten on, O glorious day, when the light of heaven's bright sun shall rise upon the pathway of the little flock, and beams of glory, from the eternal world, shall gild their banners with all those precious promises.

Let us watch and be sober, dear brethren. We are not children of the night, but of the day. Let us be sober, and hope unto the end. We must have all the armor on and with a fixed purpose, we will go forward, for he who has promised, ere long will come, and with the great sound of the trump will awake the sleeping nations of earth, and sea, and change the living saints.

O glorious time, master on. May I be there to rest in our Savior's love. A few more days of disappointment, and a few trials to overcome, then we will wave the palm branches, and on golden harps will sing, and cast our crowns at Jesus' feet.

May the good Lord help and save us is the prayer of your unworthy brother.

THE FOUR LIVING ONES,

The Four and Twenty Elders and the Saints; Each in Their Sphere.

J. A. COOK.

And I beheld, and lo, in the midst of the throne, and of the four living ones) and of the four and twenty elders, stood a Lamb as it had been slain. He came and took the book; and the four living ones), and the four and twenty elders fell down before the Lamb, having every one of them harp and golden vials full of odors which are the prayers of saints; and they sing a new song, etc. Rev. v. 6-10.

In brief, the almost universal opinion confounds "the saints" who sing the new song with the living ones and others. It seems taken for granted, rather from the facts, the terms or the laws of language. Please note.

1. These living ones and elders do not present their own odorous prayers; but the prayers of "the saints!" Then, "the saints sing" their own appropriate song of praise for their redemption! It seems the very song that "no one (else) could learn." Nay more,—they sing this song before the throne and before the four living ones, and the elders." Of course, the saints did not sing before themselves. The scene is in contrast with our text, where "the elders and living ones" present their golden bowls full of "odors which are the prayers of saints; and they sing a new song, etc. Rev. v. 8-10.

In brief, the almost universal opinion confounds "the saints" who sing the new song with the living ones and others. It seems taken for granted, rather from the facts, the terms or the laws of language. Please note.

1. These living ones and elders do not present their own odorous prayers; but the prayers of "the saints!" Then, "the saints sing" their own appropriate song of praise for their redemption! It seems the very song that "no one (else) could learn." Nay more,—they sing this song before the throne and before the four living ones, and the elders." Of course, the saints did not sing before themselves. The scene is in contrast with our text, where "the elders and living ones" present their golden bowls full of "odors which are the prayers of saints" and these "odors" are the prayers of saints!

2. These living ones and elders seem to be the lofty intelligences that belong "about the throne." Chap. vii. 11-17. Because, "All the angels stood round about the throne, and (about) the elders and the four living ones;" and they worship and praise as did the angels and elders in our context.—Mark. They praise in distinction from "the saints." 1 Chron v. 9-14.

3. Angels are not the saints; but rather "ministering spirits—to the heirs of salvation." Heb. i. 13, 14; Matt. xviii. 10.

4. Redemption is indeed the theme of the song. But the saints sing the new song; and then these high celestial orders—"angels, principalities and powers—who do dire to look into these things,"—concur to swell the universal chorus. Chap. v. 11-14.

It is becoming to discriminate—"rightly dividing the word."

5. "For verily, he took not on (him the nature of) angels; but the seed of Abraham." Heb. ii. 7-16. Hence the primal distinction between the saints redeemed, and the angels, we find all through the Bible. "Angels praise the Lamb that is slain. But saints can add "in higher strain; not only that he suffered thus, but that he suffered all for us!"

Please observe, that "the saints" are the nearest and only proper antecedent of "they sing." "The odors are the prayers of saints: and they have the first occasion to sing! Who sing? They seem to be those whose prayers are incense, had filled the vials (bowls) of the "ministering spirits."

Again, the "priest taken from among men was ordained for such to offer both gifts and sacrifices." Heb. v. 1. Hence, "the ministering spirits" may, as in our text, serve in harmony; after the heavenly fashion."

To close this brief notice of this profound portion of the Word; let me say that this is no attempt to be "wise above what is written," but to bring out what is written for our learning."

The popular and prevailing view has at least some affinity with the notion of Swedenborg; that there are no angels, except as taken from among men. If so, then, "man was not made a little lower than the angels." Psa. viii. 4; Heb. ii. 7. Nay, then; "Angels are (not) greater in power and might than man;" as in 2 Peter ii. 11. Furthermore, then there would have been no "cherubim" before any one man was redeemed to "keep the tree of life." Gen. iii. 24.

Such notions are adapted to loosen the screws and unsettle the very foundations of faith. It is best to believe it is best to "speak as the oracles of God." Thus we build on "the rock of ages." Amen.

UNITY, FELLOWSHIP AND THE LORD'S SUPPER.

J. F. GELLETLY.

Perhaps there is nothing more desirable among brethren than that they should dwell together in unity, and, nevertheless, among professors of Christianity who understand the mission of the King, and preach the gospel of the kingdom of God, there are, in every city of which I have any information, different sects, the church, in many instances, being broken into infinitesimal portions that have no power, and often no desire of cohesion.

It is written that "the tree is known by its fruit, and if we are to be judged by this rule, we must fall very far short of perfection. Would it not be well, then, to enquire into the probable cause of this spirit that seems to pervade the church? I will, therefore, give a few thoughts by way of suggestion, to correct what (I opine) is an error that leads to the spirit aforesaid.

In the act known as the "Lord's Supper," in which we celebrate the memory of the King and worship the Father, we ought to bear in mind that we are not hosts, but guests; and that no guest has a right to expel any other decently behaved guest. The host invites. The invited may comply or not as suits himself. But the house he enters is not his; neither the table at which he sits. This principle I believe is universally understood, and the quietude of the table is preserved for the hosts' sake, and should there be any animosities between invited guests, decency would bury them while in the house of a mutual friend. So also at the table of the Lord, only this difference, respect for Christ's sake, and for God the Father's sake, the mutual friend and the host.

It is written, "Be not righteous overmuch neither be overwise." Yet we are often confronted with instance, where one suppliant for God's mercy and Christ's love, refuses to partake at the same table with a fellow suppliant and in such cases it is argued that we are to "have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness," and so on, although the objectionable person may be as respectable as honorable and apparently as much of a Christian as the objector. Why even the Pharisee that took the poor publican as a plea for himself, and a contrast to his own righteousness, never objected to meet even with him in a common temple, and worship before a common mercy seat.

As to "fellowship" that means companionship or familiarity and has no reference in the Bible to the "Lord's Supper." And the objects with which we are to shun fellowship, are not our Christian brethren who like ourselves have the misfortune not to be perfectly wise.

Seeing this we are left free from the trammels of responsibility concerning our neighbor, if we treat him kindly, and courteously, and honorably, but pitifully, condescendingly, and passionately, keeping our mouths pure and clean from all gossip concerning him, and the sinister motives that are so easily suspected, and so readily imputed to him.

Publishers Restitution: I thought I would write a few lines for THE RESTITUTION, for the encouragement of the dear brethren in Michigan.

At our last annual conference I was chosen State Evangelist, and I commenced my labors as such, Nov. 14, 1880, in the township of Watson, Allegan county. I had a good comfortable meeting house in which to hold meetings.

There was a strong prejudice in the minds of some. Extreme views as taught by some, had caused this unnecessary prejudice. Some of the questions asked me were—Do you believe the wicked will never have a resurrection? Do you believe it is wicked to pray? Do you believe that children are buried like beasts and that is the last of them? Do you believe in the Holy Spirit? And finally, do you believe in a devil?

O, when will men learn wisdom, and that it is of infinitely more consequence to persuade men to accept the gospel of the kingdom, and be saved by it, than to preach those things that only distract and divide?

I held meetings at this place for five weeks, and the interest was intense from first to last. The congegations were large; the people coming from miles around. I believe this to be the most interesting meeting ever held in western Michigan, by our people, and the result was, a goodly number embraced the truth.

This will be our strongest church in this part of the state if they are properly cared for.

A. M. Smith of Otsego, is an able expounder and preacher, and rendered me some timely services during the meetings.

From this point I went to Fisher Station on the Grand Rapids and Ind. R. R. The Grangers opened their hall for me. I have preached thirteen discourses at this place, and the hall has been densely crowded most of the time, and on evening it could only hold a part of the congregation. The interest is simply intense.

As the result of the meeting, eight have embraced the faith, and I appointed yesterday, Jan. 12, for baptism and I believe it was the worst day we have had this winter. Some of the brethren tried to persuade those who were about to be baptized to wait till the weather was warmer, but it was impossible.

They said they had made up their minds, and they were ready, and would not let the devil cheat them, or keep them from duty. Four intelligent sisters went down into the water and put on Christ by baptism. I am sure they will make good soldiers.

And now I would say to my brethren in Michigan: I am in the field to work in earnest, and ask for your hearty support, encouragement and cooperation; and above all things else, your earnest prayers.

We are engaged in a glorious work, and the Lord is ready to bless. What we want is able, earnest, sincere men, to proclaim the truth.

There is an ear to hear, and I find no difficulty in reaching the multitude, at least, so far as getting them to hear me, is concerned.

Now my brethren, let us make a special effort in Michigan, this year, to convert men to the truth. Let us not contend about little differences, but try to save men, and above all things, let us remember our dear RESTITUTION. Try and extend its circulation, and remember its wants; and also, the Tract Fund. Much good can be done in this department. The Evangelist should have a good supply of small, well written tracts on hand.

Let us go to work in earnest. The people are perishing for lack of knowledge.

BENJAMIN WOODWARD.
Hammond, Mich.

Youths' Column.

SATURDAY NIGHT.

Placing the little hats all in a row,
Ready for church to-morrow, you know;
Washing wee faces and black little fists,
Getting them ready and fit to be kissed;
Putting them into clean garments and white;
That is what mothers are doing to-night.

Spying out holes in the little, worn hose,
Laying by shoes that are worn through the toes;
Looking o'er garments so faded and thin—
Who but a mother knows where to begin?
Changing a button to make it look right—
That is what mothers are doing to-night.

Creeping in softly to take a last peep,
After the little ones all are asleep;
Anxious to know if the children are warm,
Tucking the blankets round each little form;
Kissing each little face rosy and bright—
That is what mothers are doing to-night.

Kneeling down gently beside the white bed,
Lovingly commit the dear lambs overhead,
Praying as only a mother can pray,
"God keep the evil keep them from going astray."

Sunday School Standard.

Almonds and Violets.

"Dear mamma," said a little girl to her mother, as they were walking together in the garden, "why do you have so few of those beautiful double almonds in the garden? You have hardly a bed where there is not a tuft of violets, and they are so much plainer! What can be the reason?"

"My dear child," said the mother, "gather me a bunch of each; then I will tell you why I prefer the humble violets."

The little girl ran off, and soon returned with a fine bunch of the beautiful almonds and a few violets.

"Smell them, my love," said her mother," and try which is the sweeter."

The child smelled again and again, and could scarcely believe herself that the lovely almond had no scent, while the plain violet had a delightful odor.

"Well, my child, which is the sweeter?"

"O dear mother! it is the little violet!"

"Well, now you know, my child, why I prefer the plain violet to the beautiful almond. Beauty without fragrance in flowers is in my opinion, something like beauty without gentleness and good temper in little girls. When any of those girls who speak without reflection may say to you, 'What charming blue eyes! What beautiful curls! What a fine complexion!' without knowing whether you have any good qualities and without thinking of your defects and failings, which everybody is born with, remember, then, my little girl, the almond blossom; and remember also, when your affectionate mother may not be here to tell you, that beauty without gentleness and good temper is worthless."

Messiah Herald.

"O Satan, Far Be."

Miss L.R. Wheeler, who is engaged in mission work in India in writing to the Times of Refreshing concerning the progress of the girls in their school at Ba-im, West Berar, says:

"But best of all, they are growing in the knowledge of the Lord and his power to save, for from the first we have prayed and desired that they might be very simple in their trust of our Father. I will give a single example. The girls rise at four o'clock each day and do all their washing, washing and grinding before the morning session of school, which begins at seven. This morning, just as I was about to rise, I heard Shanthi, the oldest one, break out in such a fervent tone, singing pleadingly, tenderly,—

"There is a fountain filled with blood Drawn from Immanuel's veins," and as the song died away on the air, I heard her voice again in full, earnest tones, 'O Satan, far be.' This is the Marathi construction of the words, 'get thee hence, Satan.' After dressing I went out to their cook-house and found Shanthi busily engaged making bread, and said, Shanthi, why did you say, 'O Satan, far be'? She looked up with a bright smile and said: 'The fire would not burn, I felt anger coming, so thought of Jesus and sang; then told Satan to be off, and the anger went, and I am happy.' Are there not many things which are hid from the wise and prudent, and revealed unto babes?"

Sermons for the Little Ones.

"Suffer the little ones to come unto me, and forbid them not for of such is the Kingdom of heaven."

A long time ago, when Jesus was here upon earth, some mothers who loved him, brought their children to him that he might bless them.

The disciples, bade the women "take the children away, the Master would not want to be troubled with them." But the tender, loving Savior said, "Let them come. I love them. Of such is my Kingdom;" and I know, that the little readers of THE RESTITUTION would like to come to him who was so kind to children when here on earth.

Well, you cannot come if you do not know how. Would you like to know the way? That is the very first thing you must do. You must learn what God has said about Jesus in the Bible, why he came into the world the first time, and why he is coming back again, and just what God says you must believe. Just as you believe every word that your good fathers and mothers tell you, just so, you must believe every word that God tells you. You know, when they promise faithfully to give you something for being good children, you are sure to get it. You believe, what they say they will give you, you will get. So you must believe what God says he will give you, you will get, for this is faith, and you cannot please God without faith.

He does not like to have people disbelieve what he says, not to have them say "they will never get" what he has told them he will give them if they mind him.

He will not let such people go into his beautiful kingdom at all, for to get into that kingdom, we must be righteous (doing good) and we cannot be righteous, if we do not have the faith that will make us so.

Well, away back, when man was first upon the earth, when there was only Adam and Eve to live together, God put them into a lovely garden and told them, they might have as theirs, all the beautiful fruit, except that which was upon one tree in the midst of the garden. That they must not touch. If they did, they would surely die.

All the beasts and birds minded the man. He would call them all to come to him by name, and not one of them would harm him.

There was no dark, cold, cloudy weather, no ugly storms. The beautiful sunshine always streamed down upon the garden. The earth was watered by plentiful dews, that every morning, sparkled like beads on the grass.

The man and woman never got tired like we do. They did not feel any fear. They never cried. They were never sick, and there was nothing to trouble them.

God loved them and they loved God, and sometimes his angels came down and talked with them, just as you talk with one another.

There were pretty flowers all over the garden that were always in bloom, and lovely rivers wound in and out, among the trees.

The man and woman might have staid there always, and have come to live forever if they had minded God, and not touched the tree of which he had forbidden them to eat.

But one day the woman was walking alone in the garden. The naughty serpent saw her, and told her she wouldn't die, if she did eat some of the fruit that God had told her not to touch. So, instead of running away, as she ought to have done, she went to look at the beautiful tree. Its lovely, golden apples were in reach of her hand. She took one and ate it and carried another to her husband, and he, too, ate.

O, how sad they must have felt when they thought of what they had done! And how much worse, when, as they were hiding from God, his angel called them and told them they must indeed die—that they had been made from the dust of the ground, and must turn to dust again—that the beautiful garden was no longer theirs—that they must now, go out into a world of storms, where thorns and briers would grow and they would have to work ever so hard.

They could never come to the tree of life. A great angel with a flaming sword, kept them away. The chance of living forever was gone. By not minding God they had brought death upon themselves and upon all their children. If they had believed what God told them, and had minded him, all would have been well.

They could have eaten of the tree of life and have never died and the whole earth would soon have become just like the garden where God placed them. But now, God said he would curse the ground—few of the beasts should mind the man, and many of them would become fierce and hurtful.

Yet God made one promise to the woman; it was, that her seed, or child, should sometime bruise the serpent's head. That promised child was Jesus. No one else can overcome and kill the wicked serpent, and take away death and all the sorrow that he has caused.

In the next paper we will talk again to the little ones, if the kind editor will let us.

THE FRIEND OF THE CHILDREN.

Brevities.

Col. Glukofsky, who has surveyed the ancient bed of the Oxus, is of the opinion that the diversion of the river to the Caspian Sea from its present course is quite practicable, and a sum of 600,000 roubles has been set apart for the work. Ten Russian engineers, five companies of infantry, and three sotnias of Cossacks are engaged in the operations.

The obelisk was adjusted to its permanent position in Central Park. Thanks are due to Mr. Wm. Henry Hurlbert for the actual procurement of the gift from the Khedive. Mr. Evarts lent his cordial assistance, Mr. Vanderbilt furnished the money, and Captain Gorringe undertook the long and difficult work of removal, which was on Saturday (Jan. 22) brought to a successful completion.

A writer in the English Contemporary Review states that "there are more Jews in Berlin than in the whole of England, or in the whole of France. The Mayor of Berlin is a Jew, so was the late President of the German Parliament. Two-thirds of the Berlin lawyers are Jews, the whole of the so-called Liberal press is in Jewish hands; and the bankers, financiers, and leading shopkeepers of the capital are of the same race. In the watering-places and health resorts of Germany the people who lived in the best hotels and most luxurious villas, drive the finest equipages, and wear the most extravagant raiment, are Jews."

ASTRONOMICAL NOTES FOR JANUARY.

The interest of the month centers in Venus, Jupiter, and Saturn among the planets. Venus moves eastward across Aquarius, increases evening by evening in brilliancy, and draws nearer to the major planets. At the end of the month only a single constellation will lie between them. The illuminated surface of this lovely object decreases in area but increases in diameter, yet the planet is a rather provoking and unsatisfactory one to the observer as seen through a telescope, being enveloped in a dense atmosphere and rarely affording a distinct outline. Venus is now the brightest star in the firmament, and in about sixty days will probably become so lustrous as to be visible by day and to cast shadows by night. At the end of two months Venus, Saturn, and Jupiter will form an enchanting group in Aries—a spectacle of rare beauty. Both Jupiter and Saturn continue to be conspicuous for brilliancy, and neither will fall off much in that feature during the year; the former because comparatively not far from perihelion and the latter because the ring, which is more luminous than the orb, is opening out more and more, and because the planet is travelling on to perihelion. January and February are favorable months for observing these mighty orbs. Mars continues to be a morning star, rising about an hour and a half before the sun, and is slowly increasing in lustre as it returns from its long journey to aphelion. Uranus becomes visible again, almost on the ecliptic, just below the bright star on a line eastward from Regulus in the foremost hind leg of Leo. Jupiter affords constant evidence of great activity. The belt above the equatorial is at times quite distinct and again fades away somewhat. It is over 80,000 miles in length and averages perhaps over 1,000 miles in breadth. Other markings above and below the equatorial belt come and go constantly. The earth is apparently responding to the vast commotions within and upon Jupiter and the sun. Two magnetic storms, one of great waves, have swept around the world; atmospheric storms have increased and the staunchest steamers have been delayed and somewhat severely tried; the internal fires of the earth are aroused to unwonted activity.—I. M. F., in Christian Intelligencer

DIED.

SHAFF—In Frederick County, Md., Nov. 15, 1880 Margaret Shaff, at the good old age of 76 years. During her long illness the writer never failed to visit her when in her neighborhood, to talk with her on the glowing promises made of God to the fathers, and to comfort her in her afflictions. She was one of the first in that locality, who enlisted under the banner of Christ by being baptized by the writer some twenty-five years ago. She adorned her profession both as a faithful helpmeet to her husband, who deeply mourns her loss, and, also, as a kind and affectionate mother of a large family of children.

S. J. MORGAN.

MORGEN—
Many have been thy toils and tears
While passing through this world of cares;
But in the re-surrection day
Thou shalt with joy have double pay.

S. F. MORGAN

WALKER—At Oakosh, Wis., Jan. 12, 1881, Susan Walker, wife of Lyman R. Walker, aged 76 years. The deceased was the mother of Sister I. M. Stephenson, the wife of our widely known brother, Elder J. K. Stephenson. Of her surviving father Sister Stephenson writes: "My father was 82 years of age last November, and though physically yielding somewhat to his weight of years, yet mentally he is strong and wonderfully active. His faith in the promises of God, and their soon fulfillment is still bright, though he realizes he may not live to witness the grand consummation. He has been a firm believer and an earnest advocate (in a private capacity) of the doctrines of the coming and kingdom of the Messiah for nearly forty years, and he has never, in all that time enjoyed the association of a church or congregation of like precious faith."

SHEPPARD—In Newark, N. J., Jan. 12, 1881, after a severe illness of eighteen days, William Sheppard, aged 63 years. Our brother was well known as an earnest defender of the faith, working wherever and whenever an opportunity offered—speaking, writing and publishing tracts, and thus sowing beside all waters. The readers of THE RESTITUTION will bear witness of his zeal, in the various expositions of Scripture that have appeared from time to time from his pen, and which, no doubt, have had their effect in comforting, edifying, as of building up the household of faith. He loved the Bible—the Book of books,—which was his constant study, bringing things new and old out of its hidden treasure-house. From an acquaintance of near thirty years, I have found him always the one thing—an earnest contender for the faith once for all delivered to the saints, and also for its obedience. "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." His theme in conversation was the good news of the kingdom, and the things pertaining to the name of Jesus of Nazareth. For reasons best known to himself he did not ally himself to the brethren—considering he could be more useful in working independently—making no one responsible but the Bible for what he taught. His work is done. "He has fought a good fight, he has finished his course, and has kept the faith." A widow and four children (three sons and one daughter) deeply mourn the loss of a loving husband and a kind father. May that "word" that comforted their father's heart, through life's trials and death's struggles, make them wise unto salvation. "Mark the perfect man and behold the upright, for the end of that man is peace." Words of instruction and comfort were spoken at the funeral by Brother J. O. Cook.

J. O. WOODRUFF.

MARRIED.

TAUZER—GUY—Dec. 30, 1880, in church at Willow Slough schoolhouse, Yolo co., Cal., by Elder R. Corbaley, Mr. Albert Tauzer and Miss Cyrt's Guy. Mr. Tauzer is a leading farmer and an old resident of that locality. The bride came to this state a few months ago from Columbiana Co., Ohio.

SECOND EDITION.

The GOSPEL of the KINGDOM

Advocated in a series of Ten Discourses

—BY WILEY JONES.—

This edition is elegantly printed and bound by Lippincott & Co., clear type, good paper, 216 pages. Plain cloth binding $1; cloth gilt edge $1.50; leather marbled edge $2.00, post paid. To obtain this valuable work, send the price by post office money order or registered letter, to

WILEY JONES,
Norfolk, Va.

A Letter to a Friend!

—BY MRS. C. O. WOODRUFF.—

This little ... is so well known that it needs no comment. By mail, ... price 15c.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE

Poetry.

Mobley's Herald.

WHAT OF THE NIGHT?

D. T. TAYLOR.

"Watchman! watchman! what of the night?
Shadows and darkness encircle me quite!
Earth is enshrouded in midnight gloom;
Black as the pall that envelops the tomb;
Watchers are few, and mockers are bold—
The heavens are starless—the night-air is cold!
I am weary; O would that this night were gone!
I will watch for the day till the morning dawn."

Watchman! watchman! what of the night?
"In the east appeareth a glimmering light:
Faintly it gleams—but 'tis rising now,
And streaming afar—'tis the morning's herald:
Shadows are passing—the Day Star is out—
And the glory is dashing and leaping about:
And the golden tints that are poured o'er the earth
Foretell of the bursting morning's birth."

Watchman! watchman! what of the night?
"Day pushes on all cloudless and bright.
And warmth, and light, and beauty are driven
To the farthermost bound of the fair-off heavens!
Flashing flames from the throne of God
Are bathing the world in a golden flood!
Seraph and cherub are crowding it on,
And the pure on their pinions are wayward gone."

Watchman! watchman! what of the night?
"Horses on my vision a cavalcading sight!
The Lord is in sight with his shining ones,
And the splendors of twice ten thousand suns!
He has come! Lo, the night-watch of sorrow is o'er,
And the mantle of midnight shall shroud me no more!"

Pilgrim and stranger, haste to thy home,
For the morning, the beautiful morning has come!"

Communications.

JESUS BOTH LORD AND CHRIST.

J. CAMERON.

The apostle Peter announced to the Jews, assembled at Jerusalem on the day of Pentecost, that God had made Jesus, whom they had crucified, both Lord and Christ.

At an earlier period our Lord asked his disciples, "Whom say ye that I am?" The same apostle replied, "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." This was a confession of faith which became the universal creed of the early church.

Of this the apostle Paul said, "Other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus the Christ," (so rendered by Dr. Macknight.) And the apostle John, "These are written that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, and that believing, ye might have life through his name."

Notwithstanding the prevalence of this simple confession in the primitive churches, it soon fell into disuse, and the term "Christ" was resolved into a mere surname. Even the so-called "Apostles' Creed"—a compilation of the early centuries of the Christian era, although not the production of the apostles—ignores this apostolic form of confession.

This is the more remarkable, seeing that this document professes to be a summary of the Christian belief. Its language on this point is, "I believe . . . . . in Jesus Christ, his only Son, our Lord." The term Christ is here used as a surname, while his Divine Sonship and his Lordship are prominently expressed.

This departure from apostolic usage has been perpetuated through the dark ages to the present century as the universally received form of professed belief in the most fundamental article of Christian faith.

The merit of breaking through the incrustation of centuries on this point belongs to America. Upwards of fifty years ago, Walter Scott, of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, resuscitated this primitive form of confession and made it the prominent article of his public ministrations. In this he was shortly afterwards joined by the late Alexander Campbell, of Bethany, Virginia. It was termed the Ancient Gospel, and embraced the death, burial, and resurrection of our Lord as the only necessary elements of true gospel faith. Many churches sprung up on this basis throughout the United States. The movement is known as The Reformation; the community resulting from it, both in America and Britain, being generally termed "Disciples of Christ."

Before treating of the points immediately in hand, it may be well to notice the latter part of the apostolic confession—"the Son of the living God"—which undoubtedly all must acknowledge who would be true professors of Christ.

What, then, is its significance? This is a question more easily asked than answered. No express definition has been given in the Scriptures of the Divine Sonship of Jesus. It is owing to this that so much diversity of opinion concerning the person of our Lord has existed among his professed disciples. During the Christian era upwards of thirty different opinions have been held on this point, and on the relation of the Son to the Father, giving rise to nearly as many sects.

It is satisfactory to know, however, that the Divine Sonship of our Lord, in a higher sense than any other being, is acknowledged by nearly all professing Christians.

It should be stated in addition, that there are two facts plainly declared in the New Testament which approach very nearly to an express definition of the Divine Sonship of our Lord; viz His miraculous conception, and his resurrection from the dead.

The former of these is expressly given as the reason why he should be called the Son of God—"The angel answered and said unto her (Mary), The Holy Ghost shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee; therefore also that holy thing which shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God."

Regarding the resurrection of Jesus Paul says: "Concerning his Son Jesus Christ our Lord, who was made of the seed of David, according to the flesh, and declared to be the Son of God with power, according to the spirit of holiness, by the resurrection from the dead."

Here we have first, the fact of Divine Sonship as declared by the angel to Mary—"God's Son made of the seed of David, according to the flesh, and second, a confirmation of the fact—"declared to be the Son of God by his resurrection." In conformity with this we find that the apostles speak of our Lord as "the first-born from the dead"—"the first-begotten of the dead."

If these facts and declarations be acknowledged by any confessor of the faith expressed by Peter in the words under consideration, it would seem to be sufficient, so far as the Sonship is concerned, while if the miraculous birth or the resurrection of Jesus, be denied, it is difficult to see that any mere opinion regarding his Divine Sonship could be admitted as a substitute.

Let us now glance at the term "Lord" as applied to Jesus the Christ. "God made Jesus both Lord and Christ." Nothing is plainer from this than that there is a broad and clear distinction between the terms "Lord" and "Christ." We have as yet said nothing as to the true significance of the term "Christ," but whatever it is, it must be something quite distinct from that of the term Lord.

This might be seen from the way in which this term is used in relation to the disciples. Jesus is their Lord. The term "our Lord" occurs continually in the epistles. It expresses a relationship in which Jesus stands to his followers. The term signifies "possessor," and, consequently, authority over that which is possessed.

Under the system of slavery, possession of a slave gives the master absolute control over him as his chattel or property. Redeemed or bought by the Lord, Christians are his property. Hence the frequent appeals on this ground urged by the apostles on believers, enjoining their obedience. They "serve the Lord Christ"—"the Lord that bought them."

The term Christ has no such relationship to the disciples. The phrase "our Christ" never once occurs in the New Testament. On the contrary, we have "the Christ of God," "the Lord's (that is Jehovah's) Christ," and kindred expressions. A quotation made by the Apostle Peter, from the second Psalm, illustrates this, and at the same time shows us whence the term Christ was derived. It is the prediction concerning the rulers' taking counsel against Jehovah and his Anointed. The word "Anointed" is that used in the Common Version of the Psalm. In the apostle's quotation (Acts iv.) it is "against the Lord and his Christ." The usage of anointing kings with oil on their selection to this dignity is here referred to. Saul and David are familiar examples. Although priests were also sometimes anointed, the term "the Lord's Anointed" was especially applied to the person designated to the kingly office.

In the purpose of God, the Savior of the world was destined to be a descendant of David the King of Israel. On one occasion our Lord made allusion to this. He asked the Pharisees, "What think ye of [the] Christ? Whose Son is he?" They answered "The son of David." "How then" he asked again, "doth David in spirit call him Lord?" They could not answer.

The reference was to Psalm cx., where David says, "Jehovah said to my Lord, sit thou at my right hand till I make thine enemies thy footstool." From the question of our Lord it is evident that the term Christ denotes descent from David as God's chosen future King of Israel. But David's calling him "my Lord" points to some specialty in his case beyond any of David's other descendants. In short, he was to be the One Seed promised to Abraham as well as to David, and who was foreshadowed in Eden as the seed of the woman who should bruise the serpent's head.

Thus, as the One Seed of Abraham, and especially as the Second Adam, invested with the dominion the first Adam failed to attain to, our Lord occupies a position of superiority to David as well as to the highest of the human race. He is Lord of all. "All power is given unto him in heaven and in earth." "Angels and principalities and powers are made subject to him." Compare Psa. viii. with Heb. ii.

The full exercise of this Lordship is reserved for the future, when the Messiah shall be not only King of kings but Lord of lords.

A few brief extracts will show this. In Psa. ii., after the setting of God's King upon the holy hill of Zion, it is intimated to the Christ, "Ask of me and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession. Thou shalt break them with a rod of iron, thou shalt dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel." And in Psa. cx., "Jehovah shall send the rod of thy strength out of Zion: rule thou in the midst of thine enemies. The Lord at thy right hand shall strike through kings in the day of his wrath. He shall judge among the heathen (or nations)." And in Isa. ii., "He shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people: and they shall beat their swords into plough-shares, and their spears into pruning-hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more."

The result of God's judgments shall be peace to the nations, and also righteousness; for "when thy judgments are in the earth the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness." "The kingdoms of this world shall then become the kingdoms of our Lord (Jehovah) and of his Christ."

The Lordship of Jesus nevertheless came into partial exercise immediately after his exaltation to the right hand of God. This was seen in his "working with" his apostles, and "confirming their word with signs following." "Head over all things to the church," his Lordship was exercised in such events as the conversion and calling of Saul of Tarsus, giving gifts to men, etc., culminating in the final revelation given to John in Patmos some seventy years after Pentecost. "There were differences of administration, but the same Lord."

But while he was seated on the throne of Jehovah in the heavens, no one will affirm that he is now exercising more special rule in the earth than that providential supervision over the world at large which properly belongs to the throne of God in heaven.

The death and resurrection of Jesus had a special relation to his Lordship, "for to this end Christ both died and rose and revived, that he might be Lord both of the dead and living." He is thus the Prince of life. His own words are, "Thou hast given him power over all flesh that he should give eternal life to as many as thou hast given him." "I am the resurrection and the life." "I am he that liveth and was dead; and, behold, I am alive forevermore, Amen; and have the keys of hell and of death"—rendered by Wakefield, the grave and of death. "Verily, verily, I say unto you, the hour is coming and now is when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and they that hear shall live"—fulfilled in such cases as Lazarus, the widow's son, and Jairus' daughter. "Marvel not at this; for the hour is coming in which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth—they that have done good unto the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil to the resurrection of damnation." Paul, referring to this phase of the Lordship, says to Timothy—"I charge thee therefore, before God and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom." Jesus is thus Lord of the entire race from Adam to latest generations.

But what of his Christship? Is its proper jurisdiction as extensive as we have seen that of his Lordship to be? This is an important question, and it happily admits of a Scriptural answer. The Christ, as the Son of David, was promised David's throne and kingdom. The original promise in 2 Samuel vii., the predictions of the prophets, such as in Ezek. xxi. 25, Isaiah ix. 6, Jeremiah xxiii. 5, etc., expressly declare this.

The New Testament, so far from putting a so-called spiritual sense on such prophecies, amply corroborates their plain, natural sense. Thus, before the birth of our Lord, an angel intimated to his mother that "the Lord God should give him the throne of his father David, and that he should reign over the house of Jacob"—the very people whom David ruled.

The term here used is "Jacob," not Israel. It is popularly believed that the Church is the "spiritual Israel"—the Israel of God. But there is no good reason for such an idea. But, although there were, it could not affect the literal sense of the promise to Mary, inasmuch as the phrase "the house of Jacob" cannot by any possibility convey such an idea.

Shortly after his birth the visit of the wise men elicited the fact that the King of the Jews, the Christ, and the Governor of Israel was one and the same person. At an advanced period of his earthly history our Lord promised his apostles that they should share with him his throne and kingdom, and sit on thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel. See Luke i. 32; Mat. ii. 1-6; xix. 28; and Luke xxii. 28-30.

It is plain, therefore, that the jurisdiction pertaining to the Christship is limited to the Kingship of the chosen people Israel restored to Palestine—formerly the subjects of that theocracy which was established by Jehovah, the God of their fathers.

It is admitted on all hands that the apostles, in confessing Jesus to be the Christ, had no other idea of him than that of the Anointed King of Israel. In view of the evidence adduced, can any one say they were wrong? There is no evidence that their Master ever told them they were mistaken.

But this is not all. It is recorded that Jesus was confessed in the very terms which express the Kingship of the twelve tribes—"Thou art the Son of God, thou art the King of Israel." John i. 49. No word of correction was uttered by the Lord. He had just before styled this confessor an "Israelite indeed in whom is no guile." Other disciples were present who must have had their so-called Jewish prejudices confirmed when they heard the terms of Nathaniel's confession so readily homologated by their Master. Shall we not rather say they had their faith in the Divine promises strengthened, and their confidence in their Master's claims increased?

But more—our Lord when examined by the ruling authorities, maintained his claim to the Messiahship in the same terms as his own disciples had used in confessing him. Before the Jewish Council, when adjured by the high priest—"Tell us whether Thou be the Christ; the Son of God," he replied in the affirmative. Pilate the Roman Governor put the question in the broad, well understood, sense of the title—"Art Thou the King of the Jews?" The same distinct affirmative answer was given.

This became the ground of his condemnation, and Pilate wrote the accusation and fixed it to the cross—"This is Jesus of Nazareth, the King of the Jews." Thus the cross, intelligently contemplated, is a witness to the Israelitish character of the Christship, as well as to the sacrificial death of the Son of God.

It is generally supposed that the apostles had their minds disabused of this idea of the Christship by the outpouring of the Holy Spirit on Pentecost. But there is an utter lack of proof of such a supposition. The first two discourses of the apostle Peter after that event prove the contrary. In the first he distinctly affirmed that God had raised up (the) Christ to sit on David's throne; Acts ii. 30. In the second he as clearly intimated that God should send Jesus Christ, whom the heaven had received until the times of the restitution of all things spoken of by the prophets. Acts iii. 20, 21. To infer that David's throne was transferred to heaven, because Jesus ascended to God's right hand till his enemies should be made his footstool, is purely gratuitous. Peter makes no such statement, but expressly affirms that Jesus is to return at the times of restitution of things predicted. He is retained in heaven not till the restitution, but only till the times of restitution. And restitution is a well understood term, and is the exact equivalent of the original—simply a restoring.

David's throne and kingdom are, according to the prophets, subjects of restoration. These, in the days of his humiliation, he promised to share with his disciples. And since his exaltation to his Father's throne in heaven he repeated the promise to John in Patmos, at the same time clearly distinguishing between the two thrones—"To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in MY THRONE, even as I also overcame and am set down with my Father in his throne."

Edinburgh, Scotland.

(To be continued.)

JOSEPH AND JUDAH—CALEB AND JOSHUA.

S. ROXANA WINCH.

Whoever studies the word of God attentively will constantly find wonderful facts and precious truths flashing out upon his mental vision; to lead him on in the pursuit, with renewed pleasure and fresher zeal.

Hidden away in those old, old archives, among dry genealogies, are things, that have a bearing upon all nations, all lands, all human destiny. Among these things, is this; that loyalty to God, is followed by the promise of the future's pre-eminent blessings. Joseph feared God, and God was with him. All that he did was made to prosper. Mercy followed him into the prison, took him from the dungeon, and set him over all the land of Egypt. Reuben's birthright was given unto his sons. Though Judah prevailed above his brethren, so that of him comes the chief ruler, the birthright was Joseph's. In the blessing of Jacob, and in that of Moses, the pre-eminent gifts are made to fall upon the heads of the sons of Joseph. "The choicest gifts of the heavens," with their dews, the iron, the silver and the gold, of "the depth's deposits," "the choicest fruits of the sun," "the choicest produce of the moon," "the choicest gifts of earth's great mountain ranges," "the choicest gifts of earth," will "the dweller in the thorn-bush," bring for "the crown of the head of the crowned one of his brothers."

His firstling ox was to be his beauty and with the horns of a unicorn, was he to push together the nations of earth.

In that short and simple sentence—Joseph feared God—we find the key of all this. He feared God. He departed from evil. His ways were upright. He loved righteousness and hated iniquity, and the oracles of Jehovah picture him in his seed, multiplied into thousands and tens of thousands, with the choicest things of the habitable world laid at his feet, as a reward for his faithfulness and zeal.

Joshua (the salvation of Jehovah) was of the tribe of Ephriam whom Jacob blessed before Manasseh.

Remember now, that, although the birthright was Joseph's, yet Judah prevailed above his brethren, so that the chief ruler, the law-giver, the Shiloh, the Restorer, the Prince of the kings of the earth, the One whose the kingdoms of this world are to become, descends from him, and that upon his head, the next great tribal blessing rests. His father's children, bowing down before Josua, are all to bow down before him.

Caleb, Joshua's right hand man, was of the tribe of Judah. Of the twelve men, heads of the children of Israel, who were sent by Moses to spy out the land of Canaan, only Caleb and Joshua brought back a good report, only Caleb and Joshua of all the hosts of Israel, believed the Lord. "Let us go up," said Caleb, "for we are well able to overcome it." And with him, Joshua united in saying, that it was an exceeding good land, a land flowing with milk and honey, that the defence of its people had departed, and that the Lord was with Israel if they rebelled not against him.

But all the congregation murmured against Moses, weeping all night and wishing that they had died in Egypt, or died in the wilderness, and sought to make themselves a captain to return to Egypt. They believed not the Lord. They believed not the word which he spake, that he would bring them into the land and make them to possess it. "How long will it be ere they believe me, for all the signs which I have showed among them?" was the question that he put to Moses.

The whole earth would one day be filled with a glory like to that which they had seen, but upon the land of Canaan, their eyes should not look; they should turn back and perish in the wanderings of forty years.

Disloyalty to God, the traitor's spirit, brought upon that mighty host, the just wrath of the all seeing One. They had made a solemn covenant with the Lord; they had said "All that the Lord hath commanded us will we do." A virtual confession that they believed him, but when they heard of giants, of walled cities and a strong people, they forgot his words, put away his promises, and turned for help to feeble man.

As Benedict Arnold would have perished, detested of all nations for his disloyalty to his people and government,—had he not saved himself by flight,—so did these sinful men perish for their iniquity to their God.

They were traitors to him whom they had sworn to serve, under whose government they were, whose laws they had promised to keep, and as such, died in the wilderness.

Caleb and Joshua were willing to obey, willing to go forward and cross the Jordan in the faces of those men of great stature, because they believed all that the Lord had said. They had that joy. They saw a pathway open in the waters. They beheld the wonder-workings of Jehovah's mighty arm. They saw the walls of fear fall down before the shoutings of Israel's hosts, the iniquitous Canaanites melt away, and their land given as an inheritance to Israel!

We have chosen to connect the lives of these men, with the pre-eminent tribes, as showing that, not only does the Lord reward them that fear him in the present time, but that the blessings that grow out of fealty to Jehovah ascend to the farthest generation of them that fear him.

Joseph feared God. Judah's loyalty was shown in his tender love for Joseph and also for Benjamin.

Through his pleading, Joseph's life was spared, and God set him next to Joseph in blessing and beyond and above him, in that our Lord was to come of the tribe of Judah.

It was fitting that God should thus honor Judah and Joseph, by setting them before all their brethren, upon the prophetical page. It was fitting that from them should spring the loyal men who, of all Israel's hosts that came out of the land of Egypt, were alone permitted to enter the promised land.

Yet these very blessings, this pre-eminence, was in later years a cause of envy and finally, of reparation, between the tribes of Ephraim and Judah, but in the glorious future time, the envy of Ephraim shall depart and the adversaries of Judah shall be cut off: Ephraim shall not envy Judah, nor Judah vex Ephraim. Isa. xi. 13. As the stick of Joseph, of the tribes of Israel, his fellows; and of Judah, became one in the hand of the prophet Ezekiel, so will the Lord take Israel from among the heathen whither they be gone * * and bring them into their own land and make them one nation upon the mountains of Israel. One King shall be King to them all, neither shall they be divided into two nations any more at all. * * They shall dwell in the land forever. David shall be their Prince forever, and the Lord and his sanctuary shall be among them forevermore. Jesus, of the tribe of Judah, of whom Joshua was a type, is to rule over the house of Jacob forever.

"Haste Lord, hasten that glorious time
When the effate shall possess thy kingdom, O Lord,
And thy will on earth be done!"

THE FAITH OF THE PHARISEES.

GEORGE M. MYERS.

A great deal is said about the faith of the Pharisees in the days of the Savior's mission—that they believed in a conscious state of existence for the soul separate from the body. This thought relative to their faith is based upon what Josephus wrote about hades in reply to Apion, and what is found in B. 18, C. 1, S. 3.

Here we pause for a moment and ask about the word revive, as found in the book, chapter and verse above referred to.

Notwithstanding they believed that in death the soul and body were separate, did they use the word revive with any significancy? If so then they could not have believed that the soul had life and was in a conscious state while in hades? The word revive implies:

1. Life while first in connection with the body;

2. Death while in hades, as they supposed, separate from the body;

3. "Revive," power to live again when in union with the body at resurrection.

These thoughts we offer relative to the faith of the Pharisees upon the strength and meaning of the word "revive."

Was Josephus wise in the choice of this word? If so then let it have its force.

Pictorial Description

—OF THE—

Tabernacle in the Wilderness.

ITS RITES AND CEREMONIES.

—By John Dilworth.—

Thirty-two pages. Price 10c. Send to this office for them.

CHRIST'S KINGDOM!

WHERE IS IT? WHAT IS IT?

—By Jos. Lacier.—

A discourse delivered at Berwick, Pa. This is a 32 page tract, neatly printed, and should have a wide circulation. Price 10c.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

MISTAKES of INGERSOLL

A review of Col. R. G. Ingersoll's lecture entitled "Mistakes of Moses."

—By J. M. Stephenson.—

This is a large size cloth page tract, printed on tinted paper. 10c. each, or 1$ for $1.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

BOOK LIST.

The following publications are kept on hand and will be sent postpaid to any address in the United States or Canada, upon receipt of published price. Address all orders to

THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Indiana.

Bible Promise, suitable for wide distribution. 1. The Gospel. 2. The Coming and Kingdom of Christ, by 30,000 Baptists, in 1866. 3. Immortality. 4. The Kingdom of God. 5. Nature of Man and Thoughts for Thinkers. 6. The Two Advocate. 7. What Is Religion. 8. The Restitution Age. 9. Destiny of the Wicked. 10. Baptism. Ten copies 6c., or assorted packages of 100, 50c.

FOUR PAGE TRACTS.
25 for 50c; 50 for 85c; 100 for 60c.

The State of Man in Death. Outside an abundance of proofs text.

Life and Death. A concise statement and contrast of the two views of these terms, to-wit: the Theological and Bible one.

Human Government a Failure. By A. H. Maynard.

Resurrection. Austin Castle. A careful examination of the query—"If a man die, shall he live again?"

Is it True? H. V. Reed. An examination of its strong as to who are subjects of salvation.

What is Death? H. V. Reed. An excellent contrast of the Bible teaching and modern theory.

The Perverted Parable. The Rich Man and Lazarus. W. Loring.

EIGHT PAGE TRACTS.
5c. each, or 25 for $1.

Is it Essential to Believe in the Royalty of Jesus? B. Wilson.

Signs of the Times. H. Bonar, of Scotland.

The Scattering and Gathering. H. V. Reed. A synopsis of the future three-fold gathering of the Saints, Israel, and the Nations.

TWELVE PAGE TRACTS.
5c. each, or 40 for $1.

Christian Union. Joel A. Simonds.

Regeneration and the Kingdom of God. E. Hoyt. Well suited to enquiring minds.

Immortality Brought to Light. The grand reality of redemption. J. B. Cook.

SIXTEEN PAGE TRACTS.
5c. each; 50 per 100, or $3 for $1.

The New Birth. Joseph Peirce.

Hope for the World. Joel A. Simonds.

The Kingdom of Jehovah. Joseph Seiss, D. D. Set forth in beautiful language and apt Bible quotations.

Which is Right? T. Wilson. Showing the Bible teaches, on the question as to whether Christ's Kingdom is to be on the earth or in heaven.

The Seed of Abraham. Joel A. Simonds. The promise made to Abraham, renewed to Isaac and Jacob, and so frequently referred to by prophets and apostles.

The King in His Beauty. H. V. Reed. Just the thing to circulate every where.

TWENTY-FOUR PAGE TRACTS.
7c. each; 5 for 30c, or 30 for $1.

Das Evangelium der Reichen Gotter. Teaches the true nature of Christ's Kingdom.

Will the Earth be Burned Up? T. Wilson. An argument from the Scriptures, showing that the earth will not be annihilated, as many suppose, but will be the everlasting inheritance of the saints.

Witchcraft Unveiled; or the Voice of God Against Spiritualism. H. V. Reed. Cannot be too widely circulated.

The Scriptures. Joel A. Simonds.

THIRTY-TWO PAGE TRACTS.
10c. each, or 1$ for $1.

Evangelism concerning the Reign of Christ over Israel and the Nations: or a brief statement of the things concerning the Kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ. Wm. Jessen.

The Restitution; or the world restored to its primeval state, and this to be its everlasting condition. E. Miller. A careful and satisfactory examination of Acts iii. 21.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS.

The Rich Man and Lazarus. T. Wilson. The exposition throughout is in harmony with Bible teaching. 30 pages, price 10c.

The Rich Man and Lazarus. C. F. Sweet. A careful exposition of Luke xv. and xvi. with an examination of Luke xii. and xxiv. 54 pages, price 15c.

Primitive Christian Faith. C. F. Sweet. A concise history of the Primitive Christian Faith, or the Gospel as held by the early fathers, in a small compass. 52 pages, price 15c.

The Infant Silenced by the most irrefutable evidence. W. H. Wilson. 48 pages, price 25c.

The Doctrine of Baptism as taught in the Holy Scriptures, together with a collection of evidences upon the subject, from the most learned theologians, critics, lexicographers and ecclesiastical historians. 44 pages, price 20c.

Bible Triumphant. Mrs. H. V. Reed. A reply to "One hundred and forty-four self-contradictions of the Bible," by A. J. Davis. An able refutation of infidel charges. Paper 25c.

Discussion on the State of the Dead. Between the Rev. W. C. Brownson, Congregational minister, and W. Kelloway, both of England. The propositions discussed were: 1. That the dead exist in a living, conscious state after their decease. Affirmed by Brownson. 2. That the Scriptures teach that man in death are wholly unconscious, insensible, and unable to perform any act whatever; and that they rest in darkness, silence and the dust. Cloth 60c., paper 40c.

Future Punishment. Its nature and duration. Henry Constable, Prebendary of Cork. Exactly the book for the times. 399 pages, cloth $1.25.

The Destiny of Russia, as foretold by God's prophets, together with an outline of the future movements and destiny of England, Germany, Persia, Africa and the Jews. Contains a map of England and Asia. A work invaluable to every student of prophecy, and of intense present interest. 138 pages, cloth 75c., paper 50c.

Hades, or the Intermediate State of the Dead. Henry Constable, A. M. Presents the Bible doctrine of the state of man between death and the resurrection. Cloth $1.50.

God's Plan of Salvation. J. M. Stephenson. A comprehensive and able statement of the leading phases of Bible theology. Our brethren will find this just the thing to read and circulate. The nature of man, the Kingdom of God, and the obedience of faith, are ably and clearly set forth. Over 200 pages, cloth $1.

THE NEW TESTAMENT IN GREEK AND ENGLISH!

—EDITED BY—

THE EMPHATIC DIAGLOTT

—By Benjamin Wilson.—

Contains the Original Greek text of the New Testament, with an interlineary word for word English translation, based on the renderings of eminent critics, and on the various readings of the Vatican Manuscripts, together with illustrative and explanatory foot notes, and a copious selection of references.

The different renderings of various passages in the New Testament are the foundations on which most of the sects of Christians have been built up; with this work each reader may judge for himself whether the words there literally translated are so arranged in the common version as to express the exact meaning of the New Testament writers.

New improved edition on larger paper, 904 pages, cloth $4.00, Library binding $5.00.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

HYMNS OF THE ADVENT!

About to be issued as a New Hymn Book, compiled by

—Chas. C. Bahker.—

Mr. Bahker combines in this book the "Hymns of the Morning" and a fresh and rare selection of music. As an appendix he adds a selection of "Favorite Hymns, whose music is as a household word. Those having the "Christian Psalmodist" and no music book will do well to get this work. Price 40c. cloth 60c.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

ASTRONOMICAL ETIOLOGY,

—OR—

STAR PROPHECIES

Concerning coming disasters on the earth from 1865 to 1869.

—By M. L. Knapp, D. D.—

And others, to be contained as appendix by the publisher. 72 pages, 25c. each.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

GOD ESTABLISHED

—AND—

The BIBLE VINDICATED.

—By A. J. Eychaner.—

A new tract, and one that should be in the hands of every friend in the land. Those living in Isabella and its borders will do well to get this work, as it will aid you in combatting this enemy. Twenty pages, price 5c. 75 for 50c, or 80 for $1.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE

THE RESTITUTION
—IS ISSUED WEEKLY BY—
The Christian Publishing Association,
OFFICERS OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS:
E. S. DWIGGINS.....President.
CHARLES PALMER.....Vice President.
E. E. BARNHILL.....Secretary.
S. A. CHAPLIN.....Treasurer.
EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE:
CHARLES PALMER, WM. BAILSBACK,
J. G. ROBERTS.
S. A. CHAPLIN.....Editor.
SPECIAL CONTRIBUTORS:
J. M. STEPHENSON, B. WILSON,
J. P. WEETHEE, I. A. SELGNIS,
WILEY JONES, C. M. MYERS,
A. B. MAGRUDER.

The Restitution.

Keep Article by Bro Sweetheer.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXX. Read PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, FEBRUARY 9, 1881. NO. 6.

THE RESTITUTION.

TERMS—TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR, Payable in advance. Three and Six Months at the same rate.

Address all Letters and Communications to THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION advocates the Great "Restitution of all things which God has spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the kingdom of God on the earth, with Christ as King of Kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the world, is the first step to be taken in fulfilling the Abrahamic promise. If these, with the connected events of the first and second advents, and the final destruction of the wicked, are brought by each Christian into their proper relations, all else is clear. All are heartily welcome to the columns of this paper, and to any explanation it may contain; but we do not hold ourselves responsible for views advanced by correspondents.

Communications.

COMING AGE.

Its Peculiarity—Seals Continued—Supplementary—Third Seven—Its Mystery—Its Chief Agent—Sketch the Principal Agents and Events—Their Identification—Compare the Real History with the Prophetic—Summary.

No. 55

Supplementary to the Second Seal.

In concluding our remarks on the second seal, a few points may be added. The sheet, when unrolled, has on it a picture of the empire for that period. It gives a pictorial history of the empire for the time, more accurately than any profane history, because it is delineated by one that can paint the future equally with the past.

The book of seven seals, was to him, an open book, filled with the future of the empire and his people. To John it was unknown. The future is opened up to the prophet through the blood of the Lamb. The rider, being the chief agent of the vision, properly denotes the emperor, since by law, he was the highest civil officer. He was also the high priest.

An event, belonging to the era of the second seal, is worthy of special notice—the inauguration of a priesthood in the church of God. Those persons selected by Christ to carry his glad tidings to all nations, were sent forth, as teachers only. Go teach all nations; teach them to observe whatsoever I have commanded you. They were not priests, but teachers—teachers, under the priesthood of Christ in heaven, not on earth.

In the congregations which they formed, that all things might be done in order, officers were appointed, called bishops, presbyters, or elders, and deacons. They had no sacrifices to offer, such as belonged to the Aaronic and Pagan priesthoods. Christ, the Lamb of God, had with his own blood, gone into the most holy place to offer the one sacrifice, and the only one that has any cleansing power over transgressions.

After the overthrow of Jerusalem by Adrian, and the utter annihilation of their hopes of any national glory, or of re-establishing their religion and their priesthood, in the death of Barchucheba, their king and false Messiah, a new idea was propagated by Christian doctors, and by the higher dignitaries of the church, that the heritical priesthood, consisting of high-priests, and levites, were superseded by the Christian priesthood, composed of bishops in the place of the Jewish high-priest, presbyters instead of priests (chief priests), and deacons for levites.

Hence the inauguration of a new priesthood, which grew through coming centuries, till it removed the high priesthood from the most holy place in heaven to the chair of Saint Peter, in Rome.

Sacrifices, henceforth, belonged to this new priesthood, and were offered daily for the pardon of sin. This, we denominate the Papal Priesthood, to distinguish it from the devoted, the humble, and the unpretending, Christian ministery of the apostolic and succeeding centuries. It is henceforth a new element in the empire, against which the Pagan persecutions were aimed.

It will be necessary to follow the workings of this new priesthood, since it will soon appear as the ruling element in the empire.

In the work called "Romanism as it is," page 251 we have the following:

"Our English word Priest is etymologically the same with Presbyter, both words being traced back to the Greek presbuteros, which signifies Elder, and is thus translated in the New Testament. Mat. xv. 2; Luke xv. 25; Acts xi. 30; 1 Tim. v. 1, etc. Priest, therefore, is often nearly synonomous with Presbyter, Elder, Minister, Preacher, Pastor, and other terms which denote in general, with various shades of difference, a Christian teacher, or spiritual guide. But Priest is also used as the English equivalent of the Latin sacerdos, and the Greek hiereus, which denote a sacred person, particularly one who performs sacred rites or offers sacrifice to God. The latter is the prominant signification of Priest among the Roman Catholics, as it would have been among the ancient Jews or among the idolatrous Romans and Greeks.

The Priest among Roman Catholics is a sacred person, offers sacrifice to God; the priests or clergy of the Roman Catholic church belong to a sacred order or caste, who are considered as altogether distinct from, and officially superior to the laity, or common Christian people, and who offer sacrifice especially the mass.

But Protestants believe that the one sacrifice which the Lord Jesus Christ offered to God for us when he died on the cross, is full and complete—Heb. ix. 26; x. 10-14—that no other sacrifice to God is needed, and that no other sacrifice acceptable to him was to be made—Heb. x. 18, 26—that all true Christians now constitute, as the apostle Peter declares, a holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ, 1 Pet. ii. 5, 9; and that, therefore, the priests, clergy, or ministers of the Christian religion are simply the religious teachers and guides of the people, and not a separate caste or a holier class by the mere virtue of their office. Here is a fundamental distinction between Protestantism and Roman Catholicism. The Protestant goes directly to Christ as High Priest and the one Mediator with God, 1 Tim. ii. 5; the Roman Catholic expects his priest to offer an acceptable sacrifice and procure the pardon of sin for him."

The issue between Romanists and Protestants being fully stated, the new priesthood will be fully understood. That priesthood constitutes the great apostacy, sitting in the temple of God as God sits. It erected, first in the Roman empire, and finally over all the earth, an Altar, around which, and under whose shadow, are the slain for the word of God, and for the witness of Jesus.

Third Seal. "And when he had opened the third seal, I heard the third living creature say, Come and see. And I beheld, and lo, a black horse, and he that sat on him had a pair of balances in his hand. And I heard a voice in the midst of the four living creatures say, A measure of wheat for a penny, and three measures of barley for a penny; and (see) thou hurt not the oil and the wine." Rev. vi. 5, 6.

Explanation of agents and terms.—A black horse and its rider. One chief agent fills the vision of John, a rider on a black horse as the chieftain represents, and is the visible embodiment of the empire, so his character appears in the color of the horse upon which he is seated.

The empire is laboring under a severe famine. Such is evidently the case, from the balances, and the voice.

A measure of wheat for a penny, and three measures of barley for a penny; and see thou hurt not the oil and the wine. Famines usually follow civil wars, since men are taken from the fields to be the destroyers of their own country's resources. Where such uprisings are very extended, and protracted through a series of years famines are the inevitable results.

The word ζυγὸς is translated a pair of balances: it should be rendered balance—singular. Its primary meaning, however, is yoke. Either will do, as servitude is also intended.

Measure, in the Greek is χοῖνιξ, one pint and a half, the daily allowance of provision for a slave. Penny is the translation of the word δηνάριον, the value of fifteen cents, the daily allowance or pay of a laboring man. The prices of the necessaries of life were so high that a laborer could only pay for a pint and a half of wheat per day. A man with a family would be reduced to absolute want. These were famine prices, indicating the existence of a famine.

Hence the empire, during the period of the third seal, was laboring under a severe famine; a scarcity of bread; not of the luxuries, for it is said, "Hurt not the oil and the wine." The famine fell on the laboring classes. The rich did not suffer, since they had ample means to pay these high prices.

From the expression, "Hurt not the oil and the wine," we infer that the reasons, from causes not stated, had injured the wheat and barley. During such unfavorable seasons but little attention could be paid to the raising of the luxuries of life, such as oil and wine. These articles were heavily taxed; consequently, any neglect in their culture would diminish the national revenue. Their cultivation would be regarded and enforced by edict. "See thou hurt not (neglect) not the oil and the wine" do not cut off the resources of the empire.

The empire under a severe and protracted famine is brought to view under the third seal.

We have now been speaking of a real famine in the empire. Was a famine of God's word the literal of life—a moral famine intended? If so, that was equally true, as we shall learn by further investigation.

We wish to describe and identify what John saw in the empire, for locating its state we can very readily decide the condition of the Christians, since they were the hated subjects of Roman monarchy. If the empire is convulsed by civil war, Christians would suffer more than any other class of citizens; if it was passing through a protracted famine, a double portion would fall upon the Christian population, as the misfortunes of the empire, and the sins of wicked emperors were laid to their charge, and they were robbed of their property, and their lives also. Such was their condition under the emperor Nero. The city was fired by the wicked monarch and charged to the Christians, who suffered the penalty in a terrible persecution.

What period of the empire is covered by the third seal? It extends from A. D. 138 to A. D. 193, and includes the times of the two Antonines. This scarcity continued with more or less severity during half a century.

Antoninus Pius succeeded Adrian on the 10th of July, A. D. 138, and died on the 7th of March, A. D. 161, in the 23d year of his reign. His reign was not stained by any bloody edict against Christians, still the edict of Trajan had not been repealed, and therefore the Christians were exposed to hardships, and even unto death, in some portions of the empire remote from Rome. That he was not particularly friendly to Christians is evident from various apologies addressed to him.

Justin's first apology was addressed to him, commencing as follows: "To the emperor Titus Ælius Adrianus Antoninus the pious, and to his son Verissimus, and Lucius, and the senate, and all the people of the Romans, in behalf of men gathered out of all nations, who are unjustly hated and ill-treated. I Justin, son of Priscus, son of Bacchius, one of them of the city of Flavia Neapolis, in that part of Syria which is called Palestine, make this address and supplication."

He says "Do not treat as enemies, and appoint death for men who are guilty of no crimes. And we foretell unto you that ye will not escape the future judgment of God if you persist in this injustice." From this it would appear that some were even put to death.

Marcus Antoninus, the Philosopher, began to reign March 2, 161, and died March 17, 180. He persecuted the Christians. In giving instructions as to what should be done with property of those Christians that should be put to death, Antoninus says, "Let their goods and possessions be given to their informers," thus paying a high premium to those that put Christians to death.

It was under this emperor that Polycarp, Bishop of Smyrna, was put to death. He was first threatened with beasts, then burned in a pile; but not dying soon enough, he was thrust through with a sword. Eleven Christians from the church in Philadelphia suffered at the same time.

The most violent martyrdoms were at Lyons and Vienne in Gaul, on the banks of the river Rhone. They suffered every species of torture. They were burned, were thrown to wild beasts, put to death by the sword, and were put to death in every possible manner. All Asia was under a severe persecution.

From Antoninus' rescript to his proconsule in Asia, these persecutions originated among his idolatrous subjects. Two principal causes led to their great hostility to Christians:

1. They were instigated by Pagan priests whose living depended on temple patronage.

2. There were then many earth-gods and even fanatics and impostors in the empire, of which were charged upon the Christians as having offended their deities.

CHRISTIANITY.

BY GEO. STORRS.

So long have many of us been in the habit of thinking that they can do what suits them, and it will be all right with God, that the claim is now boldly made that it is the religious duty of every Christian man to belong to some political party—must vote, hold office and do all other things that a man in the world may legally do, or he is denounced as unworthy to be admitted into society, and as having no rights that the government is bound to respect. And further; that church members may join any society of the world and be recognized as a brother, bound by the most solemn oaths, not daring to reveal what transpires therein, to those outside. In such societies men of impure morals are called brethren, and they are thus fraternally bound together.

Some of the arguments used to lead men into politics are as follows: If Christians do not vote or accept of office, wicked men will select bad men to fill the office, and they will select just whom they please.

Wonderful argument! If the government belongs to the world, why should not the citizens of the world select their rulers? Where is the right given to one, who has become an alien to perform the work of a citizen? When men come into relationship with Christ, is not their citizenship transferred, from the world, and their names enrolled in heaven from whence they look for the Savior?

It is pretty generally admitted that the professors of Christianity are about equally divided between the two political parties. If this is true are the Christians at the polls a very important factor?

Just think of 50,000 Democratic Christians marching up to vote against the same number of Republican Christians! The preachers spending much of their time, each presenting his political gospel, for his church, and many of them going out in a campaign to electioneer, it may be, for an Infidel, Skeptic, Deist, or no matter what, so his political faith is all right.

Who cannot see from this showing, that the people of the world do elect the officers, and do enact such laws as they wish to, and these political Christians simply pit themselves against each other.

There would be some plausibility if all professors would vote one way; but this cannot be expected since they cannot agree upon the teachings of the Bible.

Now look for a moment at some of the modern churches; The house is filled and if the preacher confines himself to the doctrines held by the church, all feel joyful, singing together, eat the Lord's Supper and all are apparently happy. When meeting is dismissed, let some one mention some political issue and at once a storm is started, and all the politicians are aroused. Are politics a necessary addition to Christianity?

When a man identifies himself with a political party, his influence is with that party, and it can be truthfully said his friendship is there.

Hear James about friendship: "Ye adulterers and adulteresses, know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God? whosoever therefore will be the friend of the world is the enemy of God." James iv. 4.

Brethren, can we afford to go into such a place that we make ourselves God's enemies? We have professedly withdrawn ourselves from the enemies of God, and claim that we are built on the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone." Ephesians ii. 19, 20.

If we claim to be the disciples of Christ then we are to learn from him: and we are certainly taught that to be his disciple we must follow him. Paul says: "Be ye followers of me, even as I am of Christ. I. Cor. ii. 1.

Did Christ or Paul live as active politicians in the government under which they lived?

Because they did not, is that a reason we, the Roman professors, have left their great Teachers tracks, and have gone into the slums of the world to gain all they can, and we are one of the reasons why [illegible] being converted from the world. Into Bible men and women when they should have taught [illegible] but have turned their interest upon them who do not. They are among the loving patronizing with mammoth halls and all other worldly accessories and even encouraging such things as socials &c &c.

We as a people declare before the world, that we believe the coming of the Lord is very near, and that when he comes his people among the living, and the dead, will be gathered and immortalized, and then will commence the righteous reign of Christ and his Saints over the nations that the Kingdoms of this world will oppose Christ, and try to hinder him from taking the kingdom which will rightfully be his.

The power of these opposing governments will be broken. Do we desire to have our minds overcharged with the cares of this world so that day will come upon us unawares?

We have the right to live in this world as pilgrims and strangers and if we truly serve the Lord we will be protected by the government, if it discharges its duty. Romans xiii. 1.

I do not believe a Christian has any right to be a member in any society where the name of Christ is excluded. Whatever we do should be done in the name of the Lord. Let us be his disciples in deed and in truth.

Healdsburg, Cal.

(To be continued.)

Youths' Column.

Little Children.

Peace.

"Blessed are the peacemakers."

The forest sleeps in frost and cold as summer weather,
The eagle floats above the banks of play-ful river,
The deer lies down in the heart
The wildest wintry storm is full of eleven beauty
The midnight lightning flash, but shows the path of duty.
Each thing is creative, tells some new and joyful story
That every thing and creature all catch a ray glory.
If peace be in the heart

The Christian.

"Neither Sick Nor Sair."

An English paper records the death of James Ingram, the Free Kirk minister of the northernmost parish in the British Isles—the island of Unst in the Shetland group—who has for some years been looked upon as perhaps the oldest minister in the world. He was, at all events, patriarch of his own church. On Monday March 20, 1879, he was gathered to his fathers, in his 104th year. Dr. James Ingram's family were noted for longevity, and spent staid lives in those remote parts. Four of them lived in one house. The oldest son of the deceased is now an aged Free Church minister. When James Ingram settled in Unst, the Shetland Isles were noted for drunkenness and a low state of morality. He at once became a teetotaler, and never tasted strong drink, and by the power of his example and influence he brought about a great improvement among the people. It is said that he began to study Hebrew at the age of sixty, and afterward applied himself to Greek. Only two years ago he is reported to have said to a visitor, "It's a verra guid warld to leeve in after a', for though I'm a hundred noo, and gey stupid tae, yet I'm neither sick nor sair."

How does such a man who, having lived more than a century, was "neither sick nor sore," compare with the ring-boned, wind-broken, stiff-kneed, spavined young chaps of to-day, who are broken down at twenty-five, and so miserable that they are glad to die before they are forty? Fun, isn't it, boys?

Rokerie Tribune.

Baby Is Dead.

"Baby is dead!" Three little words passed along the line, copied somewhere and soon forgotten. But after all was quiet again I leaned my head upon my hand and fell into a deep reverie of all that those words mean.

Somewhere a dainty form, still and cold, unclasped by mother's arms to-night. Eyes that yesterday were bathed in the rich blue skies of June closed to-night beneath white lids that no voice can ever raise again.

Two soft hands, whose every act for days were wont to wander lovingly around mother's neck and face, loosely lie like white buds, quietly folded in restless rest.

Rose lips yesterday rippling with laughter, sweet as woodland bread falls, gay as wild of forest birds, to-night unresponsive to kiss or call of love.

A robber home the pulse of baby feet, a cradle had an unused, little shoes half worn, dainty garments shoulder knots of blue to match those eyes of yesterday folded with aching heart away.

A tiny mound now covered in some quiet grave yard.

Another's grief's touch is uneasy burden for the sad head that shall never again rest upon her bosom. The hot sob, the bitter tear, is broken dreams awake to sad reality. The hope of future years wrecked, like fair ships that suddenly go down in sight of land.

The watching of other babies, the glad laughing, strong and the one gone! The present agony of grief, the future emptiness of heart all held in those three little words, "Baby is dead!"

Indeed, it is well that we can copy and soon forget the words so freighted with woe to those who receive and send them.

And yet it comes to us now and then to give a tender thought to those for whom our careless pen stroke is preparing such a weight of grief.

To the Youths' Column.

Grandma, has not seen many of you, but she loves you all, and would like to have a little talk with you about the Bible. You all know that about six thousand years ago, God made this [illegible] all animals, birds, and fishes. When he made them all he found that none of them were fit to bear rule or be king over all the rest. The lion was not fit to be king, neither was the horse, or cow, because they were not intelligent, they could not talk or reason, so he then made man and gave him intelligence and power to talk. He prepared a beautiful home for him in the garden of Eden where there was everything pleasant to the sight and good for food. And he made him king over all.

There were then no thorns or poisonous weeds, but beautiful flowers and everything pleasant to look upon.

But there was one condition or test given to man which was; that he must obey God. So to test his obedience and loyalty, God told him not to eat the fruit of the tree that grew in the middle of the garden, because it would cause him to die. But Adam disobeyed his Creator and so lost his kingship of the earth and his beautiful home in Eden. This was quite right, as it would not do to have a rebel such as Adam for king; besides when he died he had no power to make himself alive again and you know that dead people do not know anything, they cannot move nor stir.

Just think what a dreadful thing it was to disobey the great Creator who provided such a beautiful home for man and gave him all things to enjoy. Sin entered into the world, and animals began to kill one another, and the very first child that was ever born into the world killed his brother when he grew to be a man. We will talk about this in the next.

GRANDMA.

Sermon for the Little Ones.

No. 2.

God did not mean to forsake Adam's children. He showed them how by doing well, they could win his favor and have the life that would endure forever. Cain did not mind, but Abel was glad to love and serve Him. He believed just what God told him and did just the things that God said he must do. If you will read the eleventh chapter of Hebrews, you will find him named first, among a great many good people to whom God has promised this earth, in the life to come.

God made the earth for good and obedient people and he wants such to have it. So, away back there, we find him trying to see who would believe him and who would mind him. He told a good old man by the name of Noah, that before many years, he was going to drown the earth with a flood, and that he must go and build a great ark, and tell everybody what was coming.

Noah believed God—he built the ark and told the people, what God had said he must tell them. But they only laughed at him, and would not believe a word of his story. So God sent him with his wife, his sons, and their wives, and a great many animals into the ark, and shut the door.

All the wicked people who would not believe God, nor do anything toward saving themselves, were drowned. Paul says that Noah, by minding God, became an heir of the righteousness that is by faith, meaning that by believing and minding God, he was a righteous man—one that did right, and being such a man, he too, had become an heir to what God had promised.

By and by, God told another man that he must leave his own country, and go far away to a land he would show him. That man's name was Abram.

He knew it was right to mind God, so he started on his journey, though he did not know where he was going. At last he came to the place. It was Canaan. God told him to look all over it—to walk through it every way, because he was going to give it to him, not for just a little while, but forever, that it was to be his inheritance—that his children were to be as many as the stars and as many as the sands on the sea shore, and that they too, should have the land and have it forever—that one of his seed, or children, should possess the gates of his enemies—have the power and the crowns of all the kings of the earth, and that when the time should come for this Son and all his other children to have the earth, they should make all nations happy. Abram believed all that was told him, because God made a promise and by which he knew [illegible] of Canaan was decided to him and his children for ever.

The men of old when they made a deed of land, killed some animal, and dividing it, both passed between the pieces.

Abraham could give God no pay for the great land that he was deeding to him, yet God showed him in the same way, that his deed was good. He told Abram to kill the animals, and when it was dark a bright furnace and a smoking lamp, passed between the pieces, showing that God by his presence was going through. Abram was not required to pass through, because he could give nothing to God. God was giving all to him.

Not only Abram, but all his children, who should believe what God said and do just as he told them, were named as heirs, in this will, covenant or deed. And that Abram might be the more certain that God meant him and his children to have the land, our heavenly Father confirmed it by an oath, as men now confirm their wills or deeds by an oath, that all may be strong and sure.

Abram had no children when this will was made, nor was the child that had been promised, yet born, when the Lord changed his name to Abraham—the father of many nations.

He was an old man when Isaac came to him. He loved the boy. It was God's gift. Yet when the child had come to be twelve or thirteen years of age, the Lord told him he must take him and offer him up as a sacrifice upon his altar.

Will Abraham believe and mind now? Yes. He does not forget what God has promised him, for he knows that God will do just as he said; if Isaac must be offered, he will make him alive again.

He went where God told him to go, built an altar, laid the wood on and his son on the wood, but just as he was going to kill the child, God's angel touched him on the arm and told him to stop, that another offering was ready in Isaac's place. Looking, where the angel pointed, Abraham saw a large sheep caught by its horns in the bushes, that he took and offered instead of Isaac.

God did this to show us Abraham's faith. He knew that Abraham loved him well enough to give him his only son, but he wanted us to know it. He knew that Abraham believed every word that he said, but he wanted us to know that Abraham believed him, so that it would help us to believe Him, too.

But we must wait until another week before we can tell you anything more.

THE FRIEND OF THE CHILDREN.

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CHAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, February 9, 1881.

SOME communications intended for the present issue, must be deferred to a future number.

THE Editor appoints to meet the brethren and friends at the Antioch Meeting House, Sunday, Feb. 13, at 11 A. M.

HEALTH improving.—It has been a heavy tax on our strength to edit the three last papers. A severe cold has prostrated us a part of the time. Some letters should have been answered, but we have done what we could.

SOME EARNEST WORDS.

Wherefore beloved, seeing that ye look for such things, be diligent that ye may be found of him in peace, without spot and blameless.—2 Pet. iii. 14.

For us, as individuals, there is one matter of superlative importance that, as is to be feared, is too much neglected. Personal salvation is too much disregarded, and we are not only in danger of being careless about making our own calling and election sure, but we may become utterly reckless about the salvation of our co-temporaries, to whom God would have us deliver the notes of warning.

Would Noah have been worthy of that honorable appellation—"A preacher of righteousness"—if he had occupied all that solemn interim while the ark was preparing, in discussing questions relative to the destiny of those that were already dead, or of the multitudinous numbers that might populate the earth in time to come? Noah had a more responsible work committed to him than to preach about the dead or the unborn. His mission was to preach righteousness to the living men and women of his own time. In this very respect there is a responsibility resting upon those looking for the Lord that is neither felt nor heeded as it should be. The Lord is soon coming and the possibility of becoming an heir of the great salvation, proffered to the world in the gospel of the grace of God, will be forever gone. No more opportunity of sharing in the imperishable honors of the "heavenly calling."

We talk eloquently, sometimes, about a crown of glory, but do we belong to the trained, disciplined, and persevering company, who are putting forth unfaltering efforts in the race-course? We dwell with professed delight upon the glorious privilege of being translated, as a part of the left-over church, without going down into the desolations of death, but do we "walk with God?"

We have learned something about the honors that await the elect bride of the Redeemer, and indulge the hope of sharing in the felicities of the white robed company that walk mid the fadeless blooms of God's Paradise, but are our Christian robes kept pure and spotless?

We catch a glimpse of the heavenly family in their incorruptibility, immortality, and celestial glory, and desire ourselves to participate in the glorified nature of the deathless Redeemer, but are our dispositions changed from their earthly tendency, and are we renewed in the spirit of our minds?

O, how applicable to us individually is the admonition given to the Pentecostal church—"Save yourselves from this untoward generation." And in reference to our perishing co-temporaries, how applicable the solemn words addressed to Ezekiel: "Give them warning from me!"

O, brethren and sisters—The Lord is coming, and coming soon! In the words of another, "The voice of prophecy, the finger of Providence, and the strange expectation in the heart of all men tell us that he is coming. Yes! He, the Holy One, whose voice is harmony, whose smile is life, whose will is law, and whose law is love, is coming! and murder, and oppression, and superstition, and ignorance, shall die at his feet—his throne shall be established in righteousness, and his people shall dwell in peace—man shall be restored to his right position in the world; the world to its right position in the universe; and the illimitable universe shall break forth into joy and praise over a world that was lost, but is found! O Thou, who art the joy of the universe, the Savior of the lost, whose right it is to reign, come, wear thy many crowns! Thy saints are waiting for thy coming! The earth groans for thy coming! Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly!"

The earth is even now entering the penumbra of the direst eclipse that ever darkened our sinful world. We are already within the fore-shadowings of the time of trouble "such as never was since there was a nation." The sun's fire-waves are surging in tempest fury, and the circling orbs are convulsed with shocks responding to the unbalanced electrical condition of the great solar system.

"Miracles are contrary to our experience," says the Infidel. "Show us a sign from heaven," says the unbelieving Jew; but despite their unbelief, miracles will soon confront the blatant sceptic, and the Christ-rejecting Jew will soon see Messiah's sign appear in heaven. The first miracle will be the departure of all the redeemed to meet the Lord in the air—some raised from the dust in his likeness—some transformed to his image from among the living. The miracle comes too late for the blasphemer when it only brings the horrible conviction — I am lost forever!

In the New Star that shines from the deeps in the blue, the Jew will see the heavenly sign—Tis the pavilion where the saints tabernacle during the time of trouble. Psa. xxvi. 5.

But too late for the Jew. The kingdom honors are all won—the crowns are all gone—and the heart-rending conviction comes too late that Jesus is Messiah—the door to the palace and the royalties of the eternal kingdom is shut!

'Tis on the border lines of these great changes we walk with solemn footstep, and, O brethren, but few of us are prepared for the nearing crisis! This ungodly world has had nearly forty years of warning. In the last forty years of the 490, determined upon the Jewish nation Christ and his apostles warned them of impending vengeance, and it came upon that generation. Mat. xxiii. 36. The warning to this generation was fairly commenced by 1843-44. The 1810 years from 70-73, soon expire, and the 40 years from 1843-44 are about out also. Does Mat. xxiv. 34, apply here? We shall soon see—it may—take no risks—we don't predict, but we conclude in the language of our Savior—"Watch ye therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of Man."

AN OLD MONUMENT.

Antiquity has its charms. To look upon some work of human hands that was fashioned when the historical events recorded in the book of Genesis were transpiring, is well calculated to arrest and fix the attention of the beholder.

The Obelisk that was set up in Central Park, New York City, on Saturday last [illegible] fleet worthy of admiration. The monument is said to carry its own proofs that it was erected in the times of Thothmes III.—variously written Thothmes and Thothmosis—a celebrated monarch of the 18th dynasty. It is claimed by some that the successive stages of the great undertaking have been described in this paper. With the completion of the work a brief review of the chief facts in the history of the obelisk and its voyage hither may properly be given before taking up the final chapter.

The material of the monolith, a reddish granite (syenite), shows that the stone must have come, as Egyptologists declare, from the ancient quarries of Syene, now Assouan, near the northern boundary of Nubia. From this point it was probably floated, as Pliny says all the obelisks were, on huge rafts or flat-bottomed boats to the sacred city of On, known to the later Greek as the City of the Sun, or Heliopolis, a distance of about 150 miles.

At Heliopolis, which was situated about eight miles from the site of the modern city of Cairo, our obelisk with its companion shaft now in London, was set up before the entrance of the Temple of the Sun.

Doubtless its position there was subsequently the first of the remaining obelisk before the ruined Temple of Luxor. The fallen mate of the Luxor obelisk was removed, it will be remembered, to the Place de la Concorde, in Paris, where it now stands.

The first erection of our obelisk at Heliopolis took place not less than 3,500 years ago, the precise date being fixed by some students of Egyptian history at B. C. 1640. Others give an earlier date as probable. It is certain, from the central columns of inscriptions on the stone, that the obelisk dates from the reign of Thothmes III., who ruled over Egypt when the empire was at the height of its power and glory, and covered not only Northern Africa as far as Abyssinia, but Western Asia as far as Kurdistan and Armenia, south of the Caspian Sea, and all of Arabia.

For more than 1,600 years our obelisk stood at Heliopolis and saw the glory depart from Upper Egypt. It was then transferred to the newer seat of power and commerce, ancient Alexandria, 120 miles down the Nile, to adorn a majestic temple, probably begun by the great queen Cleopatra, but not completed until some years after her death. The fragmentary inscriptions on the copper crabs on which the obelisk rested at Alexandria make it certain that its erection there occurred during the eighth year of the reign of Augustus Cæsar, B. C. 22.

While standing at Heliopolis, says Consul-General Farman, in one of his communications to the State Department, "it had passed the whole of the golden period of ancient Egyptian history. It had in all probability looked down upon the boy Moses as with the noble youths of the land he daily went to receive instruction from the priests of the Temple of the Sun, and also beheld on his part with admiration the then golden hieroglyphs that so long puzzled the wise men of modern times, but which he read as a student reads his Latin.

It had beheld the chosen people of God in the days of their oppression and witnessed their exodus and the excitement that resulted therefrom, the hurrying to and fro of the priests of the temple, and the groups of people in the public places of the city discussing the great event. It had afterward watched the passing generations during the reigns of the Pharaohs for eight centuries, and had not only actually looked down upon those monarchs, but also upon all the long line of scholars who came to seek knowledge in this famous city of learning.

It had then witnessed the conquests of the Persians, and mutely seen the City of On and its temples and many of its companion obelisks destroyed by the sacrilegious soldiers of Cambyses; and afterwards in a period of tranquility it had seen Plato in his daily walks while sojourning in that city, pursuing the study of philosophy and astronomy.

Still later, amid the surrounding ruin and desolation, but ever looking further out upon the green fields of the Nile, it had seen the coming of Alexander the Great and his warm reception by the people as their deliverer from the yoke of the Persians, and afterwards witnessed the three hundred years' reign of the Ptolemies, and finally, at the coming of the Cæsars, it had left the decay and ruin of its inland town and been transferred to the busy seaport of Alexandria. Here it has stood upon the seashore, a beacon for the mariners, for nineteen hundred years and watched the rolling waves, and the coming and going of the ships on the one side and the kaleidoscope of human events on the other.

Rebellions and insurrections, invasions and conquests, the struggles between Paganism and Christianity, between Christianity and Mohammedanism, between the different dynasties of the Arabs and the Turks, the successive rules of Sultans, Caliphs, and Mamelukes, and finally the conquest of Napoleon and the battles between the English and French on the waters and soil of Egypt, have all since its removal been witnessed by this sole surviving monument of the ancient City of Alexandria."

During the later ages of its sojourn in the modern city of Alexandria, the obelisk stood in a neglected quarter, its foundation, its unsuspected pedestal, and nine feet of its shaft buried in sand and rubbish, at last bereft even of its fallen companion, which had long lain half buried in sand.

A little more than three years ago Mr. John Dixon, the engineer employed to convey the original and fallen companion of our obelisk to London, informed the World through Mr. Louis Sterne, an American engineer, that Ismail Pasha, then Khedive of Egypt, desired to present the remaining obelisk to the United States.

The co-operation of Mr. Henry G. Stebbins, then a member of the Park Commission of New York, was enlisted by the editor of the World, and the possibility of securing the obelisk for our city was publicly announced.

Within a few days a wealthy citizen of the city, understood to be Mr. Wm. H. Vanderbilt, agreed to defray the estimated expense of taking down the obelisk and bringing it to New York. The matter was thereupon laid before the State Department at Washington and Mr. Farman, United States Consul-General in Egypt, was directed to take the necessary steps for the official transference of the obelisk from Egyptian to American ownership.

French and English influence, then dominant in Alexandria, were strongly arrayed against the fulfillment of the Khedive's offer.

About this time the Khedive was compelled to abdicate. Consul-General Farman at once obtained a written confirmation of the gift at the hands of Mohammed Tewfik Pasha, the son and successor of Ismail Pasha, the writing bearing date May 18, 1879.

Meanwhile Mr. Dixon's unfortunate experience in the transportation of the London obelisk led him to decline the more serious undertaking of lowering and transporting across the Atlantic the companion of the stone he had had such bad luck with.

At this juncture Lieutenant-Commander Gorringe returned from a surveying cruise in the Mediterranean in command of the U. S. steamer Gettysburgh. He had made a study of the standing obelisk at Alexandria with reference to the conditions of its possible removal, and now submitted to the Secretary of State a proposition to undertake the task. His plans were approved; and having seen to the construction, at the Phœnix Iron Works, at Trenton, N. J., of the machinery he had devised for taking down and shipping the monolith, he sailed for Alexandria by way of Liverpool, August 24.

The completed machinery followed some weeks after.

The ensuing winter and spring were spent by Commander Gorringe in the double task of overcoming the material difficulties and the more annoying political difficulties attending the lowering of the obelisk, its removal to the water, and its stowage in a vessel, the steamer Dessoug, which he had purchased for its conveyance to New York.

The magnitude of the task will be appreciated when account is taken of the enormous size and weight of the stone.

The obelisk proper is 69 ft. 2 in. long, 7 ft. 7 in. by 8 ft. 2 in. at the base, tapering to about 5 ft. square at the foot of the pyramidion. The weight of the stone is 1961 tons. The pedestal is 9 ft. square, 7 ft. high, and weighs 43 tons. The weight of the other stones of the foundation is given at 87 tons. The summit of the obelisk was something over 81 feet above the lower step of the marble platform that formed the base of the monument.

The Dessoug sailed with her precious cargo June 12, 1880, and arrived at Gibraltar ten days later. The voyage from Gibraltar to New York occupied nearly a month, owing to a delay caused by a broken crank shaft. After her arrival, July 20, the Dessoug lay at anchor in North River for some weeks while the final disposition of the obelisk was under discussion.

She was then taken to Clifton, Staten Island, hauled out of the water on the marine railway there, and opened at the bow for the discharge of the stone, which was run out on a massive platform supported by two rows of piles in such a way that the stone could be floated off on pontoons at high tide. A proper conjunction of weather and tide did not occur until September 22, when the stone was floated to the pier provided for it at the foot of West 96th street.

Not the least remarkable feature in the history of this unprecedented transportation of a great historical monument over a hundred degrees of longitude and across a great ocean, is the uniform success, celerity, and good fortune which attended every stage of the undertaking, a good fortune mainly due, to the scientific and diplomatic skill of Lieut. Commander Gorringe.

The practical wisdom of his prearranged plan of conducting the enterprise was justified by the fact that it was carried out without a single material alteration of mechanical or engineering detail, save that made necessary by the unexpected popular opposition stirred up by foreign influence in Alexandria against the carriage of the obelisk the nearest way to the ship through the streets of the city.

Letter Drawer.

GOFF, KAN.

Editor Restitution: The dear old RESTITUTION came to us again at the beginning of another year. Although the head was not so familiar, its columns, which number one more, continue to enlighten, enable and encourage us to fight the good fight of faith.

Was there ever a time when such encouragement was more needed? No, never!

With what pleasure we read the letters of Sister Roxanna Winee, and others. May she and others who are thus engaged be doubly rewarded.

What an important suggestion by our worthy Sister Williams, with whom I am personally acquainted. I for one would be much benefitted by lessons, beginning at the creation and leading on to the consummation."

The Youths' Column is just the thing to induce them to read the paper.

Infidelity is to rank in this community, and I suppose it is much the same all over the land, that young men, who can scarce be called anything but boys, take pride in getting up with Ingersoll's speeches, committed to memory, and rattling them off like a little boy with his first piece; thus creating laughter and pleasing the ears of the younger ones, who like themselves, are ignorant of God's plan of salvation; but still the false impression is being made.

Let those who are able, do all they can to instruct the weak ones. Such able contributors as Sisters Williams, Reck and Winee, would have great influence among the youth.

I hope Sister W's suggestion will be carried out and that much good may be accomplished in 1881.

NANNIE BARBER.

Editor Restitution: I clip from the Warren Republican, the obituary notice, of our beloved Sister Hannah Bowman. I was personally acquainted with her, living next door neighbors for a number of years. I remember the first time we talked on the religions of the day. She told me that she had belonged to several organizations, but said she was not satisfied. I offered her our paper to read. She accepted it, and after having read THE RESTITUTION and her Bible, she was immersed the first opportunity, by Brother Hatch, and remained a firm believer in the coming and kingdom of our Lord, until she fell asleep, and was laid away to rest her weary head on that blessed old family Bible. (I remember so well) until the resurrection.

DRUCILLA WARBRITTON.

OBITUARY.

Mrs. Hannah Bowman was born in Berks county, Penn., in the year 1809, on the 11th day of January. Her maiden name was Hannah Major. She was joined in marriage to John Bowman in 1837. The fruits of this marriage were five sons, three of whom are now living. They continued to reside in Pennsylvania until the month of October, 1861, when they came to Indiana, where she resided until her death, which occurred on the 7th day of December, 1880, aged 70 years, 10 months and 26 days. The cause of her death was in taking a very severe cold, bringing on a severe attack of typhoid pneumonia resulting in death in 8 days. She was a devout believer in the Christian religion from early youth, and a constant reader of the Bible. During the course of her life she united with different religious organizations, but died a firm believer in the doctrine known as Soul Sleeping, and requested that her old family Bible be placed in her coffin whereon to rest her head, which was done.

PINE CREEK, MICH.

Editor Restitution: I take this opportunity of letting you know that my heart has been made glad of late by hearing the truth preached by a Congregational minister.

About two miles from where I live there is quite a flourishing society of the above persuasion, and for about seven years they employed a very zealous Englishman to preach to them. For two years we attended their meetings, thinking perhaps by so doing we might do some good, and during that time heard some good practical discourses, which generally were edifying, but on doctrine he was very unsound, being full of immortal soul and going to heaven or hell at death dogmas.

By invitation we would always take part in their Bible Class. Several times in the lessons ideas would present themselves that called for Scripture investigation, and frequently we tried to get them into such investigation, but our efforts were all in vain, as the minister would head us off every time. Finally we saw there was no use trying to work with them, and chanted ourselves from their meeting.

Last spring their minister resigned, and they secured the services of a Mr. Hibbard, from Detroit, who gives general satisfaction. We were invited to come and hear the new minister, with the assurance that we would like him, but we gave no encouragement, thinking he was like the rest of the Orthodox preachers.

About a month ago we were told he was going to give a series of discourses Sunday evenings, on the Second Coming of Christ. We missed the first two and now we have heard two, and are happily disappointed to hear a man of his stripe preach the literal second coming of Christ to reign on the earth over the nations.

He treats the Bible just as we do; spoke freely of the errors of some teachers in spiritualizing away the literal promises of God.

Yours in hope of the soon coming of our Lord.

D. F. SPENCER.

IDA, MO.

Editor Restitution: After my thanks to you for your indulgence in sending me your valuable paper, you will find enclosed two dollars to pay for a continuance of it.

We organized a little body of the one faith about three years ago of about fourteen. There have been as many more added since then by the preaching of Brother Wm. Prosser, who is a very efficient preacher, rightly dividing the word of truth. He preaches for us twice a month. We would be glad to have any of our preaching brethren in passing stop off at Chilicoth, and stay with us a day or two. We live six miles south of that place. If you will drop us a card a few days previous, to Ida, we can meet you at the Marcum House. We think there could be a great deal of good done here by a protracted effort.

Yours in hope of eternal life in the kingdom of God.

JAMES A. BOWEN.

DANVERS, MASS.

Editor Restitution:—I send one dollar at this time, on my subscription for THE RESTITUTION. Will pay for one extra subscription at least during the year. The new paper is vastly interesting. I would rather be an humble subscriber for our beloved paper than the most eloquent proclaimer of popular views. The wonder is that so much is given us through its columns by way of exegesis of the Scriptures, by fireless words of exhortation and consolation from faithful pens of brethren and sisters. While realizing the great goodness from the hand of the Lord, I feel my own unfaithfulness, in not making more of an effort to enlighten the people around us, but the darkness is so intense. I can only pray that the Lord will send some of our preachers this way the coming spring. Yours in the faith.

M. J. MANEFIELD.

DOUGLASS, KAN.

Editor Restitution: It is with a heart full of sorrow that I have to acknowledge my inability to send you any money at present, yet I hardly know how to get along without the paper. My crops have failed so in the last two years, and have had so much sickness in the family that we are unable to get enough of food and clothing to keep us from suffering.

We would be glad to have you continue to send us the paper, for in it we feel that we get the true gospel.

It is five or six years since I first began to see the truth as it is in Jesus, although I have been a Baptist for forty years and thought I knew something of the Bible and Christianity; but I bless God for the truth I have learned from THE RESTITUTION, and if your circumstances are so that you cannot send it a few months longer, you must stop it, but I shall miss it so very much.

I know that you cannot publish a paper without money. If prayer will avail anything in furnishing means, you shall have mine sincerely, whether you stop the paper or not. I have no way to raise the money until after harvest, but you have indulged me so long that I cannot blame you if you do discontinue my paper, still I hope you will not.

We have never had the pleasure of hearing an Advent preacher yet, your paper being all the preaching we have. We have the Baptists, Methodists, Presbyterians, Campbellites and United Brethren. They all think we have apostatized and turn to us the cold shoulder; but they cannot shut us out of the Kingdom of God, I hope. We are doing all we can to advance the truth, but it seems that Ephraim is joined to his idols.

I have past my sixty-first year, yet I may live to see the glorious advent of the Son of God, for I feel that the time is short, and that Satan will be bound and have no more dominion over this earth or the minds of men.

The Lord knoweth them that are his and will not suffer them to be tempted above what they are able to bear.

I will close by expressing the hope that THE RESTITUTION may live until Jesus comes.

A. C. MINER.

FOREST HILL, KAN.

Editor Restitution: We will try and send you some money to pay for the paper you have been sending us. Our time run out some time in 1879. We want to pay for it as soon as it is possible for us to do so, but really, we are poor in this world's goods.

I see in your paper, if some do not pay up, you will have to stop sending it to them. I feel like we could not do without it. It is all the preaching we have in this lonely place. Only think of it! My husband stands alone here, in the faith, and O, he is so lonesome! He talks, sometimes, but he is only a babe in Christ, so to speak. I am a believer in the gospel as far as I understand it, but have never been immersed. If some good preacher would come here, I think much good might be done.

I am most respectfully yours.

JENNIE BRINSON.

Sententious.

Christ is not valued at all, unless he is valued above all.—St. Augustine.

Blessed are the homesick, for they shall at last come to the Father's house.—Henrich Stillings.

I wonder many times, that ever a child of God should have a sad heart, considering what the Lord is preparing for him.—Rutherford.

Christ leads me through no darker rooms
Than he went through before;
He that into God's kingdom comes
Must enter by his door.
Come, Lord, when grace has made me meet
Thy blessed face to see;
For if thy work on earth be sweet,
What will thy glory be?

—H. Baxter.

There are some minds, like convex or concave mirrors, which represent objects such as they receive them, but they never receive them as they are.—Joubert.

If you are not known outside of the neighborhood in which you live, but are known in the family as a strong helper, a sweet-tempered, actively devoted member, God will take care of your fame.

God's sweet dews and showers of grace slide off the mountains of pride, and fall on the low valleys of humble hearts, and make them pleasant and fertile.—Leighton.

"Say, what impels, amidst surrounding snow
Congealed, the Crocus' flamy bud to grow;
Say, what retards amidst the summer's blaze
Th' autumnal bulb, till pale declining days?
The God of Seasons! whose pervading power
Controls the sun, or sheds the freezy shower:
He bids each flower his quick'ning word obey,
Or bo each lingering bloom enjoins delay."

That little rivulet fed by a spring high up on the mountain, goes winding about for a good while groping its way among the heaped-up leaves and round the rocks, but it always finds its way down to some high road, at last makes for itself a basin in the stone, and gathers up there the treasures of the hill-springs, and overflows, and makes the place around it green and cool—a place where wayfarers love to stop in the sultry noons. It is a truthful emblem of the life in which the word of Christ dwells richly. The richness must find its way down to men in streams of strength and refreshing.—M. R. Vincent.

UNARMED.

Unarmed how could we meet the foe, who like a Goliath stands with all his brazen armor on, defies the word our God has given. We meet him day by day boasting of his mighty strength, endeavoring to conquer those who, like David, trusted alone in him who is mighty to save. But having on the whole armor of God we put to flight the armies of the aliens. So let us fight, that we may win and wear a crown of righteousness when the battle is over.

M. E. STEELE.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The third Sunday in Feb., at the Center school-house in Clinton co., northwest of Kings Corner. Meeting to commence on Thursday night before. Also the fourth Sunday in Scipio-ville. Meeting to commence on Thursday night before.

J. S. HAVEN.

Poetry.

DEATH.

Thoughts suggested by the death of Brother Wm. Yates, Jan. 22.

W. J. CROCKETT.

I've watched the summers leaf assume
The hectic flush of autumn's near decay.
I've seen it tremble on the bough
And fall, and mouldering lie
Beneath its parent tree.
And when I've seen it thus
So silent pass away
To be no more—
Then have I thought of death:
Then have I realized the feebleness of life,
And treasured up the promise
Of a spring.
But oh, when face to face
With death, while grappling with mine own
His icy hand,
When, gazing on the deadened eye
Where fire of [illegible] once burnt
And fond of [illegible] self
While grief [illegible] had Taken to it [illegible] form,
And quivering lips proclaim
The words that once awoke
The answering bards of love—
I cannot think of life
Except I go above and gaze
On earth and she
And through their holes am made to feel
That God is life.
Hope—on I press and read
His Holy Word
And see to death again,
And treasure up my heart ever more
The promise of a spring.

Selections.

Christian Herald and Signs of Our Times.

THE BUDDING FIG-TREE.

WILLIAM MAUDE.

It is generally agreed among students of unfulfilled prophecy that the "fig-tree" spoken of in the parable, Luke xxi. 29–31, as in that other barren fig-tree upon which our Lord pronounced his solemn judgment, Mat. xxi. 19, 20, we are to recognize a symbol of the Jewish nation. And by the shooting forth of its early leaves, indicating as they do the approach of the genial and prolific season of summer, we are of course to understand such various signs of reviving vitality in the nation itself, as well as such increased interest manifested toward it by other nations, as shall supply unquestionable evidence that the long winter of Israel's spiritual rejection and political abasement is drawing to a close, and the millenial season of her exaltation and glory even at the door.

Now the object of the following article is to show that among the many evidences that the shadows of the are rapidly gathering around us, and darkening into the brief but terrible night of the last great tribulation, this of the budding of the Jewish fig-tree is not wanting. For, as has been truly said, the special and most conclusive proof that we have not only entered upon but far advanced into the last days, is to be found not so much in the appearance of this particular sign or the other, but in the simultaneousness with which all the predicted signs are manifesting themselves, all the lines of prophetic evidence converging to a single point of time, which point of time seems to lie immediately before us.

CLOSE OF THE PRESENT AGE

Behold, then, the budding of the fig-tree; or, to speak without figure, let us observe some of the most striking signs of Israel's rejuvenescence as they manifest themselves in the character of the eventful days in which our lot is cast.

I. In the first place, we may surely point, as one of the signs of the budding of the fig-tree, to the very prominent position which the Jews have come to occupy during the last fifty years—a position much more prominent than during any previous period since the long centuries of their dispersion and tribulation commenced. It is not too much to say that during the present century the Jew has, in Europe at least, from an object of contempt and oppression become one of envy and fear.

This result is no doubt due in some measure to the accumulation by certain Jews—more especially one family, whose name has become a very synonym for a millionnaire—of such vast wealth as has made them practically the

BANKERS OF EUROPE.

There must also be taken into account, however, the emancipation laws passed in favor of the Jews in various countries, and the consequent improvement in their social position. Nor must we omit to notice the remarkable abilities and genius which have in recent times raised Jews to the very highest positions alike in the political, scientific, literary, and the artistic world.

We have had eminent Jewish statesmen, Jewish philosophers, Jewish generals, Jewish authors, Jewish artists, and even Jewish theologians. In a word, we may say that the Jewish fig-tree has blossomed intellectually in a manner giving splendid promise of the nation's fitness, in this respect as in others, to fill the position of earthly supremacy to which it is destined in coming days.

II. Again, we may point, as another indication of the budding of the Jewish fig-tree, to the increased interest in the land of Israel which has of late been so remarkably exhibited. Who has not heard of the Palestine Exploration work, and the many interesting discoveries thereby elicited; the various schemes, both Jewish and Gentile, for the agricultural improvement and colonization of Palestine; the Euphrates Valley Railway, and various others, whereby the whole country would be opened up and brought into easy communication with surrounding countries?

All these, to say nothing of the fact that a tour to the Holy Land is now an ordinary a thing as was a tour to Paris sixty years ago, assuredly furnish a striking fulfillment of the prophet's words. "Thou shalt arise, and have mercy upon Zion: for the time to favor her, yea,

THE SET TIME IS COME.

For thy servants take pleasure in her stones, and favor the dust thereof." Psa. cii. 13, 14.

III. Another very significant sign of the shooting forth of the Jewish fig-tree is to be found in the fact that, owing to the rapid decline of the Turkish empire, and the gradual breaking up and re-formation of countries of which it was composed, the Jewish nation has become of some political importance.

The kings and statesmen by whom Europe is governed, in their various and conflicting schemes for the partition of the "sick man's" remaining goods when his final hour has come, are now compelled to take Palestine into account.

It will, perhaps, be found that the only practical solution of the great Eastern Question lies in the restoration of Israel to his own land, a work which, it seems highly probable to many students of prophecy, England may find herself called upon to effect, in accordance with the remarkable prophecy in Isa. xviii.:

"Woe to the land shadowing with wings, which is beyond the rivers of Ethiopia: that sending ambassadors by the sea, even in vessels of bulrushes upon the waters, saying, Go, ye swift messengers, to a nation scattered and peeled, to a people terrible from their beginning hitherto; a nation meted out and trodden down, whose land the rivers have spoiled," etc.

IV. But there is yet another indication of the budding of the Jewish fig-tree at the present time which is very remarkable, and to which we desire here to call special attention, and that is the growing spirit of hatred and persecution against the Jews, which is manifesting itself in many parts of Europe, and more especially in Germany. In Servia and Roumania, as well as in Bulgaria, the Jew has long been hated and oppressed, and this feeling of hatred has of late years been increased by the known sympathy of the Jews with the Turkish cause.

In Russia, also, the Jews have always been subject to cruel oppression, and in that vast empire again the national feeling against them has been intensified by their actual, or supposed, complicity in the recent Nihilistic movement; indeed, they are widely believed to have been the chief instigators of it.

In Germany, however, the present political movement against them, which threatens speedily to develop itself into actual persecution, owes its origin to other causes, and is in every way more significant, as we shall endeavor to point out.

But before doing this there are one or two very interesting facts in reference to the present condition of Israel which we desire to bring under your notice.

In the first place, the geographical distribution of when viewed in connection with their divinely-revealed restoration to their own land, is worthy of our attention. It is computed by the best authorities that there are about 7,000,000 of Jews at present in the world. Now it is certainly a very remarkable fact that of these 7,000,000 not far from 5,000,000 are to be found in Russia, Austria, Turkey, Germany, in Asia, and in certain parts of Africa bordering on the Mediterranean. In Great Britain, France, Italy, Spain, Sweden, and even America, the Jews are comparatively few in number. And yet, while they enjoy the most complete liberty in the western countries of Europe, and are still subject to persecution and degradation in the eastern, it is to the eastern that they most tenaciously cling.

"THE SCATTERED PEOPLE,"

The Slav has ever been the persecutor of the Jew, but, nevertheless, it is in Slav countries that the most cherished haunts of the Jews are to be found. So that, in point of fact, the Jews may still be regarded, not merely by descent and religion, but also by habitation, as an Eastern people. How is this to be accounted for? "It cannot be attributable," says a recent able writer, "to lack of enterprise, or unwillingness to push fortune in strange lands, or to incapacity of assimilation with foreign habits and customs.

A FURTHER AND DEEPER SOLATION.

has to be sought."

And what is this "further and deeper solution?" At least two elements in it seem to be discernable. On the one hand may we not discern the Divine intention in thus keeping this ancient people more or less in the vicinity of their future home, so that when God shall give the signal they may the more readily and rapidly obey it? God wants them to be, so to speak, "at hand" when His "set time to favor Zion" shall have come; and therefore he retains them by the invisible but powerful influence of an unconscious patriotism, from wandering too far away—the land exercising a secret magnetic influence over those who are yet again to inherit it.

And as one Divine purpose is thus answered by keeping the Jews for the most part in Eastern lands so is another met by so ordering it that these are the very countries in which they are the most despised and persecuted. "The people shall dwell alone" is at once the divine purpose and prediction concerning them; they must in order that their great destiny may be worked out, remain unmingled with other peoples: and this end is most effectually attained by putting enmity between them and the nations among whom they dwell, this enmity tending necessarily to the isolation of the Jews, and begetting on their part a corresponding repulsion: so that union and absorption becomes morally, as well as socially, impossible.

(To be Continued.)

Prophetic Times.

PROGRESSIVE DISSOLUTION OF THE TURKISH EMPIRE.

Predicted by the Mystical Drying up of the Euphrates, under the Sixth Vial in Revelations xvi. 12.

S. BONHOMME.

The sixth vial, commencing in 1822–1828, denotes the dissolution of this long standing despotic government.

Two hundred years ago, when the Turkish Empire was at the summit of its power, and then included in its dominions Algeria, Tunis, Tripoli, Barca, Egypt, Syria, Greece, Moldavia and Wallachia; Tillinghast predicted that the sixth vial must eventually effect its ruin, although there was no prospect of it at that time. He wrote in 1655.

"By the river Euphrates we are to understand the Ottoman or Turkish Empire, it is called the great river, because of the great multitude of people and nations therein." The people who at this present time, "1655," are of all others accounted the greatest, are the Turks, who therefore, and no other are to be understood; especially as the river Euphrates, in the ninth chapter, under the sounding of the sixth trumpet, has reference to the Turkish power. By the Kings of the East, we are to understand the Jews who, upon the pouring forth of this vial, shall return to their own land and be converted to Christ, the pouring out of this vial preparing a way for both. They are called the Kings of the East from the honor and dignity which God will put upon his people. Micah iv. 8; Isaiah lxi. 9; Zechariah viii. 23. God, in his wonderful Providence, will so order that, at the appointed time of the Jew's return, the power of and the multitude of the grand signior, who is now, "1655," the greatest monarch in the world, and holds their land in possession, shall be much wasted and consumed."

Wonderful as then seemed the prospective overthrow of so mighty an empire as the Ottoman power.

We may take as some specimen of the magnificence of this empire, the single city of Cordova, which in point of wealth and grandeur was scarcely inferior to its proud rival on the banks of the Tigris. A space of twenty-four miles in length and six in breadth, along the margin of the Guadalquiver was occupied by streets, gardens, palaces, and public edifices.

For ten miles the citizens might travel by the light of the lamps along an uninterrupted extent of buildings. In the reign of Almazar, Cordova could boast of 270,000 houses, 80,000 shops, 80 public schools, 50 hospitals, 900 baths, 3,877 mosques, from the minarets of which 800,000 persons were daily summoned to prayer. The Seraglio of the Caliph consisted of the enormous number of 6,300 wives, concubines and black eunuchs.

The Caliph was attended to the field by a guard of 12,000 horsemen, whose belts and scimitars were studed with gold. Such was the city of Cordova, and the city of Granada was perhaps equally celebrated for its wealth, luxury and learning. Providence had placed this race for eight centuries in Spain, just in the position where they might act most effectually as the handmaid of Europe in the restoration of learning and general advancement. The courts of the Caliph became the resorts for poets, philosophers and mathematicians, from every country and from every creed. In the eighth century—732—it seemed that all Europe had to yield to the descendants of Ishmael.

From the rock of Gibraltar to the river Loire, nothing impeded their progress. Another such distance would have made England a province of the grand Caliph. Such was their conquest from the Baltic to the Cyclades, when the standard of Islam floated over the walls of Tour.

Literary relics of the conquered countries were brought to the foot of the throne, hundreds of camels were seen entering Bagdad loaded with volumes of Greek, Hebrew, and Persian literature, translated by the most skillful interpreters into the Arabic language. Masters, instructors, translators, commentators, formed the court of Bagdad. Schools academies and libraries, were established in every considerable town, and colleges were munificently endowed. It was the glory of every city to collect treasures of literature and science throughout the Moslem dominions, whether in Asia, Africa or Europe.

Grammar, eloquence and poetry were cultivated with great care. So were metaphysics, philosophy, political economy, geography, astronomy and natural sciences. Botany and chemistry were cultivated with ardor and success.

The Arabs particularly excelled in architecture, the revenue of the kingdoms were expended in public buildings. Fine arts, paintings and sculpture and music, shared largely in their regards. And in nothing did they excel more than in agriculture and metallurgy. They were the depositaries of science in the dark ages and the restorers of letters in Europe. They were of Arabian origin, an enterprising, warlike and intelligent people, they formed the channel through which the arts and sciences, and an acquaintance with civilization, traveled through Europe.

During their possession of a large portion of Spain, which they held from 713 to 1492, they not only established a magnificent kingdom and cultivated learning, while all the rest of Europe were sunk in barbarism, but they left behind them enduring monuments of their industry, skill and arts. And having subserved the purposes of Providence, their privileges were transferred to worthier hands, for as they were the instruments of preserving and transmiting that knowledge, so they became finally the regenerator of Europe. For it was through them that learning revived and the inventions and discoveries, which so effectually wield the destinies of the world were divulged. The descendants of Ishmael were the most powerful and absolute sovereigns on the earth. Their Caliphs exercised a most unlimited and undefined prerogative, reigned over numerous nations, from Gibraltar to the Chinese sea, 200 days journey from East to West.

The history of its declension commenced in 1821, when Greece seceded from Turkey, and fully established its independence after the battle of Navarino, in 1827, at which the Turkish fleet was destroyed. The Ottoman Government was further weakened in 1826 by the slaughter of 30,000 Janizaries, the flower of its forces: and in 1829 by Algeria being wrested from it by the French, and by Egypt successfully casting off its authority. Moldavia and Wallachia were also separated from it in 1807. The population of the remaining parts of Turkey has been fearfully reduced at the same period by unparalleled pestilences, conflagrations, military conscriptions and misgovernment; so that Lamartine, the great French statesman, in 1834, declared "The Ottoman Empire is no empire at all, it is a misshapen agglomeration of different races without cohesion between them; with mingled interests, without a language, without laws, and without unity and stability of power. You see that the breath of life that animated it, religious fanaticism, is extinct; you see that its fatal and blinded administration has devoured the race of conquerors, and that Turkey is perishing for want of Turks." Although the process of drying up the Turkish Empire has reached a very advanced stage, yet it evidently is not yet fully accomplished, notwithstanding the fact that more than half of its former territory has been torn from it, its complete destruction will very likely happen, as the destruction of the empires of the first Napoleon 1815, and of the third Napoleon in 1873, which predictions are clearly set forth in Rev. xvii. 10, 11, the 7th and the 8th head being forever annihilated, without any possibility of any successor ever again to assume the government of France, many of the English and Scotch theologians, having recently attempted to show that Jerome Bonaparte is to play in these latter times the games of a Bonapartic throne, which is finally to result in his being the anti Christ. But the anti-Christ is to be a Jew, from the indications of Ezekiel's prophecy, xxi. 25–27. And we maintain that there is to be shortly the fulfillment of Daniel's prophecy of the wilful king, viii 22, 23, whose career is described, until he is broken without hands at the battle of Armageddon, and his reign is to last three and a half years. But wonderful to tell, after all the balance of power, after all ecclesiastical alliances, after all the march of intellect, after all the decrees of combined government powers, yet this wilful potentate will, in spite of all remonstrances and of united armies, throw a girdle round the globe and defy a world.

The declension and annihilation of the Turkish Empire is the precursor of the restoration of the tents of Judah, Zech. xii. 7, and the pre-millennial advent of Christ in its first stage, Mat. xxiv. 30, because just at the end of the sixth vial, after the destruction of the Turkish Empire, Christ will raise the sleeping saints, and remove the prepared living saints, to meet him in the heavens. These warning words are the direct announcement of Christ himself, that he will come just at the point of time between the sixth and seventh vials and they apply to the two stages in his second advent.

This complex figure has been generally understood to portend the destruction of the Turkish Empire, situated on this famous river, the drying up under the effects of the sixth vial, was not to be a blow struck and finished, but a process going on like a river drying up gradually, progressively for a long period from commencement to close, and it is to prepare the way gradually for the settlement of the Jews, whose country is a part of the Ottoman Empire, a process which requires time.

Some have supposed that the kings of the East implies heathen kings, not of the Abrahamic posterity. Then the prophecy would not in the least indicate the dissolution of the Turkish Empire. But we derive from the Divine Word, that the Jews, are a nation of kings, a royal priesthood, which can by no means apply to any other people. Exodus xix: 6.

The revelation informs us that it was under the fifth vial, and not under the sixth, that the way of the Gospel should be prepared for its results to heathen and Eastern nations.

Now the fifth angel poured out his vial upon the seat of the beast, i. e. the metropolitan see of the papacy.

The decrees of Shoenbrun annihilated the temporal power of the pope of that day. The pope was dragged at the chariot wheels of Napoleon I. was taken to Fontainbleau and made prisoner, treated as a puppet, the emperor making merry at his expense, and subsequently appointing a king of Rome, and literally and truly he so desolated the papacy that the old pope and his cardinals, as they retired, exclaimed "Consumatum Estum" i. e. this is the end of all. This, then, was the new era, and was to precede the fall of Turkey under the sixth vial, and the return of the Jews, the divinely constituted kings and priests. Exodus xix: 6. a kingdom of priests.

In closing the history of the Ottoman Empire, we discover the hand of Providence in the conquests of the Turks, to last for a limited period, until they are to disappear to be dried up like a river is completely dried up. To all human probability, such an immense empire should have continued while time lasted.

For at the close of its first century, the Saracenic Empire embraced the fairest and the largest portion of the civilized world. The banners of the Crescent waved victorious over the whole Roman Empire. Arabia had yielded to the prophet before his death. Syria, Persia, and Egypt were soon made the vassals of his proud successors. Within twelve years after the hegira, 36,000 cities, towns and castles were subjugated to the new conquerors, 4,000 Christian temples destroyed, and 1,400 mosques dedicated to the man of Mecca. Africa was soon subjugated, the Moors converted to the new religion, who, in their turn, descended into Spain, and there established a magnificent kingdom. The victorious standard of the Crescent was raised on the cold mountains of Tartary, and on the burning sands of Ethiopia. The Moslem Empire extended from the Atlantic to Japan, and across the entire continents of Africa and Asia, to France and over the Indian Islands, embracing Sumatra, Java, Borneo, Celebes, and the Manillas. The Island of Goram, one of the Spice islands, may be taken as the eastern boundary of Islamism. Within its borders were found the sites of the oldest and most famous cities in the world. Nineveh, Damascus, Memphis, Thebes, Jerusalem, and the spots upon which the most memorable events in the past history of man are recorded. The Moslems appeared even under the walls of Vienna, whence they were turned back, and Europe was saved from the scourge of the East by the Poles, headed by the illustrious Polish hero, John Sobieski, on whom the hopes of Austria and the eyes of Europe were centered. Many politicians have expected that Russia would annex Turkey to its dominions, but prophecy entirely contradicts such a supposition. A brief season of increasing and seeming prosperity and revival of commerce, and projection of schemes of improvements may accompany these changes and events, especially in consequence of the return and re-settlement of the Jews to Palestine, and short sighted men of the world and of politics, as well as statesmen, will anticipate the rise of a new era of freedom and happiness, but the great tribulation will eventually follow and make manifest the unsubstantial foundation of such hopes. "For as the times of the Gentiles are nearly fulfilled" there shall be signs in the heavens, and upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; the sea and the waves roaring, men's hearts failing them for fear and for looking after those things, which are coming on the earth, for the powers of the heavens, i. e the governments of the world, Rom. xiii: 1, shall be shaken, and what then? Why we are told Christ is coming with power and great glory, to rescue the world from its tyranny. Luke xxi: 24-27.

Behold a king shall reign in righteousness, and princes shall rule in judgment. Isaiah xxxii: 1.

News Items.

Another violent shock of earthquake has occurred at Agram, Austria, causing a renewal of the panic.

Severe cold weather prevails throughout Mexico. Some persons were frozen to death at Pueblo and Matamoros.

Yellow fever is reported to have disappeared from Vera Cruz, but smallpox is raging at Matamoros and Brownsville.

Floods and hurricanes in Spain are reported by cable to have ravaged the entire peninsula for ten days. The inundations have destroyed half the crop of oranges and lemons, and an immense loss estimated at over $40,000,000 to other crops.

THE PACIFIC COAST FLOODS.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 3.—The heavy rains continue in central and northern California and Nevada, and the destruction to property is very great. The floods caused the dam of the Franktown reservoir to burst, and the village was nearly all swept away. The inhabitans had been warned in time and had moved their household goods. Tracks of many railroads are washed away. A general inundation is feared in Sacramento.

EARTHQUAKE.

PORTSMOUTH, N. H., Feb. 5.—There was an earthquake shock at Greenland and Stratham yesterday. The eastern portions of New York and Pennsylvania had a similar sensation on Thursday last.

LONDON, Feb. 2.—The correspondent of the Times at Bucharest, discussing the chances of war between Turkey and Greece, says: "It is a great mistake to suppose that the struggle would be confined to Turkey and Greece, even if Bulgaria and Roumelia keep quiet. I am in possession of confidential information which indicates as certain outbreaks in other quarters than on the Roumelian frontier, and the preparations made will strain the Turkish resources to the utmost."

CHINA.

LONDON, Feb. 7.—A St. Petersburg dispatch says the war party in Pekin collapsed on receiving intelligence of the capture of Geok Tepe by the Russians.

A victory gained by Russian troops over the Tekkes in Northwestern Asia, may possibly lead to complications with Great Britain in the future. The Russian General Skobeleff captured the Turcoman fortress of Geok Tepe on January 24. The fortifications had been planned by an English general, and were thought to be almost impregnable. The conquest is regarded as affording Russia a convenient basis of operations should she resolve at any time to move against British India. An English officer warns the Government that "the Russians are trying to conquer a magnificent country, which will supply them with 100,000 of the best fighting men in the world outside of Europe. A county with which any general can feel safe as a base of operations against Afghanistan and India." Prophetic expositors are of opinion that India as well as Ireland will be separated from England at no distant day.

Communications.

PARTAKERS OF DIVINE NATURE!
2 PET. I. 2.

I have no particular wish to live, if I cannot be of service to mankind; I therefore by the aid of my daughter, as amanuensis, shall endeavor to close up my remarks upon the truth of God, which is according to godliness, by noticing that feature of it evolved in the truth of Salvation.

The grand climax in reference to man, is the making of him like unto God. Nothing short of a God-likeness, is answerable to the high end, for which he was created.

With the immeasurable desire and thirst after immortality—a life which shall never end, he craves the fullness of God.

This condition of things is attainable only by the most diligent application of ones self to the constant use and exercise variously of a living faith, with the additional virtues of knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness and charity.

The aspirants of antiquity who sought for glory, honor and immortality, did not move in the right direction—did not obey the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness. They therefore stood justly entitled to the indignation, wrath, tribulation and anguish, which comes over the habitation of those who are rebellious. It happens to them according to natural law as well as moral—the effect naturally arising from the cause which produces it; for God has so arranged that virtue will carry its own reward, and vice its own punishment.

It was not in vain, therefore, that the Scripture hath said; that the way of the transgressor is hard, and they that walk therein, wrong their own souls.

We could but wish to reach with persuasives the ears and hearts of those who are destined to be judged according to the law of liberty. With the zeal of Fitz James for his antagonist, we could say; The fairest earldom in the gift of the crown, would not be too large a petition could it be granted in behalf of those who may otherwise be doomed to have their hearts torn asunder by the awful words—depart! depart, ye accursed!! But we are on the ascending scale when we speak of a life that shall never end—aspiring to Divine conformation and spiritual transformation, until we all come in the fullness of the Divine likeness—to the state of a perfect man in Christ Jesus.

God has been manifested once in the flesh, the next will be a manifestation of the spirit-state, in which man becomes like unto God.

Such is the high destination to which man is invited—the supreme excellence of the knowledge of Christ, for which Paul labored in the truth of the gospel.

CHRISTADELPHIAN.

Exegetical.

Who can number the clouds in wisdom? or who can stay the bottles of heaven? Job xxxviii. 37.

The word which is here translated clouds—שְׁחָקִים—shehakim, is derived from a root which signifies to comminute, to pulverize, or to make fine.

The query does not mean that it would be a difficult matter to count the clouds, as they are spread in broken parcels over the sky, but suggests the impossibility of estimating the innumerable vapory particles that compose these cloude.

Who can tell the infinitesimal size of the ultimate mist-atoms, or sum up the number of these minutest elements In the vapory masses that condense themselves into the bottles of heaven to pour their watery treasures upon the thirsty earth. God can make the water mist-atoms, and he can transform the mist-atoms into water-spouts.

A Letter to a Friend!

—By MRS. C. C. WOODRUFF.—

This little work is so well known that it needs no comment. 88 pages, price 15c.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

Poetry.

FAREWELL!

TO PHILADELPHIA.

Affectionately Dedicated to Miss Lydia Kling.

S. ROXANA WINCE.

"'Tis morning now, and I must go,
Farewell to all the long forms,
To misty recesses of the hill,
To cool and sounds of dicky birds,
To Fairmount park, to shady glen,
To lovely School hall gliding by,
To pleasant street and churches too
How sweet to see and to be by

"Good-bye to pleasure and delight,
To those of Rose and grace of Neal
To grand old square, where Franklin sleeps
To hall that ring in Revolution days
Hoed by to creatures of Peopl's,
To quaint old chair and here fancy,
To ancient—not Book of art,
Fair Solitude—to Lansdowne Drive

"Farewell to rarely pleasured bird,
To insect tribes and precious vines,
To those that child of science loves,
To commonly took, and Nature's books,
Farewell to Music of His Life's time
Enchanting book and famous creed,
To subtley Euclid, Love of mind,
To jewel mill and great deed.

"Farewell to one—who fought for me
The kindest creature speakable keeps,
And tolmed he—never, with knowing Eye
Around Faith's colors me holds,
Farewell! ye fairer—storm with air,
Fare well to kindly heart and mind,
To path of sadder Life cross
To home of Love, and private bond"

"Bright stones—I am soon back here—
For I may look on you no more,
Yet, you will be thought coming to me,
As circle of palm, on desert shore,
And you dear friends, whose friends I cannot
I cannot tell you what I feel,
There's no love in life, or after life,
Let me once more be side you kneel"

"Let me kneel, and pray that He
Who fortresses is and sure defence—
May be your guide, through all your days
Your hope, and light and recompense!
Your deep and calm your peace may be,
Who kept your faith, and slept done,
Then, when the dreary other parts,
You glad will say, 'The Shade's gone'"

Communications.

PRACTICAL DUTIES DEVOLVING UPON CHRISTIANS.

S. M. STEPHENSON.

And Jesus came and spake unto them, saying: All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach—disciples, or Christians—Margin, of all—nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you. Mat. xxviii. 18-20.

1. According to Mark xvi. 15, 16; Acts ii. 38, disciples are made through faith in the gospel, repentance, and baptism.

But was the work of these teachers accomplished when they had discipled, or initiated pupils into the body of Christ? A disciple is a learner. When they had complied with the terms of scholarship they are just prepared to enter upon the course of study prescribed by the teacher.

One of the conditions of admission into any school is an obligation to obey all the commandments of the teacher and to observe all the regulations of the school.

To be instrumental in inducing men and women to comply with the conditions of membership in the church of Christ, and then leave them without any further instruction, is like organizing a school and then leaving it without a teacher to instruct it. A school without a constitution or teacher is lik a flock of sheep without an enclosure or shepherd.

The idea of having nothing to do or learn after having entered the school of Christ is akin to that of a pupil graduating when he enters the school, instead of when he has completed the course of study prescribed by the teacher.

The church is the body of Christ. 1 Cor. xii. 13, 27; Eph. i. 22, 23. As all the members of the natural body, in a sound condition, obey their legitimate head, so should all the members of Christ's body obey their legitimate head, and not the head of some other body. One of these is a loyal pupil in Christ's school, the other is a loyal member in the school of anti-christ. That the first lessons to be taught and learned in the school of Christ are obedience to all the precepts of the distinguished teachers, is clearly evident from the commission of the apostles.

After having commanded them to go and make disciples, he adds: "Teaching them (his disciples) to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you."

Throughout the teachings of Christ and his apostles, obedience to all the commandments of Christ is the great test of discipleship. Upon no other principle could loyalty in his body—his school—the church—be maintained. The lack of the spirit of loyalty is one of the chief causes of the widespread anarchy which pervades the professed followers of the good teacher.

If a child shall love a parent, or a pupil a good teacher, it will be his delight to obey his commandments. John xiv. 15.

Again Christ gives obedience to his commandments as the test of loving him. He says, "If ye love me keep my commandments." Christ presents the same test as the evidence that he and his father both love us. Thus he adds, "He that hath my commandments and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me: and he that loveth me shall be loved of my father, and I will love him, and manifest myself to him" Verse 21.

None are held responsible for loving Christ except those who have his commandments. Those who have and keep his commandments, are the ones whom he and his father love.

Christ requires the same evidence of loyalty from his followers, which the Father required of him.

He says, "If ye keep my commandments ye shall abide in my love, even as I have kept my father's commandments, and abide in his love. John xv. 10.

The exercise of the foregoing would read, "If ye keep not my commandments ye shall not abide in my love." It also teaches that the love of the father for the Son was on account of his loyalty, and not because he was his son. Who was the son of God, Luke in tracing the genealogy of Christ back to Adam says, "Which was the son of God." Luke iii. 38.

The great difference between the two Adams in the Father's estimation, was that one was a loyal son and the other was a disloyal son.

The everlasting destiny of men and angels hinge on this issue. This has been the grand issue between God and man for about six thousand years, and will continue to be during all the ages to come, until the great family of Adam shall have been tested by the commandments of God. While God is no respecter of persons he is a great respecter of characters. His love discriminates between loyalty and disloyalty.

Abel was accepted and Cain rejected for the same reason that the first Adam was rejected and the second Adam accepted, viz: Because one was loyal and the other disloyal. Paul declares that "Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain, by which he obtained witness that he was righteous, God testifying of his gift." Hebrews xi. 4.

The noun righteousness is taken from the verb to do right. Abel therefore was accepted because he had obeyed God. When Cain saw that God had respect unto Abel and his sacrifice he was wroth. Gen. v. 4. "And the Lord said unto Cain, why art thou wroth? and why is thy countenance fallen? If thou doest well, shalt thou not be accepted? and if thou doest not well, sin lieth at thy door."

The apostle declares that sin is the transgression of law. If the characters of the two brothers had been reversed, the father's love would have been reversed. The same is true of Jacob and Esau. They were spoken of as the heads of two nations before they were born.

God was no respecter of the mere personality of these children either before or after their birth. He foresaw that the two nations of which they were the germinal heads, would be one loyal and the other disloyal.

I have dwelt somewhat at length on this principle, because it underlies the whole moral government of God.

The creation of earth and man, the revelation of the will of God by angels, seers, prophets, Christ, his apostles, and all God ever has or will do for this planet, with its uncounted millions of inhabitants, has but one ulterior design, and that has been to fill the renewed earth with loyal men and women, through whom his will on earth shall be done, as angels do it in heaven.

The gospel which is the power of God unto salvation, the death of Christ, or the atonement with its stupendous issues, and magnificent achievements, will never raise any human being a hair's breadth above the status of character which God required of the first man, to-wit, perfect loyalty.

The Son of God though immaculate in purity and the incarnation of all moral perfections, never has in the past, or will in all the ages to come, go the millionth part of a hair's breadth above or beyond, that status of character which our Heavenly Father, in his infinite wisdom erected in the Garden of Eden; viz: Perfect obedience to his law.

Michael, the chief of the angelic host, will not in the sweep of endless ages, go beyond the simple test to which the feeblest babe in Christ is required to come.

This is the centripetal moral force whose magnet is the love of God, which holds in fealty to the government of God a loyal creation. Upon no other principle could the plan of salvation be adapted to all mankind. If riches, position, great intellect, or splendid physical achievements were the test, but few could be saved. The feeblest in intellect among the lambs of the flock of Christ may be coupled with the largest heart and most loyal disposition.

Why was John the disciple whom Jesus loved? Evidently because he had the most lovely disposition. We see him at the supper reclining upon the Saviour's breast and at the foot of the cross, among the loyal women, while other apostles had not the moral courage to stand by their betrayed and crucified Redeemer. John was doubtless the greatest moral hero of these all.

Many persons have the physical courage to suffer the most exquisite torture or face death in its most terrific forms, who have not the moral courage to take up their cross and follow an unpopular leader.

To see more clearly the difference between physical and moral courage, compare the Ass and tiger, or the Roman gladiator, with the great moral heroism of the Son of God and host of martyrs. The moral courage which chose to obey God rather than man in the face of the cross the rack, the blazing fagots, the inquisition, etc., because it is right, let the consequences be what they may are the moral heroes of the world.

GOD'S WONDERFUL WORKS.

CHARLES MOORE.

The vastness of God's wonderful works is far beyond the conception of all human thought. We look abroad upon the various scenes of the vast expanse of this beautiful world, which is now laboring under the penalty of a curse, because of the sin which man has brought upon it, and we are inspired from the inmost depths of our hearts to exclaim: "O Lord, how manifold are thy works! in wisdom hast thou made them all. The earth is full of thy riches." Psa. civ. 24.

What a wonder it is to us to see how mankind can—while pretending to be the children of God—hold to such an unbiblical idea, that the earth, at the second coming of Christ, will be destroyed: that the destruction of the earth will be the work of the second coming of Christ.

If we look into the sure word of God, we will soon see that the people at large have been deluded through the philosophy and vain deceit of man. We know that "God created the heavens and the earth," and that for a purpose, as we shall see, by taking his own words for it. "For thus saith the Lord that created the heavens; God himself that formed the earth and made it, he created it not in vain. He formed it to be inhabited." Isa. xlv. 18.

Thus we see in this that God did not create the earth to be destroyed. "He created it not in vain," but it was formed for a purpose, and that purpose is "to be inhabited." And this earthly habitation is not confined to a limited time—as it certainly would be at the destruction of the earth, as modern theologians would have us believe, if we did not have sense enough to read and search the Scriptures ourselves—but our earthly habitation, under the divine rulership of Jesus Christ, will continue forever.

Our present pilgrimage here is but for a time, and that time will close when Christ will come to gather unto himself his elect. Still we are on the earth. Man was made to be on the earth, and it always will be his dwelling-place.

Though now under the rulership or bondage of a baptible government, God will overturn, overturn, overturn it, and it shall be no more, until he come whose right it is, and I will give it him." Ezek. xxi. 27. "And the government shall be upon his shoulder." Isa. ix. 6. "And this is the name whereby he shall be called, The Lord Our Righteousness." Jer. xxiii. 5-6. "Wonderful, Counsellor, The Mighty God, The Everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace."

All these names, and many more that could be mentioned, point to one person, and that person is the Lord Jesus Christ, who will, under the new dispensation, rule all things, under his Father, the God of all things, who will give unto his Son "the throne of his father David, and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end." Luke i. 33.

Now as the throne of David was on the literal earth, how can it be that he will reign in heaven above the sky, when David himself, "being a prophet, knew that God had sworn with an oath to him, that of the fruit of his loins, according to the flesh, he would raise up Christ to sit upon his throne." Acts ii. 30.

Hear what the Lord God says: "Behold the man whose name is The Branch, and he shall grow up out of his place, and he shall build the temple of the Lord." Zech. vi. 12. "In those days, and at that time, will I cause the Branch of Righteousness to grow up unto David, and he shall execute judgment and righteousness in the land."

"Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it and to establish it with judgment and justice, from henceforth, even forever. The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this." Isa. ix. 7.

O, what wonderful love the Lord God hath shown in all his mighty works! God has made great provision for man, in the crucifixion of his dear Son Jesus the Anointed One, whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through faith in his blood, to declare his righteousness for the remission of sins that are past, through the forbearance of God.

In consequence of the disobedience of Adam death became the penalty of sin, as we shall see. "As by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin, and so death passed upon all men, for all have sinned." Romans v. 12.

But God sending his own Son in the likeness of sinful flesh, and for sin, condemned sin in the flesh: that as sin hath reigned unto death, even so might grace reign through righteousness, unto eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord.

We receive this grace by a hearty submission to the requirements under which he has purposed that we should come to a conscious conviction of our position, outside of his outstretched arms to receive us.

We know what our destiny will be, if we do not take upon ourselves his name by immersion; therefore let us take heed to these requirements, and take a firm hold of his loving grace, and not let it slip, as the manner of some is, but hold on, and if by a "patient continuance in well-doing, we seek for glory, honor, and immortality," which we do not in this life have—we will receive the promised reward, which he the righteous judge, has promised since the world began.

We are not to love the world nor the things that are in the world that is while we are in it, in this life, for the sake of gaining unto ourselves riches and honor, which is all vanity and vexation of spirit.

"The Lord is not slack concerning his promises"—he will bring about the consummation of all his intents and promises, because he made an oath to that effect, by a covenant made with holy men of old. He promised by prophecy that Christ should come in his humility, as man in the flesh, to become sin for us; and we see that it was confirmed in the immaculate conception of himself, of the Holy Spirit, in the virgin Mary.

As that was fulfilled, so will all else of his most glorious promises be fulfilled.

"If we confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." God grant that we may all be found worthy at his coming, to receive the promised reward.

Let us "press toward the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. Praying always with all prayer and supplication in the spirit. Then will grace be with all them that love our Lord Jesus."

Elizabeth, N.J.

THE TREE OF LIFE AND TREE OF KNOWLEDGE.

S. ROXANA WINCE.

"And out of the ground made the Lord God to grow every tree that is pleasant to the sight, and good for food; the tree of life also in the midst of the garden, and the tree of knowledge of good and evil"—Two distinct trees. Gen. ii. 9-16.

"And the Lord commanded the man, saying, Of every tree of the garden, thou mayest freely eat, but of the tree of knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it; for in the day thou eatest thereof, thou shalt surely die." Gen. ii. 16, 17.

"Because thou hast hearkened unto the voice of thy wife and hast eaten of the tree, of which I commanded thee, saying, Thou shalt not eat of it. * * * And the Lord God said, Behold, the man is became as one of us, to know good and evil, and now, lest he put forth his hand, and take also of the tree of life and live forever; Therefore the Lord God sent him forth from the garden of Eden to till the ground from whence he was taken. So he drove out the man, and he placed at the east of the garden of Eden, Cherubims and a flaming sword, to keep the way of the tree of life."

Man did eat of the tree of knowledge, and eating, brought death into the world. He was driven out of the garden lest he should partake of the tree of life.

Brevities.

The simplest Post Office in the world is in Magellan Straits, and has been established there for some years past. It consists of a small cask, which is chained to the rock of the extreme cape in the straits opposite Terra del Fuego. Each passing ship sends a boat to open the cask and to take letters out and place others into it. The Post Office is self acting, therefore, it is under the protection of the navies of all nations, and up to the present there is not one case to report in which any abuse of the privileges it affords has taken place.

Professor Balfour Stewart considers that the evidence is in favor of some connection between the state of the sun's surface and terrestrial meteorology, while at the same time it is unmistakably indicated by all circumstances that this connection is of such a nature as to imply that the sun is most powerful when its surface most spots on his surface.

He does not, it will be perceived, commit himself unreservedly to this view, and he thinks that further research is necessary to clear up many points still in doubt. But he is free to say that, on fine, this hypothesis is rapidly emerging, if indeed it has not already emerged, from the regions of mere conjecture."

A SERIES OF SUN STORMS.

January has been a stormy month on the sun. Tempests powerful enough to sweep every living thing from the face of the earth, have spent their force upon the great glowing orb, and their effects have been visible at the distance of ninety odd million miles. Those who have not looked at the sun through a telescope since 1878, when its broad disk was as free from spots as the polished gold case of a watch, would be astonished at the change in its telescopic appearance. It is now like the shield of a warrior, dented and pierced by many fierce strokes. On some days an opera glass powerful enough to define the curve of an actress' eyebrow has sufficed to show the dark nucleus of a solar cyclone. Spots larger than this earth have appeared and vanished.

Day after day the whole surface of the sun has been mottled and wrinkled under the strain of forces so tremendous that in comparison with them the strength of a volcano seems puny.

The spots have gone trooping across the disk, with the revolution of the mighty globe, in groups and rows, singly and in pairs. Huge groups have been seen to split up, smaller spots have been formed and destroyed in a few hours.

Whether, as some have supposed, these spots are caused by the fall of enormous meteoric masses upon the sun, or produced by the uprush or down-rush of gaseous matter, or are the result of both these causes, the effect upon the observer is the same. He cannot escape the impression that the great fireball he is looking at is the sport of elemental forces of the most gigantic power and activity.

There have been only three clear days during January when, with an ordinary spyglass, the sun's disk appeared unspotted.

These sun storms are not likely to decrease in fury for some years yet. The new spot period is just beginning, and before it passes astronomers hope to have learned far more about this interesting and puzzling subject than they know now.

The weight of evidence shows that there is a close relation between the condition of the sun and the earth's meteorology. Hundreds of telescopes are daily turned upon the sun from all quarters of the earth, and careful records of observations are being kept by astronomers.

New York Times.

THE ANCIENT CIVILIZATION OF THE MISSISSIPPI VALLEY.

Throughout a large portion of the Mississippi valley the remains of a former race of inhabitants are found, and who are only known to us by the relics that are found in the tumuli which they have left. The mound-builders were a numerous people entirely distinct from the North American Indians, and they lived so long before the latter that they are not known to them even by tradition.

They were industrious and domestic in their habits, and the finding of large sea-shells which must have been brought from the Gulf of Mexico, if not from more distant shores, proves that they had communication and trade with other tribes.

Perhaps the most interesting fact connected with this ancient people is that they had a written language. This is proved by some inscribed tablets that have been discovered in the mounds, the most important of which belong to the Davenport Academy of Sciences.

These tablets have attracted great attention from archæologists, and it is thought that they will some time prove of great value as records of the people who wrote them. It is still uncertain whether the characters were originally made by the mound-builders or whether it was confined to a few persons of high rank. In the mounds where two of the tablets were found, one of the bones called were found, probably covered by contact with a large wooden receptacle. Articles of copper, ornaments and pieces of cloth were found with them. It would seem that the mounds in question were used for burials of persons of high rank. The inscriptions have not been fully deciphered, for no key to them has yet been found, we are totally ignorant of the derivation of the language or of its affinities with other tongues.

The mound builders lived while the mammoth and mastodon ranged upon the earth, as is clearly proved by the carvings upon some of their elaborate stone pipes. From these and other peculiarities of the pipes it is inferred that smoking was not "addicted with" as it is now, but that it was reserved as a kind of ceremonial observance. Our knowledge of the habits and customs of the mound builder is very incomplete, but is sufficient to show that at least a part of this country was once inhabited by a people who have passed away without leaving so much as a tradition of their existence, and who are only known to us through the silent relics which have been interred for centuries. A people utterly forgotten, a civilization totally lost—was it through a great catastrophe in the history of the world, or was the ceaseless struggle for existence so severe that they gradually succumbed and passed away?

TIME.

It is very remarkable that God who giveth plenteously to all creatures,—he hath scattered the firmament with stars as a man sows corn in his fields, in a multitude bigger than the capacities of human order; he hath made so much variety of creatures, and gives as meat and drinke, although any one of both kinds would have served our needs; and so in all instances of nature,—yet in the distribution of our time, God seems to be straight-handed: and gives it to us, as if nature gives us rivers, enough to drown us, but drop by drop, minute after minute; so that we never can have two minutes together, but he takes one away when he gives us another. This should teach us to value our time since God so values it, and by his so small distribution of it tells us it is the most precious thing we have.—Jeremy Taylor.

Pictorial Description

—OF THE—

Tabernacle in the Wilderness,

ITS RITES AND CEREMONIES.

—By John Dilworth.—

Thirty-two pages. 9 × 12. Send for our office terms.

CHRIST'S KINGDOM!

WHERE IS IT? WHAT IS IT?

—By Jos. Lacier.—

A discourse delivered at Reedville, Pa. This is a 32 page tract, neatly printed, and should have a wide circulation. Price 10c.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

MISTAKES of INGERSOLL

A review of Col. R. G. Ingersoll's lecture entitled "Mistakes of Moses."

—By J. M. Stephenson.—

This is a large size eight page tract, printed on tinted paper. 10c. each, or 75 for $1.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

SECOND EDITION.

The GOSPEL of the KINGDOM

Advocated in a series of Ten Discourses

—By Wiley Jones.—

This edition is elegantly printed and bound by Lippincott & Co. clear type, good paper, 256 pages. Plain cloth binding $1; cloth gilt edge $1.25; leather marbled edge $1.50, post paid. To obtain this valuable work, send the price by post office money order or registered letter, to

WILEY JONES,
Norfolk, Va.

BOOK LIST.

The following publications are kept on hand and will be forwarded to any address in the United States or Canada, upon receipt of published price. Address all orders to

THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Indiana.

BIBLE READING. Suitable for week-day lectures. 1. The Gospel. 2. The Coming and Kingdom of Christ. 3. Signs of the Times. 4. Immortality. 5. The Kingdom of God. 6. Nature of Man and The Gospel for Obtaining. 7. The Two Advents. 8. What is Religion. 9. The Restitution. 10. Nature of the Wicked. 11. Baptism. Price 10 cents per dozen, or assorted packages of 100, $3.

FOUR PAGE TRACTS.

[illegible] for the Times. [illegible] Death. Punishment Short [illegible]

[illegible] Second Coming [illegible] Kingdom of God [illegible] Future [illegible] By A. B. Mackintosh.

[illegible] Coming [illegible] Kingdom [illegible] Gospel [illegible] Gospel [illegible] Gospel

THE RESTITUTION
—IS ISSUED WEEKLY BY—
The Christian Publishing Association.

OFFICERS OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS:
[illegible] ..... President.
[illegible] ..... Vice-President.
[illegible] ..... Secretary.
[illegible] ..... Treasurer.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE:
[illegible]

[illegible] ..... Editor.

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTORS:
[illegible]

The Restitution.

Keep Brothers Articles

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXX. Read PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, FEBRUARY 16, 1881. NO. 7.

THE RESTITUTION.

TERMS—TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR, Payable in advance. Three and Six Months at the same rate.

Address all Letters and Communications to THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things" which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and submission as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as a preparation for final salvation.

Communications.

COMING AGE.

Sovereignty—Fourth Seal—Chief Agents—Deaths—Hells—Rulers—Explanations—Empire under Persecutions—Period Covered by the Fourth Seal—Empire as to its Civil and Religious Aspects.

No. 56.

J. P. WELCHEL.

Sovereignty. We are now about to enter the empire into its last century. Paganism, as a result of conflicts and compromises, has attained to the position of the established religion of the empire, and is about to be overthrown by Christianity, to be followed by final priesthood—an age of conflict between idolatry and Christianity, the century in which was to be contested the right of empire between Christ and Satan.

These contests were to be severe and thorough. It was to be finally decided whether the blood of Christ alone was an all-sufficient atonement, or whether altars were to be saturated through all coming time with the blood of other victims.

The number of Christians in the empire was increasing. The contrast between the various systems of religion, and of the lives of their members-hip was so great that multitudes saw and believed in the doctrines of Christianity.

Rome had always been Pagan. It was a Pagan infant under Numa Pompilius, our Royal High Priest, became flesh under Augustus, the first imperial high priest of Paganism. Under Tiberius he hung upon the cross. In the reign of Nero was introduced a system of persecution, which ceased only in the overthrow of Pagan supremacy.

Under Domitian John is favored with a panoramic history of that empire and its family of nations, till it is crushed and ground to dust under the kingdom of the "stone."

We have traced the empire through three of its phases, as under a triumphant emperor, when it passed the zenith of its glory; through a bloody civil war, and through a severe and protracted famine. We have seen the people of God passing through corresponding changes, but still increasing. We are now about to follow the empire, as under the control of emperors instigated by a wicked priesthood, it carries on a bloody persecution against the people of God. We lay the persecutions to imperial agency, since they were instituted and carried on by imperial edicts.

Fourth Seal.—"And when he had opened the fourth seal, I heard the voice of the fourth living creature say, Come and see. And I looked, and behold a pale horse: and his name that sat on him was Death, and Hell followed with him. And power was given unto them over the fourth part of the earth, to kill with sword, and with hunger, and with death, and with the beasts of the earth." Rev. vi. 7, 8.

The two chief agents are Death and Hell. The one kills, the other opens his terrible jaws and devours them. The imperial agents here (by metonomy) are called by the names of their agencies. They cause death, and are called death and hades. Death is personified; the color of his steed shows the character of his mission; it is to kill, while hades devours them. Death has four executioners: called sword, hunger, death, and the wild beasts of the earth.

In Ezek. xiv. 21, God calls them his four sore judgments. Death here means pestilence. The four sore judgments are the sword, famine, pestilence, and wild beasts. Such are death's executioners under the fourth seal.

Hell.—This word in the Greek, is ahs, fr. a not, and idō, I see. Not see, unseen. A lexicon defines it as follows: A dark, obscure place; a place unseen, or not to be seen by mortals; hades, the receptacle, or region of the dead, containing all the fabulous mansions of the heathen ritual. According to the Christian doctrine the invisible world of spirits, the unseen place of souls; the place of the dead generally, but vulgarly a place of torment; the abode of the damned, hell: death.

Out of these [illegible] the reader can observe only [illegible] fourth seal to be executed [illegible] Christians [illegible] no considerable [illegible].

Words, it is true, are media of thought; since different nations in every land employ different words, namely, the ancient thought. We seem to forget that words express with the thought not new thoughts give other meanings to the same word. This is strictly true with the word Hell. Christians can be gathered into hades, the unseen, but cast into hell, a place of unending conscious torment.

Polycarp, when the time for his person to be [illegible] his life and Kingdom with the glorious anticipation that as a reward for such contents inflicted by men, he should be received into the presence and smile of the Lord, instead of a burning hell! Just as soon as night under an old name.

"Followed with him." Hell followed. They were in motion and companions so vast an empire, and so many victims to be slaughtered that it required action, rapid movement. Hades attends to see that the work is done thoroughly done. If [illegible] care that if one executioner does not fully take life another shall finish it: if the first fails to take the life the sword shall complete the work, as in the case of Polycarp and others.

"Fourth part of men." This points to a time when the empire was divided into four parts. Such a division will fix the chronology of the seal.

There are two divisions of the Roman empire named in the apocalypse; one into three parts and one into four parts. Here are four parts. When was there such a division? Let us introduce an extract from history.

"Diocletian, a man of mean origin, born at Diocles, an obscure town in Dalmatia, having signalized himself by his valor and conduct was proclaimed emperor on the 17th day of September, in the year 284. On the first day of April, in 286, Maximian, called Herculius, born near Sirmium in Pannonia, who had been Cæsar some time before, was declared Augustus, and joint emperor with Diocletian. On the first of March 292, Constantius Chlorus and Galerius Maximian were created Cæsars, by the two forementioned emperors. And the better to secure the fidelity of the Cæsars, new marriages were contracted for them. Constantius dismissing Helena, mother of Constantine, married Theodora, daughter-in-law of Maximian Herculius. And Galerius Maximian married Valeria, daughter of Diocletian. Now the empire as divided betwixt those four. Constantius as Cæsar, had to his share Britain and Gaul. Under these two emperors and their Cæsars began what is called Diocletian's persecution, which lasted ten years or more, in some parts of the empire before it was universally extinguished."

The divisions were the following: "Quasi partito imperio, cuncta quæ trans Alpes Gallize sunt, Constantio comminsa: Africa, Italiaque Herculio: Illyricique ora ad usque Ponti fretum, Galerio: Cætera Valerius retenavit."

Here, then, is a partition of the empire into four parts; the empire being universal, it would be "fourth part" of the land occupied by the empire. One of those divisions would be a fourth part. As this division continued but a few years, so was the persecution also. Constantius kept the persecution out of his quarter.

There was soon another partition; but, still it was divided into four parts. This division was broken up by Constantine, the son of Constantius Chlorus who reigned as sole emperor from about A. D. 323 to 337.

This division does not take place till near the close of the era of the Pagan persecutions. As we have before stated, there was no entire suspension of persecutions from Nero to Constantine the Great. Some emperors were not as hostile to Christians as others. They issued no edicts against them, but they did not repeal those that had been passed by former emperors. The rescript of Trajan was a guide as to the mode of treating Christians till Constantine put an end to all former decrees.

From the time of the Antonines to the third century, a plague infested the Roman empire, which, beginning in Ethiopia, spread itself almost through the entire East and West, destroyed the inhabitants of many cities, and continued for fifteen years," says Zosimus, a historian of those times.

THE LOVE OF CHRIST.

HELENA M. HUNT.

"No greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends."—John xv. 13.

These words must have been spoken by our Lord shortly before his crucifixion, perhaps at that last sad celebration of the Passover, when he instituted that memorial feast which was to commemorate his death until his coming again.

How earnest then must have been their attention, how eagerly must they have listened to the gracious words that fell from the lips of their Divine Master, as he looked forward to the hour so near at hand, when he must suffer betrayal, degradation and death. How lovingly the Lord seems to linger over his last injunctions to the faithful eleven as they sat at meat, for we are told in chap. 13, that Judas having received the sop went out immediately. "These things I command you that ye love one another; and, "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends."

I suppose that what most impresses an intelligent Bible student in reading the life of the Lord Jesus is this: Whatever he taught he practiced in all his daily life, and we cannot read one chapter of the four gospels without seeing the overflowing tenderness of that mighty loving heart.

When the disciples rebuked those who brought little children to him, we are told that our Lord was much displeased, and he took the little ones up in his arms, and laid his hands on them and blessed them. How such gracious consideration must touch each mother's heart, and awaken all that is holiest and best in woman's mind.

When Peter denied him, after declaring "Though all men deny thee, yet will not I," it seemed so naturally a part of our Lord's character to say to that rash but penitent disciple, after the resurrection, "Lovest thou me more than these? Feed my lambs."

We are told to love one another, to bear one another's burdens, to be pitiful, to be courteous. There are so many ways in which we may help one another in bearing the burdens of this changing life, that I think if we could only follow the rule of putting ourselves in another's place, we would then find the way to do good easy enough.

The poet Pope says: "Trifles make the sum of human things." Each of us have some hidden trial to contend against. The good fight of faith is harder for some than for others, and as we all become more nearly acquainted with each other what a trial of patience and love it is to meet with so many peculiarities of disposition and temperament, some of them so difficult to understand or sympathize with. It is then that we begin to see what the apostle Peter meant when he said, Be pitiful, be courteous; and while we heartily and kindly look for the good in others, let us be ready to see our own faults, and try to bring them into subjection.

I can not imagine anything more hurtful to the growth of the truth, than indifference and coldness among the brethren. Let us each be interested in what another does, or tries to do—suppose mistakes are made, suppose something does occur that jars upon our notions of what ought to be; why not say, "Well! let us make the best of it, we cannot all see alike, the motives were good,' for after all "man looketh upon the outward appearance, but the Lord looketh upon the heart." Why not think "Do I never annoy a brother or sister, am I perfect myself?"

O, how much trouble and vexation might be avoided, if only this line of conduct were adopted! How many have been discouraged, and become at last indifferent by being found fault with. The motive may be good, if it does not do good. How much easier and pleasanter it is to say, looking upon some kindness done, "It was very good of you to think of it," than to say some trifling error of judgment, and say "It was very wrong of you to do that."

It seems to me so much easier to be affectionate and kind, than it is to be indifferent and cold. Then, O! the good it does; more lasting good than the most eloquent exhortation, that does not carry the power of example with it.

When Paul said "Though I have all faith, so that I could remove mountains, though I give all my goods to feed the poor, and have not love, I am nothing." Nothing without the love that is not easily provoked. Nothing—unless I bear all things, hope all things, endure all things.

Some need more loving encouragement than others to persevere on the narrow way that leadeth to eternal life. Some are naturally less penitent in thought and action. They have their own way of remaining steadfast, they live in themselves and to themselves, therefore they can give more sympathy than they need. To others an encouraging word is as necessary as the air they breathe, and these latter are more exposed on along the narrow way by a thoughtful action, by a remembered kindness, than if they should hear comments on the whole Bible from Genesis to Revelations, where they know the words come from the heart instead of the heart.

About time ago I read an extract from the writings of Dr. Thomas, which contains a very interesting account of his labors in London. One part struck me as peculiarly touching; it was told so simply and so naturally. The Doctor had traveled some thirty or forty miles in a carriage, over rough roads and across swollen streams to speak the truth in some small village in Virginia. After a wet and weary journey he found only four persons assembled to hear him.

"I sat down on one of the benches," said the Doctor, "and tried to make up my mind how to speak to them, for I was cold and wet, tired, and O, so discouraged! a kind of feeling 'What is the use,' came over me, and for awhile I felt utterly powerless. I could pray neither mind nor body. I felt sad at heart and stupefied. Suddenly these words came up to me, 'It is the Lord's work. He will show the way.' I got up cheered and comforted, opened my Bible, and after a few introductory remarks, I began my subject."

It seems so natural for any of us to feel at times like that—"What is the use"—when we are discouraged and disappointed, when we have tried so hard to do good for others and nothing came of it.

"What is the use," when we were trying so hard to overcome some fault, and a trifling error of judgment calls forth some cold, criticising rebuke, for the wrong, instead of some warm words of kindness for the right.

"What is the use," when the heart is full to overflowing, aching for some loving word, and nothing comes to us but coldness and indifference; driving back all the best part of our natures, and leaving all our brightest resolves broken up.

It is easy to say "I cannot help that." Yes brother or sister, you can help it, and some time or other it will all come back to you—what you have done or left undone.

To encourage one another is to do right; to discourage one another, no matter in how small a matter, is to do wrong. Better to say one loving word to help a brother or sister into the kingdom, than to give ten hours of exhortation and spoil it all by indifference afterwards; and there can be no higher happiness for any of us to look back upon when this life is drawing to its close, than some good purpose we have seen worked out through the power of love. Then indeed we shall feel that we have not lived in vain.

Boston, Mass.

[Practical—timely—welcome.—ED.]

THE THEATER.

A. J. E.

Theo. L. Culyer says, "We lay down, then, the proposition that no man has a moral right to do anything, the influence of which is certainly and inevitably hurtful to his neighbor.

I have a legal right to do many things which, as a Christian, I cannot do. I have a legal right to attend the theater. No policeman stands at the door to exclude me, or dares to eject me while my conduct is orderly and becoming. But I have no moral right to go there; not merely because I may see and hear much that may soil my memory for days and months, but because that whole garnished and glittering establishment, with its sensuous attractions, is to many a young person, the yawning maelstrom of perdition. The dollar which I gave at the door is my contribution toward sustaining an establishment whose dark foundations rest on the murdered souls of thousands of my fellow men. Their blood stains its walls, and from the pit they have gone down to another pit where no sounds of mirth ever come.

Now I ask, What right have I to enter a place where the tragedies that are played off before me by painted women and dissolute men are as nothing to the tragedies of lost souls that are enacted in some part of that house every night?

What right have I to give my money and my presence to sustain that moral slaughter-house, and by walking into the theater myself to aid in drawing others to follow me?"

THEN AND NOW.

"As it was in the days of Noah so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be, for as in the days before the flood they were eating and drinking, marrying and being given in marriage until the day that Noah entered into the ark, and knew not until the flood came and took them all away, so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be." Mat. xx. 37-39.

"There shall come in the last days scoffers, saying where is the promise of his coming," etc. 2 Peter iii. 3.

No journal in the United States and perhaps in the whole world has a better right to speak for the Nations of Christendom, than the New York Herald. Its circulation is ubiquitous. It has branch offices in London and Paris in Asia and Australia, and is perused daily by millions of readers.

It may be taken therefore, as the most reliable and authentic exponent of the public sentiment of the civilized world.

It is the mouth piece of the present generation, both Jew and Gentile. Its testimony therefore, as to the almost unanimous opinion of our race, as to the coming of our Lord—his return to the earth and of the future destiny of the world we live in, must be accepted as the truest exponent of our circumstances and condition, should he come now.

The subjoined extract from an editorial in the Weekly Herald of the 29 day of January, entitled "The Opening Year with its Hopes and Dangers," are striking and significant.

Two things are distinctly indicated in the extract. One, the identity of these Gentile times with those of the ante-diluvian world.

The other, the open and scoffing unbelief of this editorial scribe, in the coming and future reign of the world's destined ruler, at all.

No one who confides in the feast in the doctrine of our Lord's return to his inheritance, would presume thus to treat the great promise with scoffing-scorn, and as the Herald only leads or gives utterance to the received public opinion on the subject, we are by this testimony strengthened in the conclusion that our Lord foreshadowed truly the apathy and infidelity of this expiring Gentile age, in his solemn and momentous enquiry: "when the Son of Man comes shall he find faith on the earth?"

Thanks be to God, there is among us "a little flock" of the household of faith—albeit, strangers and pilgrims on earth and hardly known to this generation.

A. B. M.

"Some of our scientific friends and professors of emotional theology tell us that a comet is coming, or that the planets are going into business on a joint account, irrespective of the sun, and mean to make it lively for the earth, or that one of the seals of revelation is to be opened and we are to have a general overhauling for our sins. A prophecy has been discovered—Mother Shipton's, well known in English romance—to the effect that the world will come to an end in 1881. If it should prove to be true it will settle a good many problems now perplexing the newspapers. In the interest of human curiosity and independent journalism we hope it may be postponed until we know who will compose Garfield's Cabinet, and the name of the statesman who will govern Tammany Hall after the sachems have "fired out" John Kelley.

We are willing to take our chances with Mother Shipton and the planets, however, and look at the opening year as good for more than eleven calendar months."

ABRAHAM'S OBITUARY.

WILEY JONES.

Abraham gave up the ghost, and died in a good old age, an old man and full of years; and was gathered to his people.—Gen. xxv. 8.

The Hebrew word גָּוַע gwa, here rendered "gave up the ghost," means, according to Gesenius' Lexicon, "to breathe out one's life, to expire, to die."

The Comprehensive Commentary says it "means no more than expired or ceased to breathe."

That it does not mean the giving up of an immortal soul is evident from the fact that it is applied to the death of the lower orders of animals in Gen. vi. 17; Psa. civ. 29, where "die" is the word by which it is translated.

But the phrase "was gathered to his people" has been thought by some to be a very strong proof of a conscious existence of the soul between death and the resurrection. Thus we find a noted Hebraist, Conant, in his translation of Genesis for the American Bible Union, (1873), saying, "He was not buried among them, nor in their vicinity, but in a foreign land and far remote from where their cousins reposed. If he had been buried beside and among them, the phrase might be understood to mean merely, that his remains were deposited with theirs. But as the case stands, the phrase implies the belief, with which the Hebrew Scriptures are pervaded, of the existence after the death of the body in another state of being where all are "gathered" who have passed from this life."

But such an argument as this refutes itself, and leads directly to what is called "soul-sleeping;" for Moses too (though not buried in the ancestral vault,) was gathered to his people or fathers, and that he became utterly unconscious in that state is proved by the fact that he went "to sheol with them." Thus if whatever was gathered to the fathers went "to sleep" when it got there, Conant's argumentation was a signal failure.

It is a pity he did not study more closely both of these cases, (that of Moses as well as that of Abraham,) before constructing his somewhat ingenious but utterly untenable and unsound argument.

Linguistic attainments are not evidence of sound doctrinal views. Pilate could write Hebrew, Greek, and Latin, and yet he gave sentence against the Son of God. The "chief priests and elders" were profound in Hebrew, and yet they took sides with Barabbas instead of with Christ.

"Gathered to his fathers" is an euphemism for "saw corruption" or "was buried," as it was said to Abraham, "Thou shalt go to thy fathers in peace, thou shalt be buried in a good old age." Gen. xv. 15.

Chief Numaan is the census supervisor in Nevada to collect statistics of the aboriginal tribes, and he has adopted a curious method for getting the returns. His enumerators are all Indians, and their equipment is a single sheet of blank paper. Upon this paper the Indian makes a circle to represent a "wickiup," or camp, and with the circle he makes figures to represent the number of persons in the family. The squaws are distinguished by lines representing gowns, while the lower extremities of the bucks are left uncovered. Smaller figures denote the children of different sizes. Chief Numaan takes the sheet containing the hieroglyphics and with willow sticks from two to four inches in length he makes up his report. For every character representing an Indian he uses a willow stick, making a notch in those intended to enumerate the squaws. The shorter sticks are used to designate the number and size of the younger Indians. The sticks are then tied up and forwarded to the census office. The method, though rude has served to furnish an accurate census of the Pintes.

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CHAPLIS, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, February 18, 1881.

BRO. JOHN FOORE has arrived safely home in Kansas. An account of his missionary labors will be found in another part of the present number of our paper. So far as we have heard brethren express themselves, his effort, in presenting Bible themes were highly satisfactory.

WE could fill half our paper were we to give a detailed account of the damages done by the storms of this week. We clip a short summary from the Evening Journal which appears over the head of our news items. Most certainly the storm must be unprecedentedly severe, in the accounts of the destruction of the property it has left in its wake.

What mean the storms of the present winter? Are they the precursors of the coming of the Lord? Have they been permitted to take place in the astronomical Friday, to which we alluded? It is claimed that there are "Star Prophecies" of fearful calamities coming on the earth from 1881 to 1885. To keep our readers interested, we clip the following from the New York Sun, of Feb. 5. The condition of things in the sea and upon earth is certainly unusual.

WHAT IS GOING ON IN THE SUN.

The finest display of sun spots that has been visible in a long time can now be seen with moderate telescopic power. Several groups are strung along north of the sun's equator and reaching quite across the disk. The number of individual spots is large and they vary in size from the huge sun chasms capacious enough to swallow up the earth, down to mere specks that it requires steady gazing to detect. All about the spots, which seem to be moving like a procession across the disk, the surface is heaved up into the shining ridges called faculæ. Most of these have been formed within the last two days. On Saturday there was only one group, containing three or four principal spots, visible with the same telescope that on Sunday and yesterday showed four complex groups composed of many spots, and having other minute specks scattered between them. The westernmost of these groups will probably have passed out of sight around the edge of the sun by to-day.

This winter is one of exceptional severity in Europe as well as in all parts of the United States. People have been accustomed to congratulate themselves on the mildness of the winters in Europe, as compared with those of the United States and Territories of the Pacific coast, where the air is so tempered by a warm current from the shores of Japan that snow and ice are rarely seen there; but this year they are greater sufferers than we on the cold Atlantic. While the states east of the Rocky Mountains have experienced the discomforts of severe cold, on the other side of the range there has been great destruction of property by floods that have surpassed in extent anything ever recorded before. The Great Basin caused along the line of the Central Pacific and in the valley of the Sacramento has been accompanied by telegraphs let fall a report from Oregon showing that also in one of the choicest fruit districts of that productive country the destruction of property is very great in the storms.

As yet all this is witnessed with no visible expression in England and in France, but the movement in Germany may spread to other countries and show it does the Divine intention is to permit action is not carried. In the right of what has been already said, partly, at least, to prevent [illegible] destruction of human life, the city authorities have compelled, there has been a suppression of all [illegible] in the city of Berlin, and the [illegible] that in consequence of the [illegible] the Germans have [illegible] the [illegible] of the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Poetry.

The Advance.

TELL ME ABOUT THE MASTER.

Tell me about the Master!
I am weary and worn to-night;
The day lies behind me in shadow,
And only the evening is light—
Light with a radiant glory
That lingers about the West;
But my heart is an aching misery,
And longs like a child for rest.

Tell me about the Master!
Of the birds he fed on the mountain's sod,
When the foxes and the lizards of the wilderness
Dropped down at their Creator's feet;
For to me He's a weary wilderness
But a wonderful journey reach,
Though like the hazy mountains behind me,
The mountains before are dark.

Tell me about the Master!
Of the wayside he freely journeyed,
Of his mercy and tender compassion,
Of his hate that was mighty to save;
For my heart is aching, aweary,
Of the woes and temptations of life,
Of the error that stalks in the noonday,
Of fair-faced sin and malice and strife.

Tell me how He knew all whatever of sorrow,
Or pain, or temptation befell;
The infinite Master has suffered,
And knoweth and pitieth all!
So tell me the sweet old story,
That falls on each wounded like a balm;
And the heart that was troubled and broken
Shrinks patient and strong and calm.

Communications.

WILL GOD FULFIL HIS PROMISES?

THOS. CHURCHILL.

Editor Restitution: Some weeks ago I sent you an article, which has never made its appearance, and as it has not till now, I have come to the conclusion that it never will; however of this I do not complain, as you must, of course, have the same privilege as other editors, i. e., to insert or reject, as you please.

It may not have been such as you imagined would please all readers, but it is difficult to write a train of ideas, according to the scriptural standard, so as to meet the approbation of every one into whose hands the paper may come, even although they may be high professors; still I do not know any better method for the elucidation of truth than the comparison of ideas, and submitting them to the test of our acknowledged standard—the law and testimony—and if not according to this rule, it ought to be rejected, as possessing no light or information for us, who are now certainly close upon the fulfillment of a great portion of the sublime truths which we hold, and we know to be based upon the testimony of God.

There are numbers of intelligent professors, who are looking for the appearing and kingdom of Jesus Christ in the near future, and yet believe that no intelligent beings will be found in this kingdom, other than immortalized beings. They insist that all unbelieving mortals will be destroyed at Christ's coming.

I put the question to one of these men here in Toronto, "If you are right, who are Jesus and his bride to reign over?" His answer was, "Over beasts, and birds, and fishes," the same dominion as Adam had.

Now I can find no place in all my Bible, that teaches me that the lower classes of animals will be the only subjects over which Christ and his people are to reign; nor yet can I understand the object for which these lower animals merely, should be subjected to such government, unless upon the one principle of Evolution, or Darwinism.

I asked another of the same class, if the temple described to Ezekiel was ever built? He said, "No, and never would."

Of course I held my own opinion on that subject, knowing if such promises fail we could not be sure of the fulfillment of any promise contained in the pages of inspiration.

Of course the faith of these men must exclude the restoration of the seed of Abraham, through who "all families of the earth are to be blessed." Certainly the blessing has not been experienced to that extent yet, but it will be by all the families co-temporary with the reign of Jesus Christ and his bride.

As to the fulfillment of the restoration of the Israel seed to the land of their fathers, there can be no stronger security given under any circumstances, and if denied by such men as Bradlaugh, Underwood, or Ingersoll, we need not be very much surprised, but to be denied by Adventists, who profess to be looking for the immediate appearance of Jesus, and the establishment of his kingdom, is something that no believer in Bible truth can understand, receive, or believe! It is difficult to acknowledge any man who denies such restoration, as a Bible believer, nor yet understanding the character of Jehovah.

But let us look at the security given: "Thus saith the Lord, who giveth the sun for a light by day, and the ordinances of the moon for a light by night—if these ordinances depart from before me, saith the Lord, then the seed of Israel shall cease from being a nation before me forever. Thus saith the Lord, If heaven above can be measured, and the foundations of the earth searched out beneath, I will also cast off all the seed of Israel, for all that they have done, saith the Lord." Jer. xxxi. 35–37.

Again: "Thus saith the Lord, If ye can break my covenant of the day, and my covenant of the night, and that there should not be day and night in their season, then may also my covenant with David, my servant, be broken, that he should not have a man to reign upon his throne. Moreover, the word of the Lord came to Jeremiah, saying, Considerest thou not what this people have spoken, saying, The two families which the Lord hath chosen, he hath even cast off. Thus have they despised my people, that they should be no more a nation before them. Thus saith the Lord: If my covenant be not with day and night, and if I have not appointed the ordinances of heaven and earth, then will I cast away the seed of Jacob and David my servant, that I will not take any of his seed," etc. Jer. xxxiii. 19–26.

But those objectors tell us that all these promises were conditional. So they are, but unfortunately for these opposers, the fulfillment of the conditions are all thrown upon them! If they can prove to us that there is no day nor night, no sun or moon, and if they can measure the height of heaven and find out the foundations of the earth beneath, then their objections will be entitled to some attention and respect, but not before.

Any conditions to be fulfilled on the part of the people, are also to be provided for by the power of God himself, as found in Jer. xxxi. 33, 34. "But this shall be the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel, after those days, saith the Lord: I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts, and I will be their God, and they shall be my people. For they shall all know me, from the least unto the greatest of them, saith the Lord, for I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sins no more."

Again in Jer. xxxii. 37–50: "Behold I will gather them out of all countries whither I have driven them, and I will bring them again to this place, and I will cause them to dwell safely. And they shall be my people, and I will be their God, and I will give them one heart, and one way, that they may fear me forever. I will not turn away from them to do them good, but I will put my fear in their hearts, that they shall not depart from me."

These are only a few of the promises of Jehovah to Israel, and in addition to these Ezek. xxxvi. may be read, which portion of Scripture is filled with the wills and shalls of Jehovah, as a guarantee of bringing them into a right frame of mind, and keeping them so, and as a confirmation of these unspeakable promises, in verse 36 this positive language is spoken, "I the Lord hath spoken it, and I will do it."

After such language I do not envy any man the state of mind, that would allow him to doubt for a moment. Such language cannot apply to restoration from the Babylonish captivity, as Babylon was only one country, and mentioned definitely, and the promises are, to gather them from all countries whither they had driven them, as now situated.

But look at the very precise instructions given to the Prophet Ezekiel, in chapter xl. 4: "And the man said unto me, son of man, behold with thine eyes, and hear with thine ears, and set thine heart upon all that I shall shew thee; for to the intent that I might shew them unto thee art thou brought hither, declare all thou seest to the house of Israel."

Here Ezekiel was carried in spirit from Babylon to the mountains of Israel, in the twenty-fifth year of Israel's captivity; and being thus transferred, he witnessed the measurement of a building which, when finished, is to be superior to any building on earth at the present time.

A brother from Rochester, once told me that he saw a plan drawn by an architect, who told him, if completed according to his plan, would eclipse any building on the earth. This was less than twelve years ago, and it may be observed, that the instructions given to the prophet, upon the different subjects which he witnessed, occupies fully nine chapters of his interesting prophecy.

Furthermore, it can be seen that the most minute instructions are given as to the different articles, or commodities to be used in the rites and ceremonies of this temple service, which are in excess of those used by others in his day. Of course these services will be attended to as memorials of things past, rather than foreshadowing anything in the future.

I am aware that there are objections to the introduction of Jewish ordinances, as it were to mar the greater light of the gospel, but as, memorials there should be no such objections to them, and it may be distinctly understood the present dispensation is only a branch, or branch in the Jewish commonwealth, for the particular purpose of taking out of the Gentiles a people for his name.

"I will return, and build again the tabernacle of David which is fallen down, and will raise up his ruins, and build it as in the days of old." Amos ix. 11.

So there will be a restored Jewish Kingdom for Jesus and his bride to rule over, a subject instead of the subjects being beasts, and birds, and fishes.

It may be seen also that the location of the tribes will be quite different to the arrangement under Joshua. The tribe of Judah was the south tribe and the house of Joseph was the north tribe. According to Ezekiel the tribe of Dan will be north, and God the south tribe. Others will differ in positions, also the measurement of the city will be about two times as great as that of the former Jerusalem in circumference, and the presence of the Lord is guaranteed there forever. See chapter xlviii. 35 "The Lord is there."

Now the question arises, Did Jehovah take all this trouble, and all the instruction in these minute parts, and all his other promises, the whole to be a failure? Will he not carry out his intentions?

Any man who chooses to unbelieve Jehovah by such a faith, of course can do so, but my humble opinion is, that it would not be impossible to carry him over to the Old Imperial platform.

Toronto, Ont.

THE CREED THAT IS WANTED.

E. HOYT.

The Christian Union of Dec. 1 has an article under the title of "The creed that is wanted." Reference is had to the fact that the Congregational Association met at St. Louis recently, resolved to make a new creed for the denomination.

The editor of the Union says, "We want to go back for no creeds, but we want to go back to the first century, not the sixteenth. The New Testament has its creeds, but they are expressions of experience, not definitions of philosophy." He says here is Paul's article of faith respecting God: "Why is the blessed and only Potentate, the King of Kings, and Lord of lords, who only hath immortality, dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto; whom no man hath seen or can see; to whom be honor and power everlasting."

This is not a definition, it is an ascription. Allow us to say that the latter part of this verse is an ascription, and the other part is Paul's article of faith respecting God.

The editor might have said, respecting man's present mortality also.

The editor continues, "Or read his (Paul's) article on immortality." "Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day, and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing."

This, he says, is not philosophy but experience.

We say this is not all experience, nor is it heathen philosophy of the immortality of the soul; but rather Divine philosophy, or wisdom, as the word means. The love for the Savior's second appearing, to judge the quick and the dead, and set up his kingdom—the day when Paul expected his crown—this love was then and is now a happy experience to all who have it.

Now I am ready to adopt the two articles of faith mentioned by the Christian Union, respecting God and immortality, and all other divinely inspired articles on these and all other subjects of Divine revelation.

But what benefit to us to formally assent to these and other inspired Scriptures unless we understand them? If God only hath immortality man has it not, but should seek for glory, honor and immortality, by patient continuance in well doing.

When will the seeker of immortality find this great gift? Answer, At the resurrection of the just. For Paul declares that the dead saints shall hear the last trump and be raised incorruptible, and the living saints be changed in a moment, and then this mortal shall put on immortality.

Here then are two more articles to put into the Creed that is Wanted. Do not the inspired writings "thoroughly furnish the man of God for every good work? Are not the words of Divine wisdom, taught by the Holy Spirit, a superior creed to the words of man's wisdom?

There is no experience of any value unless the word of the Lord is first understood and believed without a doubt, and obeyed cheerfully, when the desired experience will surely follow. The creeds of this age need to understand the Divine creed instead of getting up new human creeds. The essential truths of gospel promise are spiritualized to a great extent, and thus perverted.

For example, a crown of glory is promised to the faithful when the chief shepherd shall appear, as Paul expected to see in the day of judgment, and declares it shall be given to all who love his appearing.

But the personal coming is spiritualized to mean death, etc. But God says that all who love him love his coming.

Take another essential article of Christianity—The First Resurrection. As Hymeneus and Philetus in Paul's day said the resurrection is past already, so now very many say that the resurrection takes place at death, and thus a shipwreck of the Christian faith is effected.

The great harvest or the resurrection must be like the first gathered sheaf. The resurrection of Christ the first fruits, was a bodily one.

The inheritance of the new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness, is to be entered in the same way. The doctrine of eternal torment is being spewed out by some ministers and church members, but to a great extent they are rushing to the opposite extreme of Universalism.

The second death in the fiery lake of all liars and abominable men is exchanged from the Bible by the same wresting of the Scriptures. When Paul says that no drunkard, or swearer or extortioner, etc., shall inherit the kingdom of God, it means something else.

We say let God be true, though it makes every man a liar.

Of course the gospel of the Kingdom must be allegorized to correspond with the figurative coming, a bogus resurrection, eternal life perverted to mean everlasting happiness, and death, the wages of sin to mean eternal misery. The Bible represents the kingdom only as a matter of promise of hope, and of heirship for the Christian in this life. That if we suffer with him now we shall also reign with him, and that through much tribulation we enter the kingdom of God.

It declares that those rich in faith are heirs of the kingdom which he has promised to those who love him.

When the Son of Man shall come in his glory, he shall set his throne inherit the kingdom, and Paul shows that flesh and blood shall not inherit the kingdom of God, but that through the resurrection and change from mortal to immortality, the saints will become spiritual bodies, preparatory to their crowns and reign with him a thousand years, when all enemies, even death, the last enemy shall be destroyed.

Grand Rapids, Mich.

THE COMMON SALVATION.

C. BOARDMAN.

What is the common salvation the Apostle Jude speaks of?

It is not final and complete salvation, but a temporal national, family or individual salvation, that takes or delivers from peril or bondage, or both, but still leaves them in a state of probation under a new order of things from which they were before deliverance.

Noah and his family were saved from drowning, but there was no moral, spiritual or physical change in him or his family after the flood. When they went out on the dry land, they were the same as when they went into the ark. Their probation continued, but under a new covenant—the rainbow covenant.

It was the common salvation. One of their number had a curse put on him after his salvation from drowning.

Lot and his family were saved from being burnt up, that was all. Probationers after that salvation as before: no change except in their circumstances.

The apostle says after God had saved the tribes of Israel out of Egypt, he destroyed them that believed not. It was a national salvation. Their being Abraham's descendants entitled them to this salvation without respect to their character, but probation under a new order of things decided their final destiny. It was the common salvation.

The same is true of Rahab the harlot and her family. The same will be true of Abraham's descendants according to the flesh. They will be saved on that account, but will enter upon another and peculiar probation under King Messiah, which will be final. They will have a national salvation first.

This gives us a solution of Peter's question:—If the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear?

But the apostle says of others: But so (in this way) an open and abundant entrance shall be given to you into the everlasting kingdom. Not scarcely saved, but was scarcely saved, the angels had to take hold of them, and "Remember Lot's wife."

I suppose those scarcely saved, or saved with difficulty, were those saved with the common salvation.

May the Lord in his great mercy enable us to add to our faith, virtue, brotherly kindness, etc., etc., that an open and abundant entrance may be ours.

Youths' Column.

Growing Up.

RUTH BEVERLY.

The children are growing up—
Their feet are on the threshold now;
Their hands are on the door-latch cold,
And they are ready to go.
Their eyes are full of hope and joy,
Their cheeks are full of bloom,
And they are standing with the world
Just on the edge of home.

The children are growing up—
Their feet are on the threshold now;
Their hands are on the door-latch cold,
And they are ready to go.
Their eyes are full of hope and joy,
Their cheeks are full of bloom,
And they are standing with the world
Just on the edge of home.

The children are growing up—
You may think me with them a dreamer, I know,
But I can see and feel the change that is coming
Even this day and hour, when the years have flown,
You'll look for the little ones, every room,
To guess in vain from every lowest,
The child we are growing up!

The children are growing up—
Their feet are on the threshold now;
Their hands are on the door-latch cold,
And they are ready to go.
Their eyes are full of hope and joy,
Their cheeks are full of bloom,
And they are standing with the world
Just on the edge of home.

The Mother's Power.

There we stood at the bedside of an old man, eighty-six years of age. His mother had been dead forty years. His wife died twenty years before, and during this latter period he had lived with his son, who was thoroughly devoted to his father's comfort. There the old man lay, his mind almost a wreck, catching gleams now and then, of present scenes and future prospects, as consciousness came and went, but all the while living over again the scenes of childhood, and pleading for his mother. When the aged patriarch was near the other shore and his lips were seen to move, the son, putting his ear down closely, distinctly heard him still calling for his mother. And so he left this world, with the memory of that dear one, who dandled him on her knee, and taught his infant lips to say "Our Father," fresh and green. It was the only link of consciousness that held him to that mortal state.

The mother is her child's keeper, she holds the key of the world and she it is that stamps the coin of character, and makes the being who would be a savage
But for her care a Christian man!
Then crowns her Queen of all the world.

N. Y. Observer.

Doing God's Errands.

Hester was a little girl who was trying to love and serve Jesus. And she showed her love for Jesus by seeking to please him in all she did. She loved to do errands for her mother, and to have her mother say she was a faithful servant when she did them well.

One day she had been talking with her mother about God. As they got through, she looked up with a bright thought beaming in her eyes, and said: "Why, mother, then God is sending us on errands all the time! Oh! it is so nice to think that I am God's little errand-girl."

"Yes, dear," said her mother; God has given us all errands to do for him, and plenty of time to do them in, and a book full of directions to show us how to do them. Every day we can tell him what we are trying to do, and ask him to help us. And when he calls us home to himself, we shall have great joy in telling him what we have been trying to do for him."

"I like that," said Hester. "It is very pleasant to be allowed to do errands for God."

"One of my errands," said her mother, "is to take care of you."

"And one of mine, dear mother, is to honor and obey you. I think God gives us very pleasant errands to do."

You know that nothing makes us more happy than to do anything for a person that we really love. This is what Jesus meant when he said, "My yoke is easy, and my burden is light." This is what the Apostle John meant when he said that "His commandments are not grievous." His people serve him from love, and that makes everything they do for him light and pleasant to them.

Sermons for the Little Ones.

No. 3.

Because Abraham was willing to mind God in everything—willing to give him all the child he had, his heavenly Father again promised him the land of Canaan for an everlasting possession—and that he would be his God.

When Isaac had grown to be a man, the Lord appeared to him, through his angel, and told him he must not go down to Egypt to live, but must sojourn—stay as a stranger—in the land that had been promised by oath to his father—that God would be with, and bless him, and give unto him and unto his seed, all these countries—that his seed should become as numerous as the stars of heaven, and that in his seed, or son, all nations should be blessed, because Abraham had obeyed God's voice.

When Isaac's son Jacob was going to his uncle Laban's, at Padan-Aram as he went toward Haran, the sun went down and he stopped to rest and sleep until morning.

It was a lonely place. He had only stones for a pillow, but while he slept, he dreamed that a wonderful ladder was set up on the earth, the top of which reached unto heaven.

The angels of God were going up and coming down upon the ladder, the Lord stood above it and said "I am the Lord God of Abraham, thy father, and the God of Isaac. I am going to give to you and your children, the very land on which you are sleeping. Your children shall be as the dust of the earth, and in your seed, or son, all nations of the earth shall be blessed.

Now, can you remember all that has been promised to these good men, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob? Was it heaven, that God decided to Abraham, or did he say anything about giving heaven to Isaac and to Jacob? No, you will say; "It was the land of Canaan, that was promised to Abraham, for he walked through it and looked at it, northward and southward and eastward and westward, and had a will, or deed of it, given to him, mapping it out from the river of Egypt, to the great river, the river Euphrates."

"Nor was it heaven," you will say, that was promised to Isaac, because he told him he would give him all the countries, that had been promised by oath, to his father, and Jacob was to have the very land on which he was lying, for his everlasting inheritance.

1. Then you have learned that it was not heaven, but the land of Canaan, that was promised to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. That is one thing.

2. That they were to have the land forever. That is two things.

3. That God was going to bless them. That is three things.

4. That He was going to make their seed or children as numerous as the stars of heaven and as the dust of the earth. That is four things.

5. That some son of Abraham is going to have the power and dominion of the whole earth, or possess the gates of his enemies. That is five things.

6. That their children should have the same countries for an everlasting inheritance. That is six things.

7. That in that one wonderful son and in their other children, all the people of the earth would be made happy. That is seven things.

8. And that God was going to be their God. That is eight things.

But you don't know what God meant when he said he would be their God, do you?

Abraham, Isaac and Jacob had to die, like everybody else, because Adam did not mind God, so they could not have the land of Canaan forever in this present life.

A good man in the Acts of the Apostles says Abraham never had enough of the land of Canaan for his own, to set his foot on, yet God had promised that he would give it to him; and Paul, of whom you have so often heard, says Abraham lived in the land of promise, just like a stranger—that he, with Isaac and Jacob, dwelt in tents, in the land which they was after to receive as an inheritance—in the very land, that by and by they were to have forever.

God had willed that land to them: It was his land, but they had made themselves his children, by minding, him, so that he could be their father and they could get the land.

It is only children you know, who get what belongs to their fathers.

So people who do what God says, become his children and get his land.

But Abraham, Isaac and Jacob are dead. They have long ago turned to dust. They have never received the promise. We will tell you the next time how they are to get it.

THE FRIEND OF THE CHILDREN.

MARRIED.

HARR—CUPPEL.—On Saturday, Feb. 12, 1881, by Elder S. A. Chaplin, Mr. Nathan E. Harr to Miss Mary A. Cuppel, both of Argos, Marshall county, Ind.

NOTICE.

Bro. I. D. Stephenson will be at the Gospel House chapel, Rosedale co. county, Indiana, on the fourth Sunday in February, 1881. Meeting to commence on Thursday evening before. Brethren and others cordially invited to attend.

Exegetical.

With his hands he covereth the lightning,
And commandeth it where to strike.
He pointeth out to his friends—
The collecting of his wrath is upon the wicked.
Barnes' Translation Job xxxvi. 32, 33.

The Septuagint reads—"En tais cheiri tas sas—he covereth the light in his hands; and the Latin Vulgate reads; In manibus abscondit lucem—he hideth the light in his hands.

The allusion is to the lightnings which the speaker represents God as holding in his hands and directing according to his own pleasure. The object of Elihu is to show that even the rapid lightnings, that seem so uncontrollable, are under the direction of the Almighty One, and that he employs them as instruments for the execution of his own purposes. To us the fiery bolts may seem to be hurled from an aimless hand, but God directs the resistless shafts.

Nothing could more forcibly illustrate the divine omnipotence than the wonderful exhibition of his power in controlling the resistless lightnings themselves. And nothing could better illustrate his omniscience and providential care of his people than the assurance that he directs them where and when to strike.

It is therefore truly said: "While, on the one hand God, who holds the lightning in his hands, points out to it his friends, so that they are spared; on the other hand, the gathering together, or the condensation of his wrath is upon the evil. That is, the lightnings—so mighty, and apparently so wholly beyond law or control, are under his direction, and he makes them the means of executing his pleasure. His friends are spared; and the condemnation of his wrath is on his foes.

This exposition of the passage accords with the general scope of the remarks of Elihu, and the view of the manner in which God controls even the lightning, was one that was adopted to fill the mind with exalted conceptions of the majesty and power of the Most High."

The Psalmist illustrates this same idea, in a more general way, when he says, speaking of those whom God knows as his own,—"Thou shalt not be afraid for the terror by night; nor for the arrow that flieth by day; nor for the pestilence that walketh in darkness; nor for the destruction that wasteth at noon-day. A thousand shall fall at thy side, and ten thousand at thy right hand; but it shall not come nigh thee."

When the time of earth's agony comes, and the "right aiming thunderbolts go abroad," may we be pavilioned above the storm.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The third Sunday in Feb., at the Centerschool-house in Clinton co., northwest of Kings Corner. Meeting to commence on Thursday night before. Also the fourth Sunday in Bellefontaine. Meeting to commence on Thursday night before.

J. S. HAYES.

A Letter to a Friend!

—By Mrs. C. C. Woodruff.—

This little work is so well known that it needs no comment. 32 pages, price 10c.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

Pictorial Description

—OF THE—

Tabernacle in the Wilderness.

ITS RITES AND CEREMONIES.

—By John Dilworth.—

Thirty-two pages. Price 10c. Send to this office for them.

CHRIST'S KINGDOM!

WHERE IS IT? WHAT IS IT?

—By Jos. Lacher.—

A discourse delivered at Berwick, Pa. This is a 32 page tract, neatly printed, and should have a wide circulation. Price 10c.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

MISTAKES of INGERSOLL

A review of Col. R. G. Ingersoll's lecture entitled "Mistakes of Moses."

—By J. M. Stephenson.—

This is a large size eight page tract, printed on tinted paper. 10c. each, or 1$ for $1.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

SECOND EDITION.

The GOSPEL of the KINGDOM

Advocated in a series of Ten Discourses

—By Wiley Jones.—

This edition is elegantly printed and bound by Lippincott & Co., clear type, good paper, 216 pages. Plain cloth binding $1; cloth gilt edge $1.25; leather muslined price $1.50, post paid. To obtain this valuable work, send the price by post office money order or registered letter, to

WILEY JONES,
Norfolk, Va.

Poetry.

"VOICES."

ISAIAH LXV. 6.

A voice of noise from the city,
From its scum, of sin and pain:
The protest of a mighty multitude,
Oh! hear they plead in vain!
A voice of the little children,
Beginning their life-long woe;
A voice of the lonely dying,
Not Knowing where they go;
Confidently appealing
To the cry of that mighty throng,
That voice of voices from the city,
"How long, O Lord, how long?"

A voice from the midst of the temple,
A voice of doubt and fear,—
"How long shall evil triumph?
O God the Father, hear."
A voice of wide-spread error,
A voice of those that say,
"There should be wider entrance
To this too narrow way."
A voice of the plenteous harvest
That few men go to reap,
Though the enemy's softly sowing,
Whilst the weary watch or sleep
So through the lonely waiting
Of these years of care and wrong,
That crazed the voice from the temple,
"How long, O Lord, how long?"

A voice of the Lord Himself speaketh
To those who watch and wait:
Tell on a little longer,
His step is at the gate.
See how the shadows lengthen
Athwart the evening sky!
Lift up your heads, ye children!
Your redemption draweth nigh:
And through the unknown distance,
In an echo deep but clear,
In the voice of the Lord proclaiming,
"I will not tarry long."

Selections.

Meredith's Herald.

FATHER CHINIQUY ON PURGATORY.

About two years ago when Mr. Chiniquy visited Australia, he delivered a series of lectures in the city of Adelaide. These were reported at length in the Christian Colonist, from which an exchange extracts the following from his closing address, as affording an inside view of some of the Catholic ceremonies:—

"The subject of the lecture was Purgatory, and in dealing with it the Rev. Mr. Chiniquy stated that the doctrine of purgatorial punishment taught by the church of Rome is one of the most tremendous impostures that the world has ever known.

Purgatory is believed to be a place where the soul suffers the same torment and indescribable anguish as is endured in hell, the only difference between the two places being that in hell the sufferings are eternal, while in purgatory they are to last for thousands of millions of years, but not forever. To the common people under the dominion of Rome, purgatory is a sea of fire, desolation, and misery; but to the priests, the bishops and pope it was a sea of gold and silver; for when the church invented purgatory she shrewdly made up her mind to give priests the power to take souls out of it if the friends of the deceased paid them sufficient money.

One beauty about the doctrine is that the priests and bishops cannot tell when souls are released from purgatory, so that the people are kept continually paying.

He did not hesitate to say that to release souls from purgatory, more money is paid every day to the priests of Rome than is paid into all the banks of England and France.

He stated that every year on the 2d of November a service was held called the 'Festivities of the Dead.' Its purpose was to pray for the souls in purgatory and extract money from the people.

On these occasions the churches were always filled, and some one with a good voice was brought by the priest to sing a plaintive song, representing the wailings of the souls in purgatory. (Here he sang a verse of the song in French.) He said if it were well sung in English, there would not be a dry eye in the audience.

After this song was sung, the priests appealed to the people. They made a mother appeal to her child, a father to his sons, a brother to his brothers and a sister to her sisters. They said: 'don't you hear the souls saying, come to our help! We burn in these flames. Make haste, make haste! make haste!' Which meant make haste and give your money to the priests.

By this time the people would all be crying and wailing, and then the priests would go through the church to collect the money, and if there was a dollar there they got it.

The doctrine of purgatory made the priests as cruel as tigers. He had a dreadful experience in connection with this matter which had done him good. His father died when he was very young, and left his property heavily mortgaged; so that everything had to be sold to pay the creditors, and his young mother was reduced to the necessity of working with her needle. They were very poor, and often a few potatoes and a little milk was all the food they had.

One day the priest came to see them. He was glad to see the priest, for he thought he would help them. But he said, 'Madame Chiniquy, you owe me ten pounds for the masses which I have said for the soul of your husband.' It was in vain that his mother protested that she had nothing. The priest said she could not love her husband if she were not willing to pay for the repose of his soul.

At this his mother wept. His first thought was to take a sword that hung on the wall, and kill the priest who made his mother weep, but seeing this to be beyond his strength, he mingled his tears with those of his mother, while the priest stood looking on with dry eyes.

In a little paddock before the house there fed a cow, which had been given to him when it was a calf, and which he had reared, and whose milk was now almost their only means of subsistance.

At length his mother said, pointing to the cow, 'Mr. Cure, take that cow and let me in that way discharge the debt I owe.' The priest was satisfied, and immediately went and drove the cow to his own house. He—pastor Chiniquy—said to his mother, 'Why have you done this? You have given the priest the cow and now we must starve.' Forgive me this wrong, my child,' said his mother; 'I did not believe the priest would be so cruel as to take the cow. But some day, my son, you may be a priest. Promise me that you will never take the money of the poor.' He promised, and when afterward he became a priest, he never took money from the people for the prayers which he offered for the souls of their dead.

For this reason he was much idolized by his people. The other priests, however, were jealous and did not like his practice, and complained to the bishop who threatened to excommunicate him if he did not promise to take the money from the people for the souls in purgatory. He at length made the promise, and after that he took the money, but would often contrive to give it back again.

He himself was honest and believed in purgatory, but he had discovered that not one in twenty of the priests believed either in that doctrine or in any other; they were infidels. It was in this way that his eyes were opened. On one occasion when engaged in revival services, he was returning to the parsonage with the priest of the parish, who was an old man, when they were accosted by a poor man, so emaciated that he was nothing but skin and bones; he was also clothed in rags.

He asked the priest to say a high mass for the soul of his wife, recently dead. The priest replied that he would do so, but must have five dollars. The man said he had not a cent in the world, and asked if the priest could not say the mass on credit. But the priest replied—'no money, no prayers.'

Pastor Chiniquy had the impulse to give the man the five dollars or offer to say the prayers for nothing, but he was a coward and had not the courage; he never thought of that hour without regret and shame. He would gladly, if he could, wash out that hour with his blood.

The man then asked that five low masses be said for the soul of his wife. For this the priest said he must have five shillings, but the man pleaded that it was as difficult for him to pay five shillings as five dollars. The priest said—'when I last passed your house I saw there a little pig. Give me that and I will say the masses.' 'Mr. Cure,' said the man, 'I am fatting that pig. It is all I and my children have to look forward to for bread in the winter.'

That night Pastor Chiniquay could not sleep with the vexation he felt at having failed to play the man. He saw, too, with pain that there was an abomination in his beloved church. The next morning he preached and spent several hours hearing the confessions of the people, and when the dinner hour came, he was hungry. The old priest was rich and kept a good table, and there were eight or nine other priests present.

When the covers were removed, a pig was revealed, done to a beautiful golden brown, and so fragrant that the thought of it still made his mouth water.

The old priest was a skillful carver, and cutting off a choice piece he placed it upon Pastor Chiniquy's plate. As he was lifting the first piece to his lips the scene of the previous day recurred to his memory.

He said to the priest, 'Is this the pig of the poor man we saw yesterday?' The priest replied with a jolly laugh, that it was, and added, 'If we cannot take the poor souls out of purgatory, at least we will have eaten a good pig.' The laugh that went around the table at this remark opened Pastor Chiniquy's eyes—he saw that the priests did not believe in purgatory.

His manhood and courage returned, and flinging his plate to the other side of the table, he cried, 'I will never eat the bread of the poor.' The priests felt the rebuke, and the rest of the meal was passed in silence.

It was not, however, till he studied the holy fathers that his eyes were fully opened to the terrible imposture of purgatory.

THE CRISIS.

THE DARK OUTLOOK.

There are many signs of the times which seem to indicate that immense political events and tidal waves of social importance are impending over the nations of Europe. While our own country is enjoying a period not only of remarkable business prosperity, but of political quietude, there is scarcely a country in Europe that is not in more or less tribulation and distress.

The symptoms that betoken serious disturbances of civil institutions and social fabrics are attracting the attention of statesmen; and the feeling seems to prevail that social and political troubles are not far off which will test the utmost strength of existing governments.

Baron Hübner, in a speech in the Austrian delegation, proposes a renewal of the Holy Alliance, or three-Emperor League, to stem the flood of revolutionary ideas. But the time has gone by for that sort of thing to succeed.

The "Eastern Question" remains most dangerously open. Russia has a slumbering volcano of nihilism under her feet, while her armies are pounding at the northern gates of India.

France is nursing a hope of revenge and a purpose of recovering her lost provinces, while vice and corruption prevail in her cities as never before in this age.

Germany is arousing the wrath of her numerous Jewish population, while a powerful socialism exists throughout her empire.

England is afflicted with grievous revolts in her extreme colonies that will require immense outlays of men and money to suppress, while the state of things in Ireland is in the highest degree critical and dangerous.

In all these countries there are multitudes of men, with secret organization and leadership, who stand eagerly watching their opportunity to take advantage of any civil outbreak, for purposes of pillage and plunder.

It seems that the social questions which underlie the politics of Germany and England are almost insoluble by the common methods of legislation.

The social discontent is too deep-reaching. It springs out of the very depths of society, and makes its protest against many of those political arrangements which are commonly regarded as the great safeguards of property, order and freedom.

It is remarkable that the doctrines which not long since were regarded with utter abhorence by all but a few outlawed doctrinaires are now openly advocated in widely circulated newspapers, and by great numbers of people who are still regarded as respectable. It is certain that the principles thus promulgated and more and more avowed, can never become dominant without a prolonged, fearful and bloody struggle between their adherents and the powers that are now in authority. It does not seem likely, judging from the past, that this advancing wave of socialism will content and spend itself in mere words of protest and menace. Hence the dreariness of the outlook. It should be borne in mind that this movement of socialism is not confined to any one country or race or class, and that is is not an unorganized drift of men who have no bonds of union, no definite aims or methods.

The nihilist flourishes in the court of Russia, and occupies positions of trust in the army and government. Men of rank and brains lead the socialists of Germany, the communists of France, the yearning freemen of Italy, and the land leagues in Ireland.

Reorganized leaders flit to and fro from Geneva to London—the two great centers of conspiracy.

The church seems to have lost all power for controling such movements, as one may see by noticing the impotence of the pope's interference with the land leagues of Ireland.

It is no secret that the socialists in Germany are not only numerous enough to excite alarm, but are fairly in possession of a military discipline that makes them extremely formidable.

The repressive measures by which the government had endeavored to repress and suppress them, have served only to compact and concentrate their force, and to intensify their zeal and hate.

A violent and tremendous explosion of this inflammable mass of discontent and ambition would not be a surprise, should it any day occur.

A party that can cast 600,000 votes at an election, and whose leaders openly declare in the German reichstag that 'failing to modify the laws which have been enacted to crush them, they must be driven to try force,' must be acknowledged as a most dangerous element in the country.

Great as was the work achieved by Bismarck in consolidating Germany, it may be questioned whether his policy of government has not been highly provocative of the evils which now menace the existence of the government.

Perhaps the most serious symptom of dissolving and convulsion in France is the decay of all religious reverence and influence. Such open immorality, such daring and offensive and aggressive infidelity—such disregard for the capital and chief vice of France, shows plainly enough what the character of the republic is.

Its persecution of the religious orders was not unjustly construed as an indication of a deep-seated contempt for religion. The most hopeful feature in France today is a steadily growing interest in the revival of Protestantism among the common people. The old Huguenot fires are being here and there rekindled—which means, so far, good and only good.

We need only allude to the agrarian revolt in Ireland. Men of education, ability, culture and character are identified with it. A social revolution is on hand, and already its cry for political independence is heard. Ireland will not be pacified except by the concession of her utmost demands. The dangerous Fenian organization—the communist element in the Irish turmoil—begins to put in an ominous appearance, and one hardly sees how collisions can be avoided that will precipitate open war.

He would be a bold prophet who should presume to predict what the end of these things shall be. We have evidently not arrived to the golden age, nor has the Kingdom of God come. But if it is a part of Divine Providence to introduce the eternal and unshakable things, by these upheavals and changes of the works and institutions of human hands, then we may still take courage and look for a better and quieter era in which men shall dwell together in juster relations and in a stabler peace.

Philadelphia Times.

THE ROTHSCHILD WEDDING.

If any voice could provoke the silent dust what a commotion there must have been in the mouldy grandeur of the ancestral graves of Albert Edward, Prince of Wales, at high noon yesterday! He, the heir of the Black Prince of Jew-burning ancestors, without number and without shame; of the Plantagenets and Tudors and Stuarts to whom the Jews were Goliendas of pillage, this heir of all the rags of caste and feudalism sat at the right hand of the dark-eyed rabbi as he joined a Rothschild to a Jewess.

There is a living Rothschild who was twice elected from a London constituency, and could penetrate no farther into the house of commons than the dark lobby in the rear of the members, subject at any moment to expulsion even from this obscure limit, at the call of any surly member. He was held on the verge of parliament fifteen years by the laws of the land, unable to take his place because the oath of the house held the clause—"on my faith as a Christian." It was not until a less diffident member, Solomons, stood for Greenwich, Mr. Gladstone's recent district, that the battle was brought upon the very floor of the house.

He was a stalwart. He took his seat. He was called upon to take the oath and got as far as the Christian clause. Here he stopped. The speaker rose in agitation. The members fell into a fury of rage. "Put him out!" "Withdraw!" "Withdraw!" was shouted on every hand. The Jew returned to his seat and waited doggedly till the uproar was hushed. Then he said, in effect, "I have been elected by one of the districts of London to represent them in parliament. They did not ask me if I was or was not a Jew. That has nothing to do with my mandate. I am here to represent my district, and represent it I will. It is for you to see to it that I am enabled to do it. I will leave the house, but it must be by force."

The sergeant-at-arms touched him on the shoulder and he slipped back in the dim lobby under the gallery with his fellow Jew Rothschild, who had waited two terms for something like this.

Gladstone was then the leader of the house under Palmerston and a bill was framed and sent to the lords, but was thrown out and the honor due the liberal fell to Disraeli a year later, when the form of oath was altered. The London of Queen Bess, of merry Charles and the sulky James would have stared to see a prince of the royal house bowing and smiling up the isle of the young gaze- the betted man on one hand and the veiled women on the other.

Charles was never in so merry a mood as when leaning or dandling and brandling in the midst of the gaiety round, with the lascivious mockery of the dentistry of those days for the dragging out of a tooth for every failure to comply with the king's exactions.

But notwithstanding a vast deal was taken to make the scene of Victorian elegance. From rumor and hearsay the Jew made a guess at some of his pleasurable visions. It is that he was not furthering some wild and rare wine thought new to the world in the last batch of despoiling the Hindoo race.

In whatever else the early Briton was inconsistent or unnatural or forbidding, the Jew was always an object of hatred and persecution. Even under the commonwealth, the badly intolerant of Oliver was not above this vulgar prejudice, nor his heavy hand guiltless of the innocent blood.

Even though a Jew has come to rule England, it is more the less a significant spectacle to see the prince of the reigning house so far disclaiming the practices of his ancestors and the history of his people as to take a chief place in the synagogue. Time, the tamer, could not have set time's whirligig has turned old customs into no more piquant jumble than this. It cannot be charged to this prince that he learns nothing and forgets nothing, and it is not wonderful that in a country that wants a king he is adored.

Brevities.

Ten thousand Nestorian Christians residing in the Persian provinces devastated by the Kurds have sent a petition to the Grand Duke Michael, asking permission to emigrate to the Caucasus.

About 2,000 students of the University of Berlin held a meeting the other night in honor of the tenth anniversary of the German unity. The rector made a long speech in favor of brotherly and friendly feeling among the members, dwelling particularly on the anti-Jewish movement, and expressing the hope that petty differences would soon be settled. This speech was received with very bad grace, many students leaving the hall. Prof. Mommsen then rose, but the noise was so great that he could not be heard. The meeting broke up in a very stormy manner, and ended with many challenges to fight between students of the opposing races. One Jew, a member of the University, actually received twenty challenges from his Christian colleagues, and will have to fight the lists in succession. Thus ended the students' celebration of German unity.

According to the reports of the Greek military attache at Constantinople, the force which the Porte would, in the event of a war with Greece, assemble on the frontier would be about 70,000 men. The Greek army, on the other hand, would consist of 80,000 men at the most, so that in point of numbers the two armies would be about equal. It is admitted by the most eminent Greek officers that the Greek troops are equivalent to a good militia, perhaps better than that brought by Servia into the field in its last war with Turkey. At the same time they hope that in three months the troops will have so improved by their drill that, though they will not be able to bear comparison with well-organized European armies, they will be a match for the troops of the Sultan. Much stress is laid upon the superior education of the Greek soldiers, among whom there are many professors, physicians, barristers and university students. Even among the artisans and agricultural laborers there are few who cannot read and write; and most of the soldiers are good shots.

A correspondent writing from Greece, recently, gives an account of a band of brigands who entered the village of Zagora, five miles from Volo, in Thessaly, and took up into the mountains 300 children from a school, with four teachers. They flogged the teachers to compel them to point out the children of the richest parents, and selecting eight from that classed allowed the others to return home. They now demand $10,000 each as the ransom of the youthful prisoners. This took place in sight of a fortress, and the Turkish authorities were unable to prevent the outrage, and are now powerless to avenge it.

PARIS, France, Jan. 25.—Malmaison, despite its interesting historical associations, is doomed to destruction. Already the park surrounding it is converted into building lots, upon which villas, such as the Parisian bourgeois delights in, are rapidly springing up, and the chateau itself, which has passed into private hands, is said to be on the eve of demolition. It only occupants at present is a solitary female caretaker, who has been employed in the chateau for nearly half a century. She has a curious story to tell of a strange and romantic incident connected with the melancholy late of the late Prince Imperial. It would appear that a few days before the outbreak of hostilities between France and Germany, the unfortunate Prince visited Malmaison, and spent several hours in the park at pensive. He was about to return to Paris to attend evening, a violent thunder-storm burst over the park, and a tree-trunk tree which had been planted by Napoleon I. in the presence of the Empress Josephine was struck by lightning. The people interesting the spot blessed of Malmaison thought it an omen to regard this natural accident as an evil omen for the Prince Imperial. The tree was entirely injured, a great effort was made to save its life in vain. It gradually withered and died late in the spring of 1879 the incident of the shattered tree was related, and should be remembered, as every object during the late in the park. On June 1, according to the fatal record Napoleonic tree was killed, and that very day the gallant Prince Imperial was slain by Zulu assegais in Tirdil tant Africa. Strangely enough, was the last Napoleon who set foot in Malmaison Park, and the coincidence of his melancholy fate with that of the tree planted by his great ancestor was, to say the least, a most remarkable fulfillment of a dismal forecast, the offspring of popular superstition.

Sententions.

"God never gives graces without an intent of their exercise."—Sir. Hall.

Those who live without Faith, must die without hope, and stand in the judgment without it, too.

If a Christian's work is hard now, it will be easier by and by; but the sinner's work becomes harder and harder.

"Faith knows no sorrow
That heaven cannot heal."

There is no food for faith but God's Word made clear to the understanding by rays from heaven, granted to the praying, waiting, obedient soul.

A broken physical law involves its penalty. A denied intellectual law lies a punishment. A defied spiritual law prestances its retribution.

Work while yet the daylight shines,
Man of strength and will;
Never does the steamer glide
Fearless by the mill.
Wait not till to-morrow's sun
Be nine upon the way;
All that thou canst do or dream
Do it this day.
Power, like love, and wealth
May rest against hope;
"The mill will never grind
With the water that has passed."

Is it any wonder that when we stagger at any promise of God through unbelief, we do not receive it? Not that the faith merits the answer, or in any way earns it, or works it out; but God has made believing a condition of receiving, and the Giver has a sovereign right to choose his own terms of gift.

Being good is quite as important as doing good; and it is more apt to be forgotten or undervalued in Christian exhortation and experience. There is no reason for separating the two things; they belong together. If a man is good, he will want to do good: he can't help doing it. But a man may—many a man does—think that there is such a thing as doing good, being active in good works of one sort and another, without regard to his personal life and character. This is a great mistake. No man has a right to feel that he is worth as much as a Sabbath-school superintendent or a prayer-meeting leader if he is not an honored example of the sweetness and power of Christianity in his family circle. Unless he preaches Christ all the week at home, he cannot preach Christ once a week away from home.—N. Y. Times.

"We should climb the hours with weariest toil,
If we had but a day;
We should drink alone at the purest spring,
On our upward way;
We should love with a lifetime's love in an hour,
If our hours were few;
We should rest, not for dreams, but for fresher power,
To be and to do."

If you are edified by a sermon, or a book, or a poem, or an editorial, you may be sure that there has been in some way a cost to the writer corresponding to the value to you of that production. It is not only a fact, that—

"Time cost is a thing come from toil, not choice," but it is also an obvious truth, that no one can give expression to feelings of which he has known nothing in his own heart, nor have real sympathy beyond his personal experiences of privilege or of trial. This it is that measures the power of the poets:—

"Who learn in suffering what they teach in song."

This, in fact, measures the power of every writer or speaker who would do service by his words. The value of his service to others is settled by the preliminary cost of that service to himself.

BOOK LIST.

[illegible]

FOR BIBLE READERS.

[illegible]

THE BIBLE AND THE CHURCH, By A. H. Ross, D. D. [illegible]

THE RESURRECTION, By Rev. Joseph Parker. [illegible]

THE BIBLE AND THE CHURCH, By A. H. Ross, D. D. [illegible]

THE KINGDOM, By Rev. Joseph Parker. [illegible]

THE PRIESTHOOD, By Rev. Joseph Parker. [illegible]

THE PARACLETE, By Rev. Joseph Parker. [illegible]

THE PARACLETE, By Rev. Joseph Parker. [illegible]

THE PARACLETE

THE RESTITUTION
—IS ISSUED WEEKLY BY—
The Christian Publishing Association.

OFFICERS OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS:
R. S. DWIGGINS ..... President.
CHARLES PALMER ..... Vice President.
E. E. BARNHILL ..... Secretary.
S. A. CHAPLIN ..... Treasurer.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE:
CHARLES PALMER, W. C. HAILSTACK,
L. G. ROBERTS.

S. A. CHAPLIN, ... Editor.

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTORS:
J. M. STEPHENSON, B. WILSON,
J. P. WESTHEFER, J. A. SHOUP,
WILEY JONES, D. M. MYERS,
A. B. MAGRUDER.

The Restitution.

Keep Brownethers article

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXX. Read PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, FEBRUARY 23, 1881. NO. 8.

THE RESTITUTION.

TERMS—TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR, Payable in advance. Three and Six Months at the same rate.

Address all Letters and Communications to THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS!

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the Immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations, the restoration of Israel, the literal resurrection of the dead, the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked, eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a belief in the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Communications.

COMING AGE.

Its Proximity—Fifth Seal—Terms—Altars—Souls—Their Cry—White Robes—Resting Little Season—Fellow-Servants—Thrones—Sketch the Events. Summary.

No. 57.

J. P. WESTHEFER.

Fifth Seal.—"And when he had opened the fifth seal, I saw under the altar the souls of them that were slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held. And they cried with a loud voice, saying, How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on the [them] that dwell on the earth? And white robes were given unto every one of them; and it was said unto them, that they should rest yet for a little season, until their fellow-servants, and their brethren, that should be killed as they (were) should be fulfilled." Rev. vi. 9–11.

This is an earth scene, since it covers the fifth sheet of the roll which contains the scenic history of the Roman empire. It opens to view the Roman world.

A Pagan priesthood is officiating at the brazen altar of the legal sacrifices to their gods, under the superintending eye of their royal high priest, the emperor, the pontifex maximus of the empire. Over the altar is a Pagan sky with its luminaries. Around is spread out, as in a panoramic view, the territory, composed of grand divisions filled with populous, yet tributary nations. All are in motion—at their farms, in work-shops; occupied with their trades and professions; in the national senates, or occupied in quelling civil uprisings. All are active except the souls [dead] under the blood-stained altar.

Down under this altar (the symbolic embodiment of all the Pagan altars) lie multitudes of human beings—dead, not of disease, but of violence; not of earthquakes, nor tempests, nor of pestilence—the angels of powers unseen; but laid there by the hand of human violence. Not as malefactors and enemies to their race; but slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held.

The dead, sometimes, have a voice; and innocent blood can utter its cry. These martyrs' blood had been shed on the Pagan altar, as sacrifices to appease the wrath of heathen deities. Their blood has a voice like the blood of Abel. Their bones like those seen by Ezekiel, begin to assume form and living power; power to utter their wrongs and to plead the cause of justice:—How long, O Lord, holy and true, will thou not avenge our blood on our persecutors?

They are living, going to and fro, through the land, and walking up and down in it. "We lie under this altar, of the Pagan priesthood, our cause unavenged, and we held under the dominion of death and hades. Wilt thou still allow us here to remain and our blood to be still unavenged?

White robes were given them and they were told to rest a little season, till they should be joined by another company of martyrs that would share a similar fate.

Terms explained.—1. The altar. What altar? There were three kinds of altars:

(a) The altar of sacrifice which dates back to our first parents.

(b) The altar of incense.

(c) The memorial altar.

The altar of incense was called the golden altar. This altar was seen by John, and its location and use are described in Rev. viii. 3. And another angel came and stood at the altar, having a golden censer; and there was given unto him much incense, that he should offer (it) with the prayers of all saints upon the golden altar which was before the throne. This altar was in the temple where Christ is officiating as High Priest, and not the golden altar of the temple at Jerusalem, since that was removed at this time. This altar is again named in Rev. ix. 13, "And I heard a voice from the four horns of the golden altar which is before God."

In Rev. viii. 3, incense is said to be added to the prayers of the saints; but in Rev. v. 8 it is said, Golden vials [censers] full of odors (incense), which are the prayers of the saints. Thus the altar before God, the prayers of the saints were offered as incense.

The altar of the fifth seal (Rev. vi. 9) is not before the throne; neither is it an altar of incense. It is a stone, or some kind of earthen or metallic substance, that would make it an altar of sacrifice. It is stones with human blood as appears from the skin down under it, where victims would lie when slain at the forms of the altar.

2. The Souls. Who? What? Mr. Fuller, an able commentator, says, "The souls under the altar are departed spirits of those Christians who had fallen in the arduous contest, which are supposed to cry aloud for retribution." Simply, because of the expression, "Souls of them." In his view, they are "disembodied spirits." Such is the name of a complex English thought, relative to the state of the dead, that man has within him an immortal spirit, (the man proper) which leaves the body at death, and continues in a place of conscious happiness or misery, till the resurrection, when it returns and re-occupies the body during endless ages.

Is this a Divine thought, or is it only human? If it is from God, we shall find it in the Hebrew and Greek, since they are the ancient sates of all God's thoughts to man.

Let us search the original Scriptures for a "disembodied spirit." The hunt may be instructive.

A few remarks relative to words and thoughts may aid the reader to search.

"Disembodied spirit" is the name of an English thought, complex in its nature, since it means that the spirit (the man proper) was in a body, but is now living out of the body. It is used to explain the word soul. Let us now trace back to the fountain of all thought.

We have this order—English, Soul. Greek, psuke, כֶּפֶשׁ. Hebrew, nephesh, נֶפֶשׁ. The English word, which is the name of the English thought, will, if correct, express in full, the Greek thought, whose name is psuke, since it is the translation of that word; and psuke, the name of the Greek thought, should express in full, the Hebrew thought, whose name is nephesh, since it is the translation of that word. The three words, soul, psuke, nephesh, being three names of one thought, should have one and the same meaning.

The English names the thought, properly defined, "disembodied spirit," or soul: Christ and the apostles call it psuke; the Hebrews call it nephesh. God calls himself that name. Jer. li. 14. The Lord of hosts hath sworn by himself. (Heb. nephesh) God is a soul; he is also a spirit, but not a disembodied spirit, which would be, not only impossible, but absurd.

When God began to create his vast family of living beings, and to name them, we should expect that, as their father, he would give them a name denoting that relationship. What other name than nephesh would be appropriate? Let us see if that is not the Family Name.

"God said, Let the waters bring forth abundantly, every creeping living soul" (sherets nephesh khay-yah.) Gen. i. 20.

"And God created great whales, and every living creature (Heb. nephesh khay-yah) that moveth." Gen. i. 21.

These are the water division. God then creates the land division.

"And God said, Let the earth bring forth the living creature," (Heb. nephesh khay-yah.) Gen. i. 24.

"And the Lord God formed man (Heb. adam) out of the dust of the ground, (Heb. adu-mah) and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, (lives,) and man became a living soul," (Heb. nephesh khay-yah). Genesis ii. 7.

Khay-yah is an attribute of nephesh, and by metonomy is called nephesh. What course did he follow in bringing into being the families that compose his one great family?

Beginning at the bottom of the scale he creates the various species of water creatures. What name does he give them? Nephesh. He then brings into being the land beings and calls them Nephesh, as their father. Last and highest in the series he makes man (adam) and calls him also by the family name—Nephesh.

The Hebrew nephesh is the former name of which God, the first nephesh, is the Creator and the Father. Psuke and soul, both translations express, or should express the same thought.

When we see the word or name, nephesh, what thought do we see behind it? A being or a family of beings, and not simply an attribute spoken by a figure of speech.

We can attach to nephesh many attributes or adjuncts, but they are attributes of the thing, not the thing itself.

The same is true of the Greek word psuke. It is the name of every being that is a breather: psuke is the Greek name of the same thought Nephesh. Soul is the English name of the same thought, since it claims to be a translation.

With these remarks in view, let us see how our translators have disposed of the word ψυχη, psuke, in the New Testament.

ψυχη, psuke, is used by Christ and his apostles 100 times. It is rendered soul fifty-five times, life forty times, us once, himself once, mind twice, you once, heart once, and heartily once.

It is thus has in English, two names—soul and life, nearly of equal use; and six other names sometimes used. From this it will appear that they did not regard soul as the full equivalent of ψυχη. Their word soul is also complex: sometimes meaning persons, sometimes life, an attribute of persons.

In sixteen passages it is the name of persons or living beings. In no place does it express anything more than a being or his attributes.

How did John use the word ψυχη, for he wrote in the Greek. In his gospel he has written ψυχη, nine times. In eight places it is called Life; and once only is it rendered Soul. John xii. 27, "Now is my soul troubled;" now am I troubled. He has used the word seven times in the Apocalypse. It is first used, under the fifth seal, the passage now under consideration. The second place is in Rev. viii. 9, "the third part of the creatures which were in the sea, and had life died"—life," (ψυχη). Rev. xii. 11. "And they loved not their lives (ψυχη) unto death." Rev. xvi. 3, "every living soul" (ψυχη). Rev. xviii. 13, "And slaves and souls (ψυχη) of men." Verse 14. "And the fruits that thy soul (ψυχη) lusted after." Rev. xx. 4. "I saw the souls (ψυχη) of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus," and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years. This expression is the same as in Rev. vi. 9—"Souls of them."

Blood was an attribute of the souls down under the altar, since they cry, "How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not avenge (these souls') blood." We should read it as follows; I saw, down under the altar, those persons that were slain for the word of God.—Personification. The stain fell around them in such masses as to arouse the dead, as in the case of the blood of Abel, and the bones in Ezekiel's valley.

Their Cry.—Emperors concluded that they had a right to judge for their subjects; but innocent blood has a right, and a voice it is. These slain in defence of God and the truth, will finally be heard.

White Robes.—These were symbols of righteousness and purity. They had been slain under false accusations. Christians were accused of Atheism, and of being guilty of the most obscene practices. The emperors judged that persons guilty of such practices ought not to live; but Christians were guilty of such practices, therefore, they must die.

White robes are given them as a token that God's judgment was in their cases the reverse of imperial edicts. The presentation of white robes, gave the dead to understand that the imperial decisions, under which they suffered martyrdom, were reversed, but that their blood would not be immediately avenged: but would be when their company should be perfected.

Rest yet for a little season.—They had been resting from their labors in unconscious repose; they were to continue in that state, and their accusers and murderers remain unpunished for a little season. Their request was the punishment of their murderers. This was not to be immediately. More were still to suffer. What, then, is the chronology of this seal?

The chronology of the fifth seal is not in advance of the first four seals, since it is the scene of martyrdom, they necessarily in the past, as they had been slain. It probably covers the fourth seal: still it may extend to Trajan.

The new persecution ahead, as their fellow servants and brethren were still to be slain as they. It extends, probably, to the commencement of the Diocletian persecution.

From the days of Trajan to this time, A. D. 303, Christians had been in a state of persecution. During the reign of some of the emperors, no new edicts were put forth, but the old ones were not repealed; and in some parts of the empire, the Pagan priesthood were continually fighting against the Christians. Some of the persecutions were aimed directly against Christian officers—bishops, presbyters, and deacons—since they had charge of the church.

Since the days of Adrian, the Christian ministry, assuming to be the successors of the Levitical priesthood, had grown in power, until the Christian, like the Pagan church, had fallen under the control of an hierarchy.

Contests between rival priesthoods were taken up by their membership, and deadly persecutions had been the result. Both parties were preparing for a final struggle.

THE BIBLE DEFENDED AGAINST MR. INGERSOLL'S ASSAULTS.

A. B. MAGRUDER.

Editor Restitution:—Although the attempt to bring Mr. R. G. Ingersoll to an oral debate and hold him to public responsibility for his libellous assaults on the Holy Scriptures has not been attended with success in the way proposed, the writer has found an opportunity, by the recent publication of the latest phase of Mr. Ingersoll's monomania, in his pamphlet entitled—with startling inconsistency—"What We Must Do to Be Saved," to repel these boastful attacks, in a printed reply, in pamphlet form, in the preparation of which I am now engaged. Having nearly finished the task which I hope to complete within a fortnight, I am naturally looking around to see how I shall defray the expenses of its publication. I learn from publishers with whom I have been in correspondence that to bring out an edition of 3,000, on good paper, with clear type and with a suitable cover, will require about $250 to which must be added a further sum of about $50 to pay expenses of transportation to points in the country for sale and for advertising, etc.

Now it is proper to say frankly that I have not and cannot command at present this necessary sum for the purpose. And I know not to whom I can turn for help and sympathy except to the brethren whose faith and hope—identical as we believe with that revealed in the Bible—I am as one of themselves, seeking to maintain and defend against an artful, adroit and able assailant—a common enemy. Is it unreasonable to conclude that they would naturally desire that this effort to "stop the mouth of the gain-sayer, teaching things he ought not for filthy lucre's sake," should be made in the fear of God and in the interests of truth and human salvation?

I know but little of the pecuniary means and resources of our brotherhood. I know that many are of very limited means and cannot be expected to advance or contribute anything even for such a cause. But it is quite probable I think that in the "little flock"—of feeble folk—there may be some individuals of sufficient means—whose hearts God may open—to give of their substance enough to accomplish the end in view. That such may have some means of forming an opinion as to the character of the work they are asked to help, I send herewith for insertion in THE RESTITUTION—if you please—the first chapter in manuscript, of the book proposed,—which will afford some idea of what it will be as a whole.

I propose to keep an accurate account of the names and amounts contributed and from any profits arising from the sales of the work beyond the costs of publication, etc., to reimburse the contributors the advances they may make. Any sums that may be advanced for this object will be promptly acknowledged and if enough be not raised, will be returned.

I take this occasion to acknowledge the many tokens of encouragement and appreciation which the writer received when it was believed that he was about to engage in an oral debate with Mr. Ingersoll. These were so numerous as to prevent a reply to each. They came not only from our own brethren whose interest in the subject was both natural and earnest but, I am happy to add, from some unexpected quarters—from prominent and earnest church members of the several denominations, exhibiting a warm and intelligent zeal in the great cause of the truth and integrity of the Bible as a Divine Record.

One of these, a venerable and learned minister of the Episcopal church, wrote as follows:

"Permit me to say that I am heartily glad that you have accepted Ingersoll's challenge, not only because I agree with you that 'contemptuous silence' is not the best method of meeting this bold blasphemer; but * * * * and I hope and trust that you will have the prayers of all true believers for your success, as well as valuable suggestions from those who are able to give them. May the servant of God and disciple of Christ be inspired with promised wisdom and power which his adversary shall not be able to withstand. With prayer and benediction," etc.

I shall be obliged if you can find room for the enclosed MS. and this explanatory letter in some early issue of THE RESTITUTION.

ALLAN B. MAGRUDER.

Stephens' City, Va.

CHAPTER I.

"ALL THINGS ARE OF GOD."

When Voltaire said, "If there was no God it would be necessary to invent one" he gave utterance to a truism which is abundantly proved by the history and experience of mankind. It finds a recent striking illustration in the voluminous writings, lectures, etc., of Mr. Ingersoll. Atheist as he is the more he persists in ignoring and banishing God from our world and race, the more earnest is the persuasion of all intelligent and thoughtful minds that on that theory the world would be a trackless wilderness, society an arid waste, and man, the monarch of a grand, void, vast chaos.

The interests and the real happiness of mankind, no less than their ideas, feelings, sympathies and emotions are so interwoven with the sentiment of religious faith and duty that they are naturally impelled to the recognition of a supreme power to whom, without unworthy self-humiliation, they willingly pay the homage of their veneration and worship. This sentiment is faithfully delineated by the poet:

"If there be a power above us—
And that there is all nature cries aloud
Through all her works—he must delight in virtue
And that which he delights in Must be happy."

The statesmen knows well that no people can be safely governed without this supporting faith, in responsibility to a Supreme Authority and that no social compact can be made to cohere except by the cement and saving efficacy of a firm religious faith in its members. Hence the invocation of the Divine name in judicial proceedings, oaths of office, etc.

Can we ever forget the lessons taught by the French Revolution of 1793, whose appalling crimes against society—yet in the memory of living men—are all to be traced to the revolting creed of Mr. Ingersoll's brother Atheists—that "Death is an eternal sleep and there is no God but reason?"

In the United States and throughout Protestant Europe faith in the Bible and the obligations its teachings impose constitute this social cement and it is therefore either necessary or possible to "invent" another or a higher power. Is it therefore wonderful that in Bible lands, all efforts, ancient or modern, to undermine and overturn the Divine Oracles have failed and have invariably recoiled upon their authors and abettors? Like curses—they come home to roost and to torment their inventors. This latest attempt in that direction in Mr. Ingersoll - pamphlet entitled—"What Must We Do to Be Saved" forms no exception to the rule. It already shares the fate of all its predecessors nor is it surprising that it should be so.

The Bible is so obviously and triumphantly proved to be true in the eyes of every intelligent examiner of the Sacred Record that no one who has weighed the evidence with candor and is not an unreasonable or wicked man will presume to deny it. Such is its own testimony as declared in both the Old and New Testament. In the former it is written, it is "the fool who hath said in his heart there is no God," and in the latter St. Paul prays that he "may be delivered from unreasonable and wicked men," adding, "For all men have not faith" which is equivalent to declaring that a man without faith is both unreasonable and wicked. Although Mr. Ingersoll may not regard such condemnation as damaging to his cause, seeing that he discards and denies the apostle's authority in the premises, the concurrence of the public judgment among enlighted men in this conclusion however, invests the charge with a gravity and importance which cannot be eluded or retorted. We shall expect in the sequel to fortify this conclusion by the oracles of reason and revelation so as to leave no room to doubt it.

It cannot be expected that we should meet and confute, one by one, the very many mistakes of fact and errors of reasoning into which Mr. Ingersoll has fallen; nor is it necessary.

His pre-judgment of what as an honest examiner he ought to have subjected to proof is indicated by the self-invented motto he has prefixed to his latest work. In it he has brought forward the new charge of interpolations in the Bible text. He says "Interpolations are the foundation stones of every Orthodox church"—although as already said, that statement if true does not affect the integrity of the Bible record—and might pass unchallenged in our defence of it yet as he repeats specifically the charge of interpolations of the text of Matthew, Mark and Luke it is well here to note,

1. That he never charges such adulterations except when he is confronted with some text which stands inconveniently in the way of his own preconceived theory, and

2. That he never troubles himself to give any other authority for so grave a charge than his bare assertion! He boldly reckons on the enormous credulity of his readers or on their unlimited confidance in his infallibility, in lieu of the high and imposing authority which every scholar and critic feels bound to avouch in support of a charge so grave.

Let one example of his method of procedure suffice. In his bitter denial and denunciation of Mark xvi. 16, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved and he that believeth not shall be damned." (Page 39) he says, "I propose to prove to you that this is an interpolation," and his proof consists in the simple assertion that as neither Matthew nor Luke nor John record the words, which Mark alone preserves—they must be interpolated. To give some color to this conjecture he writes, "In the first place not one word is said about belief in Matthew. In the next place not one word about belief in Mark until we come to that verse * * * and "Luke gives an account of the same last conversation and not one word does he say upon that subject," and "I turn to the first chapter of Acts and find an account of the last conversation, and in that conversation there is not one word on this subject," and then he naively concludes in triumph, "This is a demonstration that the passage in Mark is an interpolation!"

Is our author accustomed to rest his demonstrations at the bar on such reasoning as this? Would he presume as a historian collating the written testimony of four witnesses to reject every fact which was not attested toties, coties, ubique, by each and all? He is a lawyer and should know that the most authentic testimony of several witnesses to the same transaction embodies "substantial truth under circumstantial variety" and that the failure of one or more witnesses to see or hear or report every or any given incident of the scene which may be presented or recorded by another with equal or better opportunities to know is never accepted as a ground of exclusion of the latter's statement for the simple reason that there is no necessary conflict between them. It is merely negative—is easily accounted for and is never permitted to impeach the positive testimony of the fuller narrative. Besides it should be remembered that these four historical narratives usually called gospels were not written at the same time or upon consultation.

We see from Luke's preliminary statement to his friend Theophilus (not objected to us as an interpolation) that "Many have taken in hand to set forth in order a declaration of those things which are most surely believed among us even as they delivered them to us who from the beginning were eye witnesses and ministers of the word," etc., that there had been certain written narratives previous to Luke's history. The chronology of the four narratives shows the same fact, for we know that John was the survivor and last writer of them all. We are not therefore surprised to find that in the preparation of their histories respectively each should be desirous and even careful, to avoid reciting and repeating what his predecessors had already written and should prefer to preserve and record some other of the wonderful deeds and words of Him "who spake as never man spake."

There was no scarcity of material for these fuller and varied records of the acts and sayings of the great Teacher, for John tells us in his narrative that "there are also many other things which Jesus did, which if they should be written I suppose that not even the world itself could contain the books which should be written."

It is thus we are to account for the variation of the matter of Luke and John, the latest biographers, from those of their predecessors, Matthew and Mark. John's gospel, we know, is very notably different from all the others, preserving more of the words and discourses our Lord than any of them. These obvious considerations sufficiently account for the omissions referred to and afford to every fair mind the strongest proof of the unaffected honesty of the several historians, for had their histories exhibited a close correspondence and conformity as to particular statements, which would be natural with the work of impostors, there would have been ground to suspect and charge collusion and fraud.

But is Mr. Ingersoll aware that in imputing fraudulent interpolations on the ground that all the evangelists do not chronicle every notable saying or deed of their Master, he wields a two-edged sword and stands on dangerous ground? If the objectionable text referred to (Mark xvi. 16) is to be discarded for the reason stated as an interpolation and apocryphal does not the sermon on the mount share the same fate? It is Matthew alone who chronicles this sermon which Mr. Ingersoll endorses and approves so warmly, saying, All the miracles, including the resurrection and ascension, are, when compared with portions of the sermon on the mount, but dust and ashes, etc. For the man Christ I have infinite respect, * * * To that great and serene Man I gladly pay the tribute of my admiration and my tears. Yet by the inexorable logic of his reasoning he is bound to expunge this sermon thus warmly eulogized and cast all its wisdom and virtue along with so much of his creed as he takes from it into the waste basket of discarded interpolations, "Verily," saith the proverb, "the legs of the lame are not equal."

Although avowing himself an Atheist and consequently without any religion (unless there can be religion without any God) he offers as a summary of what we must believe, in this last lecture, what he calls the 'grand religion of humanity" and when we come to inspect the items of this creed we see that all that is good in it is taken from the Bible and all that he declaims against as bad is not found there! Strange to say it is largely made up of passages taken from the sermon on the Mount supplemented by what he calls "the gospel of good fellowship, 'good friends, good living, (which he explains to mean good cooking) good clothes, good houses, and the gospel of soap and water," pp. 82–85.

In view of such vain trifling, such solemn mockery on such a subject it is difficult to resist the charitable conclusion that its author has lost his head—has become the unhappy victim of monomania and is not responsible for his actions and therefore we are tempted to turn away from the task he undertakes in pity rather than reproach.

But we give Mr. Ingersoll, like other culprits at the bar of justice the benefit of the doubt as to his mental condition and proceed for the sake of others to repel his assaults.

*Stumble on evidence.

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CHAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, February 18, 1881.

ALL letters about which special inquiries have been made, have come to hand.

PLEASE send us shorter articles for five or six weeks to come, as we now have on hand as many long contributions as we can find room for in that length of time.

WE have only space to say that we have just received another letter from Brother Daniel Pike, of Stockton, Rooks County, Kan., describing the destitution of his family.

WILL our friends interest themselves in Brother Magruder's contemplated pamphlet. His circular to the brethren, and the first chapter of the work will be found on another page.

THE article on the Revision of the New Testament, Dr. Jessup's letter from Beirut, and the article from the Glasgow Herald—Jewish Notes—will prove, we hope of general interest to our readers. The Oriental question will soon demand solution.

Communications.

CHRONOLOGY OF CHRIST'S BIRTH, BAPTISM AND CRUCIFIXION.

WM. ROBBS.

And Jesus Himself began to be about thirty years of age. Luke iii. 23.

The words of the above text relate to the age of Jesus at his baptism, and so if we can find the year and the time in the year when he was baptized, it will help us to determine the chronology of his birth and crucifixion; Luke also, in chap. iii. 1, gives us to understand that it was in the fifteenth year of the government of Tiberius Cæsar, that John the Baptist began to preach and Jesus was baptized.

This was supposed to date in the 15th year of Tiberius, reckoned from the death of Augustus, instead of from his association with Augustus as colleague of the empire.

Had the Christian era been in use from the apostolic times, the mistake in dating the birth of Christ, near four years too late, would not have occurred. But when we take into consideration the fact, that this era did not begin to be used, "till A. D. 532, Dionysius, a Scythian by birth, and a Roman Abbot," there is no wonder that the mistake was made.

Bliss says, "From the best evidence, Dionysius could obtain, he placed our Lord's nativity in the year 753 of the Roman era, the Christian era not then going into use."

Bedo, who lived a century later, by a mistake of Dionysius, in reviewing it, made it commence Jan. 1, A. U. C. 754. The era, however, did not begin to be much used till A. D. 730, and did not come into general use till A. D. 1431, when Pope Eugenius ordered it to be used in the public registers." Sacred chronology p. 27.

That our Savior was very near thirty years of age at baptism, is evident from the testimony of Luke that "Jesus himself began to be about thirty years of age," when this event took place. For he could not have began to be about thirty years of age, if he had completed thirty, and so must have been a little under that age. And since Luke says, "he was twelve years old" at the Passover when he talked with the doctors of the Law—chap. ii. 42,—his birth must have been near the 25th of March, to make him twelve years old at the Passover, and to begin to be about thirty years of age at his baptism in Feb. A. D. 27.

That it was in Feb. A. D. 27, when our Lord was baptized, is evident from John i. 29 to ii. 1-12, for the latter is referred to in verse 29, between John the Baptist and Jesus, must have followed his forty days temptation in the wilderness, where he was alone with the wild beasts, which was immediately after his baptism; for, either the third day after this interview with John, or the third day from the day when he would go forth into Galilee, he attended the marriage in Cana of Galilee.—chap. ii. 1, and so, forty-three or forty-six days after his baptism.

He then went down to Capernaum, "but abode there not many days. And the Jew's Pass-over was at hand, and Jesus went up to Jerusalem." So if we allow forty days from his baptism to his interview with John, and three or six days to the marriage, and fourteen more to the Passover, which was then nigh, it would fix his baptism either Feb. 9 or 12, in A. D. 27.

According to astronomical calculations the paschal moon fulled in A. D. 27, on Wednesday, April 9, at 7 o'clock 10 min. P. M.; and it was at this Passover that the Jews said to Jesus: "Forty and six years was this temple in building." John ii. 20.

And forty-six years reaches back to B. C. 20, when Herod began to rebuild the temple, which was in the eighth year of his reign, according to Josephus Antiquities. Book 15 chap. 9 sec. 1.

This dates the beginning of Herod's reign in B. C. 38, reckoned from the conquest of Antigonus. And Josephus states that this took place "when Marcus Agrippa and Canidius Gallus were consuls of Rome, on the hundred eighty and fifth Olympiad, on the third month, on the solemnity of the fast." Antiq. 14, 16, 4.

Antigonus held his office three years and three months and was set up by the Parthians soon after Pentecost, as any one may find by Antiquities, book 14, chap. 13, sec. 1, and 2 Macc. 2:26, chap. 10. This makes it certain that the third month, when Jerusalem was taken, was the third month of the Olympic year, which would correspond to the seventh month of the Jewish year: on the tenth day of which "the solemnity of the fast" was celebrated.

Herod therefore began his reign in the third month, and in the third year of the hundred eighty and fifth Olympiad, which corresponds in part to Sep. B. C. 38, in which year in July or August,—see Roman Antiquities. Marcus Agrippa and Canidius Gallus had been elected consuls of Rome, and entered into office Jan. 1, B. C. 37, which Olympic year did not end till the 19th of July following. See Clavis Chronological Tables. For the Olympiads are four year periods, dating from July 19, B. C. 776, and from B. C. 776, take B. C. 38, July 19, it leaves 738 years, which divided by 4 gives 184 Olympiads and two years complete, so that the third month selected would make the third year of the 185th Olympiad, in the Autumn of B. C. 38.

Another proof that Herod began his reign in B. C. 38, is found in Josephus' Wars, book 1, chap. 19, sec. 3, which says that "as Herod was arranging himself upon his enemies, there fell upon him another providential calamity, for in the seventh year of his reign when the war about Actium was at its height, in the beginning of the spring, the earth was shaken and destroyed a immense number of cattle, with thirty thousand men."

This calamity was called providential to Herod, because it prevented him from going to the assistance of Antony against Cæsar, before Cæsar had beaten him at Actium, which battle was fought Sep. 2, B. C. 31. And as the spring before this was Herod's seventh year, his reign must have began in B. C. 38, inasmuch as seven and thirty-one are thirty-eight.

Again, Josephus states that Herod reigned thirty-four years from his conquest of Antigonus, and gives evidence that he died soon after an eclipse of the moon; of which eclipse Whitson, his translator says:

"This eclipse of the moon . . . . . is of the greatest consequence for the determination of the time for the death of Herod and Antipater, and for the birth and entire chronology of Jesus Christ.

It happened March 13th, in the year of the Julian Period 4710, and the fourth year before the Christian era." Antiq. b. 17, 6, 5, foot note.

Now by reference to book 2, chap. 1, Ver. 2 the Jews, we learn that a very great lamentation and mourning was made on the eighth day after Herod's death, for the men who had been put to death at the time of the aforementioned eclipse which mourning would have been very unnatural a year afterward, which it must have been, or else within a month of this time; for the Passover was at hand, which Passover fell on April 12, in B. C. 4.

Herod's death, therefore, cannot be placed later than April 1, B. C. 4, so that his reign of thirty-four years must have began in B. C. 38.

The account of Christ's birth in Bethlehem, and the flight into Egypt, and the return after the death of Herod, was accomplished inside of forty days after Christ was born, for, according to Luke, ii. 22-39, he was presented in the temple at the end of forty days from his birth, and then Joseph and Mary returned back with him to Nazareth, Christ could not therefore, have been born later than the 25 of March, B. C. 4, nor much earlier than that time, to have him only begin to be about thirty years at his baptism in February.

Now, then, as Herod began his reign in the autumn of B. C. 38, the eighteenth year of his reign in April, would fall in B. C. 20, which completes 46 years at the Passover in A. D. 27, up to which time improvements and additions had been made on the temple.

The Passover of that year—A. D. 27—was therefore, the first one after Christ was baptized.

The next was that of A. D. 28, and is found in Mat xii. 1, 2, which gives an account of the disciples eating of the standing grain which the law forbade them to do till the second day after the Passover.

The next Passover was that of A. D. 29, and is found in Mat. xii., which gives an account of the excessive feeding of the five thousand by the power of God. John vi. 4, says:

"And the Passover feast of the Jews was nigh."

The next Passover was that of Pentecost, which was their first in A. D. 30, when Jesus was thirty and a half years of age.

This fixes his birth in March, B. C. 4, making him twelve years old at the Passover of A. D. 8, and by his entering upon his ministry at his baptism in February, A. D. 27.

But the day of his birth cannot be fixed, nor that of his baptism, but his crucifixion is fixed on Thursday, and there "he, on April 6, A. D. 33, for Christ was to rise and the dominion of death three days and three nights, and as he arose on a Sunday morning, the three nights reckoned back from thence reach to four days as the day on which he died for the sins of the world. Mat. xii. 40.

The idea that it was on Friday when Christ was crucified makes only two days and two nights, to Sunday morning.

And this view is founded on the supposition that the crucifixion was on the day before the seventh day—Sabbath.

But the evidence shows that "the feast of unleavened bread, which is called the Passover," began on Wednesday evening last year, which evening belonged to the fourteenth day, which was the day of preparation, that is, the day before the paschal Sabbath, which was the fifteenth day of the month, and was a great annual Sabbath.

So if the fourteenth day fell on Thursday, Friday would have been their annual Sabbath, commemorative of their national deliverance from Egyptian bondage.

That it did fall on Thursday, is evident from Luke xxiv. 13-21, for this gives an account of two disciples going on the afternoon of Sunday to Emmaus, the very day on which Christ arose and that they said to him, not knowing him: "The chief priests and our rulers delivered him to be condemned to death, and have crucified him . . . . and besides all this, to-day is the third day since these things were done." Verses 20-21.

If Christ was taken down from the cross Thursday evening, that evening and Friday would be one day—Friday evening and Saturday would make two days—Saturday evening and Sunday, when he rose, would be "the third day since these things were done;" and this testimony positively precludes the crucifixion from being placed on any other day of the week than Thursday.

According to astronomical calculations, the moon fulled in A. D. 30, on Thursday April 6, at 10:41 P. M. So, all the evidence proves this was the day and the year of the crucifixion.

THE TEST.

S. HOXANA MINER.

"Sir, I will follow thee whithersoever thou goest," were the words of a man in the long ago when the Savior was here upon earth. He thought himself sincere, he thought he could follow Jesus anywhere, but when the Master showed him the poverty of his lot, that he was poorer than the foxes, more homeless than the birds, that no earthly honors nor emoluments could come from devotion to his cause, he forgot the glowing discourses of the man who spake as never man spake, and turned back, afraid of the test, unwilling to give up ease and wealth, for hardship, persecution and death.

Is it not just so now? Are there not thousands who love to listen to the truth, and who would fain follow Christ if there was no sacrifice to be made, no renouncing of self in the case? But if they confess the truth, the good opinion of their fellows must go, they must take the staff and garb of the pilgrim, cease to lay up treasures for themselves, affiliate no longer with men of the world, be called fantastical and peculiar, become rich towards God, by laying up their gains where moth and rust cannot corrupt. The cost is too great, the love of earthly things too strong, and they turn their backs upon Christ and upon all the coming glory.

Dear reader, are you doing it? Are you refusing to come to Christ, lest you lose some of the good things of this world? The time is fast approaching when the treasures that you love must perish, and then, having neglected the salvation of the Lord, where will you be? Escape for your lives. Follow Christ wherever he leads, and a crown of glory will be yours when he comes.

News Items.

TURKEY.

SERIOUS FIGHTING IN SYRIA.

BEYROUT, Feb. 16.—A Turk murdered a Christian and a number of Christians left town and went to their villages, where they were met by Turks and ten persons killed in the fight which ensued. There was renewed fighting on Monday, but the result is unknown. There is great excitement. Business is stopped and the bazars are closed.

THREATENED OUTBREAK IN AFGHANISTAN.

LONDON, Feb. 18.—It is reported from Candahar that a division of the Ameer's army, consisting of four regiments of infantry and one thousand cavalry, has arrived at Ghazni. The news has caused quite a sensation.

A dispatch from Berlin to the Standard says: "In consequence of Russia's advance on Merve by the river and valley, Ayoob Khan has declared war against the Ameer, and has already marched Maimunah."

GREECE.

ATHENS, Feb. 18.—The Chamber of Deputies finally passed the bill for the annexation of the Neutral Gipsel.

ALGERIA.

PARIS, Feb. 18.—Several French subjects in Algeria have been killed by marauding tribes of men from Tunis.

THE GREEK QUESTION.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Feb. 18.—It is said that Russia has proposed to the powers that Crete be ceded to Greece instead of the new territory in Epirus allotted to her by the conference.

FRANCE.

DESTRUCTION BY AVALANCHES.

PARIS, Feb. 17.—The village of Brevierse in the Department of Savoy, has been completely destroyed by two avalanches. Fifteen persons were killed. The property damage will reach 250,000 francs.

Poti, anciently Phasis, the Russian town and harbor in the Black Sea, at the mouth of the Caucasian river Rion, which was also called Phasis, is at present wholly under water, even in the highest parts of the town, to the depth of two feet. In consequence of this inundation the position of the inhabitants, about 4,000 in number, appears to be most deplorable, and the destruction of or damage to merchandise destined for transmission to Tiflis of which city Poti is the port—is said to be immense.

THE GREEK QUESTION.

THE PORTE'S SESSION.

LONDON, Feb. 21.—It is said that the Porte has informed Germany and Austria of the maximum concessions it is prepared to make. They include the cession of the whole of Thessaly and a portion of Epirus, but the Porte refuses to cede Janina, Metzavo or Preveza.

GREEK TROOPS MOVING.

ATHENS, Feb. 21.—A royal decree has been issued calling out the reserve troops. General Mavra has been ordered to march northward gradually. The largest college in Athens has been converted into a military hospital.

THE PORTE'S PROMISE.

ROME, Feb. 21.—The notes of the Ambassadors of the Powers at Constantinople, to be presented to the Porte to-day with the view of opening negotiations on the boundary question, will take cognizance of the Porte's promise not to commit any act aggressive. The Ambassadors informed their Governments that Greece should likewise be advised against any hostile movement.

Letter Drawer.

TEGGARDEN, Ind.

Editor Restitution:

It having been suggested by some of the brethren, that a report of the meeting at LaPaz, by Brother John Poore, of Kansas, be sent to THE RESTITUTION I therefore submit the following:

Brother Poore delivered five discourses at the above place on the Plan of the Ages, to large audiences. Perfect attention was given him, and many manifested a willingness to investigate. The school house where the meeting was held is a large one, and it was well filled. I think that if the brethren in North Township would make an effort, there would be an ingathering at LaPaz.

Also attended a meeting of the brethren at the Baker School house. Said meeting having been appointed to transact business in connection with a church building which the brethren contemplate erecting, and while we applaud them for the liberality manifested in regard to the house, to be used half of the time by the sects generally, and also in selecting some of the trustees from other denominations, we can but think that the brethren have been rather hasty in the matter, believing that a proper effort could have united two small congregations, and the locating the house at some convenient point, would be the means of having the truth presented outside of what appears to be a prescribed circle.

We suggest to the brethren a reconsideration of the matter of location.

Hoping that the cause of the Redeemer may prosper.

JOS. OSBURN.

DENVER, Ind.

Editor Restitution:

Enclosed find one dollar which you will please place on my account, and accept thanks for favor.

I am well pleased with the recent improvement of the paper. While it may change in form and type, my earnest prayer is that it may continue to adhere to the simplicity and beauty of the ancient faith. The world is not so much in need of information about those who will live in coming ages as it is in the personal salvation of men and women of the present age. The crying evil of this age is a lack of vital practical Christianity. Let the lesson sink deep in each heart, that pure hearts and holy lives only will be rewarded with the fullness of joy.

With the absolute certainty that the Master will soon call for the jewels, how important that they shine now with that heavenly radiance that will reflect the image of him in whom no guile was found.

Now as we see the day approaching, let us strive earnestly to become more thoroughly imbued with the lovely spirit of Christ. Let us grow in grace and in the knowledge of the truth as it is in Christ Jesus. Put away malice, and clamor, and evil speaking; cultivate a spirit of forgiveness and love, that will compell the world to say, Behold how these people love each other; they have learned of Christ!

I wish to say to all the dear ones with whom I have enjoyed many pleasant meetings, that I long to again greet you all if possible this side of the translation, but if circumstances shall prevent that pleasure, let me assure you all that I am struggling hard to get in that abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom, where I hope to greet the faithful ones, where pain and disappointment cannot come.

I am now delivering a course of Bible lectures in a hall furnished by the friends in town. Have aroused quite an interest, and hope that some at least will be profited.

With best wishes for all who love the Lord Jesus in sincerity and truth, I remain your in the hope of the soon coming of the Just One.

J. F. WAGONER.

CENTROPOLIS, Kan.

Editor Restitution:

Enclosed find two dollars to apply on the paper. I value it very much, as it is all the preaching I have here. I am a lonely widow—have one child, a daughter, with me in the faith. I feel very lonely, my husband fell asleep in Christ soon after we came to Kansas, one year ago.

I have been trying to live faithful, so I may inherit eternal life when the great Life Giver comes to raise up all the loved ones, that we may never part again. O, what a joyful thought, brethren and sisters, let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering. Brethren and sisters, pray for me, that I may not falter by the way.

May we all be gathered in the kingdom.

ELIZABETH TINKEY.

MALVERN, Ark.

Editor Restitution:

The papers were received, for which you will accept many thanks. Find enclosed two dollars to pay for past indebtedness, and a continuation. They were the first copies of THE RESTITUTION I have seen for nearly two years. I felt as though I had met some very dear friend from whom I have been long separated. I eagerly grasped them, and looked first for the Editor; then for other familiar names, and am glad so many of them are yet contending for the truth. O, may they continue their good work, until the time comes when we will no longer need a teacher, but all will know the way of the Lord.

Our former address was Plum Bayou, Jefferson county, Ark., where we once had a church organization, consisting of twenty-two members. Most of them have fallen asleep; the others moved away, and our little family was left alone.

Last October we too left, hoping to better our condition socially, and are now living at Malvern, a pleasant little village on the St. L. I. M. & T. R. R., and junction of the Hot Springs R. R. Emigrants are coming in every day and the surrounding country is being rapidly settled up. We have not yet met with any of the one faith. If there are any here we would be glad to make their acquaintance.

If any of our preaching brethren pass this way it would afford us great pleasure to have them call and spend a few days with us.

To any desiring to change homes we say, come here. It is a pleasant country to live in. Corn, cotton and grain do well here, but the farmers are turning their attention mostly to the culture of fruits and berries, which grow to perfection.

Brethren wishing to find us or desiring information, will address or inquire for Wm. E. Chambers.

Before concluding I will say I wish ten copies of the question book for the instruction of the young, by Wiley Jones. I hope soon to send you some new subscribers.

Yours in Hope.

MRS. L. J. CHAMBERS.

NEW TROY, Mich.

Editor Restitution:

This leaves us in good health and pleasantly situated, so far as this world is concerned, and with our faith and hope strong in the soon coming King. We are passing away our days of mortal life with a degree of comfort which the world knows not of.

We hold forth the word of life whenever and wherever opportunity affords; in the school houses around and at our own house.

Since we came to this place we have been the humble means of creating some interest for the truth. Have succeeded in getting two new subscribers for THE RESTITUTION, and will do all we can to get more, for we cannot estimate its value. How could we do without the words of encouragement so richly given through its columns! The letters from the dear ones, and the rich articles from its contributors afford us comfort indeed, while toiling against the tide of popularity which bears down upon us sometimes with mighty power. We need the help of God, his word, his grace, and THE RESTITUTION. Therefore, brethren, sustain it; send it forth, full of encouragement and instruction to us weak ones, and we shall be your joy and crown of rejoicing at the appearing of Jesus Christ.

SAMUEL ANDREWS.

SUGAR CREEK, Ind.

Editor Restitution:

With sorrow I write you the sad news of the death of Sister Sarah Murnan. Death has closed his iron grasp around her, till he shall come who said: "I am he that liveth and was dead and behold I am alive forever more. I have the keys of death and of hades—he that said, because I live you shall live also—he that said I am the resurrection and the life, he that believeth in me though he were dead, yet shall he live."

Our sister sleeps in Jesus—blessed sleep. "Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord from henceforth, yea, saith the spirit that they may rest from their labors, and their works do follow them."

"Come Lord Jesus and come quickly," is my prayer.

Sister Murnan was born Oct. 10, 1801, and died Feb. 6, 1881.

Your Brother,

S. T. HOOK.

Brevities.

The inhabitants of a large village near Turin, Italy, numbering over two thousand, have left the Catholic Church in a body and gone over to the Protestants, because of dissatisfaction at the treatment a priest had received at the hands of a tyrannical Archbishop.

A spectre light lately stopped an express train on the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroad. After the trainmen ascertained that there was no wild train ahead they continued their journey. It is supposed that the atmosphere was in such a peculiar condition that a mirage-like effect was produced, and that the engineer saw the reflection of the head-light of his own locomotive.

In 1307 the Jewish residents of the city of Rouen were driven into exile, their property confiscated, and on the place where their synagogue stood a building was erected for the officers and machinery of the Holy Inquisition. A book just published in Rouen says that a lineal descendant of one of the banished Jews is M. Felix, a Councillor at the Court of Appeals, now sitting in that city, and that the court where he has a seat on the bench, holds its sessions in the building formerly belonging to the Inquisition, and on the spot where before that the synagogue had stood. These facts are recorded as illustrating the strange coincidences that the whirligig of time brings about.

An important manuscript, fully three hundred years old, containing a record of astronomical observations, has been discovered by Dr. Winnecke, of Strasburg, in which the places of most of the stars of the Pleiades are given. Other stars and planets, most generally visible to the naked eye, are also correctly located, thus indicating that there must have been telescopes in those days, and that that wonderful instrument is not of so modern an origin as is generally supposed.

The British troops who are fighting against the Boers in Natal; near the borders of the Transvaal Republic, are laboring under the disadvantages which rendered Packenham's advance against New Orleans in 1815 so disastrous. They are not in alluvial swamps, to be sure, but the country is rough and almost unknown to them, while their opponents know, as did Jackson's men, every inch of the ground. Then there are violent thunder-storms almost every afternoon—for it is now midsummer in the Southern hemisphere—and these are accompanied by deluges of rain. The gullies are often filled so as to become temporarily impassible, and the vapor of drying waters is unhealthy and forms fogs which render observation difficult. Carrying the war into Africa is by no means a pleasant undertaking.

THE NEW TESTAMENT REVISION.

NEW YORK, Feb. 8.—The New York Times says: "It was expected by the American Committee on Revision of the New Testament that the book would be published and ready for delivery in this country the present month, but it is announced, on authority of a cable dispatch received by Dr. Philip Schaff, President of the American committee, that publication will not be made until May. When asked by a Times reporter what the cause of delay was, Dr. Schaff said: 'The convention of Canterbury meets to-day, and the revised New Testament will be submitted to that body for its approval. The book will probably be referred to a committee, which will report at the next meeting of the convention in May, when the convention itself will take action.' The announcement that the book was to be overhauled and the word 'hell' restored to places where 'hades' had been used, Dr. Schaff says was utterly without authority."

North Missouri River Press.

WONDERFUL GEYSERS IN MONTANA.

One of the singular natural phenomena known in this section is the formation of two geysers in the strip of country known as the Sag, about a mile and a half from Mr. Patterson's ranch on the Shonkin. They were first seen about a month ago. They are situated in a small canon running out from the wall of rocks on the east of Alkali Lake. Two geysers have appeared, one of them being of monster proportions, throwing up a column of hot water and steam over 100 feet high, the other spouting about fifty feet, but with a larger proportion of water. The diameter is about four inches. The geysers are intermittant in character, and are active during the morning hours, about 8 or 9 o'clock. The formation of the country is a sandstone and gneiss, and has all the appearance of being an ancient river bed. What has produced this curious phenomenon it is, of course, only useless to speculate, as there is no evidence of ancient volcanic activity, and no hypothesis can be formed which will account for it.

NOTICE.

Bro. J. M. Stephenson will be at the Gospel Grove Chapel, Kosciusko county, Indiana, on the fourth Sunday in February, 1881. Meeting to commence on Thursday evening before. Brethren and others cordially invited to attend.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The third Sunday in Feb., at the Center schoolhouse in Clinton co., northwest of Kings Corner. Meeting to commence on Thursday night before. Also the fourth Sunday in Schrierville. Meeting to commence on Thursday night before.

J. S. HAYS.

CHRIST'S KINGDOM!

WHERE IS IT? WHAT IS IT?

—BY JOS. LACIER.—

A discourse delivered at Berwick, Pa. This is a 32 page tract, neatly printed, and should have a wide circulation. Price 10c.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

MISTAKES of INGERSOLL

A review of Col. R. G. Ingersoll's lecture entitled "Mistakes of Moses."

—BY J. M. STEPHENSON.—

This is a large size eight page tract, printed on tinted paper. 10c. each, or 12 for $1.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

Poetry.

British Evangelist.

THE MASTER.

Waiting for Him in the darkness,
Watching for Him in the light;
Listening to catch His orders
In the very midst of the fight;
Seeing His slightest signal
Across the heads of the throngs;
Hearing His faintest whisper
Above earth's liveliest songs;

Dwelling beneath His shelter
In the burden and heat of the day,
Looking for His appearing
As the hours seem fast away,
Singing, to give Him praise;
Working, to please His pleasure;
Bearing with Him the suffering,
Hearing for Him the shame.

Art thou afraid to trust Him,
Seeming so far away?
Wherefore, then, not keep near Him
Closer as the days may?
Why, then, not walk beside Him,
Holding His hand-hand,
Patiently walking onward
All through the weary land?

Communications.

THE SAVIOR'S PERSONAL MINISTRY.

Or, Then and Now.

A DISCOURSE BY WILEY JONES.

He preached in the synagogues throughout all Galilee.—Mark i. 39

Public preaching or teaching as a very ancient institution. Enoch, the seventh from Adam, prophesied and warned the people. Noah was a "preacher of righteousness." Abraham had a very large household that furnished three hundred and eighty trained servants capable of going to war, and these, together with his children, he commanded to "keep the way of the Lord, to do justice and judgment." Gen. xviii. 19. The influence of Abraham's teaching was probably felt in all the various places of his sojourning.

Moses too was a teacher, as well as lawgiver, though he sometimes got Aaron to speak for him. Jehoshaphat, about 900 B. C., sent out men who had the book of the law of the Lord with them, and went throughout all the cities of Judah, and taught the people. Their standard of authority was not human tradition, but "The law of the Lord."

After that we read of Jonah, at whose preaching a whole city repented. Some centuries later, about 400 B. C., we read of what might be called "a protracted meeting" of the Scriptural sort, where for a whole week, "The book of the law of God" was carefully read, and explained to an audience of about 50,000 people. Neh. viii.

Notice the manner of conducting the meeting, it will do for a model—the public speakers to that vast assembly "read in the Book in the law of God distinctly, and gave the people the sense, and caused the people to understand the reading.

This was a thoroughly doctrinal and practical style of preaching, and oh, how different from the claptrap and bamboozling style of oratory heard from some of the most popular pulpits! When shall it once be that the occupants will lay aside their Balaamism, cease their striving for the praise of men, and meekly adopt the reverent, useful, and sublime style of Ezra? And the taste of the audience as well as the style of preaching differed from the modern customs. The people did not clamor to Ezra for a grand oration closing with the usual "eloquent peroration," or that he would give them a "concert of sacred song," or would open his portfolio and read to them "one of his very best and most popular lectures;" but rather they desired him to read to them the book of the law.

I have heard many pieces of oratory, but never any of such thrilling eloquence as the proper and articulate reading of God's word.

And what was its effect at that meeting? At the mere opening of the book all the people stood up, as a spontaneous act of reverence for the word of God—they stood as a servant stands to receive his master's orders. And there, in the open street, from the morning until mid-day they were attentive, and all the people wept when they heard the words of the law. And for seven days the sweetest and best part of "the feast" was hearing the law read and expounded.

"Thy words were found, and I did eat them. . . . . How sweet are thy words unto my taste, yea sweeter than honey to my mouth." Jer. xv. 16; Psa. cxix. 103.

If they were so attentive to hear the law, how much more ought we to be to hear the gospel, for "If the word spoken by angels was steadfast, and every transgression and disobedience received a just recompense of reward, how shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation; which at the first began to be spoken by the Lord, and was confirmed unto us by them that heard him?" Heb. ii. 2, 3.

But some in these days, when the gospel is being read and expounded, lean back on the seats, and look about, and some even sleep; thereby slighting the brightest treasure that earth contains, for what is man, after all his boasted power and dignity, without God's word? "Man that is in honor and understandeth not is like the beasts that perish." Psa. xlix. 20.

From the illustrious examples in Old Testament history the Jews were, or ought to have been, perfectly familiar with the idea of going about and teaching the people publicly. And it is a remarkable fact that the synagogue services, in the time of the Savior's ministry, were, in outward appearance, very much like those of a Protestant congregation at this day; and the friends and opponents of the truth acted very much as now.

Three times a year the men of the land were required to go up to Jerusalem to worship, but as for the rest of the time, they and their families were scattered, save a work, in the great and impressive stillness of the ancient Sabbath, to attend the village synagogue or meeting-house, as we would now say and engage in prayer by reading the Scriptures, and in exhortations.

Now, when the Lord appeared among them his doctrine was embraced principally, with some few objections by the poor of "honest and good heart." But its bitterest foes were the rich and influential—the so-called "religious"—members of the popular and leading denominations of the day, the Scribes, Pharisees, Sadducees, etc. Many who believed on Him among the chief rulers were afraid to confess him, lest they should be put out of the synagogue; for they loved the praise of men more than the praise of God." John xii. 42, 43.

That is the trouble with many professors today. If the gospel of the kingdom were fashionable and popular they would confess it and glory in it; but as it is not they turn their backs upon it, and go on gliding smoothly down the broad road to perdition. This love of human praise works much ruin, for Satan takes advantage of it to restrain chief rulers from confessing Christ, and afterwards uses their example to restrain humbler people—"Have any rulers or the Pharisees believed on him?" John vii. 48. To this day such an argument has power over many thousands of shackled and benighted minds.

Yes, if we would profit by the lessons of sacred history which are written for our learning and admonition, Rom. xv. 4; 1 Cor. x. 11, we must be on our guard and remember that the titled and influential professors of religion were among the Savior's bitterest foes.

Even the Roman Centurion cried out, "Truly this was the Son of God." Judas said, "I have betrayed the innocent blood." The penitent thief said, "This man hath done nothing amiss." Pilate's wife pronounced him a "just man," and Pilate, the heathen judge, declared, "I find in him no fault." Mat. xxvii. 4, 19, 54; Luke xxiii. 47; John viii. 38.

But the chief priests and elders clamored for his death. Pilate, however, had discovered that "for envy" they had delivered the Savior to him, Mat. xxvii. 1, 18; hence, to accomplish their design, they artfully made use of the multitude, persuading them to call for the release of Barabbas, rather than that of Christ!

What a choice was this! And what words can express our astonishment that those who were looked up to by the people with the same veneration as the so-called Reverends and D. Ds. of the present day should be found persuading the people to choose a robber rather than Christ! Matthew xxvii. 20

They claimed to have the knowledge and piety of the nation. They assumed great titles, and devout attitudes; and when they walked in their long robes with slow steps, as if meditating on holy things, they displayed broad phylacteries crowded with the precepts of the law, as if their hearts and lives were entirely devoted to the same.

It required considerable mental independence in a patriotic Jew to convince him that such people were leading their followers to perdition. When he went up to the renowned and crowded capital of the nation, and saw the long and glittering train of chief priests and elders ministering at the splendid temple, amid the perfume of burning incense, and the ascending smoke of sacrifice, and the solemn chanting, and the sound of trumpets, and the profound respect shown them by the multitude, he would hardly think these same chief priests and elders were the foes of true religion, and were at that moment plotting to crucify the Son of God!

To the careless and lazy Jew who would rather judge by outward appearances and take everything for granted, than go to the trouble and pains of searching the Scriptures for himself, those people would seem the veritable servants of the Lord: and a body of "reverend divines" of which the nation might be proud. And yet they would send out spies to try to entangle the Savior in his discourse and to catch some word by which they might accuse him to the Romans, who held the death-power. Mat. xii. 14; Luke xx. 20.

Money that ought to have been spent to the glory of God, they took to pay Judas Iscariot. That is the kind of people they were. If you ever meet any of their successors beware how you give them your money. In the simplicity of your heart you may mean it for religion, but if you don't mind they will use it against religion.

When you go into the great cities, and see the splendid churches, and the crowds of rich worshipers, and hear the great organ, and the fine singing, and the rounded tones of the pulpit orator, and hear of their great foreign missions, compassing sea and land, you too may be deceived by appearances, and think these grand and popular denominations are right, unless you have enough Berean industry and independence to search the Scriptures and be guided by what they teach.

Now, when the Lord appeared among them his doctrine was embraced principally, with some few objections by the poor of "honest and good heart." But its bitterest foes were the rich and influential—the so-called "religious"—members of the popular and leading denominations of the day, the Scribes, Pharisees, Sadducees, etc. Many who believed on Him among the chief rulers were afraid to confess him, lest they should be put out of the synagogue; for they loved the praise of men more than the praise of God." John xii. 42, 43.

That is the trouble with many professors today. If the gospel of the kingdom were fashionable and popular they would confess it and glory in it; but as it is not they turn their backs upon it, and go on gliding smoothly down the broad road to perdition. This love of human praise works much ruin, for Satan takes advantage of it to restrain chief rulers from confessing Christ, and afterwards uses their example to restrain humbler people—"Have any rulers or the Pharisees believed on him?" John vii. 48. To this day such an argument has power over many thousands of shackled and benighted minds.

Yes, if we would profit by the lessons of sacred history which are written for our learning and admonition, Rom. xv. 4; 1 Cor. x. 11, we must be on our guard and remember that the titled and influential professors of religion were among the Savior's bitterest foes.

Even the Roman Centurion cried out, "Truly this was the Son of God." Judas said, "I have betrayed the innocent blood." The penitent thief said, "This man hath done nothing amiss." Pilate's wife pronounced him a "just man," and Pilate, the heathen judge, declared, "I find in him no fault." Mat. xxvii. 4, 19, 54; Luke xxiii. 47; John viii. 38.

But the chief priests and elders clamored for his death. Pilate, however, had discovered that "for envy" they had delivered the Savior to him, Mat. xxvii. 1, 18; hence, to accomplish their design, they artfully made use of the multitude, persuading them to call for the release of Barabbas, rather than that of Christ!

What a choice was this! And what words can express our astonishment that those who were looked up to by the people with the same veneration as the so-called Reverends and D. Ds. of the present day should be found persuading the people to choose a robber rather than Christ! Matthew xxvii. 20

They claimed to have the knowledge and piety of the nation. They assumed great titles, and devout attitudes; and when they walked in their long robes with slow steps, as if meditating on holy things, they displayed broad phylacteries crowded with the precepts of the law, as if their hearts and lives were entirely devoted to the same.

It required considerable mental independence in a patriotic Jew to convince him that such people were leading their followers to perdition. When he went up to the renowned and crowded capital of the nation, and saw the long and glittering train of chief priests and elders ministering at the splendid temple, amid the perfume of burning incense, and the ascending smoke of sacrifice, and the solemn chanting, and the sound of trumpets, and the profound respect shown them by the multitude, he would hardly think these same chief priests and elders were the foes of true religion, and were at that moment plotting to crucify the Son of God!

To the careless and lazy Jew who would rather judge by outward appearances and take everything for granted,

Thus we see that Paul pronounces one accursed for preaching another gospel, and I am sure no one in the audience is willing to say Paul was bigoted or uncharitable. You need hardly expect to be more charitable than Paul. He wrote a whole chapter on charity; and while he says that without charity one would be as a sounding brass and a tinkling cymbal, he also says that "without faith it is impossible to please God," and that "if any man preach any other gospel, let him be accursed."

In whatever light we view the subject, we are therefore brought to the logical, absolute, and essential necessity of believing that gospel which the adorable Redeemer preached—"The gospel of the kingdom."

Of course, the gospel of the kingdom is the good message about the kingdom. This good message is composed of those things which the Bible testifies in reference to the kingdom; which things are called, in one place "the things concerning the kingdom," and in another "the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ." Acts xix. 7; viii. 12.

And now will you believe those things concerning the kingdom, and thus come out on the Lord's side; or will you refuse to believe them, and thus take sides with the chief priests and elders? Can you hesitate which to choose?

Selections.

Sunday Morning.

THE REVISION OF THE NEW TESTAMENT.

DR. ANON'S.

During the last ten years a work has been in progress among us which has an interest for all English speaking people—the revision of the English New Testament.

It began with resolutions of the Convocation of Canterbury at a session held May 5, 1870. They were to the effect that it was desirable that a revision of the authorized version of the Holy Scriptures should be undertaken; that no changes should be made but such as faithfulness required; that the style of the language of the existing version should be closely followed, and that the co-operation of scholars of other nations and other religious bodies be invited.

A committee of eight bishops and eight presbyters was appointed to carry out these resolutions, of whom three Bishops (Winchester, Gloucester and Bristol, and Salisbury), together with the Prolocutor of the lower house, now Dean of Lichfield, the Dean of Canterbury (Dr. Alford), the Dean of Westminster, and Canon Blakesley (now Dean of Lincoln), formed the original New Testament Company. At the first meeting of the united committee twenty-one scholars were elected as members of the New Testament Company. The same year companies were formed in America to co-operate with the English companies; the New Testament Company consisting of fifteen eminent American scholars. Both the English and the American Company contain members of the larger religious bodies in the two countries respectively. About half of the added members of the British companies were members of the English Church. In the American companies the various religious bodies are pretty equally represented.

The mode of working between the two companies is interesting. The English company first revised the Greek text and the translation, examining together every verse and every word. This was done at the rate of about forty verses a day, and it took six years to complete the first revision. As each portion was completed, copies were sent to the American company, who in due course sent back their criticism and suggestions. These were carefully considered during the second revision, which occupied two years and a half. As the various portions of the second revision were completed, they were sent to America, and the Americans sent back further criticisms and suggestions, which were in turn carefully considered. At last the revised version was sent over to America in its final form, and the American brethren sent back in return a list of passages in which they record their preference for other renderings than those adopted by the English company. These, it is understood, will be found at the end of the large edition of the revised New Testament to be issued by the university presses.

The meetings of the English company began each day at 11 o'clock and closed at 5. After prayer, the minutes of the previous meeting were read and confirmed. A verse was then read from the authorized version. Any proposals for changes in the Greek text were made, discussed and voted upon; and then any changes in the renderings of the English translation.

At the first revision a majority of the members decided all changes. At the second revision all these changes were liable to be reconsidered, and then no disputed change, either in the Greek text or in the revised translation, was affirmed unless a majority of two-thirds of the members present approved it. This rule was laid down at the outset, and gave a great preponderance, not unreasonably, to the authorised version. At the same time it was likely to end in retention of readings and renderings which a decided majority of the company deemed the less satisfactory. It is obvious to remark, that under such a rule many a rendering was likely to be retained, not because the authorized version is the best possible, but because it was not found practicable to hit upon expressions which were deemed by two-thirds of the company to be preferable to the authorized. Sometimes, too, as it may be supposed, the rhythm and sacred associations of the authorized version would carry the day against renderings that had possibly greater technical accuracy on their side. Most readers will rejoice in the conservative influence of these rules, and they have certainly ended in the more careful examination of every word of the New Testament, whether in the English or in the Greek.

The meetings of the English Company were generally held, by the courtesy of the Dean of Westminster, in the Jerusalem Chamber, a room belonging to the Deanery. Here met the Assembly of Divines in 1643; and, in 1689, the commission to revise the liturgy of the English Church. Some of the greatest English theologians of all schools have assembled within its walls, and many eminent men have lain in state on their way to their final resting place in the adjoining abbey. A room richer in appropriate historical memories is not to be found in England.

The New Testament Company has met ten times during the last ten years, for four days each time, and generally for seven hours each day. It may be said, therefore, that they have given 400 working days to these conferences, in addition to much individual previous preparation. And as this work has been done without fee or reward by busy men, they deserve on that account alone the hearty thanks of all the churches.

N. Y. Observer.

LETTERS FROM DR. JESSUP.

Memorial Hall; Turkish Oppression; Murder and Robbery; Refinement and Cruelty.

BEIRUT, Syria, Dec. 29, 1880.

The Memorial Sunday School Hall was dedicated on Dec. 19, with appropriate services. This building was chiefly erected by Mr. and Mrs. H. Dale, of New York city, as a memorial of their infant son Gerald, who died in 1879. Other friends have aided in its furnishing and completion, and it is a beautiful and convenient edifice for the purpose of Sunday school and Bible class instruction.

More than 1,200 children and adults were present at the opening exercises, and many went away unable to gain admission. Children were present from eight different Sunday schools in Beirut, and addresses were made by Rev. Mr. Dale, of Zahleh, brother of the donors, by Dr. Eddy and by the Superintendent.

The singing and responsive reading of the Scriptures were not the least interesting part of the services. One of the German Lutheran deaconesses brought twenty of her orphan pupils, who sang a German song very sweetly. The Anglo-American Sunday school came in force and sang an English hymn, "Whiter than Snow."

Miss Taylor's Moslem girls were present with their snow-white veils, and some eight or nine hundred Arab children. The students and professors of the college, European gentlemen and ladies, and natives of various sects completed the congregation.

The Sunday schools appointed a committee to prepare a letter of thanks to Mr. and Mrs. Dale, and the whole occasion was one long to be remembered.

The Turkish Government has sent an official request to the Beirut Syrian Protestant College, asking for seventy physicians for the Turkish army, to receive forty dollars a month, and the rank of Kaloghossi. It is stipulated, however, that the medical graduates shall have obtained the diploma of the Imperial Medical College in Constantinople. Many of the graduates have been to the Capital and obtained this diploma, but the failure of the Government to fulfil its promise with regard to the expenses of medical candidates, has greatly embarrassed the young men.

The Porte, in declining to acknowledge the diplomas of the Beirut Medical College, pledged itself to pay the traveling expenses of Syrian youth in going to Constantinople, and to support them while there undergoing their examinations.

The Beirut graduates stand high all over the Empire, and a distinguished Ottoman official remarked not long since, that ere long, instead of, as now, Beirut being required to go to Constantinople for examination, Constantinople would have to go to Beirut.

The Arabic journals have recently been warned by official proclamation to abstain from publishing anything which may be directly or constructively derogatory to the Turkish Government.

This includes telegrams, extracts from foreign journals, historical and geographical, stories and articles attacking any of the religions of the Empire. A free press is not to be hoped for in this generation in Turkey, yet there is a remarkable degree of liberty in the publication of books and tracts, and especially in the sale of the Scriptures in all the languages of Turkey.

Not long since a letter appeared in the Jenneh, Arabic journal of Beirut, from Mardin, giving an account of certain outrages in that province, which show what the reforms are, which a Turkish Prime Minister gravely informed Europe are already being executed in the interior of Turkey. The letter is as follows:

"The people of Mizy, all of them Christians, received official notice that the Kaimakam of the district, with the Mudir and the Kadi and a large body of troops were coming to the town to collect the annual taxes, and that the villagers were to feed all these officials and soldiers during their stay, together with their animals.

The people being desperately poor, sent word that they were not able to feed so many, but that in justice, the expense should be apportioned among all the villages of the Kods, or district.

The messenger took the reply to the Kaimakam, whereupon he, with the Mudir and Kadi became greatly enraged and ordered the soldiers to march and attack the village. When the villagers saw the officials and soldiers approaching, they went out, men, women and children, to meet them with every manifestation of respect, supposing that they came in peace, when suddenly the soldiers opened fire on the crowd, killing three men and one woman and wounding three others.

They then attacked the church, breaking down the doors, and plundering it of all its silver and gold utensils, and a large lot of property deposited there for safe keeping. They then plundered the other two churches, after which they scattered over the village, breaking open every house and carrying off every article of value and committing the most frightful excesses.

The men, women and children all fled to the mountains and rocks, where they remained three days without food or shelter. The plunder was sent off on mules and horses to the homes of the officials, who then sent two Christian priests to bring the people back to their homes, promising them the immediate restoration of their church and private property.

The people returned and found the dead bodies of their friends still unburied and torn to pieces by the dogs, and begged permission to bury them. After this the Kaimakam asked them for a list of the stolen property. They replied, of what use is a list, when for three days pack animals have been carrying our goods to all parts of the province to the houses of the government officials, and even the Kadi has taken two loads of the church furniture and sent it to his house in Nusibin.

Moreover, two men, named Abder Rahman Effendi and Hamid Mosulli, loaded seven mules with plunder. The very threshing floors were stripped and the people obliged to carry their own property two days journey to the homes of the officials.

After all these outrages, the Kaimakam demanded of the leading men of the people the payment of eight thousand piasters cash land tax. They replied: Restore our property and we will pay the tax. This answer offended him, and he ordered the soldiers to torture them, which they did, when the men promised to borrow the money.

They were then allowed to go to a neighboring village and borrow eight thousand piasters which was paid to the Kaimakam. He then surrounded the men with a cordon of soldiers and wrested from them their signet rings, in order to send a document to the Waly of the province, praising the Kaimakam and thanking him for his protection and just government,—this document signed by all the seals of all the leading men of the town!

A few old priestly robes of no value were then sent back to the village with word from the generous Kaimakam that he had now restored their church property.

Complaint was sent to Said Pasha Mutserrif of Mardin, who at once arrested the officials and was trying to restore the plunder.

The probability is that the officials will have to disgorge freely, and the poor people receive no satisfaction.

The above is Turkish protection, "such protection as vultures give to lambs—covering and devouring them."

The new Wali of Syria, who has replaced Midhat Pasha, is Haidi Pasha. He has made a tour from Damascus to Hums and Tripoli, and organized in Tripoli and Hums a wagon company running freight and passenger wagons between the two cities.

He expressed his utter hostility to any railway from Tripoli east to the Euphrates. Two English companies are in Constantinople bidding against each other for the charter to build this railway.

European applicants for charters for railways, mines, etc., are always welcomed in Constantinople, especially if rival companies bid against each other. They help the local Turkish finances, but their success is extremely improbable.

Exegetical.

At evening weeping may come in, but in the morning there is joy.—Psa. xxx. 5.

The above is the translation that Gesenius gives to the Hebrew—

בערב ילין בכי ולבקר רנה

There are two distinctly different ideas drawn from the original expression. One is, that weeping comes in to stay over night; and the other is, that it makes a protracted evening call.

The Vulgate gives the latter sense: Ad vesperum demorabitur fletus,—Weeping will stay during the evening. Luther translates according to this sense—den Abend lang wahret des Woinen—the evening long weeping continues. The idea seems to be that although the day may have its sunshine and shadows, yet life's gray twilight brings the sorrow-clouds upon which the sun, that has gone down behind the darkened west gilds no bright rainbow of gladness. But "unto the upright there ariseth light in the darkness;" and "light is sown for the righteous, and gladness for the upright in heart."

There is One that "turneth the shadow of death into morning; The Lord is his name." This morning will come when he, of whom the Rock of Israel spoke, shall appear and usher in the day of God. "And he shall be as the light of the morning, when the sun riseth, even a morning without clouds."

Not only is the kingdom-day to rise in resplendent auroral brightness, but the life-day, that "dawns on the night of the grave," will break upon the world in such tintings of morning-glories as shall transfigure the skies. "After two days he will revive us; in the third day he will raise us up, and we shall live in his sight. Then shall we know, if we follow on to know the Lord; that his going forth is prepared as the morning." Then his glory will cover the heavens, and the earth will be full of his praise.

This morning, that brings the kingdom, the resurrection, and the new creation, brings the matin songs of everlasting joy. "Thy dead men shall live, together with my dead body shall they arise. Awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust; for thy dew is as the dew of herbs, and the earth shall cast out the dead." In life's sorrowful evening, tears may flow till death's icy hand freezes the fountains, and the frost-glazed eye weeps its woes no more forever. The grief-broken heart and the anguish-bowed head at last find the repose of the grave during the night of forgetfulness.

At length the Sun of Righteousness arises with healing in his wings, and the ransomed of the Lord return to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads; they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away. Weeping may come in, draped in her sable robes of lamentation, mourning, and woe, to flood the eyes with tears of ceaseless grief all the evening long, till the heart stands still and the pale hands cross a breast that anguish heaves no more. The long dark night of death may then settle down upon the eyes that have forgotten to weep till the day-spring from on high shall bring the resurrection morning of life when the Lord of hosts shall destroy the covering cast over all people, and the vail that is spread over all nations; when he shall swallow up death in victory; and the Lord God shall wipe away tears from all faces. In the evening weeping may come in but in the morning there is joy.

Poetry.

SORROW NOT.

1 Thess. iv, 13.

Oh! weep not for the dead,
The sleepers of the Lord!
Each in his silent bed
Awaits the quickening word.
Oh! weep not for the dead
Who knew the Joyful Sound;
The members of the Head
Repose in holy ground.

Oh! weep not for the dead,
Whose works have gone before
They wrestled, fought and bled,
To live forevermore.
Oh! weep not for the dead,
The meek ones of the earth,
They slumber without dread,
In hope of Spirit-birth.

Oh! weep not for the dead
Of Abraham's royal race:
They shall by Yahweh led,
Enter the Holy place,
Then weep not for the dead
The blessed of the Lord,
But in their footsteps tread
And be at peace with God.

Selections.

The Messenger.

THE CONTINENTAL JEW-BAITING.

M. W. S.

The strange anti-Jewish crusade in Prussia continues to run its course, and is attracting the attention of thoughtful men all over the world. According to the Times, Berlin correspondent, "the agitation against the Jews has become more than ever the question of the day" there.

New Year's morning in that most enlightened capital was ushered in by "some disgraceful scenes of disorder and violence" against the Jews, in which the police proved "comparatively helpless." "The crusade seems to be gaining in force—that of the fist, however, being now substituted for that of the tongue.

While the movement has taken deep root among the "rude, unthinking masses," it is significant that even University Professors and men of culture join in the hue and cry, while, "the youth who are now in training to become the intellectual leaders of the nation," are foremost in acts of violence. Large, and in some cases riotous, public meetings have been held by the anti-Semitic party, and a counter movement has now begun on the part of other prominent politicians and authors, who feel the crusade to be "a disgrace to the century." So that German society seems on the point of dividing into two opposing sections—those who would deprive the Jews of their liberties and drive them out of the country, and those who would continue to grant them equal rights with every other citizen.

What side the Emperor and his Chancellor are disposed to favor is not known, although their sympathies are said by some to be distinctly anti-Jewish; but the Crown Prince has thought it necessary to indicate that he at all events views the agitation only with grief and disgust. The movement is spreading into neighboring countries. The Bavarian authorities have issued orders for the suppression of all attempts to initiate the crusade among their population. But in Austro-Hungary there seems to be a feeling akin to that of a portion of the Prussian people, and arising from the same cause, viz.—jealousy of the financial and commercial supremacy of the Hebrews.

Hungary we are informed by a letter in the Christian World, "is at present one of the countries in which hatred toward the Jews is shown in the most dangerous form. Within the last few months, six Jewish usurers have been murdered, and deputy Istoczy has called for the formation of anti-Semitic societies in order to bring about a movement which the Hungarian Parliament has already had under discussion.

As many as seventy-eight such societies have sprung up. The one in Pesth numbers 2800 members, and an anti-Jewish literature is continually fanning the flame."

While it would be rash to predict what may be the result of this fresh outburst of persecution, we cannot but be struck with the possibility that it (or some similar movement) may prove an important factor in bringing about that partial re-settlement in the Holy Land of a portion of the Jewish people still in unbelief, which seems to be required by the prophetic word, and to be daily coming nearer.

Already, according to the Jewish Chronicle, the German crusade is driving Jews to England and the United States. But it is significant that it has awakened a distinct yearning for a return to their ancient inheritance, if only there they might find security for peaceful occupation—and this at a time when, as the Jewish Chroicle puts it, "we are inundated with books and pamphlets on Palestine, and the air is thick with schemes for colonising the Holy Land once more," foremost among which is Mr Oliphant's scheme, to which we have more than one referred. Let the Jewish Chronicle express its own ideas. In a notice of Mr. Oliphant's "Land of Gilead," it says;

"His book will not have been written in vain if it makes even that set of men who are by their descent most interested in Palestine bethink themselves how they can benefit the oppressed of their own race, gratify a natural and praiseworthy longing, and at the same time lay the foundation of a settlement that may in troublous times to come be a haven of refuge to all who suffer from the fact of being Israelites.

The philosophy of race has led in one country to the discovery that Teutons cannot live amicably with Semites. The converse hypothesis that Jews may share the privileges of Muscovites or Wallachs has hardly been broached in Russia and has been met by undisguised contempt in Roumania. If there were a nook on earth from which Israelites would not be expelled, a place where it was a matter of right and not of sufferance to call oneself Jew and practice the faith of one's fathers, much would be gained for oppressed Israelites.

In every country the Jews labor under this limitation, tacit or express, that if they become too numerous or too distinguished they are pretty sure to rouse the feeling of jealousy always latent, often manifested in the United States and in Germany, not quite hidden when election quarrels in England lower the customary high tone of our public life.

To found in Palestine a colony that would offer an always open home to Jews who sought peace and quiet rather than great wealth; and to manifest by its good order and concord that Jews were excellent citizens collectively as well as individually, would be to do no slight service; and if the most powerful impulse to this end comes from a Gentile writer like Mr. Oliphant, we, who have given so much in morality and religion to the Gentile world, can afford to learn something in our turn."

Again, in referring to the death of the novelist, George Eliot, it goes back to her "Daniel Deronda and its "ideal, Jew," Mordecai Cohen, with his aspirations after national restoration, says:

"We doubt whether even the Jewish public has appreciated the ideal of Mordecai to its full extent. He does not advocate the return of all Jews to Palestine: Jews were wanderers before the dispersion and might continue so till the end of days. But if a Jewish Republic were established in Palestine carrying with it the sympathies of all mankind, the condition of Jews in other lands would be raised by the knowledge of the high ideal which, in Mordecai's mind, the new Judea would have before it For Asia is awakening, and in another century the half of mankind which inhabits the east will have shaken off the sleep of superstition.

It would then be Israel's mission, if situated on the border-land of east and west, to mediate between Asia and Europe.

This idea is grand enough to make a satisfactory finale to the tragedy of Israel's history. And its practicability is attested by works like Mr. Oliphant's "Land of Gilead."

As for its desirability, recent events must give serious reflection to every thinking mind. The 'Red Spectre' of the Judenhetze has arisen in turn in America and England; it stalks through Germany and has reached France and Italy, while in Russia and Africa it is perpetually brooding.

If it were unhappily to become international, it would be hard to see any alternative between a total renunciation of Judaism or a return to the Holy Land. Every Jewish heart will know which would be the alternative chosen by Israel. In that case, 'Daniel Deronda' would be something more than a word, it would contain a prophecy."

PALESTINE EXPLORATION. "Mr. Oliphant found everywhere in his travels through Syria the idea prevalent that an English occupation of the country was imminent. The traveler himself was looked upon as a pioneer; whole villages turned out to receive him: the voices of hundreds of men and women sang welcome to one who represented to them a hoped-for period of order and prosperity." However this "idea" may turn out in the event, it is likely that the attention of the public in this country will for some time to come be directed to the lands through which he traveled.

The Palestine Exploration Fund is about to send out a surveying party to do, for the country east of Jordan and the Dead Sea, what they have already done for Western Palestine.

The following letter from their chairman, which appeared in the public papers will best express their designs:

"Palestine Exploration Fund,
1 Adam Street, Adelphia, January 5, 1891.

"Sir, Will you allow me through the medium of your columns to announce to your readers that the committee of this society have decided upon undertaking the survey of Palestine east of Jordan.

The success with which our survey of Western Palestine has been completed, the general interest which has been aroused on the subject, the valuable results which have been obtained, the satisfaction with which our great map of Palestine has been received by all classes and in all countries, makes us confident that we shall receive ample support in the extension of our work.

The present condition of our knowledge, as regards this great district—which includes Bashan, Golanitis, the Hauran, the Lejah, Batanea, Gilead and Moab—resembles very much that of Western Palestine when the survey was first commenced.

That is, reconnoissance sketch maps had been made of parts of the country, but every successive traveler was able to point out the deficiencies, errors and unexplored tracts on the maps. From a Biblical point of view the associations of the country are extremely interesting. Among these are the places connected with the stories of Balaam and Balak, Gideon, Jephthah, the wars of Moab, the siege of Rabbath Ammon, the fortress of Kerak, the refuge of the early Christian Church, the events connected with Cesarea Philipi, Ramoth Gilead, Bethsaida Julias, Gadara, Heshbon, Machaerus, Chillerhoe, and many others. The country is covered with ruins, many of them in a wonderful state of preservation, and it differs from the West in this important respect, that whereas Christian, Jew, Saracen, Crusader, and Turk have one after the other contributed to the demolition of the monuments of Western Palestine, in the East there has been one period of destruction and one only, and since then the land has been left to the tribes who wander over it with their cattle, but neither build nor destroy. As the survey of Western Palestine has been executed, so we promise, as far as a committee can promise, shall be executed that of the East. The same trained skill will be employed upon it, the same thoroughness and earnest conscientious work will be devoted to it. I am, etc,

JAMES GLAISHER, F. R. S.,
Chairman Ex. Com.

Communications.

A WORD OF ENCOURAGEMENT.

T. E. ADAMS.

I wish to say that I am highly pleased with our paper in its new dress. Its clear type, good material and general make-up is surely praiseworthy. If those long-winded writers would first boil it down and then communicate the result, much good would follow, and time and patience increase. I think THE RESTITUTION now will meet the hearty approval of one and all the friends of truth, who in turn should make a special effort to introduce and increase its circulation and usefulness. Some of dear friends are falling asleep, having finished their course and kept the faith, and the mourners go about the streets, while some others are growing cold and indifferent, being carried away with the cares of this life, and the various fascinating elements of evil, while sin is on the increase. But the end is near. Now let me suggest that every friend of truth, and reader of our dear RESTITUTION, make an extra effort to first rouse up self. "Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light. See then that ye walk circumspectly, not as fools, but as wise men, redeeming the time, because the days are evil." Put away our sins, and reform our many bad and useless habits, "crucify the flesh with the affections and lusts, draw near to God and he will draw near to us." Show our love to God by walking in his ways blameless, and thus prepare ourselves to meet our soon returning Lord in peace. Then let us each and every one turn missionary for a time at least, and go out and hunt up some fellow traveller on death's dark road and point him to the Lamb of God "that taketh away the sins of the world." And let us not forget to honorably patronize THE RESTITUTION ourselves and see that others share its good things and thus work while it is day, and gain a rich reward.

Youths' Column.

Children of the Light.

RIPPLE.

"Ye are children of the light"
Earth is full of sunny places:
E'en the flowers seem more bright
With the sun upon their faces.

"Ye are children;" well we know
Children love the sunny places;
And like flowers fairer grow
With the sun upon their faces.

"Children of the light!" How fair
Seem to us the heavenly places
Where, beyond our sight, they wear
Light immortal on their faces:

"Ye are children of the light!"
Earth is full of sunny places,
Let us reck them ere death's night
Shut the sunlight from our faces.

We may win a smile of love,
Even in earth's darkest places,
If we only look above
With the sunlight on our faces.

Our Dumb Animals.

A Pretty Sight.

The author of "Camps in the Caribbees" claims to have more humanity than the average lady of fashion; and perhaps he is right. It is probably more from thoughtlessness and ignorance, however, than from cruelty, that fine ladies demand the sacrifice of beautiful birds for their decoration. Fashionable people are not usually naturalists. The author makes one of his interviews with a humming-bird family the text for rather a severe sermon.

While in the Carribbean woods, he unexpectedly beheld a vision of loveliness seldom vouchsafed to the dwellers of the icy north, which he thus describes:

Close at my hand, within two feet of me, says he, sat a tiny humming-bird on a downy nest. Fearlessly it glanced at me with its bright black eyes, and curiously it followed my every motion with its shapely little head. A buzzing of wings attracted my attention, and I beheld the mate of the one on the nest, who darted at me with unmistakable fury, his glittering crest erected, and anger shooting from his eyes. Verily! had his diminutive body been in proportion to his heart, I should have been destroyed. Satisfied that he could not drive me away by darting at my eyes, he rested a moment on a twig near the nest, where he was at once joined by his mate; who seemed to endeavor by caresses to soothe his ruffled temper, and to assure him that my intentions toward them were not evil.

Touched to the heart by this exhibition of trust and love, I would not have harmed these little innocents for a fortune. Exposed for a moment were two eggs, white as snow, and small as seed-pearls.

Now look about you in church and ask what that charming lady, with a humming-bird in her hat, would have done had she been there. She would have caught the little brooding mother-bird and choked it to death. She would have taken an advantage of the chivalry and heroism of the little husband, to catch him, as he charged down upon her, and have wrenched his soldierly neck. Then she would have robbed the nest, blown the specks of gold out of the pearly eggs, skinned the two little birds, and put the whole on her hat.

No, she could not be such a savage as that! you may say. But she has, and worse! She has paid a savage Carib or Brazilian not only for doing so, but also for skinning the birds alive; for that is exactly what they do in order to enhance and preserve the brilliancy of the plumage. Don't be too hard upon her. She had not seen it in this light before. We will warrant that she will buy no more humming-birds for her hat.

Sermons for the Little Ones.

No. 4.

How the Fathers Are to Get the Land of Canaan.

In our last, we said Abraham, Isaac and Jacob were dead, and that they had never had the land that God promised to give them for their own.

How are they to get it? You remember that we were trying to find out what God meant when he said to Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, that he would be their God. Turn to Ex. iii. 6, and you will find Moses calling the Lord, "the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac and the God of Jacob;" and in the New Testament you will find—Luke xx. 38—Jesus saying, "now that the dead are raised, even Moses showed at the bush, when he called the Lord, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac and the God of Jacob." When God said to these old fathers, "I will be your God," they knew he meant the same, as if he had said, "I will raise you from the dead," for Jesus says that is what he meant. They knew they could not have the land forever, until they were made to live forever.

In the eleventh chapter of Hebrews, you will find how much God's people have suffered that they might be waked up in the better resurrection. They all died without getting the land, but they were sure of getting it when they should awake from the dead. God had promised to give them the land forever; and they died, believing what he said—certain that they would live again, and have it as God had told them.

Abraham looked for the same beautiful city, that we are looking for. He expected to see the pearly gates of the New Jerusalem—to come to the time when the tabernacle of God should be with men—when Jesus should be God of those who overcome, and who are to inherit all thing.

He looked for a country just as beautiful as Heaven—for a heavenly, or heaven-like country, where there should be no more tears, neither sorrow nor crying.

But, you will wonder what all this has to do with your coming to Jesus and learning of him! It has everything to do with it. You cannot come to Jesus as you should come, unless you understand all this.

It was necessary, in order that the people who had believed and minded God, should be waked from death to live forever—that the keys of the grave should be given to some one able to open it, and able to give eternal life, to all God's children who are sleeping in the dust.

If no such person ever had, or ever would come, good people, and bad ones too, would stay in the ground—they would always be dead

But God never tells a lie, and when he said to Abraham that he should have the land forever—that he would be his God, and that in his seed, all nations should be blessed, he meant to teach him that just such a person would sometime come.

Abraham saw Jesus by faith, when it was told him that "his seed should possess the gates of his enemies,

Isaac and Jacob looked to the Savior as theseu, who was to give them all that God had promised.

All of Abraham's people were taught to look for a Savior who should redeem them from death. We know this from what David said in the sixteenth Psalm. He was glad because the God had taught him that his "flesh would rest in hope"—that he would not be left in the grave, because God would not suffer His Holy One (Jesus) to decay and turn to dust. That Holy One would shew him the path of life.

In his presence would be fullness of joy—at his right hand, pleasures evermore.

By reading Acts xxvi., you will find that all the tribes of Israel, looked upon the promise of God to the fathers, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, as a promise to raise them from the dead. The hope of being made alive again, was their hope. They hoped to come to that promise of land by being waked up to live forever.

But they did not seem to understand that some one must come and die for them, before this could be brought about. They knew that the Savior was coming to bring up the dead people, but they thought he would be great and powerful, and glorious—would open the graves at once, and, taking his place on the throne, make everybody, all over the earth, mind him.

They knew that God did not forgive people unless there was bloodshed.

They were taught in all their sacrifices, to look to a sacrifice to come. The lamb that they offered to God, pictured a suffering and dying Savior, but somehow, they overlooked the meaning of the lamb, and saw only the King in his glory.

David did not do this. He knew Jesus must go into the grave, before he could bring other people out of it, and so did all God's prophets, and those who studied hard to know what God had taught.

In our next we will go back to the word, seed.

THE FRIEND OF THE CHILDREN.

Sententious.

Things past may be repented, but not recalled.

Such as every one is inwardly, so he judgeth outwardly.

I have lived to thank God that all my prayers have not been answered.—Jean Ingelow.

Heaven gives our years of fading strength
Indemnifying fleetness;
And those of youth, a seeming length
Proportioned to their sweetness.

It don't take a very smart person to find fault; but to suggest the proper course to be pursued requires a person with sanctified judgment, aided by the Spirit of God.

However obscure your lot may be, this much is certain, that in the circle in which you move some minds and hearts are being influenced by your example. For good or for ill, your words and your whole character are making an indelible impression on all within the sphere of your influence.

He that will believe only what he can fully comprehend, must have a very long head or a very short creed.—Colton.

Sorrow's dark cloud above our path
Hangs like a curtain dreary;
Our heart's best treasures droop to death,
And leave us mourning here.

The cherished flowers we bind with care
Wither, and pass away;
And all that's beauteous and fair
Is marked with sure decay.

Whatever our place alloted to us by Providence, that, for us, is the post of honor and duty. God estimates us not by the position we are in, but by the way in which we fill it.—T. Edwards.

Where science speaks of improvement Christianity speaks of renovation; where science speaks of development Christianity speaks of sanctification; where science speaks of progress Christianity speaks of perfection.

Jesus's fair city, yonder see—
Its gates stand open wide—
Life's crystal stream—the healing tree
Of life on either side.

Then let me go where pleasures wait
Forever at God's right hand,
Be welcomed through the pearly gate,
And with the ransomed stand.

CHRIST'S GLORY.

Until he comes, he is the rejected one. His coming is to end the day of his long rejection, and to introduce the day of his acceptance: the day when he shall be owned by Israel and the world, as he is now by his saints; the day when he shall be owned on earth, as now he is owned in heaven. As the great Judge of all, his glory is yet to come; as the King of kings and Lord of lords, his glory is yet to come; as the last Adam, his glory is yet to come; as the head of the church, his glory is yet to come; as Israel's monarch, his glory is yet to come; as antichrist's destroyer and Satan's dethroner, his glory is yet to come.—H. Bonar.

"By defeat we conquer,
Grow rich by growing poor;
And from our largest giving
We draw our fullest store.

—Bonar.

"Do you really believe that an ass ever spoke to Balaam?" queried a man who prided himself on his intellect. Coleridge, to whom the question was put, reflected: "My friend, I have no doubt whatever that the story is true. I have been spoken to in the same manner myself." The man of the inquiring mind retired for meditation.

Boston Traveller.

GREECE'S VIGOROUS WAR PREPARATIONS.

Private information is to the effect that Greece is rapidly making preparation for a war with Turkey, in the expectations of being able to wrest the provinces of Epirus and Thessaly from the Moslem power. By the first of April it is expected that there will be a force of 200,000 men—regulars and volunteers—in the field. The Greeks are determined, and king and people will risk their all in the contest. Never since the formation of the little Hellenic kingdom has the enthusiasms of the country reached such a height; her whole people are in arms, and her treasury is well supplied with the "sinews of war." A correspondent, who furnishes information as to the sentiment of the country, writes that never before have the Greeks had such a chance to show their appreciation of the stirring words of their warmest friend, Lord Byron, in "The Giaour":

"For Freedom's battle once begun,
Bequeathed by bleeding sire for son,
Though baffled oft, is ever won."

A Letter to a Friend!

—By Mrs. C. C. Woodruff.—

This little work is so well known that it needs no comment. 32 pages, price 10c.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

Pictorial Description

—OF THE—

Tabernacle in the Wilderness,

ITS RITES AND CEREMONIES.

—By John Dilworth.—

Thirty-two pages. Price 10c. Send to this office for them.

SECOND EDITION.

The GOSPEL of the KINGDOM

Advocated in a series of Ten Discourses

—By Wiley Jones.—

This edition is elegantly printed and bound by Lippincott & Co., clear type, good paper, 208 pages. Plain cloth binding $1; cloth gilt edge $1.50; leather marbled edge $2.50, post paid. To obtain this valuable work, send the price by post office money order or registered letter, to

WILEY JONES,
Norfolk, Va.

BOOK LIST.

The following publications are kept on hand and will be sent postpaid to any address in the United States or Canada, upon receipt of published price. Address all orders to

THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Indiana.

BIBLE PAMPHLETS. Suitable for wide distribution. 1. The Gospel. 2. The Coming and Kingdom of Christ, by Miller Baptists, in 1666. 3. (unsigned). 4. The Kingdom of God. 5. Nature of Man and Thoughts for Thinkers. 6. The Two Advents. 7. What is Religion. 8. The Restitution Age. 9. Destiny of the Wicked. 10. Baptism. Ten copies 50c., or assorted packages of 100, $1.

FOUR PAGE TRACTS.
25 for 25c; 50 for 35c; 100 for 60c.
The State of Man in Death. Contains an abundance of proof-texts.
Life and Death. A concise statement and contrast of the two uses of these terms, to-wit: the Theological and Bible use.
Human Government a Failure. By A. B. Musgrave.
Resurrection. Austin Carter. "A careful examination of the query—"If a man die, shall he live again?"
Is it Trust? H. V. Reed. An examination of testimony as to who are subjects of salvation.
What is Death? H. V. Reed. An excellent contrast of the Bible teaching and modern theory.
The Prepared Pebble. The Rich Man and Lazarus. W. Lintz.

EIGHT PAGE TRACTS.
2c. each, or 25 for 40c.
Is it Essential to Believe in the Royalty of Jesus? H. Wilson.
Signs of the Times. H. Bonar, of Scotland.
The Scattering and Gathering. H. V. Reed. Connects plans of future Israel and gathering of the Saints, Israel, and the Nations.

TWELVE PAGE TRACTS.
3c. each, or 40 for 50c.
Christian Unions. Joel A. Simonds.
Regeneration and the Kingdom of God. E. Hart. Well called to unfolding minds.
Immortality Brought to Light. The grand reality of Redemption. J. B. Cook.

SIXTEEN PAGE TRACTS.
5c. each; 12 for 50c, or 25 for $1.
The New Birth. Josiah Pelton.
Hope for the World. Joel A. Simonds.
The Kingdom of Messiah. Joseph Seiss, D. D. Set forth in beautiful language and apt Bible quotations.
Watch it Right! T. Wilson. Showing the Bible teaching on the question as to whether Christ's Kingdom is to be on the earth or in heaven.
The Seed of Abraham. Joel A. Simonds. The promise made to Abraham renewed to Isaac and Jacob, and so frequently referred to by prophets and apostles.
The King in His Beauty. H. V. Reed. Just the thing to circulate everywhere.

TWENTY-FOUR PAGE TRACTS.
5c. each; 40 for 50c, or 75 for $1.
Das Evangelium des Reiches Gottes. Teaches the true nature of Christ's Kingdom.
Will the Earth be Burned Up? T. Wilson. An argument from the Scriptures, showing that the earth will not be annihilated, as many suppose, but will be the everlasting inheritance of the saints.
Witchcraft Unveiled; or the Voice of God Against Spiritualism. H. V. Reed. Cannot be too widely circulated.
The Scriptures. Joel A. Simonds.

THIRTY-TWO PAGE TRACTS.
10c. each, or 75 for $1.
Evangelism concerning the Reign of Christ over Israel and the Nations; or a brief statement of the Bible things concerning the Kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ. Wiley Jones.
The Restitution; or the world restored to its primeval state, and this to be its everlasting condition. E. Miller. A careful and satisfactory examination of Acts iii. 21.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS.
The Rich Man and Lazarus. T. Wilson. The exposition throughout is in harmony with Bible teaching. 96 pages, price 10c.
The Rich and Lazarus. C. F. Sweet. A careful unfolding of Luke xv. and xvi. with an examination of Luke xix. and xxiv. 36 pages, price 10c.
Primitive Christian Faith. C. F. Sweet. A concise history of the Primitive Christian Faith, or the Gospel as held by the early fathers, in a small compass. 50 pages, price 10c.
The Infidel Silenced by the most irrefutable evidence. W. H. Wilson. 48 pages, price 10c.
The Doctrine of Baptism as taught in the Holy Scriptures, together with a collection of evidence upon the subject, from the most learned theologians, critics, lexicographers and ecclesiastical historians. 48 pages, price 10c.
Bible Triumphant. Mrs. H. V. Reed. A reply to "One hundred and forty-four self-contradictions of the Bible," by A. J. Hale. An able refutation of infidel charges. Paper 50c.
Discussion on the state of the dead. Between the Rev. C. Beardsley, Congregational minister, and W. Kellaway, both of England. The propositions discussed were: 1. That the dead exist in a living, conscious state after decease. 2. Purgatory. 3. That the Scriptures teach that men in death are wholly unconscious, insensible, and unable to perform any act whatever; and that they rest in darkness, silence and the dust. Cloth 60c., paper 40c.
Future Punishment. Its nature and duration. Henry Constable, Prebendary of Cork. Exactly the book for the times. 350 pages, cloth $1.25.
The Destiny of Russia, as foretold by God's prophets, together with an outline of the future movements and destiny of England, Germany, Persia, Africa and the Jews. Contains a map of England and Asia. A work invaluable to every student of prophecy, and of intense present interest. 116 pages, cloth 75c., paper 50c.
Hades, or the Intermediate State of the Dead. Henry Constable, A. M. Presents the Bible doctrine of the state of men between death and the resurrection. Cloth $1.00.
God's Plan of Salvation. J. M. Stephenson. A comprehensive and able statement of the leading points of Bible theology. Our brethren will find this just the thing to read and circulate. The nature of man, the Kingdom of God, and the obedience of faith, are ably and clearly set forth. Over 300 pages, cloth $1.

THE NEW TESTAMENT IN GREEK AND ENGLISH!
—ENTITLED—

THE EMPHATIC DIAGLOTT

—By Benjamin Wilson.—

Contains the Original Greek text of the New Testament, with an interlinear word-for-word English translation, based on the renderings of eminent critics, and on the various readings of the Vatican Manuscripts, together with Illustrations and explanatory foot notes, and a copious selection of references.
The different renderings of various passages in the New Testament are the foundations on which most of the sects of Christians have been built up; with this work each reader may judge for himself whether the words there literally translated are so arranged in the common version as to express the exact meaning of the New Testament writers.
New improved edition on tinted paper, 684 pages, Cloth $3.00, Library binding $4.00.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

HYMNS OF THE ADVENT!

Above is the name of a New Hymn Book, compiled by

—Chas. C. Barker.—

Mr. Barker combines in this book the "Hymns of the Morning" and a fresh and more selection of music. As an appendix he adds a selection of "Precious Hymns, whose music is as a household word. Those having the "Christian Psalmodist" and no single book will do well to get this work. Price 40c. cloth 60c.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

ASTRONOMICAL ETIOLOGY,
—OR—

STAR PROPHECIES

Concerning coming disasters on the earth from 1887 to 1895.

—By M. L. Knapp, D. D.—

And others. It also contains an appendix by the publisher. 78 pages, 25c. each.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

GOD ESTABLISHED
—AND—

The BIBLE VINDICATED.

—By A. J. Eychaner.—

A new track, and one that should be in the hands of every infidel in the land. Those living in infidel neighborhoods will do well to get this work, as it will aid in combatting this enemy. Twenty pages, price ..., 12 for 50c., or 50 for $1.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

THE RESTITUTION
—IS ISSUED WEEKLY BY—
The Christian Publishing Association.

OFFICERS OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS:
N. S. DWIGGINS.....President.
CHARLES PALMER.....Vice President.
E. K. HARSHILL.....Secretary.
S. A. CHAPLIN.....Treasurer.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE:
CHARLES PALMER. WM. HAILSBACK.
I. G. ROBERTS.

S. A. CHAPLIN.....Editor.

SPECIAL CORRESPONDENTS:
J. M. STEPHENSON, B. WILSON.
J. P. WEETHEE. J. A. SIMONDS.
WILEY JONES. G. M. MYERS.
A. R. MACHODER.

The Restitution.

Key Article By Bro Walters

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXX. Read PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, MARCH 2, 1881. NO. 9.

THE RESTITUTION.

TERMS—TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR. Payable in advance. Three and Six Months at the same rate.

Address all Letters and Communications to THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION advocates the dual "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restitution of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; and life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, to-wit, faith, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as a essential for final salvation.

Communications.

COMING AGE.

His Peculiarity. Sixth Seal—Terms Explained. Earthquake—Sun—Moon—Stars—Heaven—Mountain—Island—The Kings of the Earth—Exclamations—Great Day—Chronology.

No. 5.

J. P. WEETHEE.

Sixth Seal.—And I beheld when he had opened the sixth seal, and, lo, there was a great earthquake; and the sun became black as sackcloth of hair, and the moon became as blood; and the stars of heaven fell into the earth, even as a fig tree casteth her untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind. And the heaven departed as a scroll when it is rolled together, and every mountain and island were moved out of their places. And the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, and every bondman, and every free man, hid themselves in the dens and in the rocks of the mountains; and said to the mountains and rocks, Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth upon the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb: For the great day of his wrath is come; and who shall be able to stand? Rev. vi. 12-17.

Introductory Remarks.—We have quoted the first division of the sixth seal—the first scene. Its language is very clear and exceedingly emphatic. We enter upon the investigation of this seal with no ordinary interest, since it describes a very great revolution. Between the natural and moral worlds there exist many distinct and striking analogies. Some of these analogies we are now obliged to consider.

This seal consists of two parts:

1. A terrible revolution and overthrow.

2. A time of great triumph, and success of Christianity. Paganism is overthrown, and Christianity is triumphantly established on its ruins.

The terrible convulsions in the physical world, symbolize great convulsions in the moral world, in both its departments, civil and religious; and the fall of the Pagan hierarchy.

The sealing—chapter vii.—represents the triumphs of Christianity. Such a fall and such a triumph the seal contains.

With these preliminary remarks we shall proceed to explain the Terms.

Earthquake.—The name explains its work—the shaking of the earth—internal convulsions, the effects of internal causes, such as the combustion of various elements. The materials composing the earth's crust are put in violent commotion, through the evolution of gases, by the agency of caloric, water, iron, sulphur and other substances.

The results of these convulsions are at times exceedingly disastrous. They always produce consternation among the inhabitants where they occur. They are frequently quite local; at other times they are wide-spread. There have been over forty extraordinary earthquakes during the Christian era. One of the most noted occurred Nov. 1, A. D. 1755.

This earthquake destroyed Lisbon, Spain, when 60,000 perished in six minutes. The sea first retired, and then rolled in, rising fifty feet above its usual level; the largest mountains in Portugal rocked and split asunder, and sent forth flames and clouds of dust. The shock was felt nearly all over Europe, in the north part of Africa, in the Atlantic, and even in the West Indies; a vast wave swept over the coast of Spain, in some places sixty feet in height, and near Morocco the earth opened, swallowed up about 10,000 persons with their herds, and then closed over them.

This awful shock is said to have extended over five thousand miles. The cities of Coimbra, Oporto, and Braga suffered dreadfully, and St. Ubes was wholly overturned. In Spain, a large part of Malaga was laid in ruins. More than half the isle of Maderia became waste, and two thousand houses in the island of Meteline, in the Archipelago, were overthrown.—Cott, Cyc.

The smoke and dust darken the heavens. The sun gathers blackness at noon-day, and the moon, seen through the smoke, becomes as blood, add to these horrors. Volcanoes shoot their fiery rockets out of their burning craters, and tempests of burning cinders and ashes cover the heavens the earth and the sea.

"Mount Vesuvius, A. D. 79, when Pliny, the naturalist, lost his life, threw out such a quantity of flame and smoke that the air was darkened, and the cities of Pompeii and Herculaneum were overwhelmed by the burning lava.

More than 250,000 persons perished by the destruction of those cities: the sun's light was totally obscured for two days throughout Naples; great quantities of ashes and sulphurous smoke were carried not only to Rome, but also beyond the Mediterranean into Africa; birds were suffocated in the air and fell dead upon the ground, and the fishes perished in the neighboring waters, which were made hot."—Cott. Cyc.

Such are some of the visible phenomena of earth's internal convulsions. They are terrifying and destructive. Earthquakes raise islands, and sink others.

An earthquake, in 1538, in Hungary turned a mountain round.

The scene described by John, under the sixth seal is a volcanic earthquake; its phenomena, and results on various classes are such, as such a convulsion in nature would produce. No event on earth produces a greater consternation among all classes. None too high nor too low to escape its ruin. No place of security.

Such visitations are considered at the time as visitations of Divine wrath. Men flee before it as from the presence of an angry God. They implore aid from anything, even without hope that any shelter can be found.

We have now explained the chief symbol—the earthquake. The other phenomena are simply the effects of this volcanic earthquake on the physical heavens and earth, and his population.

The other terms used will require but little explanation, in addition to what we have already stated.

The effect of this volcanic earthquake on the sun, moon and stars has been fully explained; also on the heavens, before such terrible convulsions, and furious tempests of smoke and sulphureous cinders the pure heavens would seem to roll away.

The removal of islands and mountains out of their places we have noticed. Its effects upon the human family have been stated also; that what John saw and heard, both as to nature and man, are the precise results of such natural convulsions. Such is the symbol—a volcanic earthquake, with its natural results.

What event is here symbolized? It must be one resembling it in the Moral World. Such a one can be readily found, and the event itself will fix the chronology of this, the sixth seal.

We have already stated that the Roman Monarchy, the fourth kingdom of Daniel, was, in its religion, Pagan, from Numa to Constantine the Great, A. D. 322. The empire, commencing with Augustus Cesar, was what is called a Union of Church and State, since the emperor, the high priest, was also the head of the civil empire.

1. That empire adopted the idol gods of all nations conquered by its arms, and stood at the head of all their religious ceremonies as their pontifex. From Paganism, the entire empire had no opposition.

2. The Jews were exclusive in their religion, but they were not a missionary people. They did not aim to make "sheep" of "dogs." Their motto was, Let us alone and we will let you alone.

The commission which Christ gave to his disciples—Go disciple all nations—was aggressive and missionary. It aimed at the utter extinction of both Judaism and Paganism. He that believeth and obeyeth our great High Priest—Jesus of Nazareth—shall be saved; and he that believeth not on him, whether he be a Jewish or Pagan high priest, or any or all under them, shall be condemned.

Such an enemy had the great empire, in Christianity. When, therefore, the Roman empire had this new religion, with its exclusive God, exclusive Savior, and its exclusive morality, sowed broad-cast through its dominions, the "fire" was kindled.

The ten persecutions under Paganism, till its surrender by the conversion of Constantine, their high priest, to Christianity, were the natural outgrowth of Christian exclusiveness. In the idol system of Paganism, Christianity would have been victorious over her last human enemy, had she not received into her bosom, and cherished a rival—an apostate church—an apostate priesthood.

Under ten terrible conflicts did Christianity combat Paganism. Five seals show these conflicts with Pagan Rome. They overcame by the blood of the Lamb.

The final conflict is seen under the first division of the sixth seal. This battle was the Waterloo of Paganism. Pagan Rome falls, and Christian Rome begins: not, however in its apostolic purity, but under the vigorous youth of the apostate priesthood.

These Pagan struggles, and overthrow are thus graphically described by a learned author:

"It appears that the Pagan Roman emperors were deprived of their government, and came to miserable ends; that the Pagan Cæsars fell in battle or were put to death; that the religion of the idolaters received a mortal wound; all the colleges of pontifices, augers, vestals; in a word, all the Pagan priests and religious officers throughout the empire, being brought under the power of a Christian prince; that many of the Pagan officers, civil and military, were displaced, and Christians put in their room; that there was a thorough change in the government, and that Paganism lessened by degrees, till it entirely disappeared; that the greatest of the persecutors acknowledged and confessed the justness and cause of God's judgments; and lastly, that upon this change, all the idolaters, upon account of their horrid cruelties and barbarities against the Christians, could not but be in daily expectation of the severest punishments."—Daubus.

CONCLUSION.—We do not feel willing to take leave of the scenic views of the first six seals without adding some brief supplementary remarks, being well persuaded, that, to the general reader, we cannot be too plain.

1. The Roman is the fourth great empire of Daniel's prophecies, seen by that prophet, under the symbols of pure iron, iron and clay mixture; and a beast exceedingly terrible; iron teeth, brass nails, a group of ten horns and another horn. In those visions the struggle is between the great empire (without stating the causes of the war) and the Son of Man and his saints; the fact that the war is against the Messiah and his holy ones, is sufficient to demonstrate the anti-Christian character of the empire.

In Christ's narration, literal, as recorded in Matt. xxiv. and Luke xxi., the character of the struggle, and the two contending parties, are clearly defined.

The history of the beginning of that struggle is given in the Acts of the Apostles, extending from the day of Pentecost to the martyrdom of Paul, under Nero; or to a date near that event.

In that history, the Jews constitute the primary element of Christian sufferings. They pursued the Christian teachers from city to city, instigating the Romans to bloody persecutions.

The apostolic commission had in it no element of civil rule. It was, Go, disciple all nations; not change their civil relationships. Gather out a people for my (Christ) name. Teach them, not rule them. I have supplied you with a text book, which you are to use. Make no changes in the text. Teach them to observe whatsoever I have commanded you.

Under Trajan the edicts against the Christians were reduced to form—Whoever says, I AM A CHRISTIAN, must must suffer death. Such was the substance of Trajan's answer to Pliny. That was the watchword till Paganism was overthrown. Trajan's law was the rule of the empire, relative to Christians, till the days of Constantine the Great.

Under Adrian, his successor, we date the organization of a Christian Priesthood. We call it Christian because it arose in the church, and to distinguish it from the Pagan priesthood. Their bishops were the Jewish high priests in office; the bishops were chief priests, and the deacons were the Levites. Against this priesthood, the Pagan priesthood, headed by their royal high priest, aimed the sword of persecution.

The noted imperial persecutors under Pagan Rome (six only) were Trajan A. D. 100; The Antonines A. D. 137–180; Severus A. D. 227; Maximinus A. D. 235, Decius A. D. 250, Valerian A. D. 257, Aurelian A. D. 274, Diocletian and Maximian 303–313. Among these were emperors who lightened the persecutions; still, the church was in a state of persecution during the whole period from Trajan to Constantine, under whom the empire laid aside its Dragonic or Pagan garb, for the Christian dress.

We have now followed the empire through its Pagan membership; and shall now view it as a member of the Christian church.

Youths' Column.

The Years Pass On.

"When I'm a woman, you'll see what I'll do!
I'll be great and good, and a shining true:
I'll visit the sick and relieve the poor—
No one shall ever be turned from my door;
But I'm only a little girl now,
And so the years pass on.

"When I'm older I'll have more time
To think of heaven and things sublime;
My time is now full of studies and play,
But I'll then learn to begin each day;
I am only a little girl now,
And so the years pass on.

"When I'm a woman, a gay maiden said,
I'll try to do right and be not afraid:
I'll be a Christian, and give up the joys
Of the world with all its dazzling toys:
But I'm only a young girl now,
And so the years pass on.

"Ah me!" sighed a woman gray with years,
Her heart full of cares and doubts and fears,
"I've kept putting off the time to be good,
Instead of beginning to do as I should:
But I'm an old woman now,
And so the years pass on.

Now is the time to begin to do right;
To-day, whether sleeping or at play;
Make others happy by good deeds of love,
Looking to Jesus for help from above:
And then you'll be happy now,
And as the years pass on.

Detroit Free Press.

THE OLD BLUE CHEST.

One day last week five or six women with serious faces and hushed voices were gathered in a room in a house, on Front street east.

For two years a poor old woman had lived there, not exactly a beggar nor an object of charity, but certainly in want. She had a husband when she first moved there—a poor old man whose days could not be long; but one day he was missing. He may have fallen into the river, or he may have wandered out into the country and died.

This left the old woman alone, and there were days and days in which no one went near her or addressed her. She had lived alone, but she could not die that way. She wept when tender hands clasped hers and kind voices addressed her. Death had already placed its mark on her face, and the woman could do nothing. While their tears fell upon her wrinkled hands she passed away as a child sleeps.

There was but little in the room beyond an old blue chest—battered and bruised and splintered, but yet holding together. It had seen strange times, that old blue chest. It had held silks and broadcloths perhaps—it had surely held rags. It had been moved from house to house and from town to town. It had listened to laughter, and had heard sobs and moans. It had grown old no faster than the woman whose hands had so often lifted the lid. It had doubtless kept the company of good carpets and furniture and crockery, and laughing, romping children had climbed over it or hidden in it. It had faded, and its hinges were rusty and weak, but it had outlived its owner.

The women looked about for garments in which to enshroud the dead. Nothing was in sight. One of them lifted the lid of the old blue chest, and called the others to help drag it out from its dark corner. It held treasure—such treasure as men could not buy nor poverty steal away. There was a dress of fine material, cut after a fashion of long years ago. Twenty years the chest had been its guardian. It would have sold for a few dollars, but though the gnawings of hunger had come often, and the cold had fought its way to the marrow, that poor old woman would not part with that relic of better days. It may have been a link to connect her with wealth and love. Beneath it was treasure still more priceless. Carefully wrapped in paper was a silver dime more than fifty years old. A week's fast would not have sent her to the baker's with that relic. A child, dead in its young years, had worn that dime around its neck as a gift or talisman. There was a child's mitten, strained and worn, but a mitten. Knit by a young mother for her child. It could not speak to tell the dim past, but it had power. As the women saw it they covered their faces with their aprons and wept.

There was a boy's cap and a girl's hat, both so old and faded and timeeaten that they had to be tenderly handled. The women looked from them to the poor old white face on the bed and whispered:

"None but a good mother would have treasured these relics. She was old and poor, but her heart was pure."

"Deeper down, as if to baffle the search of Time itself, was a familiar toy—a child's dumb watch. Hands were broken and gone, face scratched and case battered, but the women handled it as if a touch would shiver it. There was a doll's head, a boy's fishline, some toy chairs, a yarn ball, and other things to show that in the long ago that dead woman had felt the soft kisses of children, heard their good nights, and thanked God she was blessed. Each relic was wept over—each was replaced with fresh tearstains. They asked the old blue chest no questions. Its relics might have been voiceless to a man, but to a woman and mother each one had a tale in words as plain as print. They shed more tears as they bent again over the poor old dead, and they said to each other:

"If she had only told us how we would have loved her and sought to lighten her sorrows."

But she had gone. She had come and gone as a mystery, and but for the old blue chest in the corner few would have cared, and none would have sorrowed.

Sermons for the Little Ones.

No. 5.

Seed, means child, children or son, in Bible language. You know a seed or son, was promised to Abraham, "who should possess the gates of his enemies," and when we came down through the long years of Bible history, and find a child who can go back from grandfather to great grandfather; and from great grandfather on up to great great grandfather, and still on, till he comes to Abraham, and can say, "that he is Abraham's son,"—hear him when he is grown up, preaching everywhere of a kingdom that is to be in the field, or world, where wicked people and good people are growing together now,—hear him saying "that he will sit upon a throne of glory in that kingdom,"—telling people "that they must believe and mind him, to get into "it," and that if they do believe and mind, he will wake them up at the last day and give them eternal life—we are pretty sure we have found the seed or son in whom that promise is to be fulfilled, and who is to make Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, and all the good people up, to give them the land.

We know we have found him, when we hear what Paul says about it.—"now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not to seeds as of many, but to thy seed, which is Christ.

There was to be but one, of all Abraham's children, who could do these things. God was looking at him, when he said what he did, to Abraham, and he showed Abraham how to hope for the life and land through that Son.

So you see, that to learn about Jesus, you must learn about Abraham. You must know how man came to die—what God has promised him for believing and minding, and how he is going to save him from death, so that he will die no more.

You have found now that Jesus is the one child of Abraham, to whom, through Abraham, God promised the land. It was promised to him, because through him alone, could the rest of Abraham's children get the land.

But we must go back now to Abraham's people.

After Abraham was dead one of his great grandsons, named Joseph, was sold by his wicked brothers into Egypt. There, from being a servant, he became a great ruler, and sent for all his father's family to come down to Egypt to live.

After Joseph was dead, the great King, who had been so kind to him, also died. His people had increased so that there had grown to be a great multitude of them, and they had taken the name of Israelites, after the name that God had given to Jacob, his father.

A wicked King had taken the throne, who knew nothing about Joseph. He was afraid of the Israelites, lest they should take part with his enemies, in battle. He treated them very cruelly and tried to have all their little sons put to death. He thought if he did this, after awhile there would be no men among them to fight or make him trouble.

But God made King Pharaoh's own daughter, the instrument for saving the child who was afterward to lead his people out of the land of Egypt. Moses was hidden in a little boat by the river. Thermuthis went down to bathe—saw the boat and sent one of her companions to bring it to her. She knew that the babe was one of the children that her father wanted to have put to death, but it had a lovely face, and its pretty, pleading, tearful eyes, touched her heart.

Her father had no sons—she would adopt this beautiful Hebrew child—bring him up as her own, and then he would inherit the crown and the throne of the Pharaohs.

The education and the rank of a prince were given him. He lived in the king's palace.

But having learned about his own people, he went to visit them, to see how they were faring. He found them treated very cruelly and to deliver one of them, he killed an Egyptian overseer. Pharaoh, therefore, sought him with death and he fled into the land of Midian.

There he married and became a shepherd. While leading his flocks about, the Lord appeared to him and told him he was chosen to take God' people out of Egypt and back to the land of Canaan.

Returning to Egypt, he with his brother Aaron went to Pharaoh many times—and the Lord sent many grievous punishments upon the Egyptians, and wrought a great many signs by their hands, before the king would consent to let them go.

After they were gone, he followed them. They crossed the Red Sea through a road that the Lord had made for them, but when the Egyptians tried to go over by the same road they were drowned.

THE FRIEND OF THE CHILDREN.

TO THE YOUTH.

No. 2.

Dear Children: In our last we learned that Adam and Eve were driven from their beautiful Eden home, on account of their disobedience. We now learn that they were naked except aprons of fig leaves—and doomed to work for their living, but God's love and kindness was still showed to them, for he made them coats of skins, and made them the most precious promise, that:

"That the seed of the woman should bruise the serpent's head.' This promise meant that Messiah should be born, who by his obedience, death and resurrection, would restore to man the kingship or rule of the earth; he—Messiah, being the chief ruler, and the good and faithful of all ages joined in with him in the government.

O, what a precious promise! And, remember dear children, that if you and I are obedient as we have a share in that blessed and everlasting government.

But years passed on and Cain and Abel grew to be men, and they both brought offerings to God. Cain brought of the fruit of the ground, while Abel brought of the firstlings of his flock.

The Lord accepted Abel's offering, but did not accept Cain's. The Bible tells us "by faith Abel offered unto God a more excellent—or better—sacrifice than Cain."

You see then that it was Abel's faith that made his sacrifice acceptable.

This made Cain envious of Abel, and so angry, that when they were in the field together, Cain killed him. And God said unto Cain, "where is Abel thy brother? and he said I know not. Am I my brother's keeper?"

So you see Cain not only killed his brother, but then told a lie to God, who knows all our thoughts. I hope all my little readers may ever love one another and always speak the truth.

GRANDMA.

Exegetical.

They shall go down to the bars of the pit, when our rest together is to the dust.—Job xvii. 16.

Literally, to the limbs—"the grasping limbs," "the tremendous claws or talons" of the grave. The imagery is peculiarly bold, and true to the general character under which the grave is presented to us in the language of Sacred poetry—as a monster, ever greedy to devour, with horrid jaws wide gaping for his prey, and in the passage before us, with limbs in unison with his jaws, and ready to seize hold of the victims allotted to him, with a strength and violence from which none can extricate themselves.

The common rendering of folcot terræ, or bars as of a prison, is as unnecessary a departure from the proper figure, as it is from the primary meaning of the original term.—Dr. Good.

Sententious.

We wish for more in life, rather than more of it.—Jean Ingelow.

True religion begins in prayer, and in prayer nothing else is it exercised.

Study pure and holy walking, if you would have your confidence firm, and have boldness and joy in God.

In Christ is blended beauty, force;
To glory wondrous fair!
Without that love this life would be
A desert, bleak and bare.

The Stars: the Alphabet of Omnipotence. The Flowers: the Language of Angels. The Birds: the Singers of God's own music.

Pleasure is seldom found where it is sought. Our highest blazes of gladness are commonly kindled by unexpected sparks.

Men are guided less by conscience than by glory: and yet the shortest way to glory is to be guided by conscience.—Henry Home.

Write your name in kindness, love and mercy, on the hearts of those with whom you come in contact, and you will never be forgotten.

Though we know not what we shall be
In that land to which we go,
We shall be like our Redeemer.
'Tis enough for us to know.
He like Him who died to save us,
What could we desire besides?
Who in we waken in His likeness,
Then shall we be satisfied

An ounce of generous praise will do more to make a man your friend than a pound of fault finding.

Self-ease is pain: the only rest
Is labor for a worthy end.
Will that calms with what it yields,
And restores to its own increase,
And bears, while sowing ruin and fields,
The harvest song of inward peace.
Whittier.

With bodily eyes we cannot here behold God, but with bodily voice we can speak to him, and he makes answer to the man who prays. What we ask in feebleness and ignorance, he will answer in wisdom and grace, and strength.

Reason is a fine thing; but let us not think too much of it. God does not. We know of a surety—we know on the authority of his Word—that all the proud and high things of man's intellect are of infinitely less value in his sight than the humblest aspiration after mercy and truth, than the heart-uttered groan of a contrite spirit. —Kitto.

A meteoric stone weighing 375 grammes, triangular in shape and of a crystalline appearance, fell last month at Wiener Neustadt, and as it fell to the earth, which it penetrated a considerable distance, it gave forth a very brilliant light.

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CHAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, March 2, 1881.

Our room for Editorials is limited this week. We are trying to place contributions on hand before our readers as fast as we can and keep up that variety that is so essential to make a paper instructive. Will give a number of communications on hand a place as soon as we can.

Our subscription list is slowly on the increase, and we hope to see the time when our paper will be self-sustaining from this source. Ours is not the only paper that has been dependent upon extra relief. Thanks to all who aid us in any way,—whether by sending the paper to friends or otherwise.

Communications.

THE PATTERN IN THE MOUNT.

J. B. COOK.

See that thou make all things according to the pattern shewed thee in the mount.—Heb. viii. 5.

The root of the word shewed is embraced in the margin—caused to see. The showing was to Moses' sight. The Lord caused him to see the pattern. Its parts in particular and in its completeness, as a whole.

The noun and verbal form of this word "appear and appearance," occurs many times. It applies to the cloud by day and the fire at night. Num. ix. 15.

In our text the Greek word for shewed, conveys the like thought.

The entire record shows that Moses and Israel saw and heard the facts narrated. They knew, as they saw day and night, by all their capacities to understand anything. The foundation truth is that God was then as always, in advance of man. He did not leave Moses to make any part—or to infer and argue out, the least particular—of the Tabernacle, or the order of worship therein.

Thus it was through the wilderness. they marched and encamped only as directed. Thus also at the building of the Temple by Solomon.

So it was at the first advent of Messiah. The angels appear on their willing wings. Simeon and Anna, with all the then waiting ones, were there to act their part, but only in submission to God. The application is as easy as it is direct. Those who turned aside to their own ways [illegible] of iniquity, like Korah. Psa. cxxv. 5.

Few seem ever to have learned this primal truth as taught in creation, providence and redemption. It is that man has been secondary and subordinate, to believe and obey. Nay, more; he has been a very inapt learner—even by experience.

In Israel alone was such a structure, and its use made possible. No other nation had the proper foregoing preparations, in promises and expectations, derived from their honored ancestry. Hence, Israel was the only nationality that ever could have erected an edifice to Jehovah.

It belonged to that people, as the then chosen nation, and as the sole depositary of Divine truth. Hence, the foretold anti-typo, new covenant and city belongs to them.

But what was the object of all this? How does it concern us and our world? It was an introductory stage of God's great purpose of grace in Christ, to redeem man and earth, from sin and the reign of death, and restore all things spoken in promise.

The Eden age was first, the Antediluvian the second, the Noahic third, the Abrahamic fourth, the Mosaic fifth, the Christian is the sixth, and all preparatory to the Great and Appearing Day of the Lord—the rest that remaineth to the people of God. Heb. iv. 1-9; Rev. xx. 1-7.

The Tabernacle service, as a whole, was the Harbinger of the kingdom yet to come.

Each age and stage of the One Great Plan, has been a state of trial and preparation, of disciplining and instructing, in relation to the future, when the royal priesthood, under Christ (the head of the body, the out-called and chosen and faithful) will take the kingdom and dominion and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven. In whom all nations shall be blessed.

It ultimates in the new heavens and new earth—all things made new!

Again, what is the importance of these facts to us toward instructing us in righteousness, and preparing us for the kingdom to come?

The answer is, Much every way, because God will have his holy will done in earth as it is done in heaven. Perfection is his end, throughout all places of his dominion.

Then every creature 'll share its part,
And earth and heaven be glad at heart.

There is a whole cluster of Scripture passages that teach this blessed consummation.

"He hath abounded toward us in all wisdom and prudence; having made known unto us the mystery of his will—that in the dispensation of the fullness of times, he might gather together under one head, all things in Christ, which are in heaven and earth." Eph. i. 10.

In 1 Cor. xv. 24-27, we see him putting down all rule, authority and power, and so delivering the creature from the bondage of corruption, that God may be all in all—the acknowledged source of all to all. Thus he saith, "I will turn to the people a pure language, that they may all call upon the name of the Lord, to serve him with one consent," and angels, principalities and powers in heavenly places, will know the manifold wisdom of God."

The plenitude of all prayer will be answered! The promise be fulfilled, and the sum of prophetic vision verified! For of him, and through him, and to him, are all things; to whom be glory, forever. Amen.

Did you ever notice that the Tabernacle and also the Temple at Jerusalem, were so constructed that the worshippers were compelled to come into the court, and the holy and most holy places, with their backs toward the East—the Sun-Rising? Thus they turned their backs on the earliest and perhaps most prevalent form of idolatry, the sun. God instructs to profit.

Thus as Moses and Israel were allowed no liberty to originate one jot or tittle to the Tabernacle; so no native Israelite or proselyte could worship God in "this example of Heavenly things;" but by turning their backs on all objects of creature worship, however beautiful or beneficent!

But why did Adam, the old world, Israel, and the modern Christian world apostatize?

The answer may lie in the line of this fact, that character is the product of experience, discipline and trial, rather than of a creative fiat. This is certain, however, that the creature can not deny his dependence or assume to go alone but to bad.

Some say "go to thunder!" while the profane (who are always Orthodox in their profanity) say right out "go to the devil!" So far, it is sure, we silence them.

But again; how did Israel, Adam and all fail?

The answer is easy. It was because of self trust, and trust in some creature rather than in the Creator. Rom. i. 25.

Then, as sinning can never atone for sin—as death cannot deliver its dead—there could be no redemption but by mediation. Hence the need of Moses in his sphere, and his anti-type—Jesus, the Mediator of the better and yet future covenant; and all under the gospel so far has been preparatory to the making of the new covenant.

Still again. Why have the frailties, follies and failures of man in every age, like those of Israel and Solomon been put on record? It serves to demonstrate the truth "that all have gone out of the way—that none doeth good, no not one!"

Hence there can be no trust in man, and no hope for man, but in redemption; and God is most just in judging the sinner as he does, and altogether gracious in providing redemption.

Further to show God's supremacy over man and earth, we should observe that his sovereignty is as absolute over the Gentiles in general, as over the Jews; however, diverse from that over the Jews in their Tabernacle worship. St. Paul assures us that "the powers that be are ordained of God." Rom. xiii. 1-7.

Hence, Israel and all men are to be subject and pay tribute, not only through fear, but also for conscience's sake.

Jews and Gentiles have been obliged to bow to the four great Gentile dynasties. Nay more; they must all still submit, till the Lord come, to take the government of the world into his own hands.

The doctrine is that God is Sovereign over Jew and Gentile. It is delusion, apostacy and sin, to add to or alter his pattern, in Providence or Redemption.

Adam, Israel, and all of our age who presume to take their own course—trusting to self and to creature guidance—have greatly erred, not knowing the Scriptures, nor the power of God! But "blessed are all that put their trust in him." Amen.

"A DARK SUBJECT."

E. HOYT.

Editor N. Y. Witness:

Under the above title, you say, in your Weekly of Feb. 2, "Take a map of the world and color all heathen countries black, and all Mohammedan countries green, all Papal countries red, and all countries of the Greek, Abyssinian and Armenian churches yellow, thus leaving all Protestant countries white, and you will see how small a proportion of the earth's surface is yet under the influence of Evangelical Christianity.

Let us suppose that one-tenth of the inhabited regions of the world be white, and they had about one-tenth of the population of the world, and then ask why is it that pure Christianity has taken, during 1880 years, such small hold on the human race, which the Son of God died to save?

Then, out of a population of fourteen hundred millions on the globe, you reckon my fourteen millions real Christians, and only half of them consecrate their means, to any considerable extent, to the cause of Christ—only seven millions to carry fourteen hundred millions in their heart—one-half of one-half per cent. to evangelize ninety-nine and one-half per cent."

And after this trial of 1880 years, you might have added to the blinded classes you have mentioned, the millions of Jews and lost tribes of Israel.

In view of this outlook, infidels might say that Christianity is a failure. But they have not considered the purpose of preaching the gospel of the kingdom to all nations.—That it is "For a Witness," as James said to the council at Jerusalem, "that God had visited the Gentiles to take out of them a people for his name."

The Divine purpose has thus far been fulfilled. But God has another purpose, that he will, after the puny efforts of men now in use have failed, convert the whole world by extraordinary means.

The sure word of prophecy shines over a dark world, and gives a great

LIGHT IN THE EAST.

Hear Isaiah. (lx. 1.) "Arise, shine! for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee. For behold, the darkness shall cover the earth and gross darkness the people; but the Lord shall arise upon thee and his glory shall be seen upon thee. And the Gentiles shall come to thy light, and kings to the brightness of thy rising."

It is stated in that connection, that according to their deeds the Lord will repay fury to his adversaries, recompense to his enemies, to the islands he will repay recompense. So shall they fear the name of the Lord from the west and his glory from the rising of the sun. And the Redeemer shall come to Zion and unto them that turn from transgression in Jacob, saith the Lord.

The truth is here plainly stated:

1. That men will universally fear the Lord.

2. That the efficient means will be the return of the Redeemer to Zion, when the glory of the Lord shall be seen upon Mount Zion, and he shall repay a terrible recompense to his enemies.

Read Paul's comment on this prophecy: "I would not have you ignorant brethren, that blindness in part has happened to Israel, until the fullness of the Gentiles come in, and so all Israel shall be saved; as it is written, there shall come out of Zion the Deliverer and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob, for this is my covenant with them when I shall take away their sins."

Thus we are taught plainly, that the Redeemer will actually come to and out of Zion, subdue his adversaries, take away the blindness of Israel, turn away ungodliness from Jacob, take away their sins, and that the fullness of the Gentiles will come in at that time; because the glory of the Lord will shine forth from Mount Zion and scatter the gross darkness that now covers the Gentile world.

This is in harmony with many prophecies that teach the conversion of the world by miraculous means.

See Psa. ii., xxii., xxvii. "All the ends of the earth shall remember and turn unto the Lord, and all the kindreds of the nations shall worship before thee. For the kingdom is the Lord's, and he is the Governor among the nations."

When the seventh trumpet shall sound the kingdoms of this world will become the Lord's, and all nations will worship him.

Read Ezek. xxxviii. xxxix., and see what a terrible destruction will befall the immense armies under Gog, prince of Ros, Meshech and Tubal, when they shall come as a cloud to cover the vales and mountains of Israel, in the latter days. What will be the result of those miraculous judgments that will be executed upon that host? Jehovah will call for a sword against them—every man's sword shall be against his brother. He will plead with pestilence and blood, and rain upon him and his bands an overflowing rain and great hail stones, fire and brimstone.

"Thus will I magnify myself and sanctify myself, and be known in the eyes of all nations."

The effect of these dreadful plagues will be glorious! "And I will set my glory among the heathen, and all the heathen shall see my judgment that I have executed, and my hand that I have laid upon them." "Therefore, thus saith the Lord God; Now will I bring again the captivity of Jacob and have mercy upon the whole house of Israel, and will be jealous for my holy name. Then shall they know that I am the Lord their God, which caused them to be led into captivity among the heathen. But I have gathered them into their own land and have left none of them any more there. Neither will I hide my face any more from them."

The same beneficent result will follow the seven last plagues, as foretold in the song of the Harpers that stand on the sea of glass. They say "Great and marvellous are thy works, Lord God Almighty; just and true are thy ways, thou King of nations. Who shall not fear thee, O Lord, and glorify thy name? For all nations shall come and worship before thee, for thy judgments are made manifest."

The heavens will receive Jesus no longer than the times of restitution. This great restitution includes the conversion of the world when Jesus shall come.

The present condition of the world is truly dark, and evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse. Men will be lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God; have the form of godliness but denying the power. The people even in Christian lands, will and do now corrupt themselves, as before the flood, while all crime and outrage prevail.

The only possible way to bring an end to this red-handed war and wickedness is in the coming of the Life-Giver—the Prince of Peace. Even so, come Lord Jesus.

Grand Rapids, Mich.

Selections.

The Covenant.

THE PALESTINE EXPLORATIONS.

An Interesting Lecture on the Holy Land of the Present Day.

Dr. S. Merrill, who was for two years at the head of the American Palestine Exploration work in the country east of the Jordan, gave in Holmer hall, February 15, the first of two lectures upon his researches and discoveries there, chiefly as illustrating the Bible.

These researches, he claimed, have also a wider and more general importance. Many facts were mentioned showing that the Holy Land is not naturally the desolate and wretched country that it is often pictured to be. Beirut has come, in forty years, from a wretched village to a city of 80,000 souls. Its prosperity, however, is due largely to foreign influence.

It has eight printing establishments, nine newspapers and periodicals, four colleges and numerous schools. Among the pupils in the latter, there are at least one thousand Moslem girls. At Jaffa, there are twenty-five square miles covered with orange groves. On the Lebanon mountains there are immense deposits of coal and iron lying side by side.

The Turkish government will neither work these mines nor allow foreign capitalists to do so. There are also extensive deposits of lead, sulphur, copper, bitumen, and salt which will, some day, enrich half the country. The lava beds in Eastern Palestine were also mentioned, which are the most extensive in the world.

The lecture was mainly devoted to the old countries of Moab, Gilead and Bashan, commonly known as the Haurun desert. Travelers never visit this part of Palestine, and only a few explorers have ever ventured into it. It is not only one of great fertility but in former times it was densely populated. Dr. Merrill brought forward many facts in proof of this. Previous to the Moslem conquest in A. D. 635, the population was largely Christian, industrious and peaceful, with many churches and schools.

Before them were the Romans, who filled the land with temples and public works. Preceding them were the Nathaneans, whom the Greeks found it difficult to conquer, and whose kingdom dates from six to eight centuries before Christ.

Previous to these little known people, were the Hebrews. Still farther back were the Amorite kingdoms under Sihon and Og. But yet more remote were the so-called "giants" to whom the speaker would attribute the remarkable cyclopean remains which he had found east of the Jordan. A second fact was that these regions had been overrun many times by the great Assyrian armies for the purpose of conquest and plunder. A third fact was the existence of the remarkable rivers, palaces, triumphal arches, churches, colonnades, theaters, etc., which literally dot the surface of the country and with views of which the audience will be entertained this evening.

Among these ruined cities Dr. Merrill has visited and measured at least sixty ruined churches and thirteen great theaters.

Fourth was mentioned the strong hold which Christianity had here in the early centuries of our era: fifth the Roman roads, splendid and costly structures: sixth, the inscriptions and facts which they reveal: and seventh, the remains of an ancient system of irrigation and illustrating the former prosperity and wealth of this now deserted and desolate region.

Dr. Merrill took his audience to the Jordan valley, where he had spent two months and a half in making a thorough exploration of that portion which lies east of the river. On the west side the English were exploring. This valley is one of the strangest chasms on the globe. It is from 700 to 1,300 feet below the level of the Mediterranean, and is lined on each side by walls of mountain.

The climate here is terrible, but notwithstanding the torrid heat the ruins of thirty or more important towns show that it has been thickly inhabited. Its 500 square miles of plain land is naturally fertile and needs only water to make it productive.

It had sugar plantations centuries before America was discovered. It contains a number of artificial mounds which are the sites of ancient cities. Here excavations ought to be carried on and they would no doubt bring to light important relics of a remote antiquity.

To recover Biblical and other sites was an important object in these explorations which Dr. Merril conducted. Nearly one hundred such sites have been identified in Eastern Palestine alone, and a few of the important ones were specified.

This interesting work of exploration has just begun. The society's map will soon be published, but the archæological work can go on for years. The great drawbacks to work of this kind in the desert, or Old Bashan, are poor water, poor and scanty food, the climate and the wild Arabs.

With the latter Dr. Merrill had succeeded in making friends, and they had rendered him important assistance in his work.

N. Y. Observer.

GALILEE TO DAMASCUS.

SAMUEL S. DENNIS.

Our last letter left us encamped on the northern boundary of that beautiful Sea of Galilee, near the site of Capernaum—Christ's own city. We shall not soon forget that bright, moonlight evening—April 27th,—when we strolled along the beach, far into the night, looking out upon the lake and the surrounding hills that are associated with so many tender and holy memories. We were on hallowed ground, for here our Savior had tarried, here he had spoken words of wisdom and love, here he had manifested his miraculous power, and here too, after his resurrection, he met with his beloved followers.

Early next morning a party of four horsemen might have been seen wandering along that northern shore, visiting with much interest the ruins of Chorazin and Bethsaida—the latter the home of Andrew and Peter. Nothing now remains to mark the site of these cities, busy and prosperous in New Testament times, save a few heaps of rubbish, quite overgrown with weeds and thistles.

As we turned away from the lake, and mounted the steep and rugged hills to the north, on our way to "the coasts of Cesarea Philippi," we thought of him who lived and suffered and died for us, and to whom this very route, over which we were journeying, was sadly familiar.

All day we travelled over a rolling country, in parts under good cultivation. At night we encamped by the waters of Merom, on the borders of that plain where Joshua overthrew the Canaanites. The following day we lunched at Dan—the northern, as Beersheba is the southern, boundary of Palestine. Here is a beautiful spring of pure water, flowing into the Jordan, and near here, at Tellel Kady, Jeroboam erected a temple in which he placed one of the golden calves. By three in the afternoon we entered a valley and began to ascend a gently rising slope, abounding in running water and luxuriating in fields of wheat and barley. This is one of the loveliest regions in Palestine; the flora is variegated and beautiful. The scenery is exceedingly grand, and the woods are vocal with the music of the birds.

Reaching Cæsarea Philippi—the home of Philip the Tetrarch—late in the afternoon, we encamped for the night in a grove of sturdy oaks, within sound of a mighty spring, the principal source of the Jordan, and beneath the very brow of old Hermon. After dinner we rode to the top of a hill near by to obtain a more comprehensive view of the country. Directly below us was spread out a wide expanse of table-land, fertile and well-watered but sadly neglected. Off to our left, in the distance, could be seen the Galilean hills, while to our right rose the lofty mountain forms of Lebanon. Beyond, across the plain, was the country of the Phœnicians, against whose western boundaries dashed the blue Mediterranean, claiming, as it were, a recognition for its service to the great "Mother of Commerce." Behind, towering to the height of nearly 10,000 feet, in bold relief stood out clear and distinct Mt. Hermon, its summit, with a "diadem of snow," gleaming in the setting sun. But far more interesting to us than any view, however beautiful, were the sacred thoughts suggested by this region. On yonder spur of Hermon, to our right, as many believe, Christ took Peter and James and John, his brother, apart," and gave to them a wondering eye a passing view of his glory, when "his face did shine as the sun and his raiment was white as the light," and behold a voice out of the cloud was heard, saying, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased: hear ye him." We felt it was the spell of the place.

"Meantime the sun descended from the skies,
And the bright evening star began to rise."

There is a picture of the Transfiguration adorning the walls of the Vatican in Rome, considered by many in point of merit, the first oil painting in the world. We do not know, nor can we ascertain, what mountain Raphael had in view, when he painted that crowning work of his genius; but assuredly no height in the Holy land presents a more appropriate claim than the wild and majestic sides of Hermon.

From Cesarea Philippi to Damascus is a two days' journey with nothing of special note by the way.

As you ascend from Banias, the ruined battlements of a Phœnician fortress meet the view. This is the Castle of Shubeibeh, equal in extent to that of Heidelburgh and by far the most noted in Syria. It figured largely in the wars between the Saracens of Damascus and the Templars of Jerusalem.

About five in the afternoon of Saturday, we came in sight of Damascus—"the eye of the East." The view of the city from a distant eminence is wonderfully beautiful. Located on the western side of an extensive plain, 2237 feet above the Mediterranean, surrounded by the desert, embowered in green shrubbery, and sparkling with all the beauties of an oasis, it presents a most inviting and fascinating appearance. The city is oval in shape; about four miles in circumference, and contains 150,000 inhabitants. The country lying further to the East is "the cradle of the human race," and Damascus is without doubt the oldest city in the world, having been founded by Uz, the grandson of Noah, more than 4,000 years ago. We entered the city by the Jerusalem gate. Passing along "the street called Straight," we soon came to the Bazaars, the central feature in all Eastern cities. They are very attractive with their rich goods, brought from all parts of Turkey, Persia and Arabia, and present a novel and curious scene. The rich burgher of Damascus, the stealthy Bedowin of the Desert, the hardy Druze mountaineer, and the stately inhabitant of Persia, are all here, gathered together in one picturesque group.

Crossing the Square in which are situated the Bazaars, we come to the Meydan, the principal promenade of Damascus, at the farther end of which is our hotel. The next day, we visited the grand Mosque—originally a Christian church—with its curious Byzantine gate. Over the arch of one of the entrances to this mighty pagan temple, in Greek text, is the following sentence:

"Thy Kingdom, O Christ, is an everlasting kingdom; and thy dominion endureth throughout all generations."

How strange that this grand Christian truth should be allowed to remain undisturbed a thousand years, over the gate of one of the most august of Moslem shrines. Near by, within the very shadow of this Mohammedan temple, is the tomb of its greatest defender—the mighty Saracen warrior, Sultan Saladin.

Accepting the invitation of a friend, we paid a visit to some of the homes of wealthy Damascenes, and found them truly Eastern and very beautiful. Entering from the dirty, noisy street, by a low mean door, you are hardly prepared for the luxury and elegance within. In the centre of the building is a large square, marble-paved court. In the middle of this court a fountain is playing, surrounded by trees in full leaf, affording a cool and refreshing retreat from the rays of the sun. Opening off from this square are the different apartments, some exposed on one side to the court. Around the sides of these rooms run wide divans, covered with costly Eastern fabrics. The walls around and the ceiling above are adorned with richly carved arabesques, intermixed with pious sentences from the Koran. The whole effect, quite different from anything we had before seen, was novel, unique and fascinating.

We were compelled to decline a visit to the ruins of Palmyra, the city built by Solomon and destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar. It was the home of the brilliant and sadly-historic Zenobia, who, as Queen of the East, held her powerful court there until she was conquered by the Romans, whose sway at one time extended from the shores of the Atlantic to the banks of the Indus. It is situated some two hundred miles from Damascus, in the very heart of the desert.

SATANICAL.

Where Conflict—after the working of Satan. 2 Thess. ii. 9.

ROMAN CATHOLIC CIVILIZATION.

OTTAWA, Feb. 20.

Hull is a city of some 10,000 inhabitants on the Quebec side of the Ottawa River immediately opposite this city. The people are principally French Canadian Roman Catholics. About a year ago the Rev. Mr. Seiveright, a convert from Romanism, began missionary labors in that city. He met with a great deal of opposition in his work, and on various occasions his meetings were broken up by gangs of men and boys, who would smash the windows of the building in which services were held, and assail the worshippers with sticks and stones. It was only after the strenuous exertions of the authorities that this riotous work was put a stop to.

Some five weeks ago a young woman named Garrett came to Hull from Quebec, stopping with her brother-in-law, Philip Soucy. She attended several of the Rev. Mr. Seiveright's prayer meetings notwithstanding the protests of her relatives, and was converted to Protestantism.

Upon this becoming known, the priest of the parish was sent for. He found the young woman reading the Bible when he arrived at the house, and the story goes that he snatched the book from her hand and threw it into the fire.

Miss Garrett was lectured and then placed in close confinement. For two weeks she was kept on bread and water, as a punishment, and then she contrived to make her escape. She found an asylum at the house of the missionary whose appeals had led to her conversion.

This afternoon she left with the officers and pupils of the Sunday School in Hull, to come to this city to attend a mass missionary meeting of Sunday school scholars. While proceeding along the main street in Hull the party was set upon by a mob of about one hundred and fifty men and boys. Miss Garrett was seized and forcibly borne away despite the efforts of those with her, several of whom were knocked down and badly treated.

The City Recorder was appealed to for the arrest of the leading kidnappers, but declined to make any arrests. The affair causes considerable excitement, as the whereabouts of the young woman are not known at present.

EFFECT OF SUNSHINE.

From an acorn weighing a few grains a tree will grow for a hundred years or more, not only throwing off many pounds of leaves every year, but itself weighing several tons. If an orange twig is put in a large box of earth, and that earth is weighed when the twig become a tree, bearing luscious fruit, there will be very nearly the same amount of earth. From careful experiments made by the different scientific men, it is an ascertained fact that a large part of the growth of a tree is derived from the sun, from the air and from the water, and a very little from the earth; and notably all vegetation becomes sickly unless it is freely exposed to sunshine. Wood and coal are but condensed sunshine, which contain three important elements equally essential to both vegetable and animal life—magnesia, lime and iron. It is the iron in the blood which gives it its sparkling red color and its strength. It is the lime in the bones which gives them the durability necessary to bodily vigor, while the magnesia is important to any of the tissues. Thus it is, that the more persons are out of doors, the more healthy the more vigorous they are, and the longer will they live. Every human being ought to have an hour or two of sunshine at noon in Winter, and in the early forenoon in Summer.

Poetry.

NOBILITY.

ALICE CARY.

True worth is in being, not seeming,—
In doing, each day that goes by,
Some little good—not in dreaming
Of great things to do by and by.
For whatever men say in their blindness,
And spite of the fancies of youth,
There's nothing so kingly as kindness,
And nothing so royal as truth.

We get back our youth as we measure—
We cannot do wrong and feel right,
Nor can we give pain and gain pleasure,
For justice avenges each slight.
The air for the wing of the sparrow,
The bush for the robin and wren,
But always the path that is narrow
And straight for the children of men.

'Tis not in the heart of story
The heart to be false to its trust,
Though he who refuses counterfeit glory
Gives all that he hath for his virtue;
For when from our heights he hath reached,
Alas! it is only to prove
That nothing so sacred as honor,
And nothing so loyal as love!

We cannot make laws for the children,
Nor seek their advice when we err,
And sometimes the wisest are blindest
Helps more than the blind search in vain:
For good hath not to be pursuing,
Nor gaining of gear, for of stuff
But just in the doing, and doing
As we would be done by, is all.

Through sorrow, through sickness, through sadness,
Against the world, care and fate,
No lot of our common is abating,
Our part is to work and to wait.
And slight is the sting of his troubles
Whose anthem are less than life's wrath;
For he who is lowest has single
Whatever life's fortunes or birth.

Communications.

THE ORACLES OF GOD.

B. WILSON.

"If any man speak, let him speak as the oracles of God." 1 Pet. iv. 11.

This language of the apostle Peter gives a rule for the guidance of those persons who aspire to teach others in things pertaining to God, and it may be profitable for both writer and reader to inquire into what is meant by the phrase, "oracles of God," and what it is to speak in agreement with the "oracles of God."

The Greek word logion logion, which is translated oracle, means a divine revelation or communication. The best Greek writers understood logion, oracle, to be a Divine word or speech—an answer given by the gods to some question asked. The word always implies a supernatural speech or declaration, and generally with reference to some future event.

The Greeks had "gods many, and lords many;" and these of course had their priests and priestesses who pretended to hold converse with, and to be the mediums of communication between these deities and their worshippers. Hence it was customary for kings to consult these oracles before going to war, and they were generally guided by the responses given.

In the Old Testament the word oracle is applied to the Most Holy place, where the ark of the covenant was placed, and where Jehovah communicated with his people over the mercy-seat. See 1 Kings vi. 16, 20, 22; viii. 6; 2 Chron. iv. 20; Ps. xxviii. 2. As the meaning of the word logion logion, is a Divine word or speech, the place where this communication was given, is also called an oracle.

In 2 Sam. xvi. 23, where it is said that the counsel of Ahithophel was "as if a man inquired at the oracle of God," evidently refers to the custom of asking counsel of the Lord through the high priest who ministered before him. For instance, in Num. xxvii. 21, it is read of Joshua, that "he shall stand before Eleazar the priest, who shall ask counsel for him after the judgment of Urim before the Lord; at his word shall they go out, and at his word shall they come in, both he, and all the children of Israel with him, even all the congregation."

This mode of consultation was used in the time of the Judges. See Judg. xx. 18, 20, 25, 26–28: "and the children of Israel inquired of the Lord, (for the ark of the covenant of God was there in those days, and Phinea, the son of Eleazar, the son of Aaron, stood before it in those days,") etc. David also inquired of the Lord in the same way, and received responses at this oracle.

See 1 Sam. xxiii. 9; xxx. 7, 8: "David said to Abiathar the priest, bring hither the ephod." Then he asked the Lord. The ephod and breastplate of judgment were connected together. In the breastplate were two onyx stones, on which were engraven the names of the twelve tribes of Israel, also the Urim and the Thummim. The ephod and breastplate were worn by the priest when he entered the holy place to appear before the Lord.

Hence when David called for the ephod, the Urim and Thummim, the breastplate, and priest were all there, for he told Abiathar, the priest to "bring hither the ephod."

The response to the inquiry, made always came in a certain prescribed order—and this response was the word or oracle of God. And seeing that this response was usually given where the priest officiated before the ark of the Lord, the Holy Place where the ark was kept, and where the Shechinah dwelt, after the temple was built, was also called the oracle of God.

In the apostolic writings the Greek word logia, logion, oracles, is found to occur four times. Three times used in connection with God, theou, God; 1 Pet. iv. 11; Rom. iii. 2; v. 12; and translated, oracles of God; and once connected with lives, zonta, living, and rendered; "living oracles," in Acts vii. 38.

There can be no question but that the Jews understood that what the apostles in these texts call "living oracles" and "oracles of God," to be the writings of Moses and the prophets. The books of the Old Testament were all classified and arranged, and collected into one book, called the Scriptures by Jesus, in John v. 39; and the Holy Scriptures by Paul in 2 Tim. iii. 15, and Rom. i. 2; and in about twenty other places.

The Old Testament existed in nearly its present form some two or three centuries before the Christian era, and was translated from the Hebrew into Greek, by Ptolemy Philadelphus, king of Egypt, by seventy-two learned men.

Hence this translation is called the Septuagint. This version or translation was evidently known to Jesus and the apostles, because many of their quotations are taken from it as proved by comparing them with the present copy of the Septuagint.

The Holy Scriptures were divided into three parts—"the law of Moses, the prophets and the psalms," Luke xxiv. 44; but generally referred to as the writings of Moses and the prophets, or the law and the prophets; Luke xvi. 16, 29, 31; xxiv. 27; Acts xiii. 15. These writing were universally regarded by the Jews as divinely inspired, and by them regarded as sacred.

However much they may have deviated from the spirit of the record, they kept the letter inviolate. They regarded "the law and the prophets" as the word of Jehovah, and held it in reverence, yet a veil was upon their heart when Moses was read.

The traditions and commentaries of the elders prevented the text, and misled the people, as it was then and is now with the Jews, so it is with the majority of Christianized Gentiles—they profess a great love for the Bible and hold it in reverence as the word of God, but tradition has blinded their minds, so that they cannot see clearly the light of the gospel of the glory of the anointed one, who is the likeness of God. See 2 Cor. iii. 14, 15; iv. 4.

That the Old Testament writings are referred to and spoken of by Stephon, Peter and Paul, when they used the phrases "lively oracles" and "oracles of God," cannot be doubted for a moment; and that they believed them to be supernaturally given is just as certain.

Peter says that "prophecy came not in old time by the will of man, but men from God spoke, being moved by the Holy Spirit. 2 Peter i. 21. And in his first letter he tells us that the spirit that was in the prophets, "testified before hand the sufferings of Christ, and the glory that should follow." 1 Pet. i. 11, 12; and we know that Peter told the Jews that "these things which God before had showed by the mouth of all his prophets that Christ should suffer, he hath so fulfilled." Acts iii. 18.

Also of "the times of the restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets, since the world began."

These testimonies of Peter show that God spoke by and through the prophets, and that their words are therefore properly termed the "oracles of God."

The apostle Paul reminds Timothy that the Holy Scriptures which he had known from his childhood, were able to make him "wise unto salvation through that faith which is in Christ Jesus;" and that "all Scripture divinely inspired, is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished for all good works." 2 Tim. iii. 15, 17.

He always used these Scriptures in the many controversies he had with his countrymen—the Jews. At Thessalonica he went into a synagogue of the Jews, and for "three Sabbath days reasoned with them out of the scriptures."

At Berea also he did the same and to the credit of the Jews at that place it is said, "These were more noble than those in Thessalonica, in that they received the word with all readiness of mind, and searched the Scriptures daily, whether those things were so." Acts xvii. 2, 11.

And when Paul was taken prisoner, and was examined by Felix, upon the charges of being pestilent, seditious, and a ringleader of the sect of the Nazarenes, he replied. "Neither can they prove the things whereof they now accuse me. But this I confess unto thee, that after the way which they call heresy, so worship I the God of my fathers, believing all things which are written in the law and in the prophets." Acts xxiv. 13, 14.

Also before King Agrippa he declared, "and now I stand and am judged for the hope of the promise made of God unto our fathers: * * * * witnessing both to small and great, saying none other things than those which the prophets and Moses did say should come." Acts xxvi. 6, 22.

Nor did persecution or bonds change his views, or alter his course; for to those Jews at Rome who wished to hear what he had to say in his defence, "he expounded and testified the kingdom of God, persuading them concerning Jesus, both out of the law of Moses, and out of the prophets, from morning till evening." Acts xxviii. 23.

This was the way in which this great apostle of the Gentiles fulfilled his mission; knowing that he had been separated from the gospel of God, (which he had promised afore by his prophets in the holy Scriptures) concerning his Son Jesus Christ our Lord. Rom. i. 1–3.

To the Jew first he preached the gospel whenever and wherever he could obtain a hearing. The Jews were the custodians of the truth of God—the law and the prophets—the Holy Scriptures—the oracles of God.

Hence their advantage over the Gentiles was great. They were in a position to know God's will, and approve the things that were more excellent, being instructed out of the law. So when Paul preached the righteousness of God as exhibited in the gospel, the law and the prophets were appealed to as witnesses to its truth, and those Jews whose minds were not blinded by prejudice and tradition, believed and obeyed.

Paul had a great reverence for the Scriptures, as well as an intimate acquaintance with them. He made use of them largely, whether in preaching the gospel, or in writing to the brethren. He esteemed them as The Oracles of God—the Holy Scriptures—the Word of God.

Remember this was said of the Old Testament, of which so little is understood by the religionists of the present day. If Paul, when preaching the gospel said none other things than Moses and the prophets said should come, how can ministers now preach the same gospel when they are ignorant of or ignore those very things? It is to be feared that they are preaching another gospel. Let such beware!

The apostle would say to such "Ye have need that one teach you the first principles of the oracles of God; are become such as have need of milk, and not of strong meat. For every one that useth milk is unskilful in the word of righteousness; for he is a babe." Heb. v. 12, 13.

No one was ever better posted in the Scriptures than Jesus. He spoke of them as of Divine authority. He called the attention of the people to what these writings enjoined, and denounced the traditions of the elders, saying, "In vain they do worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men." Said he, "If they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded, though one rose from the dead." Luke xvi. 31.

Again he said to the Jews concerning the Scriptures, "They are they which testify of me. * * * Had ye believed Moses, ye would have believed me; for he wrote of me. But if ye believe not his writings, how shall ye believe my words." John v. 39, 46, 47.

"Moses in the law, and the prophets, did write concerning Jesus of Nazareth," and all who thus read and understand are taught of God, have learned of the Father—and come to the Son. After his resurrection, when on the road to Emmaus from Jerusalem, with two disciples, "beginning at Moses and all the prophets, he expounded unto them in all the Scriptures the things concerning himself;" and he did it in such a manner, and so effectually, that they said afterwards one to another, "Did not our heart burn within us while he talked with us by the way, and while he opened to us the Scriptures?"

And then the same evening, at Jerusalem, Jesus stood in the midst of his eleven apostles and those with them, and after showing them his hands and feet, and eating in their presence a piece of broiled fish, and of an honeycomb, he said, "These are the words that I spoke unto you, while I was yet with you, that all things must be fulfilled, which were written in the law of Moses, and in the prophets, and in the Psalms, concerning me." Luke xxiv. 27, 44.

Much more might be said, but let this suffice for the present, on this part of the subject.

2. What is it to speak according to the Oracles of God?

Peter's exhortation, or rather command is, "If any man speak, let him speak as the oracles of God." No one can fulfill this injunction who is ignorant of them, or whose mind is blinded by tradition.

Isaiah wrote long ago—"To the law and to the testimony; if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them." Isa. viii. 20.

The apostle John says, "Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits, whether they are of God; because many false prophets are gone out into the world." 1 John iv. 1. How are these prophets or teachers to be tried? According to Isaiah, by the law and the testimony.

What John Baptist said of Jesus is also true of every one sent by God—"He whom God has sent speaketh the words of God." And not only of those directly commissioned by him, "but he that doeth truth cometh to the light, that his deeds may be made manifest, that they are wrought in God." John iii. 21, 21.

In the apostolic era there were some who claimed inspiration, and to be apostles or prophets, or teachers. Whether false or true, all must be tested. Try the spirits. Test them by the word of the Lord.

John says, "We (apostles) are of God; he that knoweth God, heareth us; he that is not of God, heareth not us."

Of the false teachers he says, "They are of the world; therefore speak they of the world, and the world heareth them." 1 John iv. 5, 6.

The Lord says by Jeremiah, "He that hath my word, let him speak my word faithfully. What is the chaff to the wheat? saith the Lord. Is not my word like as a fire? saith the Lord; and like a hammer that breaketh the rock in pieces? Therefore, behold, I am against the prophets, saith the Lord, that steal my words every one from his neighbor. Behold, I am against the prophets, saith the Lord, that use their tongues, and say, He saith." Jer. xxiii. 28–31.

There are many teachers of religion now who say that they are called of God to the ministry, claiming to be preachers of the gospel, and to be guided by the Spirit of God—who are like some prophets in Jeremiah's day, of whom it was said, "They speak a vision of their own heart, and not out of the mouth of the Lord."

The intelligent reader can verify the truth of this by stepping into the various sectarian places of worship, and listening to the words of the preachers. Do they preach the same gospel that Paul preached? Do they say none other things than those which the prophets and Moses did say should come? What do they say about the Messiahship of Jesus? What about his kingdom? What about the times of restitution spoken of by the prophets? What about the promises made to the fathers concerning the inheritance and the blessing of the nations? What about the promise and covenant made with David concerning his kingdom and throne? What about the restoration of Israel to the land promised to Abraham, Isaac and Jacob?

All things are spoken of by the prophets, and belong to the gospel. In fact, the gospel cannot be preached without them. Yet they preach some thing which they call gospel, and in the name of the Lord utter which he has not spoken, or authorized them to speak. What will such do with what Paul says in Gal. i. 6–9: "There be some that trouble you, and pervert the gospel of Christ. But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed."

If any wish to tell sinners the way of salvation they must speak in agreement with the oracles of God. No way or plan of man's devising will be accepted. The gospel as preached by the apostles—"the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ"—alone will avail as "the power of God unto salvation." Acts viii. 12; Rom. i. 16.

No one any man preach the gospel unless he is acquainted with the oracles of God, or the Old Testament Scriptures. They are the books which testify of Jesus as the Christ, and of his kingdom. To be ignorant of them is to be in darkness as to the gospel, and consequently disqualifies such person as a teacher of others.

Unsaved themselves, because ignorant of God's way of righteousness, what have they to do to declare his statutes, or that they should take his covenant into their mouth? Seeing they hate instruction, and cast his words behind them. Psa. l. 16, 17.

There is no new revelation at the present time. The apostles alone are Christ's authorized preachers. All who preach now must preach as they did, or they will lead men astray. There is only one way of salvation, one gospel, one faith, for those who lived in apostolic times, and those who live now.

And if we have believed these things and obeyed the truth by being baptized, and would teach or exhort our brethren, Peter's advice is very appropriate—"If any man speak, let him speak as the oracles of God." We must speak the truth in love—speak for edification, and exhortation, and comfort—preach the word; be instant in season, and out of season: reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long-suffering and doctrine"—not "handling the word of God deceitfully; but by manifestation of the truth commend ourselves to every man's conscience in the sight of God." Let us remember, that "whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the Scripture might have hope."

In conclusion, then, "As every man hath received the gift, even so minister the same one to another, as good stewards of the manifold grace of God. If any man speak, let him speak as the oracles of God; if any minister, let him do it as of the ability which God giveth; that God in all things may be glorified through Jesus Christ, to whom be praise and dominion for ever and ever. Amen."

AM I WORTHY?

J. S. HATCH.

The above question is one of vast importance. Am I worthy? If I ever have any doubts, it is on this point. When I learn from God's word what the dear old fathers suffered in days of old. What they had to go through! They went into dens and caves of the earth; wandered about in sheep skins and goat skins; were sawn asunder; were tempted, and slain, and that dear old servant, the apostle Paul, says, "In stripes above measure; in prisons more frequent, in deaths oft. Of the Jews five times received I forty stripes save one, that is thirty-nine stripes at five different times, making two hundred and ninty-five stripes,) thrice was I beaten with rods, once was I stoned, thrice was I shipwrecked, a night and a day I have been in the deep. In journeyings often, in perils of waters, in perils of robbers, in perils by mine own countrymen; in perils by the heathen, in perils in the city, in perils in the wilderness, in perils in the sea, in perils among false brethren; in weariness and painfulness, in watchings often, in hunger and thirst; in fastings often, in cold and nakedness. Besides these things that are without, that which cometh upon me daily—the care of all the churches."

We do not expect to suffer to the same extent that they did, but are we doing enough to gain a position in the kingdom? I fear many of us are trying to see how little we can do and still get into the kingdom.

Think of it, there is an eternal weight of glory, eternal life, an eternal inheritance, eternal redemption. Will the amount we are doing entitle us to all these things? It is the overcomer that will inherit all things.

Brethren and sisters, let us be up and doing. We have no time to waste. The Lord will soon come and we want to be ready.

Jesus says those that were ready entered in. We want to have our lamps trimmed and burning, and our vessels filled with oil.

As Paul says "The care of all the churches," I believe that every brother who goes out to proclaim the truth, feels a deep interest in the different organizations. That is the feeling of all the faithful ones. We want them to live in order, and strive together for the truth as it is in Jesus. Then if Abraham believed and obeyed, we must believe and obey.

Noah was moved with fear, and did what God required of him. We must now do our duty. All those faithful ones put their faith and works together.

I read in THE RESTITUTION of a sister in Williamsport, Warren county, Ind., that fell asleep in Jesus, a short time ago. Brother David Shanklin, who used to live in that county, took me to that town one night and I spoke in the court house—the first time the truth was preached in the place. Sister Bowman came out to hear me, and by that discourse and the help she got from Sister Warbritton, she came into the faith, and I had the pleasure of immersing her and three others into Christ.

Bless the Lord, O my soul, for all his goodness.

OBITUARY.

GLADDEN—Died, on the 12th of Feb. 1881, at her father's residence, near Healdsburg, Sonoma county, California, sister Sadie E. Gladden, aged nineteen years, six months and twenty-seven days.

She was the younger daughter of Brother and Sister William N. and Mary C. Gladden. Brother and Sister Gladden with their children, four daughters and one son, formerly lived near "Old Union," eight miles west of Indianapolis, Indiana. They came to California and settled in the Russian River Valley, nine years ago last October. Very many of the brethren and sisters in Indiana doubtless remember them.

There are some things connected with our deceased young sister rather remarkable.

She had became quite intelligent in the Scriptures, but had not been immersed, and she was impressed with the idea that she must attend to that important duty. I was in Lake county in this state at the time. She said several times to her mother, she wished I would return so she could be baptized. Soon after my return home she came to my house and requested me to baptize her. She made the good confession and was baptized the next day.

On Sunday following she met with us and partook of the emblems representing the broken body and shed blood of our Redeemer. A few days afterward she was attacked with brain fever, from the effect of which, coupled with diptheria, after almost three months of intense suffering, she died. At the last she seemed to go to sleep without a struggle.

She believed her sleep would be a short one, and confidently hoped to be called at the first resurrection.

Although the deceased was my niece and I was one of the mourners; by request I endeavored to comfort the friends by reading from 1 Thess. iv. 13–18. That on account of sin this calamity, or man's great enemy, death, gets the victory for the present over us; but that a part of the great work is complished by our Redeemer was to get the keys of death and the grave, and that when the appointed time shall come, the Lord will return and gather from among the dead and living all the jewels. That the dead in Christ will be made alive, after the power of an endless life; and the living righteous will be changed from mortality to immortality, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye.

What a blessed hope. And Paul says we "comfort one another with these words."

The attendance at the funeral was the largest I have ever witnessed in the county.

An effort was made to impress upon each one present, the necessity of believing the gospel, and rendering that kind of obedience which God in his word has so clearly made known; that when death shall claim us as a victim, we may be found ready, not only to submit now but prepared to live eternally in the world to come, where we can join in the victor's song over death and the grave. We all have this blessed privilege. What will we choose? Will we have immortality, glory, honor, eternal life—an eternal weight of glory, and the society of God and his Son, the unfallen angels and the saved ones of Adam's family; or do we prefer the short lived pleasures this world can give, and finally go into the second death, from which there will be no deliverance?

Reader, we are too near the close of this dispensation to spend any time in procrastination. What we do must be done speedily.

On her death bed, our sister rejoiced that she had become obedient while in apparent good health. Her friends do not sorrow as others who have no hope. They do confidently expect to meet Sadie at the first resurrection. May we all prepare for the great event.

We are often told to prepare for death. I have concluded that we should prepare for a future and endless life, for death will come whether we prepare for it or not. If we fail to secure the right to eternal life, then our present life will have been a failure, and we will fail to meet with and enjoy the society of our righteous friends, and will hear the awful sentence—"depart!" We may not think seriously of the import of that word now, but those to whom it will be spoken will then realize what it means.

May we all be led by the directions God has so kindly given, that all may be well with us at the judgment.

RICHARD CORDALEY.

Red Bluff, Cal., Feb. 14, 1881.

News Items.

EARTHQUAKES IN THE AZORES.

LONDON, Feb. 24—A dispatch to the News from Lisbon reports that thirty-six successive shocks of earthquake occurred at St. Michael's in the Azores. One church and two hundred houses have fallen, and several persons were killed.

Even Asia has not escaped an exceptionally severe winter. In Japan there have been snow storms the like of which are not remembered to have occurred in forty years. The snow is ten feet deep in the fields and fifteen feet on the hills.

It is reported that the deposed Khedive of Egypt has been entering into secret negotiations with the Albanians and Greeks, with a view to contingencies. Ismail is crafty, rich, ambitious, and unscrupulous. To such a man in such a position the present disturbed condition of Eastern affairs offers many opportunities, and in attempting to forecast the possible issues of a war the existence of the ex-Khedive should never be left entirely out of account.

Latest advice from the Transvaal, South Africa, report the defeat of a force of British troops by the Boers (Hilland colonists), and the killing of General Colley, who was in chief command. It is reported, however, that the chief body of the British army was not engaged in the fight.

TERRIBLE SLAUGHTER.

The two battles under the fortifications of Lima, resulted, it appears from the last reports, in the killing of 9,000 Peruvians and 7,000 Chilians.

ALARMING MORTALITY IN NEW YORK.

NEW YORK, Feb. 26.—The total number of deaths since January 1, is 6,348—an enormous increase over previous years.

Seventeen little children were suffocated to death in a Catholic Orphan Asylum, at Scranton, Pa., last night Feb. 27, during a fire. The little ones had been locked in their rooms, and their dead bodies were found after the fire, but none of them had been burned. They were suffocated by the smoke.

The Boston (Mass.) Museum of Fine Arts has become the owner of a very fine slab coming from Nineveh. This piece of Assyrian work is eight feet long by four wide—and weighs some 1,800 pounds. A figure of a King in full dress, some six feet seven inches high, is cut on the stone. He has a cap, wears ear-rings, has sandals on his feet and bracelets on his wrists, and in his belt are three daggers. Wings are attached to his shoulders, and in his left hand he grasps a sword. There are twenty-one lines of cuniform characters running across the base of the slab. The whole work is conceived in the boldest style of Assyrian art. The date of the work may be placed at 800 B. C.

DIED.

WALTON—In Rahway, N. J. Jan. 29, 1881, James H. Walton in the 76th year of his age.

Brother Walton was converted to God in early life, and united with the Presbyterian Church in Monmouth Co.

He afterwards removed to Newark and became connected with the Methodists. While there he heard the proclamation of the speedy coming of Christ, and became deeply interested; and associated himself with the people looking for the Lord.

He never lost his interest in the Advent Doctrine, lived a consistent Christain life; and died in the hope of a speedy resurrection to immortality.

He was the Author of a little book of 80 pages, entitled, "Nature's Mirror," consisting of proverbs or short comprehensive sentences, expressive of some important truth, and arranged in Alphabetical order; which will do good while he is at rest in his grave.

"Blessed are the dead who die in the Lord, for they rest from their labors and their works do follow them. He leaves a wife to mourn his loss.

The funeral sermon was preached by the Rev. A. A. Liggett of the Presbyterian Church, from Rom. x. 10—11 in which he made the resurrection a prominent theme.

A. H. BROWN.

JACOBS—Of lung fever, at Indianapolis, Ind, on Sunday morning Feb. 20, 1881, Sister Eunice A. wife of Brother Richard Jacobs, in the forty-second year of her age.

Sister Jacobs was much loved by all who knew her. Her Christian character, and her steadfastness in the faith once delivered to the saints is worthy to stand for an example to others of like precious faith.

For about fifteen years she has been a believer in the gospel of Christ, and rejoiced in looking for Jesus the King of Kings, to come and restore all things spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began. But now she sleeps in Jesus, and all such we believe God will bring with him.

Sister Jacobs was buried on Monday afternoon. Funeral services conducted by the undersigned at her late residence No. 108 Delaware St. Brother Jacobs and three bereaved children, and a number of sympathizing friends and neighbors were present. The subject was "The wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord. Rom. 6, 23.

JOHN H. DOX.

MARRIED.

BALL—SMITH—On Wednesday, Feb. 23, 1881, by Elder H. V. Lyon, at his residence, Susquehanna Bridge, N. Y., Mr. Thomas J. Ball to Miss Martha Smith, both of Fontelle, O.

Poetry.

Review and Herald.

"A LITTLE WHILE."

BY ELIZA H. MORTON.

A few more days of clouds and gloom,
Of heart-aches, bitter woe,
A few more funeral trains and knells,
A few more tears to flow,
And then the shadeless noon will dawn,
An age of sunshine bright,
When heart and voice will hail with song
The Sun's Perpetual Light.

A few more Sabbaths here below
In temples built with hands,
A few more efforts for the good
Of those in heathen lands,
And then probation will be o'er
Our work forever done,
All earthly gathering in the past
Eternity's sun.

A few more prayers for those we love
That they may find the way,
A few more sighs and copious tears
To cause a bound to stay,
And then before the great white throne
We at shall trembling stand,
And some from out that mingled throng
Will be At God's right hand.

Seattle Creek, Mich.

Communications.

IS MAN SAVED BY FAITH ALONE, OR BY FAITH AND WORKS COMBINED?

J. M. STEPHENSON.

The only fair way to investigate any subject is to compare all the plain statements of the witness, or witnesses, and adopt a conclusion which will harmonize their testimony.

Ex parte testimony should never be received as settling any question. Able candid men who are sure they have the truth never resort to special pleading. To read only the texts which speak of salvation by faith, and ignore those which speak of salvation by works, is doing great injustice to the Bible witnesses.

I can by this mode of investigation prove that man can be saved by works alone.

Christ in his great discourse on the mount says, "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven."

Thus, doing the will of our Heavenly Father is the only condition named of inheriting the kingdom of God. Shall we therefore conclude that faith is not necessary? This would contradict the Bible statements as the asseveration that we can be saved by works alone.

Two truths are never in conflict. Two opposites may both be false, but they cannot both be true.

It cannot be true, therefore, that a man can be saved by faith alone or by works alone.

Again, Christ informs us how we may know when we are doing our Heavenly Father's will. He says, "Therefore, whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock. And the rain descended, and the floods came, and the winds blew, and beat upon that house; and it fell not, for it was founded upon a rock." Matthew vii. 24, 25.

As far as anything is expressed in the foregoing language we build through the instrumentality of works alone upon the solid rock, that superstructure which shall stand unmoved mid the warring elements of heaven and earth.

It may be affirmed that faith must be the cause by which works are produced. We see from a negative standpoint:

1. If this were so then faith could not exist without corresponding works. Such a conclusion would be in direct conflict with what James has affirmed in the most unequivocal language. When speaking of the relation that that faith and works sustain to each other, he says, "What doth it profit, my brethren, though a man say he have faith, and have not works? Can faith save him? If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of daily food, and one of you say unto them, Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled; notwithstanding ye give them not these things which are needful for the body; what doth it profit? Even so faith, if it hath not works is dead, being alone. Yea a man may say, thou hast faith, and I have works; show me thy faith without thy works, and I will show thee my faith by my works. But what wilt thou know, O man, that faith without works is dead? Was not Abraham our father justified by works, when he had offered Isaac his son upon the altar? Seest thou how faith wrought with his works, and by works was faith made perfect? And the Scripture was fulfilled which saith, Abraham believed God, and it was imputed unto him for righteousness; and he was called the friend of God. Ye see then how that a man is justified by works and not by faith only.

Likewise also was not Rahab the harlot justified by works, when she had received the messengers, and had sent them out another way? For as the body without the breath (margin) is dead, so faith without works is dead also." Jas. ii. 14-26.

James' questions at the 14th verse are the very strongest possible negations.

1. That there is no profit in having faith without works.

2. That faith without works cannot save a man.

We must understand James to mean just the opposite of what he says, to teach that faith alone will save a man. To affirm that faith without works cannot save a man is tantamount to affirming that faith alone cannot save him. It is also tantamount to affirming that faith with works will save him.

Thus, works is by implication a spoke in the great wheel of salvation as faith.

2. That faith alone will not feed the hungry nor clothe the naked. Thus it may leave out love, the crowning element of Christian character.

Paul affirms that a man may have faith so that he can remove mountains, and yet be destitute of love and therefore nothing.

3. Again, James says that faith can exist without works just as truly and literally as there can be a dead body without breath.

In the first clause James twice affirms that faith without works is dead. We must either deny that there can be a body without breath, or admit that there can be faith without works.

I would say to any man claiming justification by faith alone, "Will thou know, O man, that faith without works is dead?"

It appears from this asseveration, that there were men in the apostle's day vain enough to believe that faith without works will justify a man. To put to rest such a vain idea, the apostle positively affirms that faith without works is dead.

The advocates of salvation or Christian character by faith alone, must predicate Christian character or salvation upon a dead faith. James says that a man is justified by works and not by faith. Verse 24.

At verse 22d James declares that Abraham's faith wrought with his works, and by works his faith was made perfect. Thus faith and works are co-operative in man's salvation. They sustain the same relation to each other, as far as their mutual dependence upon each other is concerned, in the great scheme of salvation, that two oars to one boat do. We will call the boat salvation, and the two oars faith and works.

A man wishing to cross a stream that he may be saved from certain death if he remains where he is, grasps with one hand the oar of faith alone, and the boat whirls round and round in a circle. The harder he works the faster it moves, but he makes no headway.

He drops the oar of faith, and grasps the oar of works, and the boat whirls round and round in the same circle, but in the opposite direction. Being convinced of the folly of trying to row a boat with one hand and one oar, he grasps with each hand an oar, and pulls them together, and the boat moves straight forward toward the opposite shore.

This is the old fashioned Abrahamic faith which "wrought with works and by works was made perfect."

Abraham's faith was imputed for righteousness, because God knew that he would do right. There is no justification in a dead faith.

James says that faith without works is dead. A dead faith can neither justify or save; therefore faith without works can neither justify or save man. Paul teaches that Abraham was justified by faith without the works of a dead law.

James says, according to the foregoing, that a man is justified by works without faith.

To understand Paul as referring to a dead law, by whose deeds he declares no man can be justified; and understand James to imply what he had several times repeated, viz that a man is not saved by faith alone, but by faith and works conjointly, and all is plain and harmonious between James and Paul; while that view which claims justification by faith without works, arrays these two apostles against each other.

It is also in conflict with the whole genius of the gospel which only offers salvation to the obedient believer. The Jews believed they were the children of Abraham by natural generation. Christ presented a higher and more reliable test than that of flesh and blood.

He said, "If ye were the children of Abraham ye would do the works of Abraham."

Our Savior appealed to the great law of adoption by which they or we may become the seed of Abraham in an infinitely higher sense than mere lineal descent. In the gospel test of joint heirship with Abraham and Christ there is neither Jew or Gentile, but they are all one in Christ, if they have the works of faith which both Father and Son had.

In the great commission Christ recognized the same great truth. Thus, he coupled faith and works as the joint conditions of the promised salvation.

He said, "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved."

Here baptism is coupled with faith by the copulative conjunction and as an equal condition of the promised salvation. Thus faith and works sustain the same relation to the gospel as the things to be believed and obeyed in order to salvation.

Faith and baptism are the joint conditions of the promised salvation, the reward for compliance with these conditions.

It does not follow that because baptism is not repeated from a negative standpoint that therefore it is not just as necessary as faith. One transgression of capital law will damn a man, but one act of obedience will not save him.

If unbelief will condemn a man it is not necessary to repeat any other sin that the non-repentant sinner may be condemned to death. That faith alone is not sufficient to obtain remission of sin is evident from the fact that after Peter had the demonstration that thousands believed the gospel he commanded them to repent and be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins. Acts ii. 37, 38. Thus teaching that obedience is just as necessary in order to the remission of sin as faith.

Why command these believers to repent and be baptized for, or in order to, the remission of sins, if their sins had already been pardoned on account of their faith? One thing is certain, Peter did not believe that Faith alone would save these men from their sins, or he would not have commanded them to repent and be baptized for the remission of their sins. That faith alone is not sufficient to secure the remission of sins is further evident from the following language of Christ:

"And said unto them, Thus it is written, and thus it behooved Christ to suffer, and to rise from the dead the third day. And that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem."

If sins could be pardoned through faith alone, it would not be necessary that repentance should be preached in order to remission of sins.

No man ever gave stronger evidence of faith than Saul, when he cried out "What shall I do Lord." His going to the place appointed was unquestionable evidence that Saul believed. And yet it was necessary that he should be baptized before his sins were pardoned.

If Ananias had believed that Saul's sins had been pardoned, how could he command him to be baptized and wash away his sins?

Does any one believe that if Saul had disobeyed the commandment to be baptized, uttered by Christ's legate, that Christ would have pardoned his sins? What! pardon a man's sins while in open rebellion against his commandment? This would reward rebellion and license sin. Christ could not do that without denying himself. Saul could not obey this commandment of Christ without being baptized; therefore the work of baptism was just as necessary as faith in order to absolution from sin.

The means by which an alien gets into Christ and those by which he becomes a Christian are one and the same thing.

Paul addressing his Galatian brethren says: "For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus." Gal. iii. 26.

He also says, "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ."

Thus, Paul being his own expositor, baptism, or works, are just as necessary prerequisites to getting into, or putting on Christ, as faith. United these declarations stand, divided they fall. Give the same credence to both and they teach that faith and works are the two-fold conditions of becoming Christians.

These passages correspond perfectly with Christ's language, that he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved.

Conjoined they save; severed neither saves. United on the word they are harmonious, separated there two great pillars of faith and hope fall.

In the plan of salvation they stand or fall together. Faith and works are inseparably joined together in the gospel commandment of the everlasting God made known unto all nations for the obedience of faith. See Rom xvi. 25, 26.

Here again, faith and works are inseparable as cause and effect in the great plan of salvation. All the rich and glorious promises made to the seven churches are suspended upon works. The only principle in which faith can be embraced must be upon the principle that all works to be acceptable to God must be effects produced by a living faith—whose life is good works—thus uniting faith and works, as the united cause of all intelligent action.

"As the body without the breath is dead," so faith without being vitalized by corresponding works is dead also.

I will quote the predicate of all the promises made to the seven churches, not one of which can be claimed by the advocates of faith alone, or faith abstract from works.

Christ says, "He that hath an ear, let him hear what the spirit saith unto the churches: To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in the midst of the Paradise of God—I know thy works." Rev. ii. 7. 2.

"He that hath an ear, let him hear what the spirit saith unto the churches: He that overcometh shall not be hurt of the second death.—I know thy works." Ver. 9-11.

"He that hath an ear, let him hear what the spirit saith unto the churches: To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the hidden manna, and I will give him a white stone, and in the stone a new name written, which no man knoweth, saving he that receiveth it.—I know thy works." Verses 17-10.

"And he that overcometh and keepeth my works unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations: and I will give to him the Morning Star." Verses 26-29.

"And unto the angel of the church in Sardis write: These things saith he that hath the seven spirits of God, and the seven stars. I know thy works, etc. He that overcometh, the same shall be clothed in white raiment; and I will not blot out his name out of the book of life, but I will confess his name before my Father, and before his angels." Chap. iii. 15.

"And to the angel of the church in Philadelphia write: These things saith he that is holy, he that is true, he that hath the key of David, he that openeth and no man shutteth; and shutteth and no man openeth. I know thy works." Verses 6-8.

"And unto the angel of the church of the Laodiceans write: These things saith the Amen, the faithful and true witness, the beginning of the creation of God, I know thy works." Verses 14, 15.

Thus, the whole issue between Christ and the churches hinge upon good or bad works. All these promises, or proffered rewards for good works, are to those who overcome; and all judgments are denounced for bad works, or for the absence of good works, not for faith or unbelief.

As I said at the commencement of this article, by the same parity of reasoning, and the same exparte testimony by which some prove to their satisfaction that the remission of sins and salvation are through faith alone, I can prove that remission of sins and salvation are through works alone.

But by heeding the testimony of all the witnesses, faith and works are equally essential. One believes the "Faithful and true witness," the other obeys his commandments.

A LETTER TO J. B. MESSIMORE.

Answer to the Question, "Does a Man's Soul Die When He Dies?"

JOSEPH MESSIMORE.

MILLWOOD, Ind.
February, 1881.

Cousin John: I will now, at this late date, proceed to answer your theological question. You ask: "When a man dies, does his soul die when he dies?" Then without awaiting an answer from me, you proceed at once to answer it yourself in the negative. Now without criticising your answer, I will endeavor first, to give you the Bible definition of the term soul. Then, in Genesis ii. 7, we read:

"The Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul." Not a living or immortal soul put into the man, but the man himself became, or was a living soul.

As we say of General Washington, he became the first president of the United States of America. That is, he was the first president by having been made such. Hence Paul says; "The first man Adam, was made a living soul. 1 Cor. xv. 45.

By the foregoing we see that the man who was made of the dust of the ground, himself constituted the living soul. And of this import are the following texts, with many others too numerous to cite here.

Abram fearing that the Egyptians would kill him for his beautiful wife's sake, said to her, "say, I pray thee, thou art my sister: that it may be well with me for thy sake: and my soul shall live because of thee." Genesis xii. 13.

Query: If Abram had believed that his soul would continue to live on when he died, would he have made the request?

Again, we read in Lev. xvii. 10. "And whatsoever man there be of the house of Israel, or the strangers that sojourn among you, that eateth any manner of blood; I will even set my face against that soul that eateth blood, and will cut him off from among his people."

Query: Do immaterial souls eat the flesh of animals? Answer, no; but persons do.

Verse 12. "Therefore I said unto the children of Israel, no soul of you shall eat blood: neither shall any stranger that sojourneth among you eat blood.

Verse 15. "And every soul that eateth that which dieth of itself, or that which was torn of beasts, . . . he shall both wash his clothes and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until even: then shall he be clean."

Again, "The ground of a certain rich man brought forth plentifully; and he thought within himself, what shall I do, because I have no room where to bestow my fruits? And he said, this will I do; I will pull down my barns, and build greater; and there will I bestow all my fruits and my goods. And I will say to my soul,—myself—soul, —man—thou hast much goods laid up for many years: take thine ease, eat, drink, and be merry."

What kind of a soul is this that eats and drinks?

Once more: "Then they that gladly received his word were baptized; and the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls."

In every instance as far as already cited, one of the following words may be substituted for the word soul, to-wit: man, person, creature, I, or myself. Hence that is its true and primary Bible meaning.

With the above, compare Josh. x. 38-40, noting particularly the word soul and its use as connected with other words, and you will there see that it is six times used for person, and once in the eleventh verse of the next chapter. This abundantly proves the above.

But soul, as many other words, is often used in a secondary sense. As life can only be manifested through properly organized bodies, the word soul is often used for life. Of this class are the following texts:

Gen. xxv. 18, "And it came to pass, as her soul was in departing, (for she died,) that she —Rachel—called his name Ben-oni, but his father called him Benjamin.

Query: What departed from her? Answer. Life left her and she was dead.

I next call your attention to the following circumstance, which furnishes a key to the proper unfolding and understanding of the last text cited.

The case of the widow woman with whom the prophet Elijah sojourned. The prophet having been commanded, by the word of the Lord to go to Zarephath of Zidon to dwell with a certain widow woman having an only child, a son, on whom her affections rested, during a very sore famine.

Elijah having met the woman and desired a drink of water and a bit of bread from her, she told him that she had but a handful of meal anymore, which she was just going to prepare for herself and son, after eating it they would have to die of hunger. The prophet begged her to make him a little cake first, and then prepare for herself and son, and that her barrel of meal should not waste nor her cruse of oil fail during the famine.

"And it came to pass after these things, that the son of the woman fell sick, and his sickness was so sore, that there was no breath left in him. And she said unto Elijah, what have I to do with thee, O, thou man of God? Art thou come unto me to call my sin to remembrance, and to slay my son? And he said unto her, give me thy son. And he took him out of her bosom, and carried him up into a loft, where he abode, and laid him upon his own bed, And he cried unto the Lord, and said: O Lord my God, hast thou also brought evil upon the widow with whom I sojourn, by slaying her son? And he stretched himself upon the child three times, and cried unto the Lord, and said, O Lord my God, I pray thee, let this child's soul come into him again. And the Lord heard the voice of Elijah, and the soul of the child came into him again, and he revived again. 1. Kings xvii. 17-22.

Query: What left the child that caused him to die? Answer. There was no breath left in him, and so he died, expired, or breathed out his life. As the breath or air we breathe contains the vitalizing principle—that which gives life and animation to all living creatures that live by breathing, and when the child stopped inhaling and exhaling the air, he ceased to live.

As the life principle is thus inhaled or inspired into the lungs where it is infused into the blood, and by it carried and distributed into all parts of the whole organism.

But you might ask, why did the prophet pray that his soul might come into him again? This question is already anticipated in the foregoing remarks; for, as ceasing to inhale the life principle into the lungs he breathed out his soul or life, so in commencing to breathe he would inhale it into his lungs again, to be distributed throughout the whole organism, and thus his soul—life would come into him again.

This was understood by the prophet, hence his stretching himself upon the body in order to warm up his flesh by his own vitality.

As a further illustration of this fact I would refer you to the following: Job, xxxiv. 14, 15.

"If he (God) set his heart upon man, if he gather unto himself his spirit and his breath, all flesh shall perish together, and man shall turn again unto dust."

Ps. civ. 27-29. Here the psalmist, after referring to some of God's creatures in the works of his wisdom, including man with others; addresses God thus:

"These all wait upon thee, that thou mayest give them their meat in due season. . . . Thou openest thine hand, they are filled with good. Thou hidest thy face, they are troubled: Thou takest away their breath, they die and return to their dust."

To be Continued.

The first Methodist who ever stepped his foot in the streets of Boston was Charles Wesley, a brother of John Wesley, one of the greatest hymn-writers of the world. He sailed from Liverpool for Charlestown, S. C., and the ship being disabled, she put in there in 1774 and remained two weeks. During that time he preached several times, and created considerable excitement.

CHRIST'S KINGDOM!

WHERE IS IT? WHAT IS IT?

—By Jos. Lacier.—

A discourse delivered at Berwick, Pa., This is a 32 page tract, neatly printed, and should have a wide circulation. Price 10c.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

MISTAKES of INGERSOLL

A review of Col. R. G. Ingersoll's lecture entitled "Mistakes of Moses"

—By J. M. Stephenson.—

This is a large size eight page tract, printed on tinted paper. 10c. each, or 10 for $1.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

A Letter to a Friend!

—By Mrs. C. C. Woodruff.—

This little work is so well known that it needs no comment. 32 pages, price 10c.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

Pictorial Description

—OF THE—

Tabernacle in the Wilderness.

ITS RITES AND CEREMONIES.

—By John Dilworth.—

Thirty-two pages. Price 10c. Send to this office for them.

SECOND EDITION.

The GOSPEL of the KINGDOM

Advocated in a series of Ten Discourses

—By Wiley Jones.—

This edition is elegantly printed and bound by Lippincott & Co., clear type, good paper, 208 pages. Plain cloth binding $1; cloth gilt edge $1.50; leather marbled edge $1.50, post paid. To obtain this valuable work, send the price by post office money order or registered letter, to

WILEY JONES,
Norfolk, Va.

BOOK LIST.

The following publications are kept on hand and will be sent postpaid to any address in the United States or Canada, upon receipt of published price. Address all orders to

THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Indiana.

TRACTS PAMPHLETS. Suitable for wide distribution. 1. The Gospel. 2. The Coming and Kingdom of Christ, by Silas Stebbins, in 1863. 3. Immortality. 4. The Kingdom of God. 5. Nature of Man and The Rights for Thickers. 6. The Two Advents. 7. What is Religion. 8. The Heathen Age. 9. Destiny of the Wicked. 10. Baptism. Ten copies 25c., or assorted packages of 100, 30c.

FOUR PAGE TRACTS.
25 for 10c; 50 for 35c; 100 for 60c.

The State of Man in Death. Contains an abundance of proof-texts.

Life and Death. A concise statement and contrast of the two uses of these terms: to wit: the Theological and Bible use.

Human Government a Failure. By A. B. Metzler.

Resurrection, Active Cause. A careful examination of the query—"If a man die, shall he live again?"

Is it True? H. V. Reed. An examination of texts of scripture to prove the conditions of salvation.

Life or Death? H. V. Reed. An excellent compend of the Bible teaching and modern theory.

The Perverted Parable. The Rich Man and Lazarus. W. Laing.

EIGHT PAGE TRACTS.
2c. each, or 25 for 40c.

Is it Essential to Believe in the Royalty of Jesus? R. Watson.

Signs of the Times. H. Dendy, of Scotland.

The Scattering and Gathering. H. V. Reed. Contrasts the future three-fold gathering of the Saints, Israel, and the Nations.

TWELVE PAGE TRACTS.
3c. each, or 12 for 30c.

Christian Union. Joel A. Simonds.

Impenitent Sinners and the Kingdom of God. E. Hoyt. Well suited to inquiring minds.

Immortality Brought to Light. The grand reality of redemption. J. H. Cook.

SIXTEEN PAGE TRACTS.
5c. each; 12 for 50c, or 25 for $1.

The New Birth. Joseph Peirce.

Hope for the World. Joel A. Simonds.

The Kingdom of Messiah. Joseph Beiler. It is set forth in beautiful language and apt Bible quotations.

Which is Right? T. Wilson. Showing the Bible teaching on the question as to whether Christ's Kingdom is to be on the earth or in heaven.

The Seed of Abraham. Joel A. Simonds. The promise made to Abraham, renewed to Isaac and Jacob, and so frequently referred to by prophets and apostles.

The King in His Beauty. H. V. Reed. Just the thing to circulate everywhere.

TWENTY-FOUR PAGE TRACTS.
5c. each; 8 for 25c, or 20 for $1.

Das Königreich des Reiches Gottes. Teaches the true nature of Christ's Kingdom.

Will the Earth be Burned Up? T. Wilson. An argument from the scriptures, showing that the earth will not be annihilated, as many suppose, but will be the everlasting inheritance of the saints.

Witchcraft Exposed; or the Voice of God Against Spiritualism. H. V. Reed. Cannot be too widely circulated.

The Scriptures. Joel A. Simonds.

THIRTY-TWO PAGE TRACTS.
10c. each, or 15 for $1.

Exposition concerning the Reign of Christ over Israel and the Nations, or a brief statement of the things concerning the Kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ. Wiley Jones.

The Restitution; or the world restored to its primeval state, and this to be its everlasting condition. K. Miller. A careful and satisfactory examination of Acts iii. 21.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS.

The Rich Man and Lazarus. T. Wilson. The exposition throughout is in harmony with Bible teaching. 36 pages, price 10c.

The Rich Man and Lazarus. C. F. Sweet. A careful unfolding of Luke xv. and xvi., with an examination of Luke xix. and xxiv. 64 pages, price 15c.

Primitive Christian Faith. C. F. Sweet. A concise history of the Primitive Christian Faith, or the Gospel as held by the early fathers, in a small compass. 50 pages, price 15c.

The Infidel Silenced by the most irrefutable arguments. W. D. Wilson. 48 pages, price 20c.

The Doctrine of Baptism as taught in the Holy Scriptures, together with a collection of evidences upon the subject, from the most learned theologians, critics, lexicographers and ecclesiastical historians. 48 pages, price 20c.

Bible Triumphant. Mrs. H. V. Reed. A reply to "One Hundred and forty-four self-contradictions of the Bible," by A. J. Davis. An able refutation of infidel charges. Paper 50c.

Objections to the State of the Dead, Between the Rev. W. C. Boardman, Congregational minister, and W. Kelloway, both of England. The objections to the State of the Dead were: 1. That the dead exist in a living, conscious state after their decease. Affirmed by Boardman. 2. That the disciples of Jesus Christ were in doubt as to their future conscious, immediate, and unbroken existence, on any act whatever; and that they rest in darkness, silence and the dust. Cloth 50c., paper 40c.

Thoughts on Daniel. Re nature and duration. Henry Constable, Prebendary of Durk. Exactly the book for the times. 320 pages, cloth $1.25.

The Destiny of Russia, as foretold by God's prophets, together with an outline of the future movements and destiny of England, Germany, Persia, Africa and the Jews. Contains a map of England and Asia. A work invaluable to every student of prophecy, and of intense present interest. 118 pages, cloth 50c., paper 30c.

Hades, or the Intermediate State of the Dead. Henry Constable, A. M. Presents the Bible doctrine of the state of man between death and the resurrection. Cloth $1.00.

God's Plan of Salvation. J. M. Stephenson. A comprehensive and able statement of the leading features of Bible theology. Our brethren will find this just the thing to read and circulate. The nature of man, the Kingdom of God, and the obedience of faith, are fully and clearly set forth. Over 300 pages, cloth $1.

THE NEW TESTAMENT IN GREEK AND ENGLISH!

—ENTITLED—

THE EMPHATIC DIAGLOTT

—By Benjamin Wilson.—

Contains the Original Greek text of the New Testament, with an Interlineary word-for-word English translation, based on the renderings of eminent critics, and on the various readings of the Vatican and Alexandrian manuscripts, together with illustrative and explanatory foot notes, and a copious selection of references.

The different renderings of various passages in the New Testament are the foundations on which most of the sects of Christians have been built up; with this work each reader may judge for himself whether the words there literally translated are so arranged in the common version as to express the exact meaning of the New Testament writers.

New improved edition on larger paper, 864 pages, cloth $4.00, Library binding $5.00.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

HYMNS OF THE ADVENT!

Name of a New Hymn Book, compiled by

—Chas. C. Barker.—

Mr. Barker combines in this book the "Hymns of the Morning" and a fresh and new selection of music. As an appendix he adds a selection of "Favorite Hymns," whose music is as a household word. Those having the "Christian Psalmodist" and no music book will do well to get this work. Price 40c, cloth 80c.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

ASTRONOMICAL ETIOLOGY,

—OR—

STAR PROPHECIES

Concerning coming disasters on the earth from 1880 to 1888.

—By M. L. Knapp, D. D.—

And others. It also contains an appendix by the publisher. 72 pages, 25c. each.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

GOD ESTABLISHED

—AND—

The BIBLE VINDICATED.

—By A. J. Eychaner.—

A new tract, and one that should be in the hands of every infidel in the land. Those living in infidel neighborhoods will do well to get this work, as it will aid you in combatting the enemy. Twenty pages, price 5c., 12 for 50c., or 40 for $1.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

THE RESTITUTION
—IS ISSUED WEEKLY BY—
The Christian Publishing Association.

OFFICERS of BOARD of DIRECTORS:
R. R. DWIGGINS ..... President
CHARLES PALMER ..... Vice President
E. K. BARNHILL ..... Secretary
S. A. CHAPLIN ..... Treasurer

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE:
CHARLES PALMER, WM. RAILSBACK,
E. L. ROBERTS.

S. A. CHAPLIN ..... EDITOR.

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTORS:
J. M. STEPHENSON, R. WILSON,
J. P. WEETHEE, J. A. SWINGLE,
WILEY JONES, C. M. STYERS,
A. D. WORTHLEY.

The Restitution.

Keep Article By Brubacher

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXX. Read PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, MARCH 9, 1881. NO. 10.

THE RESTITUTION.

TERMS--TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR, Payable in advance. Three and Six Months at the same rate.

Address all Letters and Communications to THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Communications.

COMING AGE.

Its Proximity. Sixth Seal continued. Part Second. John's Narration—Rev. vii. Two Classes of Agents: Three Restraining Agents—The executive Agents. Four Angels holding the four winds. The sealing Angel. The two classes sealed. Number in each class. Symbols and terms defined and explained. The empire under Constantine the Great. The civil and prophetic histories of his reign compared. Concluding remarks on the SIXTH Seal.

No. 36

J. P. WEETHEE

Sixth Seal. - Part Second. John thus describes the scene in the second part of the sixth seal: "And after these things I saw four angels standing on the four corners of the earth, holding the four winds of the earth, that the wind should not blow on the earth, nor on the sea, nor on any tree." This is the first class—the class of restraining agents—four angels holding the four winds of the earth.

"And I saw another angel ascending the east, having the (a) seal of the living God. And he cried with a loud voice to the four angels, to whom it was given to hurt the earth and the sea, (first four trumpets) saying, Hurt not the earth, neither the sea, nor the trees, till we have sealed the servants of our God in their foreheads. And I heard the number of them which were sealed, (and there were) sealed a hundred (and) forty (and) four thousand of all the tribes of the children of Israel. Of each of the tribes—Juda, Reuben, Gad, Aser, Nepthalim, Manasses, Simeon, Levi, Issachar, Zabulon, Joseph, and Benjamin, were sealed twelve thousand.

And after this I beheld, and lo, a great multitude, which no man could number out of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues, stood before the throne, and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands; and cried with a loud voice, saying, Salvation to our God which sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb. And all the angels stood round about the throne, and (about) the elders and the four living creatures, and fell before the throne on their faces, and worshipped God, saying, Amen: Blessing, and glory, and wisdom, and thanksgiving, and honor, and power, and might, (be) unto our God for ever and ever. Amen.

And one of the elders answered, saying unto me, What are these which are arrayed in white robes? and whence came they? And I said unto him, Sir, thou knowest. And he said unto me, These are they which came out of (the) great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. Therefore are they before the throne of God, and serve him day and night in his temple; and he that sitteth on the throne shall dwell among them. They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more; neither shall the sun light on them nor any heat. For the Lamb which is in the midst of the throne shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters; and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes."—Rev. vii. 2–17.

First Class of Agents.—This class has power to keep back the winds, the messengers of hurt and desolation. The four angels stand on the four quarters of the earth, or empire, holding back these elements of ruin till a certain work be accomplished. They are messengers of destruction, commissioned to do a terrible work through the empire, so soon as the time of execution arrives.

They are authorized to make use of the winds as their executioners. The rushing storm is heard beyond the limits of the empire. The elements of a coming tornado—a Euroclydon, or a modern Levanter (Acts xxvii. 14,) are gathering in the four quarters of the globe outside of the Roman empire—ready to rush down upon its seas, its lands, and its forests; spreading desolation over its living seas and gardens of Paradise.

One terrible rush of the elements in the form of a volcanic earthquake has spread its ruin throughout the empire. A moment of lull follows. A terrible storm is to follow. But before its fury is allowed to burst forth, a work is to be accomplished. The servants of God, residing within the track of the coming storm, are to be called out and marked with the seal of the living God.

The sealing angel. This angel symbolizes another class of agents. John sees another angel—an angel of mercy, ascending out from the sun-rising, having the SEAL of the living God. He comes immediately upon his work of gathering and marking.

John hears the number of them that were sealed:—of the tribes of Israel 144,000—of Judah, Reuben, Gad, Asher, Nepthalim, Manassah, Simeon, Levi, Issachar, Zebulon, Joseph, and Benjamin; of each an equal number, 12,000.

In this list it will be seen that the tribes of Joseph and Levi are substituted for Dan and Ephraim; some think that this omission is in consequence of the idolatry of those two tribes. Our reason will be stated in another place.

After this sealing of the twelve tribes (first named because John was of that people) there were seen a great multitude out of all nations in the empire; some gathered in and marked out of all the tribes of the earth, or land, meaning the empire.

Between two terrible physical convulsions there is a calm. What made that calm? Four angels holding back the four winds—the desolating powers. Who command the four angels to hold the winds? An angel from the sun-rising, having a seal of the living God. Why this command of the sealing angel? The angel had a work to do that required a calm; he was to seal the servants of God, which work required a release from persecution and war, so as to allow the flock of God to be gathered, preparatory to the marking, or sealing process. Otherwise it would be difficult to find them.

Persecutions had always scattered the people of God. Their church edifices were demolished. They were not to hold meetings, nor to confess their faith. The scattering power required restraint. Angels are sent forth to restrain the winds—the persecuting masses.

Symbols and terms defined.—1. Four angels—Who were they?

They seemed, by their form and address to be literal angels, whose office was to hold or let loose the winds. They were angels of wrath, whose work is defined; yet they were under the control of the sealing angel. He addressed them in a loud, commanding voice, to whom (four angels) it was given to hurt the earth and the sea, saying, Hurt not the earth, neither the sea, nor the trees, till we have sealed the servants of our God in their foreheads.

Obeying this command John sees them holding the four winds of the earth.

2. "Standing on the four corners of the earth."—Has the earth four corners? The Greek word translated corners, is γωνιαν, and is defined corner, a nook, hiding place; an extremity, verge.

John uses the word only in one other place, in Rev. xx. 8, where it is translated quarters: "And shall go out to deceive the nations which are in the four quarters (γωνιαν) of the earth, Gog and Magog."

Where then, did they stand? Did they stand at the cardinal points?—North, south, east and west? Ninety degrees apart? Or were they near each other?

If a globe, or a circle be quartered, four corners, or edges are made; these corners join. If the winds were rushing outward the restraining powers would be near each other. If, on the contrary, the winds were moving from the four cardinal points towards a center, they might occupy remote positions.

The Roman earth is here in view, with its grand divisions, its seas, and its valuable forests. It had just been desolated by volcanic earthquakes, whose location was within the territory of the empire. Storms are now gathering beyond its limits, ready to rush in from the four quarters of the globe. Four angels are dispatched from the throne of God, to say to the winds, Hold, peace, be still!

3. "The four winds of the earth."—By four we understand the north, south, east and west winds. Why called winds of the earth? in Dan. vii. 2. winds of heaven is their name: "I saw in my vision by night, and behold, the four winds of heaven strove upon the great sea."

Here John calls them winds of the earth. In the vision of Daniel, the winds, coming apparently from the four quarters where the ocean horizon met the heaven, covered in the sea contest, to issue from the heavens. John had a land view—the Roman Empire—composed principally of land.

It would also indicate that the destructive elements originated in the empire, and that they were held back, by a power within its vast dominions. Such was true relative to the first vision of the seal—volcanic earthquake. Why may not the pent up winds represent the same, or a similar agency? This simply a suggestion.

4. The sealing angel.—Another angel appears, ascending from the rising of the sun. Who is this angel? He represents a class of workers—"till we have sealed,"—carrying the seal; he is one person; in the work itself there are many officiating. His mission is one of mercy. He is not a warrior, nor an executioner. He has great power, as if commissioned directly from the Throne. The four angels are under his control. Hold your destructive elements till our work is accomplished.

5. "Having a seal of the Living God."—He had a seal, not the seal. The Greek word is σφραγιδα, acc. from σφραγις, a seal, impression, device, inscription. The angel had in his hand a marker, with some device, or inscription on it, as one does marks his flocks to denote ownership. It is the seal, not the seal-stamp; for he has not yet commenced his work of marking.

He requires the four angels to quiet the elements, that the Master's flocks, scattered as they have been, may be gathered for marking and for being properly fed and watched over.

6. "Living God."—This expression was, at that period, quite necessary, since every dead god, or idol god, had had his seal with which his votaries were stamped. It was proper, to distinguish the worshippers of the true God, to call his a seal of the Living God.

7. Servants of God in their foreheads.—The sealed are called servants. It is not the act of making servants, but a mark of identification. They are already servants. They must have some mark by which they can be publicly recognized as servants, such as a public confession of that relationship, and obedience to their Master's requirements. The seal-stamp is on their foreheads, where it is always visible. It may also be a mark of intellectual consecration.

8. I heard the number sealed.—John saw and heard. God can reach the ear as well as the eye. The visions seen by John were over two hundred years behind the events themselves. They were seen A. D. 96, under the second persecution; that by Domitian.

The events of the sixth seal are in the days of Diocletian and Constantine the Great, A. D. 303 to A. D. 337. Yet these events are brought, in some extraordinary manner, to the eye and the ear of the prophet. As Xerxes from an elevated station is an eye and ear witness of a great naval engagement, so the evangelist is carried forward and thus becomes a spectator of those events which he so clearly describes.

9. Number Sealed.—The numbers are in two divisions: (a) 144,000. (b) A number beyond human calculation. The numbers are symbolic, since they are heard in vision. The number 144,000 stands for all of a certain nationality, sealed during a certain period. Twelve thousand repeated as many times as there are tribes—12,000 being the symbol of the entire number out of each tribe; as the ten virgins and the wise and evil servants represent classes whose numbers are not given.

The square form seems to refer to the order of the tribes, on their march through the wilderness, the Jerusalem on earth and the one seen by Ezekiel. The innumerable company is out of all nationalities—composing the Roman empire.

10. Who are the sealed?—There were 144,000 from the tribes of Israel; then an innumerable company from all parts of the empire. These two classes are sealed or marked. The second class had been sealed previously.

11. Stood before the Throne.—They stood. A few days since they were weltering in their blood under the Pagan altar, crying to be avenged on their persecutors. White robes were given to them, and they were told to rest till their fellow servants should be slain, and join them.

That little season is ended, and the number of Pagan martyrs is now complete, and they are avenged most triumphantly. Palms are in their hands. They have gained the victory. They have been avenged. Paganism has been overthrown and Christianity has taken its place. Are they living? They live, as stones and trees are made to live and talk by a figure of speech. They are on the advance. They are justified—symbol, white robes. They are then avenged. Palms are given them. One step they have not taken: they are not resurrected—they have no crowns. Proving that they do not belong to the priesthood. Rev. v. 9. These had crowns—were resurrected.

THE DIVINE KINGDOM OF GOD, THE CHRISTIAN'S EVERLASTING REFUGE.

W. I. CROCKETT.

Amid the fleeting and ephemeral things of time, the eye of faith naturally seeks something more enduring and better than can be realized now. We live not for what the present gives but for what the future promises; nor can that future present the greatest happiness unless it presents at the same time, some degree of tangibility and reality—something that while the mind may accept as promise, faith's outstretched hand grasps as a wondrous and everlasting fact.

While it is true that the mind of man cannot realize the boundlessness and grandeur of what the Bible holds forth to the faithful; yet it is equally true that all God's promises are based upon the reality of a present which to him lies not between a lifeless past and a shadowy future. Thus all things being present with him, we can realize at least, the tangibility of what we call, future.

But, if what the eternal present of what God brings before our eyes as the future for our lives, be uncertain, undefined, unreal; then would the vain conjecture of the carnal mind be as true regarding the organization of the—to us—"coming age" as would the mind enlightened and directed by the clearly marked lines of truth on the inspired page.

As it is, the uncertainty of the carnal mind is manifest in the not uncommon sayings of even professed Christians; "I know nothing of the future—'tis all dark to me—Christ may return to earth. I know not positively."

Now what do such words proclaim except it is a complete absence of scriptural faith? They witness that those who utter them are ignorant concerning "the substance of things hoped for." Not shadows—not immaterial, intangible things, but the very substance!

Paul, who defined faith to the Hebrews as "the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen," was cheered by a vivid picture of God's immutability in the promise of a certain, material, defined dwelling place for such as he, who having learned to endure the cross, despising the shame, wait for the passing of the shadows, as realized in "seeing through a glass darkly"—to the glorious light of the eternal present of God.

Should it be asked; "what is the most real and sublime picture, presented to us—through the eye of faith—of the materiality of our future," I would answer in the words of the prophet Daniel, recorded in his seventh chapter: "And the Kingdom and dominion and greatness of the Kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose Kingdom is an everlasting Kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him."

There is nothing here that spiritualizers and immaterialists can mar. We can accept the promise of this tangible kingdom which is to exist under the whole heaven, with the equally grand promise that the meek shall inherit the earth that the saints of God shall be kings and priests on the earth. I say we can place these glorious things together and bid defiance to all, of whatever name, who shall attempt to tamper with the literalness of the immutable word of Jehovah.

To be called "materialists" may frighten those whose hearts have not been weaned from the weak and beggarly elements of the flesh, but upon such as have learned to make one "saith the Lord," more potent in their lives, than fifty "thus saith the great and wise," it falls as a great truth, misunderstood and uttered by foolish lips.

He who understands the truth of God is a materialist, for he looks for a material king and kingdom. He longs for the time when he shall possess that body of refined matter spiritualized, and as refined matter now, constitutes the noblest element of man, he knows that refined matter immortalized, will constitute the honor, glory, and immortality of the kingdom of God.

If immateriality—which is another name for nothingness—proved the constitution of the "future age," then is the Bible a fable and the hope of its followers a myth. Or if the grand kingdom of Jesus Christ which God has promised to establish on earth be established in some other realm, then is God made a liar.

But who will dare to place such an imputation against the great and eternal Creator? Who will, after a careful study of his word doubt the literalness, the reality, of that promise that made Abraham and his seed heirs to the land of Palestine, and through the instrumentality of the establishment of its kingdom, the conquerors and rulers of the whole earth?

And against the sublime description by Daniel of him who comes in the visions of night, and receives a dominion that shall trample under foot the petty governments of earth, and shall endure forever?

Against this—where stands the puny idea that a handful of perishing mortals who pass away to death with every wind of pestilence; who cannot even settle their poor little bickerings among themselves, but must appeal to wondrous equity and infallible (?) judgment of law—that such as these are the embodiment of "regeneration" and "restitution," possessors of the "everlasting" kingdom, which in their fanciful theology is denominated "the church?" Possessing a kingdom yet praying, "Thy kingdom come." Proclaiming the eternity of their kingdom, yet saying—"Infidelity is increasing."

O, what a miserable state of things! Why is it so? Why is the heart of man so cold, and his intellect so clouded, that the clear burning truths of God make no impression?

But passing away from a contemplation of the perversity and weakness of humanity, let us consider for a short time the record of the kingdom God has promised his people and to which our attention has been so beautifully and forcibly called by Daniel, the prophet.

He, placing entire confidence in the God of his fathers, was enabled to interpret the wonderful dream of Nebuchadnezzar, and to describe the growth and nature of four great powers—represented by an enormous image—which should bear rule over the earth until the stone cut out of the mountain without hands, smites them and scatters them to the four winds of heaven.

Daniel assures the king that he is the head of gold, the first great power, The second portion of the image represented the Medo-Persian, the third the Grecian, and the fourth the Roman, which in the days of its dissolution should be partly strong and partly broken, as shown in the condition of the feet and toes of the image, which were as iron mixed with miry clay, and so non adhesive.

In this weakened condition of the fourth great empire, or in the words of Daniel "in the days of these kings" (each toe of the image corresponding to a king or kingdom, the words being used interchangeably) the stone smites the image the God of heaven establishes a kingdom divine and eternal. The reader will notice that at first the stone is small, but with the destruction of the image grows until it becomes a great mountain and fills the whole earth.

This fact demands more than passing notice.

When God called Abraham out from the land of his fathers to go into a country that he would show him; he went, nothing doubting, and received as a reward, the promise of the land of Canaan for an everlasting possession. To him and his seed was this defined territory given as the basis of a just and great government that should so extend as to be through its chief ruler, a blessing to all nations of the earth. To this great ruler, who Paul declares is Christ, the Lord has promised the heathen for an inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for a possession.

All power was to be given him, and he in mercy extends to his faithful who overcome, a co-lordship. The Revelator records beautifully the promise:

"He that overcometh and keepeth my works unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations; and he shall rule them with a rod of iron; as the vessels of a potter shall they be broken to shivers: even as I received of my father."

Abraham, says Paul, in writing to the Romans, was made heir of the world, through the righteousness of faith.

But being heir, and having possession of two different things, while, as we have seen, Christ is heir to the uttermost parts of the earth, and Abraham through him a co-heir, yet neither have possession.

Charles II. was rightful heir to the English throne, yet he was from 1649 to 1660, an heir only. So with Christ and his followers.

How, then, are they to become, not only heirs, but possessors of the land of promise and the whole earth? Mark the answer—by conquest! The stone representative of the kingdom at the coming of Christ, smites the image on its feet, destroys the power of the existing kingdoms first, who take the lead in desecrating the Holy Land, and then growing by the mighty power of conquest to a great mountain, fills the whole earth and becomes the glory and admiration of all eyes.

This idea sounds, no doubt, strange and fanatical to those who cannot realize that Christ shall come as conqueror and make war on the nations of earth.

To such I put the question:—"How else is God's will to be done on earth?" Christ while here eighteen hundred years ago, tried by the most stupendous miracles to convince men of his Sonship and authority—of his message as heir to the land of promise and with what result? A handful of Nazarenes—a sect everywhere spoken against—a persecuted band of poor and despised illiterates.

Since then God's Holy Word has witnessed his truth among men, and with what result? At first chained to the desks of an ignorant priesthood; and when unchained, misinterpreted, misunderstood, by a world drunk on the waters of Babylon.

God's mercy has endured all this. He has waited patiently, not willing that any should perish. He has been long suffering—and yet scoffers arise and say; where is the promise of the coming of him who will perform these wonders you speak of? What more can a just and merciful God do? Nothing!

The ministry of love is almost unavailing now, to convince men. And when that fails—woe! woe! to the blasphemers of this unbelieving age.

It is not an evidence of a sanguinary nature to dwell upon the words that describe the vengeance of God. Far from it. We love equally well to dwell upon the record of the everlasting mercy and love of the Divine Creator; but, God's people have borne long the evils of a corrupt age—they are themselves weak—they see the hourly danger of becoming castaways, and they turn to the overthrowing of the nations and the abolishment of evil as the only hope of the great concord the Bible warrants them in expecting.

The weak, the poor the despised, the oppressed, of this age, are to be the kings, the nobles, the glorious ones of the next.

In view of such honor it is not strange that they should pray—"Thy kingdom come," even though at its coming multitudes will perish.

No one feels the slightest hesitancy in uprooting now the noxious weeds of vice that flourish in the heart of man, nor will those who are fashioned like unto Christ's glorious body hesitate to draw the sword and punish the proud usurpers of their inheritance.

What the kingdom of God promises, fills the soul of faith with delight. The king will be to them, more than all else; and the grandeur of one moment of eternity, tenfold compensate for the highest honor that can be given now.

The more we contemplate the glories of this wondrous kingdom that shall bear rule over the earth, the more are we impressed with the truth, that he, alone, is wise who makes the obtaining of a place in it, the chief aim of his existence. It is secondary to nothing. Apart from it, man can realize nothing. It is of such utmost importance, that even Christ bore the scoffs and blows of blasphemers, and not only this, but gave his life for it; thus witnessing the truth of what he at first proclaimed: "For this I am sent, that I may preach the kingdom of God."

Would the heir of the world have died for a kingdom beyond the skies, thus falsifying the words of all the prophets and disappointing the hope of those to whom after his resurrection he spake "forty days concerning the kingdom of God?"

Would he have proclaimed a message as "glad tidings," which in very substance contradicted the promise to Abraham? The idea is most preposterous.

Much is attempted to be proven orthodoxy from the words of Jesus: "my kingdom is not of this world." Take this in its legitimate sense and it conveys a beautiful promise of a kingdom, not based upon fleeting things but enduring forever.

Wrest it from its proper place in the scale of truth, and nothing but discord is the consequence. But legitimately used: "my kingdom is not of this world (kosmos) order, or constitution of things, becomes the companion truth of—"the kingdom that breaks in pieces and subdues all earthly kingdoms, and itself stands forever."

It is a glorious assurance that Christ's kingdom is not of this order of things.

There are too many sorrows and temptations around us now, for us to wish to perpetuate them.

From darkness and death, we can turn and follow the teachings of the gospel to a brighter dwelling place; from pilgrims and strangers, we can become participators in a heavenly country,—heavenly because heaven-like. From mortality we can turn to immortality—from time to eternity—from tears to everlasting joy, in the presence of God and the coming king.

We shall hear no more of the sad refrain:

"Passing, fading away,
All that we cherish most dearly"

And instead of:

"There is nothing on earth that will stay—"

Immortals will join in proclaiming the eternity, the glory of all good things on the earth.

WHY IS IT!

Why do those who write notices of meetings state the time so indefinitely—or rather why do they state the time of meeting in such a way that one is obliged to get an Almanac before being able to tell when the meeting is? Example. One brother says: "There will be a meeting at—on Thursday evening before the fourth Sunday in January." Now January may have five Sundays or four Sundays and so with any other month; and before the reader can tell when the meeting will be he must go and get the Almanac and count down to the time specified, in order to find the date. Would it not be preferable to state the time by giving the date. Example: "There will be a meeting at—On Thursday Jan. 20, or July 17. Why not give the date? A. J. EICHANER.

THE RESTITUTION.

S. A. CHAPLIN, EDITOR.

Plymouth, Indiana, March 9, 1881.

RECEIPTS quite light for the week past; probably owing in part to the disarranged state of travel on many of the railroads.

WILL respond to letters and requests as fast as possible. Brethren must remember that we have many cares to employ our attention.

PLEASE heed our request so often urged, and send us shorter communications for awhile. Our correspondents can certainly divide up their communications, and continue them. This course would be far better than to fill so large a space with a single article.

BR. MAGREDER has finished his manuscript of a review of Col. R. G. Ingersoll's printed lecture—"What must I do to be saved?" and it is now ready for the press. It will make a pamphlet with printed cover of about one hundred and fifty pages. Brother M. writes that about $300 will be needed to bring out an edition of 1,000 copies from electrotype plates, and that subsequent editions of 1,000 will not cost more than $110. The circumstances of the author are such that he is compelled to invite friends of the cause of truth to aid in the enterprise. We will give a letter from Bro. J. Smith as also one from Bro. M., himself, next week. Meanwhile let our brethren prepare to take some stock in this enterprise, as we believe the pamphlet will not only be creditable to the writer, but will also be an able defence of "the faith once delivered to the saints."

Communications.

OBEDIENCE.

Faith Made Alive.

No. 1

S. R. WINCE.

God tests the loyalty of men by setting certain things before them that they are to do or not to do.

Adam was tested by the tree of knowledge of good and evil. The negative was set before him; he must not touch lest he die. He did not believe God; his unbelief was followed by disobedience, and disobedience by death.

Well-doing, was what the Lord desired of Cain and Abel. If Cain did well, it was promised to Cain, that his should be the excellency and that his brother should be subject to him. Yet, when his offering came to be made, it was found that sin laid at his door, and God had no respect to the proffered fruits. The well-doing was Abels', and his name is placed first on the long list of righteous ones to whom God has made promise of this earth, through a resurrection of the dead.

The inference, can easily be drawn, that the heart of Cain was not right toward God, even before he met and slew his brother. He did not well. Else would his offering have been accepted.

Enoch was tested, "He walked with God, and he was not for God took him."

Noah, was commanded to build an ark, and to come into it, with all his family bringing in two of every sort of every living thing, "And Noah did according unto all that the Lord had commanded him." He believed God. He made that faith known by his works, and became an heir of the righteousness that is by faith. His name was put on the list, next to that of Abel's.

Would God have counted him among that host of faithful ones if he had said "the flood is coming, I believe it because God has said so, and you must believe it too if you would be saved,—but though God has said, I must prepare an ark for the saving of my house; I guess it will do just as well if I take them and the animals up into a high mountain?" "I don't believe it is essential to get into the ark. If my heart is right, that is all that is required?" Not a bit of it. It was the doing of the things that God had commanded, that proved his loyalty. First the faith, and then, the acting out of that faith.

It was told to Lot, that Sodom would be destroyed, he believed and showed his faith, by fleeing from the storm of fire.

Abraham, was tested, by being called out of his country and from his kindred, into a strange land. He was made to look upon it and to walk through it, and the promise was given that it should sometime, be the everlasting inheritance of himself and of an innumerable seed, though as yet he had [illegible]

Again was he tested in offering up Isaac. He staggered not through unbelief. The slain child could be made alive and God's promise become sure through him.

"He went out into a place which he should after receive as an inheritance." He believed God by going—he believed God by walking all through the land. Faith was made alive by obedience.

He believed God when he made the offering of his only son. The doing with Abraham, of what God had commanded, was the proof, that he did not doubt God's word or his power.

God requires this much of man—that his faith be shown by the doing of what he commands to be done.

Isaac was tested, by the command—"Go not down into the land of Egypt but sojourn thou in this land."

Contingent upon his obedience to this command was made the presence and the blessing of the Lord. He was tested by having the same promise that had been given to Abraham, set before him. He proved his faith by remaining where he was.

From a heavenward reaching ladder, was the promise repeated to Jacob. He was required to believe it though going out from his father's house poor and friendless.

The looking to God for guidance in the way that he was going—the asking from him for bread to eat and raiment to put on—the vow whereby he was to give a tenth of all that was given him, to the Lord—his long wrestling for a blessing—his obedience to the command to return from Padan-Aram to the land of his kindred; all go to show that he did believe the promise, that the land whereon he was lying should be the everlasting inheritance of himself and his seed.

Unto the eye of Moses, was presented the coming Christ. He rejected the throne of the Pharaohs and the treasures of Egypt, to secure the recompense of reward. "Through faith he kept the Passover and the sprinkling of blood."

He did all that the Lord commanded in the working of signs before Pharaoh—in passing through the Red Sea and through the wilderness.

There was but one failure to obey in every minutia the commands of the Lord. For this failure he was not permitted to take the Israelites across the Jordon.

Yet standing on the top of Pisgah he saw the glorious land that was to be his forever.

His faith was the faith of works. He moved forward. He was not satisfied with saying, "I believe." He did not rest content because he felt all right within—because he had the evidence in his bosom that he was approved of God.

He knew that God would not approve unless he performed to the very letter the command of the Lord. He worked out the faith he had in God, by doing the things he was told to do, and the record says "he was known unto the Lord by name and found grace in his sight."

Saul kept not the commandment of the Lord. He trespassed in offering, in Samuel's place, a burnt offering to the Lord, and again in saving alive the cattle and the sheep of the Amalekites.

The commandment was that he should destroy them all, but he and the people saved the best and would not utterly destroy them.

Then the word of the Lord came to Samuel: "It hath repented me that I have made Saul king. He is turned back from following me and hath not performed my commandments."

Samuel grieved and cried all night, and getting up in the morning came to Saul, and Saul, blessing him said, "I have performed the commandment of the Lord."

Then Samuel said, "What meaneth then this bleating of sheep and lowing of oxen that I hear? And Saul said they were brought from the Amalekites, for the people spared the best to sacrifice unto the Lord thy God, and the rest, we have utterly destroyed.

And Samuel said unto Saul, Stay, and I will tell thee what the Lord hath said unto me this night. When thou wast little in thine own sight, wast thou not made head of the tribes of Israel? And the Lord anointed thee king over Israel? And the Lord sent thee on a journey, and said Go and utterly destroy the sinners, the Amalekites, and fight against them until they be consumed.

Wherefore then didst thou not obey the voice of the Lord; but didst fly upon the spoil, and didst evil in the sight of the Lord?"

But in spite of the solemn questions of Samuel. Saul kept repeating "that he had obeyed: that he had utterly destroyed the Amalekites, but that the people had taken of the things that should have been utterly destroyed, to sacrifice unto the Lord in Gilgal." The prophet's stern voice again arrests him, "Hath the Lord as great delight in burnt offerings and sacrifices, as in obeying the voice of the Lord? Behold, to obey, is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams. For rebellion is as the sin of witchcraft, and stubbornness, is as iniquity and idolatry. Because thou hast rejected the word of the Lord, he hath rejected thee from being king."

Saul's disobedience and stubbornness, was counted as rebellion against the laws and the government of God He was tested and failed. He had only a half-hearted faith and it was acted out in only a half hearted obedience.

Exegetical.

Yea, the light of the wicked shall be put out, and the spark of his fire shall not shine. The light shall be dark in his tabernacle, and his candle shall be put out with him.—Job xviii. 5, 6.

The houses in the east were, from the remotest antiquity, lighted with lamps; and hence it is so common in Scripture to call everything which enlightens the body or mind, which guides or refreshes, by the name of lamp.

These lamps were sustained by a large candlestick set upon the ground.

The houses of Egypt in modern times, are never without lights; they burn lamps all the night long, and in every occupied apartment. So requisite to the comfort of a family is this custom reckoned, or so imperious is the power which it exercises, that the poorest people would rather retrench part of their food than neglect it.

If this custom prevailed in Egypt and the adjacent regions of Arabia and Palestine in former times, it will impart a beauty and force to some passages of Scripture which have been little observed.

Thus, in the language of Jeremiah, to extinguish the light in an apartment is a convertible phrase for total destruction; and if it was the practice in Judea, as in modern Egypt, which can scarcely be doubted, to keep a lamp continually burning in an unoccupied apartment, nothing can more properly and emphatically represent the total destruction of a city, than the extinction of the lights. "I will take from them the light of a candle; and this whole land shall be a desolation and an astonishment."

Job describes the destruction of a family among the Arabs, and the desolation of their dwellings, in the very language of the prophet: "How oft is the candle of the wicked put out, and how oft cometh their destruction upon them!"

Bildad expresses the same idea, in the following beautiful passage: "Yea, the light of the wicked shall be put out, and the spark of his fire shall not shine. The light shall be dark in his tabernacle, and his candle shall be put out with him."

A burning lamp is, on the other hand, the chosen symbol of prosperity, a beautiful instance of which occurs in Job's complaint: "O, that I were as in months past, as in the days when God preserved me, when his candle shined upon my head, and when I by his light walked through darkness."

When the ten tribes were taken from Rehoboam, and given to his rival, Jehovah promised to reserve one tribe, and assigns this reason, "that David my servant may have a light always before me in Jerusalem."—Paxton.

News Items.

LONDON, March, 4.—An earthquake shock was felt throughout Switzerland yesterday.

There was another sharp earthquake shock at Agram, Austria, today.

The Russian Ambassador at Constantinople has received news from the Consul at Bagdad that the plague has appeared at Djaffer in Mesopotamia, and that four persons have already died of it.

ITALY.

TERRIBLE LOSS OF LIFE.

ROME, Mar. 6.—The loss of life by the earthquake on the Island of Ischia is appalling. One hundred and two bodies have been found at Casamacciati up to the present, and many others are under the ruins of the buildings in the Village of Lacco. Thirteen houses were destroyed and five persons killed.

It is stated that 3000 houses have fallen at Casamacciati. The Government is sending relief. One hundred and ten corpses have been recovered. Sixty-seven wounded were sent to the hospital.

Fissures in the street were fifty centimetres wide. Many people fled town and encamped in fields.

EX-PRESIDENT HAYES and his family were in serious peril on Saturday afternoon. They were in a special car on the regular train that left Washington on the Baltimore and [illegible] railroad little after noon, enroute for Ohio. When fourteen miles out, the train came in violent collision with a train of empty cars coming from the opposite direction. The first two cars of the former train were wrecked, killing two passengers and injuring several others. The Hayes party were fortunately in the last car, and escaped without injury, although they were badly shaken up by the sudden and violent shock.

WEST INDIES.

PANAMA, Feb. 24.—The 10th of February will be remembered in Antigua as the occasion of frost, the heaviest in the memory of man, occasioning damage which has no record in the country since its conquest by the Spaniards. The frost was so keen that ice was formed in many places and on the following morning it could be collected quite readily. Even in protected places such as the balconies of houses, ice formed in water vessels and was found of very respectable thickness. In the morning after the frost, the cane fields and coffee plantations appeared as though a fire had passed through them. The leaves of the coffee—the most vigorous trees, as well as the tenderest shoot—were discolored, and shrivelled and broke to pieces at the slightest touch, while even tender twigs were injured. Several years must necessarily elapse before the plantations can be restored to their usually healthy condition. The sugar-cane was killed as it stood, so that the loss in this respect is confined in amount to that uncut, although all of this will scarcely be a total loss. The amount of damage is calculated to be between $1,000,000 and $2,000,000.

Selections.

The Prophetic Times.

PARABLES OF THE KINGDOM.

The Budding Fig Tree; or The Sign of the Near Approach of the Lord's Coming.

Mat. xxiv. 32–35; Mark xiii. 28-31; Luke xxi. 29–32.

When Jesus had spoken the parable of the marriage feast and wedding garment, the Pharisees held a council and plotted to ensnare him by asking his opinion about paying tribute, hoping to find some ground of accusation against him. But they were foiled by his wisdom.

Then the Sadducees raised a question which they thought would disprove the resurrection; but his reply put them to silence. He also answered the lawyer's question, Which is the great commandment in the law? And showed the Pharisees that Christ was David's son in a peculiar sense, and not a natural descendant, seeing that David in spirit called him Lord, acknowledging him to be a Divine person.

He then warned his disciples against the practices of the Scribes and Pharisees; exposing their corruption and wickedness, and predicting the destruction of their nationality and the desolation of their city under Gentile dominion until his second coming. And as he left the temple his disciples called his attention to the great stones and the workmanship of the temple, so strong and durable that it seemed as if built for all time; but he said, "See ye these great buildings, there shall not be left here one stone upon another that shall not be thrown down." And subsequently, in reply to their questions about it, he gave a succinct prophecy respecting the gospel dispensation, the desolation of the temple, the treading down of Jerusalem and his second coming in power and great glory to establish a kingdom. And in this connection he spoke the parable of the budding fig tree to intimate to his waiting church the sign by which the nearness of his advent would be known.

1. The fig tree in its leafless winter state signifies the Jewish nationality from the desolation of their city and temple unto the end of the gospel dispensation. A very appropriate type of the same was the withered fig tree, dried up by the very roots under the sentence: "Let no fruit grow on thee henceforth forever."

So the nationality of the Jews became as a blighted fig tree in their native land, and they were scattered among the nations, everywhere a reproach and a by-word. And such have they continued to be for 1800 years, a people distinct and separate from the nations, without nationality, a living fulfillment of every generation of our Lord's prophecy.

But that prophecy does not leave them utterly hopeless. It not only intimates their preservation without nationality, but their restoration again to nationality at the end of the gospel dispensation.

2. When the branch of the fig tree is yet tender and putteth forth leaves, summer is known to be nigh; and in like manner the restoration of Jewish nationality will indicate that the coming of the Lord is nigh; because it will be an emphatic announcement that the times of the Gentiles are at an end; and that God has completed his purpose to take out of the Gentiles a people for his name. The budding and putting forth leaves does not prove that summer has come; but is an infallible sign that summer is nigh; so that restoration of Jewish nationality is not a sign that Christ has come, but that he is nigh.

Hence Jesus said, "So likewise ye, when ye shall see all these things, know that it is near even at the doors." This can only mean when all things predicted are fulfilled up to this point, then know that the next event—the coming of the Lord is nigh even at the doors.

This furnishes us with a rule in regard to a time of great importance. It is to judge of the nearness of Christ's coming by the progress of predicted events. The generation then living were, according to the 34th v., to see the commencement of the train of events embraced in the prediction, "Verily I say unto you, this generation shall not pass till all these things—this train of events—begin to be fulfilled." So doubtless many of those then living had not passed away when Jerusalem was destroyed. Now we see the preliminary stage of Jewish restoration going on. It commenced a few years ago. And it is estimated that there are at least 15,000 Jews in Jerusalem. And movements are being made which ere long will result in the restoration of Jewish nationality, by which we shall know that the coming of the Lord is nigh, even at the doors.

Christian Herald.

RESTORATION OF THE JEWS.

That the Jews hope for restoration to their own land is often denied, and it is true that a portion of the race have no desire to return; but it is no less true that the majority of Jews still look toward Palestine with longing eyes.

An illustration of this fact occurs in a sermon preached Dec. 26, in the Nineteenth Street Synagogue, New York, by the Rabbi, Rev. H. P. Mendes. He said:

"The restoration, which our prophets emphatically declare is to be forever, and the gathering of the scattered of Jacob, which is to be from the east and the west, shall yet come to pass. The ancient Abrahamic blessing is yet to be fulfilled. We are not only to be a 'blessing to all the nations of the earth,' but we are to have power 'in their gates.'

As the American abroad respects the laws of the land of his residence, and can become a respected and valued member of society, but yet looks upon his land with undiminished love, so the Jew in another land than his own will respect its laws, but yet will his heart beat with affection when he thinks of Zion.

Restoration! How potent a word! Changed shall be his sorrowful path, changed to triumphal progress; the heart torn with agony to a heart at last consoled; the winds of hatred forever hushed; the clouds of persecution forever dispersed, and the martyr nation of history at last with a country of its own."

Dr. Mendes also believe that the restoration is close at hand. On this point he said:

"When the disintegration of the Turkish Empire reaches its final stage, and the European powers assemble for the great divide, the same clashing interests which before prevented European harmony in dealing with the moribund Sultan, will be intensified when they have to consider Palestine, by geographical position, of supreme importance in preserving the balance of power, and whose neutrality must be secured.

If the restoration of our people were the solution of the difficulty, what would it be but the fulfillment of the prophecy, 'Behold I will lift up mine hand to the Gentiles, and set up my standard to the peoples.' This is but a human interpretation; but if even a human perception discloses one so feasible, why shall we hesitate to believe that heaven can work its own way?"

Boston and Herald.

ROME AS IT IS.

Father Gavazzi, in a lecture in Chicago, Feb. 20, gave the following graphic description of the present unreformable condition of the Church of Rome. We quote from the report of the speech as published in the Inter-Ocean of Feb. 21:—

The Free Christian Church of Italy is a well established church, a well-rooted church, a well-disciplined church, a thoroughly Scriptural church, a genuine, native Italian church, with the re-Christianization of Italians by Italians as its grand aim and object. "You will permit the Italians," said Father Gavazzi, with a bold stagger at at English idiomatic construction, "to be evangelized by Italians. They prefer to be Christianized, not Germanly, or Scotchly, or Americanly, but Italianly. [Laughter.] It is a mistake to call us reformers. We are not, for we don't reform anything in Italy, and we don't reform anything because there is nothing to be reformed. We have learned from young America not to lose time and labor for anything: and to try to reform, and not reform, is to lose time and labor. And as the Church of Rome is unreformable, it would be losing time to try to reform the Church of Rome. Reform in the Church of Rome must come from the laity, and the pope can never accept anything from them, because it would be a bad example for any pope to submit to the wishes of his own children. All the reform is to come from the pope; so we shall have to wait a long time, because the pope is not such a fool as to suicide himself to please anybody. [Laughter.]

"When I was with Garibaldi, in the military hospitals, I learned many extraordinary facts. A man has a small wound, say, in the smallest finger of his hand, so small that it is almost imperceptible; but owing to the bad blood, or the foul atmosphere, or some other cause, the finger becomes gangrened. The surgeon loses no time, but takes out his knife and cuts the finger of [illustrating the operation by a vivid pantomime with his hands]. He cuts off the hand, again, to save the arm; or, being a young and courageous man, fond of experiment, he severs the arm to save the body. But if the whole arm is gangrened, no surgeon will cut the patient into one hundred parts to save nothing in him. [Laughter.] That commits the patient to the undertaker. This is the case with the Church of Rome. Now, after its multifarious councils, and especially after the last sacrilegious and blasphemous council held under Pius IX., the church is in error from beginning to end, from head to foot. What will you reform?—Nothing! nothing! nothing! The only thing is to commit the Church of Rome to the public undertaker, and the sooner he undertakes her burial the better. Oh, the stench! [Pantomimic illustration.] That's the reason why we don't try to reform the church." [Great laughter.]

Brevities.

A colored woman died at Rolla, Mo., who was supposed to have been one hundred and twenty-six years old. Two of her children were born before the Revolutionary War. A great grand-son residing in Rolla is 50 years old.

The Sunday school in Beirut employs a colporter to visit the khans, or inns, on the road to Damascus, where travelers and muleteers rest at night, and distribute Bibles and other religious books. This school is under Dr. Jessup's supervision.

The Turkish government in Palestine has secured 80,000 acres of land between Jerusalem and Jaffa, for a colony of Jews. The proposition is to open up a settlement for the persecuted Jews in Europe; and England and America are raising funds for the project.

Belgium, with 5,000,000 inhabitants has a Jewish population of 4,000. Among the Jews in the public service there are three chief clerks to Ministries, one director of the Royal Carpet Manufactory, one Court of Appeals Judge, two Crown Prosecutors, one Judge of Instruction, six barristers, three Mayors, nine captains, and four professors of universities. This is a large number of positions of distinction in proportion to their numbers, but no complaints are made against them on that account or for any other reason. Their right to attain such distinction as they may be qualified for, is conceded. The anti-Jewish movement in Germany meets with no favor in Belgium, and it does not diminish the dislike with which Belgium regards the German empire.

Col. A. W. Drayson writes the London Daily News from Halifax, Nova Scotia, to announce that he has made an astronomical discovery, the result of ten years investigation. It is: "That the earth rotates annually once round a second axis, which second axis is not coincident with the axis of daily rotation. This movement is due to the fact that, owing to the preponderance of land above water in the northern hemisphere, and owing to the mass of land in Asia, Europe and Africa on one side of the earth, the center of gravity of the earth is not coincident with the center of the earth, and, consequently, is not located in the plane of the equator. The results of the discovery are most important, as the changing positions of stars from month to month can by the aid of this discovery, be calculated, so that the endless observations of scores of computers at various observatories become no longer necessary."

A terrible experience, almost unique in military annals, is recorded by a correspondent at the Cape of Good Hope in connection with the march of the Diamond-Field Horse to the scene of operations in Basutoland toward the end of last year. During a terrific thunder-storm a flash struck the troop, bringing seventeen horses with their riders to the ground, and killing ten men and five horses on the spot. Those who were not killed were all seriously injured, and it was long before animation could be restored in the case of seven men. The bits and stirrup irons of the whole number were blackened, and many of the men, though personally uninjured, had their clothing rent by the force of the electric discharge. The greatest difficulty was naturally experienced in preventing a general stampede among the frightened animals.

THE TUNNEL THROUGH GRAY'S PEAK.

"The grandest mining enterprise ever projected in Colorado," is to cut a tunnel at an altitude of 10,000 feet "clear through the backbone of the American continent, as you would punch a hole through a potato." The Leadville paper that begins to tell about the project adds: "The high range of mountains over which the cold, barren apex of Gray's Peak stands in its massive majesty is the backbone of the American continent. The Atlantic-Pacific tunnel will cut clear through this range, a distance of over 26,000 feet, about 4 5-9 miles, all the way crossing heavy veins of silver ore, cutting them at right angles."

ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY MILES A SECOND.

When speaking of the spots on the sun, in his lecture, Professor Rees stated that many of them were noticed to revolve with great velocity, some at the rate of 120 miles per second. These rotations are explained by the facts that there are on the surface of the sun, cyclones which drift along those large masses of volcanic matter at an indescribable swift rate. It must be remembered that the smallest one of the spots would be covered only by about eighteen earths. When speaking of solar cyclones we must not imagine that they are like the ones we have here on earth. Should a solar cyclone strike the United States, in thirty seconds all the country between New York and San Francisco would be floating away into space in the shape of a vaporous cloud. The terrible friction would ignite everything. One of our cyclones may traverse 50 or 100 miles in an hour, but a solar cyclone at the rate of 120 miles in a second would do infinitely more damage than 100 cyclones could do.—St. Louis Republican.

RECOVERING BURNED MONEY.

The American Express Company had several safes in the cars which were burned at the recent railroad disaster at Tioga Centre, N. Y., on the 23d ult. The Company did not open the safes—as they contained, among other things, paper money, that would be destroyed, if burned, beyond all hope of redemption if carelessly handled—but sent them to Washington to be opened in the basement of the Treasury by the experts from the redemption division of the Treasurer's office. In the burnt mass were found Jewelry, including a lot of diamonds and watches, gold and silver coin, legal-tender notes, national bank notes, government coupons and railroad bonds. The coin was melted in all manner of shapes. The jewelry except the diamonds, is worthless. The burned legal-tender notes were a black mass, with slight crevices on the sides, showing the separation of note from note. The sooty and brittle remains were separated with great care. The experts, by examination, were enabled to identify the notes, together with their respective numbers. They will be replaced by new notes. One young lady is busy on the coupons, and has identified a number of 4 per cent. coupons representing $500 each, and 4 1-2 per cent. coupons representing $11,76 each. These also will be redeemed. Such is the experience with which, apparently, nothing but black brittle masses are handled that it is very likely that every note, coupon and bond that was burned will be separated and identified.

Pictorial Description

—OF THE—

Tabernacle in the Wilderness.

ITS RITES AND CEREMONIES.

—By JOHN DILWORTH —

Third Thousand. Price 10c. A [illegible] Agents Wanted. Address for them.

Poetry.

ODE TO HELL.--(SHEOL--HADES.)

J. F. GELLETLY.

Cursed be the bard that ever dares to raise
A single note of tribute to thy praise,
Whose harlot muse can flaunt her brazen face,
And glory in the abuse that smothers a race.

Thou fierce executive of sin's vile law,
Insatiate glutton with the gaping maw,
Dark gloomy cavern, as I gaze and cower,
Oh! how I hate thy darkness, and thy power.

Worth, honor, virtue, love—upon the pall,
Then opens wide thy mouth and swallows all—
Grandeur and genius have ceased to shine,
But where the might that can contend with thine!

Help! Help! Thou God of help, heal thou no eye
Of pity for thy helpless progeny?
Send us a champion, true and staunch and brave,
To battle with the overwhelming grave.

Oh! thou fell prison where my loved ones sleep,
No e'en'ral fiend that from doors may keep;
Thy keys, and all thy mysteries, have been
Confided to the Gentle Nazarene.

Yea, though I know the venom of thy sting,
Yet I can calmly tune my lyre and sing,
For all thy terror, and thy power shall cease,
Thy prisoners "Look and go in peace."

Communications.

A LETTER TO J. B. MESSIMORE.

Answer to the Question, "Does a Man's Soul Die When He Dies?"

Second Letter.

JOSEPH MESSIMORE.

MILLWOOD, Ind.
February, 1881.

My Dear Friend: I resume the subject in this where I left off in my first letter.

Matt. x. 28, is another instance where the word soul is put for life.

"Fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill (or destroy) the soul; but rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell."

This text rather seems to demand a few words of comment, as it is generally one of the first to be adduced to prove the natural and inherent immortality of the soul. I would therefore paraphrase it as follows:

And fear not them who kill the body, but cannot destroy the future life; but rather fear him who is able to destroy both the future life and the body in Gehenna.

That this is the true sense of the text, is obvious from the fact that the same Greek word, psucheen, here translated soul, is in verse 39 rendered life.

"He that findeth his life (psucheen) shall lose it, and he that loseth his life (psucheen) for my sake shall find it." That is, he that would save his life now, by denying Jesus, shall lose it in the future; but he who will give up his life now for Jesus' sake shall find it in the future. For our life is hidden with Christ in God, and when Christ who is our life shall appear, then shall we also appear with him in glory. In other words, God holds the life principle in his own power, and will in the future restore it to all such as prove themselves worthy of the same. Hence it is not in the power of man to destroy it.

I will next introduce a parallel text to the last.

Mat. xvi. 25, 26. Here the Greek word psucheen is twice rendered life and twice soul. It is very evident that the Savior here had reference to life, and not a separate soul-entity.

The translators of King James, seeing that they dare not render it soul in verse 25, lest they cripple their pet theory of immortal-soulism, rendered it life; but in the next verse they rendered it soul, seeing that it would support their theory.

Life being the subject of conversation in verse 25, and the subject not being changed, it follows of necessity, that life is the subject in verse 26. Hence I would paraphrase the text as follows:

Whosoever will save his (psucheen) soul or life (by denying me) shall lose it; and whosoever will lose his (psucheen) soul or life for my sake, shall find it. For what is a man profited if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own (psucheen) soul or life? Or what shall he give in exchange for his (psucheen) soul or life?

A third class of the word soul is that in which it means desire. I will give but one instance of this kind.

The case of Hannah—the wife of Elkanah, is to the point, and seems to be a very plain one, so I will introduce her.

She was a woman of a sorrowful heart, who came with her husband to the temple to worship in the days of Eli, the priest. And in the bitterness of her soul she asked a certain petition of the Lord; and as she continued in silent prayer for some time, Eli, the priest, noticed her lips move, but hearing no voice, concluded that she was drunken; accordingly he reproved her, saying, "How long wilt thou be drunken? Put away thy wine from thee." But she replied, "No, my Lord, I am a woman of a sorrowful spirit; I have drunk neither wine nor strong drink, but have poured out my soul before the Lord."

Now, how did she pour out her soul? Answer, By making her desire known to God in her prayer. Hence the word soul here simply means desire.

But there is another use of this word, where it is put for affections or will power.

Deut. vi. 5: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy soul, (affections) and with all thy might." Also Mat. xxii. 37; Deut. xi. 13–18; xiii. 3.

1 Sam. xviii. 1: "The soul (affections) of Jonathan was knit with the soul (affections) of David, and Jonathan loved him as his own soul"—as himself.

1 Chron. xxii. 19: "Now set your heart and your soul to seek the Lord your God; arise therefore, and build ye the sanctuary of the Lord God, to bring the ark of the covenant of the Lord, and the holy vessels of God, into the house that is to be built to the name of the Lord."

2 Chron. xv. 12: "And they entered into a covenant to seek the Lord God of their fathers with all their heart and with all their soul."

Observe, both heart and soul stand in the singular number, hence cannot represent a plurality of hearts and souls. The true meaning is simply this: They entered into this covenant with full purpose of heart, engaging their whole affection in the matter.

Having now, as I think, given every shade of meaning that the Scriptures attach to the word soul, and having found its primary meaning to be: Man, person, or creature; and that the pronouns I, myself, himself, herself, etc., can often very properly be substituted for soul; let us next see whether such a soul is subject to death.

Then, "To the law and to the testimony; if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them." Isa. viii. 20.

First, I will call Abram to the witness stand.

Gen. xii. 13: "Say, I pray thee, thou art my sister; that it may be well with me for thy sake; and my soul shall live because of thee."

Now, had Abram believed that if the Egyptians were to kill him, his soul would still live on, would he have made use of the above language? Surely not, if his soul were not in danger.

Next I will call on Lot, Abram's nephew.

Gen. xix. 20: "Behold now, this city is near to flee unto, ... O, let me escape thither, . . . and my soul shall live."

It is evident that when Lot was escaping from Sodom for his life, he believed that when his person was safe his soul was safe; as his person and his soul was the same.

Jas. v. 20: "He which converteth the sinner from the error of his way shall save a soul from death and hide a multitude of sins."

Query: How could one save another's soul from death, if the soul was not at all subject to death? Simply impossible.

1 Sam. xxiv. 11: "Moreover, my father, see, yea, see the skirt of thy robe in my hand; for in that I cut off the skirt of thy robe, and killed thee not, know thou and see that there is neither evil nor transgression in mine hand, and I have not sinned against thee; yet thou huntest my soul to take it."—David.

Psa. xxii. 29: "All they that be fat upon earth shall eat and worship; all they that go down to the dust shall bow before him; and none can keep his own soul alive."

What then becomes of it?

Psa. xxx. 3: "O, Lord! thou hast brought my soul from the grave; thou hast kept me alive, that I should not go down to the pit."

Although this is spoken prospectively, yet that which never goes to the grave could not be brought from thence; therefore David expected his soul would go to the grave when he died.

Psa. xxxiii. 18, 19: "Behold; the eye of the Lord is upon them that fear him, upon them that hope in his mercy; to deliver their soul from death, and to keep them alive in famine."

Psa. lxxviii. 50: "He made a way to his anger; he spared not their soul from death, but gave their life over to the pestilence."

Rev. xvi. 3: "And the second angel poured out his vial upon the sea, and it became as the blood of a dead man; and every living soul died in the sea."

Ezek. xviii. 4, 20: "Behold, all souls are mine; as the soul of the father, so also the soul of the son is mine; the soul that sinneth it shall die."

Lastly I refer you to Josh. x. 28–40; xi. 11.

Here it is seven times stated that every soul in so many different cities was slain with the sword.

Now my dear friend, I bid you adieu for the present, hoping the foregoing will be satisfactory; but should it not be, please write to me soon, and inform me of any difficulty that may present itself to your mind on this subject, as I have given you but a tithe of what may be adduced.

Selections.

Baptist Home Mission Monthly.

THE CATHOLIC PRIEST OF PUTNAM, CONN., AND OUR COMMON SCHOOLS.

REV. J. M. WILLIAMS.

Many of us remember being punished for playing truant in our boyhood days and not going to school, but things have changed. Now boys are punished for going to school. Poor boys! The truant officer is after them if they don't go, and the priest is after them if they do go.

Two boys in Putnam, Conn., with two fathers, one the parent of the children, the other a Rev. Father V., must have found matters pertaining to parental authority considerably mixed. The parent had said to them, go; but the holy father had said, no!

What are boys in Putnam going to do?

Well here is what the two bright little French boys had to do about it on the second Sunday in July. The people who attended mass that morning were somewhat surprised to see two small boys, one nine and the other eleven, placed as culprits at the railing of the altar, in full view of the immense audience, and remain there on their knees during the whole service of fully two hours' duration.

"It was," said a Roman Catholic present, "a pitiable sight." The little fellows, from the fatigue and disgrace of such a public punishment, were pale and trembling.

There was one man in that assembly of a thousand or more persons who could not endure the sight—he arose with countenance deeply affected and hurried out. The two little boys thus on penitence were his children. What had they done? Only what their father had told them to do. They had attended the public school in Putnam instead of the convent school where the priest requires his parishioners to send their children.

The father, a sturdy blacksmith of Putnam, had persisted in sending them to the common school for what appeared to him a very good reason, viz: That they made more rapid progress in the latter.

He was a devoted Roman Catholic, but believing, as some Roman Catholics do, that in matters purely secular they have a right to do according to their preferences, he had persisted in disregarding the injunctions of the priest in reference to the public school question.

The reverend gentleman being unable to gain his point in the ordinary way, adopted a method which for real refined cruelty, and disregard of parental authority and disrespect for the laws and institutions of our land, deserves the indignant protest of all good citizens of the Republic.

The two little boys being at "catechism" early that morning, were taken possession of by their spiritual father, and placed in the humiliating position of culprits, as above referred to, not only without the knowledge or permission of their own father, but to his great surprise and consternation, as he came in to the service of mass.

We Protestants could have told that father what we should have done and what any parent among us would have done.

But with the Roman Catholic idea of priestly power and privilege, and with a conviction of dependence upon the priest for pardon, salvation, eternal life, etc., this is what he did do:

He went out overwhelmed with grief, and though not able to behold the suffering and disgrace of his children, yet he left them there on their knees during two long hours of mass.

Filled with sorrow and indignation, he went to the priest after mass with reproaches for treating his children so for a sin, if indeed it were a sin, that he himself had obliged them to commit. The priest told him that though indeed, it was not the children's fault, it was only right that they should suffer, to inspire them with a wholesome dread of the evil of going to the public schools of the land; and besides, he said, it was the best method he could devise to punish the father for his disobedience, adding: "I thought this would touch you and bring you around, and I am glad to see that it has been effectual."

"Why," said the father, "before inflicting a punishment so public, did you not notify me of your intention?"

"I might indeed have done that," was the reply, "but it was just what you deserved for setting yourself up in opposition to your pastor in this matter of our schools."

The saddest thing of all is that the outraged father, in his fear of the priest and under the pressure of Roman Catholic public opinion, has been persuaded that the only course left for him to wipe out the disgrace upon his children, is to take them out of the public school.

And this is what Romanism can do and dares to do in our midst. And yet we Americans, Republicans and Democrats, as some have done in Putnam, will help these enemies of our public schools to build their convents, etc., from which they can bombard our institutions; and we flatter ourselves that we are not fools but simply magnanimous in furnishing, as it were, guns and ammunition to savage foes, who, in reality, have no schools for the public, except in lands where they need them to keep the children from institutions where they might learn to think.

THE ROMAN CATHOLIC PRIEST AND THE WIFE.

Woman, as the Romish priesthood's tool and chief instrument of power and control, is a subject to which my attention is often called in my intercourse with converts from the Romish faith.

The following instance, chosen among many, because of its recent date, indeed the last to come to my knowledge, deeply impressed me, as showing what the Roman Catholic priests in our midst are doing with women in the Pope's warfare to overthrow our public school system.

I was waiting for the train the other day at the house of an estimable French Canadian family, recently converted from the Romish faith. The conversation turned upon the subject of the opposition of the priest in that place to the public school.

Mrs. L., with whom I was conversing, said that Roman Catholic women knew of things in this connection that they hardly dared to speak about to their husbands.

Shortly before her conversion, she related, her husband being somewhat emancipated from the control of the priest, persisted in sending his children to the public school, notwithstanding the orders of the priest to take them out.

One day she called on her pastor, Father V., in relation to having two of her children attend catechism for religious instruction. The priest told her they could not enjoy that privilege so long as they continued in the public school. She insisted that it was their right to receive religious instruction and that their attendance at the public school was a matter she could not control, as her husband was determined to have them go.

"Well, madam, if they come and take their place at catechism while still pupils in the public school, they will be unceremoniously led out by the ear before the whole class."

Indignant at such a threat she replied, "Well, sir, if they come their mother will come with them, and if they are led out by the ear it will be over the prostrate body of their mother."

The priest, maddened by this show of insubordination, began denouncing her in the vilest terms, adding that she ought, after such words, to fall upon her knees before him and crave his forgiveness that the judgment of God might not come upon her.

Seeing he could not frighten her out of her purpose to protect her children and regard her husband's wishes he suddenly changed his tactics.

"Well," said he "I will let this pass, but now, madam, can't we bring your husband around all right? You know he thinks everything of you. Now you just tell him he has got to choose between you and taking the children out of the Protestant school. Just leave him. You and I—it will take both of us together—but you and I can put the screws on him so that he will come around all right; but it will take both of us."

"I did not," she added, "dare to relate that conversation to my husband. I felt that with his quick temper and devotion to his family he might have blown the priest's brains out, but it was the best thing that could happen, so far as I was concerned, for it opened my eyes to the heartlessness, and tyranny, and iniquity of the Romish system. Nothing less would have broken the spell by which I was bound to that church."

Youths' Column.

College Record.

The Battle of Life.

Go forth to the battle of life my boy,
Go while it is called to-day;
For the years go out and the years come in Regardless of those who may lose or win,
Of those who may work or play.

And the troops march steadily on, my boy,
To the army gone before:
You may hear the sound of their falling feet,
Going down to the river, where two worlds meet;
They go to return no more.

There's a place for you in the ranks, my boy,
And duty, too, assigned;
Step into the front with a cheerful face,
Be quick, or another may take your place,
And you may be left behind.

There is work to be done by the way, my boy,
That you never can tread again;
Work for the lowliest, lowliest men—
Work for the plow, plane, spindle, and pen—
Work for the hands and the brain.

The serpent will follow your steps, my boy,
To lay for your feet a snare:
And pleasure sits in her fairy bowers,
With garlands of poppies and lotus flowers
Encreathing her golden hair.

Temptations will wait by the way, my boy—
Temptations without and within;
And spirits of evil with robes as fair
As those which angels in Heaven might wear,
Will lure you to deadly sin.

Then put on the armor of God, my boy,
In the beautiful days of youth;
Put on the helmet, and breastplate, and shield,
And the sword that the feeblest arm may wield
In the course of right and truth.

And go to the battle of life, my boy,
With the peace of the gospel shod;
And before high Heaven do the best you can
For the great reward and the good of man,
For the kingdom and crown of God.

Story of a Picture.

A painter once wanted a picture of Innocence, and drew the likeness of a child at prayer. The little supplicant was kneeling beside his mother; the palms of his uplifted hands were reverently pressed together; his rosy cheek spoke of health, and his mild blue eye was upturned with the expression of devotion and peace. The portrait of young Rupert was much prized by the painter, who hung it up on his study wall, and called it "Innocence."

Years passed away, and the artist became an old man. Still the picture hung there. He had often thought of painting a counterpart—the picture of guilt—but had not found the opportunity. At last he effected his purpose by paying a visit to a neighboring goal.

On the damp floor of his cell lay a wretched culprit named Randall, heavily ironed. Wasted was his body, and hollow his eye; vice was visible on his face. The painter succeeded admirably, and the portraits of young Rupert and Randall were hung side by side, for "Innocence" and "Guilt." But who was young Rupert and who was Randall? Alas! the two were one. Old Randall was young Rupert led astray by bad companions, and ending his life in the damp and shameful dungeon.

Detroit Free Press.

Jamie's Good-Night.

At a late hour the other night a poor old man, weak with hunger and stiff with cold, entered the Central Station to ask for lodgings. While he sat by the stove to get warm they heard him groan like one in distress, and the captain asked:

"Are you sick, or have you been hurt?"

"It is here," answered the old man as he touched his breast. "It all came back to me an hour ago as I passed a window and saw a bit of a boy in his night gown. I would to God that I was dead!"

"What is it?" asked the captain as he sat down beside the man.

"It is the heartache—it is remorse," the old man answered. "I have had them gnawing away at my heart for years. I have wanted to die—I have prayed for death—but life still clings to this poor old frame. I am old and friendless and worn out, and were some wheels to crush me it would be an act of mercy."

He wiped his eyes on his ragged sleeve, made a great effort to control his feelings, and went on:

"Forty years ago I had plenty. A wife sang in my home, and a young boy rode on my knee and filled the house with his shouts and laughter. I sought to be a good man and a kind father, and people called me such. One night I came home vexed, I found my boy ailing and that vexed me still more. I don't know what ailed me to act so that night, but it seemed as if everything went wrong. The child had a bed beside us, and every night since he had been able to speak, he had called to me before closing his eyes in sleep, 'good night, my pa!' Oh, sir, and I hear those words sounding in my ears every day and every hour, and they wring my old heart until I am faint."

For a moment he sobbed like a child, then he found voice to continue:

"God forgive me, but I was cross to the boy that night. When he called to me good night I made not reply. 'Good night, my pa!' he kept calling, and fiend that I was, I would make no answer. He must have thought me asleep, for he finally cuddled down with a sob in his throat. I wanted to get up and kiss him but I kept waiting, and waiting, and finally I fell asleep.

"Well?" queried the captain, as the silence grew long.

"When I awoke it was day. It was a shriek in my ears which broke my slumbers, and as I started up my poor wife called: 'Oh! Richard! Richard! our Jamie is dead in his bed!' It was so. He was dead and cold. There were tears on his pale face—the tears he had shed when he had called: 'Good night, my pa!' and I had refused to answer! I was dumb. Then remorse came and I was frantic. I did not know when they buried him, for I was under restraint as a lunatic. For five long years life was a dark midnight to me. When reason returned and I went forth into the world my wife slept beside Jamie, my home was gone, my friends had forgotten me and I had no mission in life but to suffer remorse. I cannot forget. It was almost a life time ago, but through the mist of years, across the valley of the past, from the little grave thousands of miles away, I hear the plaintive call as I heard it that night: 'Good night, my pa!' Send me to prison, to the poor-house, anywhere that I may halt long enough to die! I am an old wreck, and I care not how soon death drags me down."

He was tendered food, but he could not eat. He rocked his body to and fro and wept and sobbed, and by and by, when sleep came to him, they heard him whisper:

"Good night, my boy, good night, my Jamie!"

Sermons for the Little Ones.

No. 6.

THE JOURNEY OF THE ISRAELITES.

It took a long time to reach the land of Canaan, not because it was so far, but because the Israelites had to be taught in a great many ways, how great and strong their heavenly Father was, and that they must mind him and him alone.

They often forgot that he could give them at once, whatever they needed. Then they fretted at Moses and wished they had staid in Egypt, where there was onions and garlics and plenty of good things to eat. They were sure that they should starve, out in the great wilderness where no bread could be bought and no fruit grew.

But God sent them quails, or birds, something like quails; and of these they ate so many, that thousands of them sickened and died.

Then he gave them manna—a little, round, seed-like looking bread, that covered the ground in the morning, as thickly as the frost does here, when it is very cold. Upon this they lived for forty years. This bread is in one place in the Bible called angels' food.

At one time they could find only bitter water to drink, and instead of remembering what God had done for them, and asking him to give them sweet water they got angry at Moses, and scolded him.

Then the Lord told him to take a branch from a certain tree and throw that into the water, when lo! it became as pleasant to the taste as any water could be.

At another time, they could find no water—they were very thirsty, but they did not ask God for water. They only got angry again.

Yet instead of punishing them for not believing, after he had so often told them that he would give them what they needed if they would only ask for it, he told Moses to take his rod, and before all the people, speak to a rock near by and water would gush out.

But Moses was so tried with the people, for being so naughty, that he forgot that it was God who was going to make the water come out, and that he must show the people this, by doing just as God had told him. Instead of just speaking to the rock, so that the people would know that God had sent them the water, he smote it with his rod twice, saying, "hear now, ye rebels, must we fetch you water out of this rock?"

The heavenly Father was very sorry that Moses did not believe him, and had forgotten to give him the honor of giving the water to the people, so, to punish him for his sin, he said he should not take the people into the land of Canaan.

While they were on their journey, God showed the Israelites just how they must live, to please him. He gave them good laws, that would make them happy, if they would only mind them.

When they had got almost ready to go into the land, they sent over some men to look at it. These men all came back and told naughty stories about it, except Caleb and Joshua. Then the people became afraid. They thought they never could fight the great giants over there, and they would go back to Egypt.

The Lord punished them by causing many of them to sicken and die. The rest were sent back to travel around in the wilderness for forty years longer.

When all the men were dead who would not believe, the Lord was able to drive out the people that were in the land Then Moses died and the Lord buried him, and Joshua and Caleb went over on dry land through the river Jordan, with all the people into the land of Canaan, just as they had gone on dry land through the Red Sea.

They found it easy enough to take the land when they believed the Lord.

They made themselves beautiful homes, divided it all up; to each of the tribes giving a part.

But they know that God was then only giving them the land for a little while—that the time had not come for them to have it forever.

They said they were strangers and pilgrims in it, as all their fathers were.

Their days were so short—they could live such a little while, that they knew this could not be the giving of the land to them for an everlasting inheritance—the everlasting life was not yet theirs.

THE FRIEND OF THE CHILDREN.

TO THE YOUTH.

No. 3.

Dear Children: After the death of Abel there was another son born to Adam, whose name was Seth. He, like his brother Abel was a good man, fearing and obeying God.

From Seth descended Noah of whom we are now going to write. Read Gen. 5th Chap.

The world was about two thousand years old, and men had increased until there was a great multitude on the earth; but as they grew in numbers they grew in wickedness, too.

They neither loved nor obeyed God, who had given them life and all the blessings they enjoyed. But, amid all the wickedness, Noah believed and obeyed God, and for this he found favor with him.

God saw that the wickedness of man was great upon the earth, and that all his thoughts were only evil. The Lord told Noah that he would send a great flood upon the earth, and destroy all living creatures that he had made. He told Noah to build an ark—a large ship, so that he and his family might be saved from drowning.

Noah was one hundred and twenty years building the ark, and for all these long years, Noah was preaching to them to repent and believe God, but they would not, but went on in their sins and became more wicked day by day.

They were as the bad people are in these days. They murdered one another and did all manner of wickedness.

O, my children, it is a dreadful thing to disobey God and not believe what he tells us. I hope you will all try to be kind, loving and obedient; and remember that God gives us all we have—for the earth is the Lord's and all things therein.

In our next we will see about the flood.

GRANDMA.

MISPRINTS.

In the thirteenth paragraph of my article in THE RESTITUTION of Feb. 23d, for "objections" read "exceptions."

In the first paragraph, for "prophoced" read "prophesied."

WILEY JONES.

The Literary Revolution.

CHANGE of BASE.

The very remarkable enterprise continues to make such progress as to astonish its friends and astound its enemies. Its greatly increasing proportions have compelled the removal of its headquarters from the Tribune building to the very large and beautiful building, No. 764 Broadway, which is in the very midst of the "book district" of New York City, and, therefore, of the publishing enterprise of the nation. This building, though six stories high, 50 feet front and 100 deep, is occupied only for the offices and retail store of the company. The manufacturing is carried on in several large buildings located in other parts of the city, though it is contemplated concentrating them soon in one immense factory to be erected.

Their list of recent and early forthcoming publications are extremely interesting to all who enjoy what is choicest in literature. The Literary Magazine is unique in both form and character, and altogether delightful in the richness of its contents.

Of the books announced, Green's larger "History of the English People," reduced from $10 to $3; Carlyle's History of the French Revolution, reduced to 80c.; Carlyle's Heroes and Hero Worship, etc., and the Revised New Testament, which is promised to be manufactured with rapidity heretofore unheard of, will attract special attention.

It is worth while for every one who has not already seen it to send and get the illustrated pamphlet, "Book Making, and Type Setting by Steam," which will be sent free upon application.

Address, the American Book Exchange, 764 Broadway, New York.

Poetry.

WHEN.

If I were told that I must die to-morrow,
That the next sun
Which links should bear me past all sin and sorrow
For any one:
All the fight fought, all the short journey through,
What should I do?

I do not think that I should shrink or falter,
But just go on,
Doing my work, nor change nor seek to alter
Aught that is gone;
But rise and move and love and smile and pray
For one more day.

And, laying down at night for a last sleeping,
Say in that ear
Which hearkens ever, Lord, within thy keeping
How I am and I fear!
And when to-morrow brings thee nearer still,
Do thou thy will."

I might not weep for awe; but peaceful, tender,
My soul would lie
All the night long; and when the morning splendor
Flushed o'er the sky,
I think that I could smile—could calmly say,
"It is his day."

But, if a wondrous hand from the blue yonder
Held out a scroll,
On which my life was writ, and I with wonder
Beheld unrolled
To a long century's end its mystic clew,
What should I do?

Why, could I do, oh, Blessed Guide and Master,
Other than this
Still to go on as now, not slower, faster,
Nor fear to miss
The road, although so very long it be,
While led by thee?

Step after step, feeling thee close beside me,
Although unseen,
Through thorns, through flowers, whether the tempest bide there,
Or heavens serene,
Assured thy faithfulness can not betray,
Thy love decay.

I may not know, my God; no hand reveileth
Thy counsels wise;
Along the path is deepening shadow sleeleth:
No voice replies
To all my questioning thought, the time to tell
And it is well.

Let me keep on, abiding and confessing
Thy will always,
Through a long century's ripening fruition,
Or a short day's.
Yours can not come too soon; and I can wait
If then come late.

Communications.

JESUS BOTH LORD AND CHRIST.

Second Paper.

J. CAMERON.

It is right here to notice some objections to this exclusive application of the Messiahship and royalty, made even by some who freely acknowledge royalty in the Israelitish sense as an important element of the Messiahship. It is said that royalty and priesthood are united in Christ. Why sever them? That the Mosaic recipe for anointing oil was primarily for priesthood. Ex. xxx. That the typical application of the fragrant anointing oil applies directly to our Lord's priesthood. Psa. cxxxiii. That Messiah was anointed not only to reign but to preach. Luke iv. 18.

It is almost needless to say there is no severing the royalty from the priesthood of our Lord. It is simply a question as to the channel by which it pleased Jehovah to confer each office respectively. That the royalty is in virtue of the anointing is undoubted; as is also the fact that Aaron was anointed for the priestly office. But our Lord's priesthood was not after the order of Aaron, but after the order of Melchizedec.

This is clearly seen in Psa. cx., quoted repeatedly in the epistle to the Hebrews—"Jehovah hath sworn and will not repent: Thou art a priest forever after the order of Melchizedec." There is no evidence that Melchizedec was installed in office by anointing; but he is nevertheless called "Priest of the Most High God," and must have received Divine authority in some way not revealed.

The Divine oath is the only means on record by which our Lord was called to the office of "High Priest over the House of God."

Referring to this the apostle says—"Those priests (Aaronic) were made without an oath; but this (Christ) with an oath by him that said unto him, The Lord sware," etc.

Our Lord's being anointed to preach is more to the point, and demands consideration. It must be noted here that preaching here (Luke iv. 18,) is simply proclaiming, that is, as a herald. It is not making an oration on a religious subject, as now understood. Then, again, the subject of Jesus' proclamation was "the gospel"—"anointed to preach the gospel." This is "the gospel of the kingdom"—"preaching the kingdom of God"—"the kingdom of God is at hand."

This was the only matter of public proclamation announced by our Lord during his ministry. He taught other things both publicly and privately, but the kingdom was the burden of his preaching. In the synagogue at Nazareth he connected his anointing only with his preaching, and classed the various other objects of his mission at that time under the simple fact of his being sent. "He hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor; he hath sent me to heal the broken-hearted," etc. He did not say anointed to preach and to heal.

The question that occurs here is—Does our Lord's being anointed to preach prove anything more than that he was, as anointed King, invested with the prerogative to proclaim his own kingdom? We have seen that his being anointed as a king did not of itself confer the priesthood; but it is quite as true that the proclamation of his kingdom is a prerogative inherent in his kingly office, without any special relation to the mere act of the anointing.

From what has been advanced it is submitted that the Messiahship of Jesus consists exclusively in his being annointed for the kingship of Israel.

But how is it that this Scriptural sense of the Christship is ignored by nearly all Christendom? Does not this ignorance constitute an important part of what the apostles predicted as a "falling away" from the faith?

The fact is that with the exception of a mere fraction, such as mill-nar'ians, etc., Roman Catholic and Protestant alike deny the Christship of Jesus as believed and confessed in his own presence by his earliest disciples. The doctrine of the Roman Church for 1500 years has been that the Church is the kingdom of Christ, and that the Christ is merely the Head of the Church, with the Bishop of Rome as his vice-gerent.

This doctrine was inherited pure and simple by Protestants at the reformation. They certainly reject the Bishop of Rome as vice-gerent of Christ, but they substitute a variety of agencies by which church-government is effected.

Episcopalians have the ruling sovereign, where practicable, as the "visible head" of the Church, under whom its government is carried on by archbishops, bishops, etc., lords by law in England, despite 1. Pet. v. 3.

Presbyterians, with the semblance of democratic institutions, effect the same object by means of Presbyteries, Synods, and General Assemblies. In both cases a dominion or lordship is established by which the individual church, or congregation as it is termed, is deprived of the privilege of self-government.

Even the modern reformers, Walter Scott, and Alexander Campbell, while they repudiated, like the Congregationalists, any form of church-government but that of each congregation within itself, were content to receive the doctrine of the Christship substantially as held by their contemporaries.

They maintain that the Christ is now seated on David's throne transferred to heaven, that the kingdom of God was ushered in with power on the day of Pentecost, and that the Son of Man then entered upon his reign. Thus, from the Pope downwards, the Lordship of Jesus is substituted for the Christship, and the Christship lost sight of.

On the part of the reformers referred to this position is all the more remarkable, inasmuch as they loudly profess to speak of Scripture things in Scripture words. But where in all the New Testament is the gospel institution ever unequivocally termed the kingdom? In the Acts of the Apostles the term kingdom frequently occurs, but in no case is it applied to the order of things ushered in on the day of Pentecost.

One passage in the Acts actually makes a distinction between the members of the Christian society and the kingdom of God, and shows that kingdom to have been then in the future. Paul and Barnabas returned to Lystra, Iconium, and Antioch, confirming the souls of the disciples, and exhorting them to continue in the faith, and that we "must through much tribulation enter into the kingdom of God." Acts xiv. 22.

These persons were disciples of the Christ, and so were "in the faith," "added to the Lord," and "added to the Church." They were "in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread and in prayers." They were, consequently, in the order of things ushered in on the day of Pentecost. In all this they were "exhorted to continue."

This position exposed them to tribulation, which was apt to become an impediment to their entrance into the kingdom of God, inasmuch as it was a temptation to apostacy. The condition for entrance into the kingdom is stated by the apostle Peter in these terms—"Give diligence to make your calling and election sure, ... for so an entrance shall be ministered to you abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ."

The disciples are as yet only heirs of the kingdom, not subjects as many suppose. They are the poor of this world, rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which God hath promised to them that love him.

Presbyterians hold the Headship of Christ not only over the Church but over the State. They speak of him as King of Nations, and maintain that this dignity lays the State under obligation to render homage to Christ by contributing to the support of the ministry, etc. But, as has already been shown, Christ's Kingship over the nations belongs to the future.

His being now "Head over all things to the Church" we know from the experience of 1800 years to be limited to such providential government as God has always exercised except under extraordinary circumstances.

The effects of Messiah's rule as King of Nations, as described in the prophets, are of a totally different character. And it is only by transferring the predicted kingship of nations from the future to the present that the advocates of State Churchism can make out a case.

An illustration of the distinction between specific kingship over a nation, and general providential rule, may be seen in the former history of Israel. While groaning under the bondage of Egypt they were, in common with the other nations, the subjects of God's sovereign rule. But he afterwards became their King in a special sense. He gave them laws both civil and ecclesiastical (to use a modern phrase). He appointed them rulers both kingly and priestly. At Sinai when the covenant was made with them they became "a kingdom of priests and an holy nation."

The Psalmist gives expression to this distinction in a most emphatic style—"He showeth his word unto Jacob, his statutes and his judgments unto Israel. He hath not dealt so with any nation; and as for his judgments they have not known them." Psalms cxlvii. 19, 20.

Besides, our Lord at his first appearing had no mission to political states as such, but only to individuals. And so his commission to his apostles, "preach the gospel to EVERY CREATURE."

Certainly, if a ruler or statesman was converted, he would come under obligation to perform his official duties according to Christian principles. But the gospel comes to him in his private capacity and not as a state official.

The value of any article of faith, and the validity of any confession of the same, depend upon its being clearly understood by the person holding it. Any proposition is intelligible only in so far as its terms are definable. "If the trumpet give an uncertain sound, who shall prepare himself to the battle?" The apostolic confession is a simple proposition, and its terms have a certain definite meaning.

Jesus is a simple proper name. The Christ is a title of office—the regal dignity of the King of Israel. If the term Christ be not understood—or what in effect is the same, if it be misunderstood—it surely cannot be said that the truth contained in the confession is believed. The same remark applies to other summaries of gospel truth in which the title Christ occurs. For example, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved—Christ died for our sins."

In the former the apostle combines in one designation the personal name of our Lord and the titles Lord and Christ.

If we are not to confine this intimation to belief in the mere existence of Jesus, we must understand it of faith in his claims, mission, or preaching, or all combined.

This apparently simple belief becomes most comprehensive when the significance of these titles is understood, as it was by the Jews. If the prisonkeeper was a Gentile, Paul, in speaking to him "the word of the Lord," would doubtless enlighten him on this point.

With regard to the statement—"Christ died for our sins," the term Christ is of prime importance, and cannot be ignored without destroying the force of the truth in its gospel aspect, which the apostle is declaring. If the title Christ be resolved into a mere name of the sacrificial victim "the Lamb of God," and the plainly revealed sense of the term be ignored, how can such a statement be understood and believed?

It is only right to mention here, however, that several leading men, among the reformers alluded to, attained to more Scriptural views of the Christship.

One of these, reviewing a work entitled "Ecce Messias," thus writes: "The throne of David is a memorable historical reality, where the glories of the ancient kingdom converged; and surely its restoration and perpetuation are guaranteed.

The house of Jacob is quite as memorable and as definite. . . . His apostles are promised thrones in connection with the restored tribes, and places at his table in the kingdom of the Father and the Son. . . . . The time is to come when they will reo him once more with unveiled eyes. They will say "Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord;" and lo! the house of ruin and desolation arises again. . . . . All this we can gather without any straining or dislocation, simply by fair grammatical construction of perspicuous language."

Another, writing on "The Two Messiahs," says:

"The Kingship and kingdom of Christ occupy a very prominent place in the New Testament. Of royal race age was Jesus born. To sit on the throne and reign forever over Jacob's house, was he divinely destined.

Eastern Magi were providentially and scripturally directed to the Babe as born King of the Jews. . . .

We have said that the word of the kingdom sown by the Son of Man was the word of the coming kingdom.

It was as a witness to all nations that the proclamation of the Kingdom was to be maintained in the days of the end (Matt. xxiv. 14) . . . . The same remark applies with additional force to the parting words of Jesus to his disciples, as preserved in Acts i.—Ye shall be my witnesses. Witnesses to what? Witness to Christ in what capacity? What answer does the context give? The context, it will be seen, the numerous clause to which it is generally subjected gives a very significant reply. It says—Witnesses to me as anointed to be King over the kingdom when it shall be duly established unto Israel.' In other words—Witnesses unto me as Son of David and Heir of David's throne. That throne is vacant as yet; it will be filled when the Lord returns."

Another, who ultimately formed a new connection, in which the Israelitish character of the Christship was a prominent element, wrote as follows:—

"I believe in that kingdom spoken of by Daniel and the prophets, which will soon be set up by the God of heaven, upon the ruins of all states and empires.

I believe that the Son of Man is to possess this kingdom and the dominion of the globe; but that he was first to be a sufferer, become obedient unto death, rise from among the dead, lead captivity captive, sit at the right hand of the Ancient of days, until the time comes to set up the kingdom, then come in power and great glory to take man justly in the fear of the Lord.

I believe that Jesus of Nazareth is this prophetic sufferer and glorious King of men, the Son and Anointed One of God, and the great Captain destined to lead many sons to glory.

I believe that the Gospel comprehends the things concerning the kingdom of God, and, not or, but and the things concerning the name of Jesus Christ."

This paper is offered as a small contribution towards the exposition of a long-neglected Bible truth, and one of a thoroughly fundamental character, the central element of the Christian faith. Direct evidence of the Israelitish character of the Christship could easily be multiplied.

If the reader be interested by the sample presented he will soon find more by searching the Scriptures. The entire strain of their teachings requires such a Messiah. The promises made to Abraham; the restoration of Israel to their own land; the gospel of the kingdom of God, that is, concerning the kingdom preached by Christ and his apostles; the second appearing of the Lord on earth; are all but parts of a great whole, which has no real meaning apart from Israel's Messiah.

Edinburgh, Scotland.

FITNESS FOR THE KINGDOM.

HELENA M. HUNT.

Lord I will follow thee, but first let me go and bid them farewell, which are at home at my house. And Jesus said unto him, No man having put his hand to the plow, and looking back, is fit for the kingdom of God." Luke ix. 61, 62.

A careless reader of this passage might look upon the words of our Lord as unnatural and severe. The young convert seems to be so ready, so willing, so zealous, so affectionate, that all our sympathies are awakened at those touching words—"Lord I will follow thee, but first let me go and bid them farewell, which are at home."

It was such a natural feeling, it showed so truly the eagerness of a warm, impulsive heart, so full of attachment to the Master, so ready to leave all and follow him, yet with a yearning earnestness to say a last farewell at home.

From a close study of Luke viii. and ix. we find that wondrous work had been done in those days. Our Lord had not only shown forth his mighty power in raising the dead and healing the sick, but had in some measure delegated power to his disciples; for we are told that he called together his twelve disciples, and gave them power and authority over devils, and to cure diseases. Inasmuch that Herod had heard and was perplexed.

"Who is this," said he, "of whom I hear these things."

It will therefore be easy to imagine what throngs of people followed Jesus, drawn by the fame of his wonderful works. It is upon that our attention is held by the closing verses of chapter ix.

I suppose many have wondered why the love of those at home swallowed up love for the Master. Whether the sight of their early associations, of kindred and friends stood at last in the way of this young man's fitness for the kingdom of God.

We never know the conditions more and more than we were able to bear and labor hard they might appear at first. They must be a part of his preparation.

I think we can all realize, or have realized something like this in our own lives. We have been so ready to say Lord I will follow thee, but—we hesitate, we stop—but let me keep this still. Some lesser thing some ambition some long-looked-for hope that we are called upon to give up forever. Something we had set our heart upon we were bound by love to say—He that loveth father or mother, brother or sister more than me cannot be my disciple."

Truly we are compelled to say, this is a hard saying—who can hear it, and as the Israelites of old, in their journeyings through the desert, though surrounded by visible tokens of Jehovah's presence, they longed for the flesh-pots of Egypt, so we, even with our hand on the plow, look back.

An old writer—Augustine—has truly said: "All are ready enough to go into the kingdom, but none are willing to bear the cross." Ready enough to follow the Lord when the sun shines and all seems to go well with us, but what shall become of us when storms arise? What shall we do when earthly friends seem to fail us—when our good actions and intentions are misrepresented and our faults exaggerated?

Surely we know that he who said, "I will never leave thee or forsake thee," is mighty to save—that the words spoken then remain to us forever.

Do not become discouraged brother or sister. Von have put your hand to the plow—do not look back—plenty of warm and kindly hearts are ready to sympathize with us, and we shall be able to feel how near the Lord is to us, though we now walk by faith, not by sight.

Let us remember that here we have no continuing city—we seek one which is to come. We are pilgrims and strangers in a world that lieth in wickedness, but it will not be for long, and the morning will be all the brighter when those shadows flee away.

Month by month, week by week, day by day is bringing the return of our absent Lord nearer—nearer than we can tell.

Around us we hear of wars and rumors of wars—of desolation and famine—of men's hearts failing them for fear of those things which shall come upon the earth; yet, what does Jesus say: "when ye see these things come to pass, look up, and lift up your heads for your redemption draweth nigh."

"Signs through all the earth are gleaming.
Omens of Thy coming day."

O, for that long Messianic reign of rest and peace! When the world shall be judged righteously—when there will be no more arrogance of the rich, nor oppression of the poor—when the inhabitants will no more say, "I am sick"—no more sorrow and no more parting "on Zion's happy shore."

O, that we may strive to realize in our daily life how near we are to a fulfillment of that gracious promise: "I will come again, and receive you to myself, that where I am, there ye may be also."

Let us help and cheer each other, all we can, we need so much now—let us say to one another what an aged brother once said—"you must get into the kingdom, don't fail to be there." No, don't fail to be there.

Let us watch, for the night is far spent, the day is at hand—the Lord may come at any moment. O God grant that we may be found waiting—for the summons: "The Master is come—he calleth for thee."

Boston, Mass.

Two pyramids have been discovered at Saggarah, north of Memphis. They were built by Kings of the sixth dynasty. It is stated that rooms and passages are covered with inscriptions which will be of high value to science.

Keep your ears open to all that is worth hearing, and closed to all that is not.

Sententious.

Character is perfectly educated will.

Every good deed is a grain of seed for the eternal harvest.

Avoid that which you see amiss in others.

You are not building on the future, but on the past and present.

If you would be capable, cultivate your mind; if you would be loved, cultivate your heart.

When hearts are tender with God's love,
Then hymns of early years
Make patient march with feeling feet,
And melt the road to tears.

The song that once is sung and over again,"
The tones we love the best,
Go sobering, soothing in their flow,
Because a part of rest.

Lucy H. Hooper.

The talent of success is nothing more than doing what you can well, without a thought of fame.—Longfellow.

Good temper is like a sunny day, it sheds a bright ness over everything. It is the sweetness of fun and the soother of disquietude.

In morality there are books enough written both by ancient and modern philosophers, but the morality of the Gospel such as exceed them all, that to give a man a full knowledge of true morality, I shall send him to no other book than to the New Testament.—Locke.

Who wear the cross peaceful and well;
Loaded hearts send forth the sweetest smell:
Were they never tossed by stormy wind,
The perfume never would come to mind
Had Death spread no darkness o'ere,
The sweetest song had not been sung.

A swallow having built its nest upon the tent of Charles V., the Emperor generously commanded that the tent should not be taken down when the camp removed, but should remain until the birds were ready to fly. Was there such a gentleness in the heart of a soldier toward a poor bird which was not of his making, and shall the Lord deal hardly with His creatures when they trust in Him? Be assured He hath a great love to those trembling souls that fly for shelter to His royal courts. He that buildeth his nest upon a divine promise shall find it abide and remain until he shall fly away to the land where promises are lost in fulfillments.—Spurgeon.

Benighted and alone I wait;
Love seems too bitter, gain too late;
Too heavy burdens in the land
And too few helpers on the road;
And joy is weak and grief is strong,
And years and days so long, so long:
Yet this one thing I learn to know
Each day more surely as I go,
That I am glad the good and ill
By changeless law are ordered still.
"Not as I will."

CONFIDING PRAYER.

Prayer must be confidential. It is the utterance of one who has been brought nigh to God, and taught to feel at home with Him, even in His holy habitation, yea, brought to dwell with Him, there. It is the blood sprinkled upon the mercy seat, and around the walls of the sanctuary, that gives him this blessed feeling of security and confidence; and so long as that blood is there, he sees that there is no room for distrust and unbelief. That blood which was sufficient to secure his entrance is enough to keep him there in safety and in joy; nay, to fill his soul with the most entire and undoubting confidence. His utterances are the confidential utterances of a child. His whole intercourse with God is that of one who has learnt to convey everything straight to God, to consult with God about everything, to tell it, whole mind and to pour out his whole heart before Him, not only as one who can trust everything to His paternal love, but as one who feels that the things he prays for are more God's concern than his own.—Dr. H. Bonar.

MISTAKES of INGERSOLL

A review of Col. R. G. Ingersoll's lecture entitled "Mistakes of Moses."

—By J. M. Stephenson.—

This is a large size eight page tract, printed on tinted paper. 10c. each, or 75 for $1.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

A Letter to a Friend!

—By Mrs. C. C. Woodruff.—

This little work is so well known that it needs no encomium. 32 pages, price 10c.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

SECOND EDITION.

The GOSPEL of the KINGDOM

Advocated in a series of Ten Discourses

—By Wiley Jones.—

This edition is elegantly printed and bound by Lippincott & Co., clear type, good paper, $1.25 price. Plain cloth binding $1; cloth gilt edge $1.25; leather marbled edge $1.50, post paid. To obtain this valuable work, send the price by post office money order or registered letter, to

WILEY JONES,
Norfolk, Va.

BOOK LIST.

The following publications are kept on hand and will be sent postpaid to any address in the United States or Canada, upon receipt of published price. Address all orders to

THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Indiana.

Bible Reader. Suitable for wide distribution. 1. The Gospel. 2. The Coming and Kingdom of Christ, by John Thomas, in 1869. 3. Immortality. 4. The Kingdom of God. 5. Nature of Man and Thoughts for Thinkers. 6. The True Advent. 7. What is Religion. 8. The Resurrection Age. 9. Destiny of the Wicked. 10. Baptism. Ten copies 60c., or assorted packages of 100 for 50c.

FOUR PAGE TRACTS.

25 for 50c.; 50 for 75c.; 100 for 60c.

The State of Man in Death. Contains an abundance of proof-texts.

Life and Death. A concise statement and contrast of the two views of these terms, to-wit: the Theological and Bible one.

Human Government a Failure. By A. D. Musgrove.

Resurrection. Austin Curtis. A careful examination of the query—"If a man die, shall he live again?"

Is it True? H. V. Reed. An examination of testimony as to who are subjects of salvation.

What is Death? H. V. Reed. An excellent contrast of the Bible teaching and modern theory.

The Perverted Parable. The Rich Man and Lazarus. W. Luhn.

EIGHT PAGE TRACTS.

5c. each, or 25 for 40c.

Is It Essential to Believe in the Royalty of Jesus? R. Wilson.

Signs of the Times. H. Bonar, of Scotland.

The Scattering and Gathering. H. V. Reed. Contemplates the future three-fold gathering of the Nations, Israel, and the Nations.

TWELVE PAGE TRACTS.

5c. each, or 12 for 50c.

Christian Union. Joel A. Simonds.

Regeneration and the Kingdom of God. R. Hoyt. Well suited to inquiring minds.

Immortality Brought to Light. The grand reality of redemption. J. H. Smith.

SIXTEEN PAGE TRACTS.

5c. each; 12 for 50c.; or 25 for $1.

The New Birth. Josiah Peirce.

Hope for the World. Joel A. Simonds.

The Kingdom of Messiah. Joseph Seiss, D. D. Set forth in beautiful language and apt Bible quotations.

Which is Right? T. Wilson. Showing the Bible teaching on the question as to whether Christ's kingdom is to be on the earth or in heaven.

The Seed of Abraham. Joel A. Simonds. The promise made to Abraham renewed to Isaac and Jacob, and so frequently referred to by prophets and apostles.

The King in His Beauty. H. V. Reed. Just the thing to circulate everywhere.

TWENTY-FOUR PAGE TRACTS.

5c. each; 8 for 25c.; or 20 for $1.

Das Evangelium des Reiches Gottes. Teaches the true nature of Christ's Kingdom.

Will the Earth be Burned Up? T. Wilson. An argument to show the Scriptures teaching that the earth will not be annihilated, as many suppose, but will be the everlasting inheritance of the saints.

Witchcraft Unveiled; or the Voice of God Against Spiritualism. H. V. Reed. Cannot be too widely circulated.

The Scripture Way. Joel A. Simonds.

THIRTY-TWO PAGE TRACTS.

10c. each; or 75 for $1.

Evangelium concerning the Reign of Christ over Israel and the Nations; or a brief statement of the things concerning the Kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ. Wiley Jones.

The Resident; or the World restored to its primeval state, and life to be its everlasting condition. E. Miller. A cruel it and satisfactory examination of Acts iii. 21.

BOOKS AND PAMPHLETS

The Rich Man and Lazarus. T. Wilson. The exposition brought out to harmony with Bible teaching. 36 pages, price 10c.

The Rich Man and Lazarus. C. F. Sweet. A careful unfolding of Luke xv. and xvi., with an examination of Luke xix. and xxiv. 64 pages, price 15c.

Primitive Christian Faith. C. F. Sweet. A concise history of the Primitive Christian Faith, or the Gospel as held by the early fathers, in a small compass. 30 pages price 10c.

The Infidel Silenced by the most irrefutable evidence. W. H. Wilson. 48 pages, price 10c.

The Doctrine of Baptism as taught in the Holy Scriptures, together with a collection of evidence upon the subject, from the most learned theologians, critics, lexicographers and ecclesiastical historians. 64 pages, price 15c.

Bible Triangulation. No. II. V. Reed. A reply to "One hundred and forty-four self-contradictions of the Bible," by A. J. Davis. An able refutation of leveled charges. Paper 50c.

Discussion on the State of the Dead. Between the Rev. W. C. Boardman, Congregational minister, and W. Kelloway, both of England. The propositions discussed were: 1. That the dead exist in a living, conscious state after their decease. Affirmed by Boardman. 2. That the Scriptures teach that men in death are wholly unconscious, insensible, and unable to perform any act whatsoever; and that they rest in darkness, silence and the dust. Cloth 60c., paper 40c.

Future Punishment. Its nature and duration. Henry Constable, Prebendary of Cork. Exactly the book for the times. 230 pages, cloth $1.25.

The Destiny of Russia, as foretold by God's prophets, together with an outline of the future movements and destiny of England, Germany, Persia, Africa and the Jews. Contains a map of England and Asia. A work invaluable to every student of prophecy, and of intense present interest. 112 pages, cloth 75c., paper 35c.

Hades, or the Intermediate State of the Dead. Henry Constable, A. M. Presents the Bible doctrine of the state of man between death and the resurrection. Cloth $1.40.

God's Plan of Salvation. J. M. Stephenson. A comprehensive and able statement of the leading phases of Bible theology. Our brethren will find this just the thing to read and circulate. The nature of man, the Kingdom of God, and the obedience of faith, are ably and clearly set forth. Over 300 pages, cloth $1.

THE NEW TESTAMENT IN GREEK AND ENGLISH!

—ENTITLED—

THE EMPHATIC DIAGLOTT

—By Benjamin Wilson.—

Contains the Original Greek text of the New Testament, with an interlinear word-for-word English translation, based on the renderings of eminent critics, and on the various readings of the Vatican Manuscripts, together with illustrative and explanatory foot notes, and a copious selection of references.

The different renderings of various passages in the New Testament are the foundations on which most of the sects of Christians have been built up; with this work each reader may judge for himself whether the words there literally translated are so arranged in the common version as to express the exact meaning of the New Testament writers.

New improved edition on larger paper; 864 pages, cloth $4.00, Library binding $5.00.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

HYMNS OF THE ADVENT!

Above is the name of a New Hymn Book, compiled by

—Chas. C. Barker.—

Mr. Barker combines in this book the hymns of the Nursery and a fresh and rare selection of music. As an appendix he adds a selection of "Favorite Hymns, whose music is a household word. Those using the "Christian Psalmody" and no music book will do well to get this work. Price 40c. cloth 60c.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

ASTRONOMICAL ETIOLOGY,

—OR—

STAR PROPHECIES

Concerning coming disasters on the earth from 1861 to 1868.

—By M. L. Knapp, D. D.—

And others. It also contains an appendix by the publisher. 70 pages, 25c. each.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

GOD ESTABLISHED

—AND—

The BIBLE VINDICATED.

—By A. J. Eychaner.—

A new tract, and one that should be in the hands of every infidel in the land. Those living in infidel neighborhoods will do well to get this work, as it will aid you in convincing the enemy. Twenty pages, price 5c. 10 for 50c., or 50 for $1.

FOR SALE AT THIS OFFICE.

THE RESTITUTION
—IS ISSUED WEEKLY BY—
The Christian Publishing Association.

OFFICERS OF BOARD OF DIRECTORS:
W. S. DWIGGINS.....President.
CHARLES PALMER.....Vice President.
F. K. BARNHILL.....Secretary.
S. A. CHAPLIN.....Treasurer.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE:
CHARLES PALMER. WM. RAILSBACK,
I. C. ROBERTS.

S. A. CHAPLIN,.....EDITOR.

SPECIAL CONTRIBUTORS:
J. M. STEPHENSON. B. WILSON.
J. P. WEETHEE. J. A. SIMONDS.
WILEY JONES. O. M. MYERS.
A. G. MAGRUDER.

The Restitution.

Keep Brother Crethers Article.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

VOL. XXX. Read PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, MARCH 16, 1881. NO. 11.

THE RESTITUTION.

TERMS--TWO DOLLARS PER YEAR, Payable in advance. Three and Six Months at the same rate.

Address all Letters and Communications to THE RESTITUTION, Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS:

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." As a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint heirs with him; the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. Also a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Communications.

COMING AGE.

Its Proximity. Sixth Seal. Part Second continued. Symbols and Terms explained. The empire under Diocletian and Constantine the Great compared. Civil and prophetic histories. Concluding remarks on the Sixth Seal.

No. 60.

J. P. WEETHEE.

During the supremacy of the Pagan priesthood, the high priesthood of Christ was kept under restraint in the empire. There was however, kept up a constant communication between the saints on earth and the officiating priesthood in heaven.

The prayers of saints, carried by messengers, were offered as incense, by the twenty-four elders, and the four living creatures, on the golden altar, while the brazen altar, the antitype of the altar of sacrifice on earth, its symbol, in Rev. v. 8; viii. 3, was red with blood of the martyrs of Jesus.

12. The Great Tribulation.—John was asked by one of the elders who those persons in white robes were? and whence come they?

The elder's answer was, These are they which came out of the great tribulation.—

Ουτοι εισιν οι ερχομενοι εκ της θλιψεως της μεγαλης.

The Great persecution. What great persecution?

One class of expositors make it still in the future; and they understand this sealing now in progress, or wholly yet to come. From a careful examination of the entire book of Revelations, and more particularly, the book of seven seals, we are forced to abandon that view, and adopt one that better harmonizes with the past history of the Gentile dispensation.

Some of our objections to placing this persecution or sealing in the future, or under the papacy, or at any time later than A. D. 350, are the following:

a. The sealing is under the sixth seal, and the sealing follows the great persecution; for, it is said, These are they which came out from the great persecution. It must have been after the persecution.

b. It is during the time that Christ is officiating as high priest, since all their surroundings are those of the antitypical temple and priesthood.

c. It is prior to the sounding of any of the trumpets; since they belong to the seventh seal. "And when he had opened the seventh seal there was silence in heaven about the space of half an hour. And I saw the seven angels which stood before God; and to them were given seven trumpets." Rev. viii. 1, 2.

No trumpet sounded before A. D. 350, and they commenced about that time.

Since this sealing was under the sixth seal, and the seventh seal opened to view a series of events still further onward; and since six trumpets, which were under the seventh seal, have already sounded, and as the sealing was prior to the sounding of either of the trumpets, it follows that this event of sealing must have been as early as A. D. 350, and consequently, an event in the very distant past.

d. Another objection arises from the tribes sealed. The tribes of Levi and Joseph are substituted for Dan and Ephraim. Ezek. xlviii. 2-5.

Some say that Dan and Ephraim were omitted because of their idolatry. The reason we would suggest is, their being, at the time of this revival (sealing) beyond its territory.

The sealing of 313-340 was principally over the east; whereas Dan and Ephraim were dwelling at the extreme northwest corner of the empire, and partly beyond it. The sealing angel from the sun-rising did not reach their borders till the trumpets commenced sounding.

e What is said of the sealed in Rev. vii. 16-17, is urged against this sealing being at such an early date. Let us examine the language there used:—"Therefore are they before the throne of God, and serve him day and night in his temple; and he that sitteth on the throne shall dwell among them," Verse 15.

The evangelist does not name any of the sealed by the angel, at this time, except from the twelve tribes. During the persecution the Jews were enemies to Christianity, and joined the persecuting Pagans: but in the days of Constantine multitudes were converted, and took upon them the name of Christ—were sealed.

This extraordinary change was seen and noted by the prophet. After that sealing, he is permitted to see the Pagan martyrs, out of all nations and languages; the fruits of a former sealing.

They under the fifth seal had white robes given them. In the last bloody contest they overcame by the blood of the Lamb, and Paganism fell.

They now have palms—symbols of victory. They are still in the state of death, since they have no crowns.

How, then, were they before the throne of God, and dead? All of John's visions were views of scenes and agents then future. He is conducted in vision along the stream of time till it enters the boundless ocean. None of these things then existed. He saw things that were not then, as if they were. They were photographs of future events.

The 16th and 17th verses teach the then futurity of those enjoyments. "He that sitteth on the throne (then sitting) shall dwell among them." Ver. 16. (Future.) Ver. 17. "For the Lamb which is (present) in the midst of the throne shall feed them, (future) and shall (future) lead them (not leads them) unto living fountains of waters; and God shall (not has) wipe away all tears from their eyes." This will be readily understood.

The Roman Empire under Constantine the Great.—

Its Civil History.—When Constantine first became Augustus, the empire was governed by two emperors, and two Cæsars. Soon after his conversion to Christianity, he became sole emperor.

His conversion, according to history, was very remarkable. Reflecting on the state of the empire, he earnestly entreated God, that he would make himself known to him and render his powerful aid in his difficult affairs. Constantine himself thus relates his vision:—

"About noon, when the day was declining, I saw with mine own eyes in the heavens, the trophy of the cross, placed above the sun, consisting of light, with an inscription annexed, "BY THIS CONQUER," that at the sight of it, astonishment seized me and my whole army, which then followed in a certain march, beheld the wonderful sight."

"On that night while I doubted the meaning of this sign; as I slept, the Christ of God appeared to me with that sign which had appeared in the heavens; and commanded me to make a standard resembling the sign which I had seen in the heavens, and to use it as a defense in the battle with my enemies."

"As soon as it was day, I arose and communicated this wonderful thing to my friends. And then sending for such as worked in gold and precious stones, I seated myself in the midst of them, and gave them a description of the sign, and commanded them to make one like it in gold and precious stones."

From this time forth he began to study the Scriptures, and to learn the principles of Christianity from the most distinguished bishops in the empire.

"He now undertook to extinguish the flames of tyranny."

Constantine reigned in conjunction with Licinius and Maximin for a time; then with Licinius till 323. From A. D. 323 till his death 337, he was sole emperor.

His reign was one, in its latter part, of great tranquility. He subdued the Goths, founded Constantinople, and made it the seat of empire. He held in check the discordant elements of the empire, and kept back the Persians and all the border enemies. His reign was designated—Beata tranquillitas—The blessed tranquility, since all classes lived in comparative peace.

Religious aspect of the Empire.—This will fully appear only by contrast with previous reigns. Should we place it beside the imperial dominations of Nero, Domitian, Marcus Antonius, Decius, and Diocletian, the change in Christian liberty would soon appear.

It is human to err, even beyond any legal bounds. That the contrast may fully appear, let us compare the edicts and practices of the Pagan rulers and subjects with the edict of Constantine, and his government.

From the days of the apostles two religious elements took root in the empire. The new element was Christianity. It was exceedingly aggressive. It admitted no compromise whatever. It aimed at the overthrow and utter extinction of idolatry, the ancient, popular, and established religion of the empire.

At first the authorities treated the new religion with contempt. Failing to check its advance by that means, they put in motion a system of persecution which was carried out with more or less cruelty till the reign of Constantine.

Nero set fire to Rome and charged the act to the Christians, and a bloody persecution followed. Under Domitian there was another effort to rid the empire of Christianity, but its progress was still onward.

We date the general edict A. D. 100. It was issued by Trajan, in his letter to Pliny the younger. Since this was the rule for punishing Christians, and continued in force for two centuries, to those of our readers who have no opportunity to see those articles a copy of Pliny's letter to Trajan and his reply will be interesting.

PLINY'S LETTER TO TRAJAN.

"Pliny to the emperor Trajan wisheth health and happiness. It is my constant custom, Sir, to refer myself to you in all matters which I consider in any manner doubtful. For who can better direct me where I err, or instruct me where ignorant? I have never been present at any trials of Christians; so that I know not well what is the subject matter of punishment, or of inquiry, or what strictness ought to be used in either. Nor have I been a little perplexed to determine whether any difference ought to be made on account of age, or whether the young and tender, and the full grown and robust, ought to be treated all alike. Whether repentance should entitle to pardon, or whether all who have once been Christians ought to be punished, though they are now no longer so; whether the name itself, although no crimes be detected, or crimes only belonging to the name, ought to be punished. Concerning all these things I am in doubt.

In the mean time I have taken this course with all who have been brought before me and have been accused as Christians. I have put the question to them, whether they were Christians. Upon their confessing to me that they were, I repeated the question a second and a third time, threatening also to punish them with death. Such as still persisted, I ordered away to be punished; for it was no doubt with me whatever might be the nature of their opinion, that contumacy and inflexible obstinacy ought to be punished. There were others of the same infatuation, whom, because they were Roman citizens, I have noted down to be sent to the city.

In a short time, the crime spending itself, even whilst under persecution, as is usual in such cases, divers sorts of people came in my way. An information was presented to me without mentioning the author, containing the names of many persons, who upon examination denied that they were Christians, or had ever been so; who repeated after me an invocation of the gods, and with wine and frankincense made supplication to your image, which for that purpose I had caused to be brought and set before them, together with the statues of the deities. Moreover, they reviled the name of Christ. None of which things, as is said, they who are really Christian, can by any means be compelled to do. These, therefore, I thought proper to discharge.

Others were named by an informer, who at first confessed themselves Christians, and afterwards denied it. The rest said they had been Christians, but had left them; some three years ago, some longer, and one or more, above twenty years. They all worshipped your image, and the statues of the gods. These also reviled Christ. They affirmed that the whole of their fault, or error, lay in this that they were wont to meet together on a stated day before it was light, and sing among themselves alternately a hymn to Christ, as a god, and bind themselves by an oath, not to the commission of any wickedness, but not to be guilty of any theft, or robbery, or adultery, never to falsify their word, nor to deny a pledge committed to them, when called upon to return it.

When these things were performed it was their custom to separate, and then come together again to a meal, which they ate in common, without any disorder; but this they had forborne, since the publication of my edict, by which, according to your commands, I prohibited assemblies.

After receiving this account I judged it the more necessary to examine, and that by torture, two maid-servants, which were called ministers. But I have discovered nothing, besides a bad and excessive superstition.

Suspending therefore all judicial proceedings, I have recourse to you for advice; for it has appeared to me a matter highly deserving consideration, especially upon account of the great number of persons who are in danger of suffering. For many, of all ages, and every rank, of both sexes likewise, are accused, and will be accused. Nor has the contagion of this superstition seized cities only, but the lesser towns also, and the open country.

Nevertheless it seems to me that it may be restrained and corrected. It is certain that the temples, which were almost forsaken, begin to be more frequented. And the sacred solemnities, after a long intermission are again revived.

Victims, likewise, are everywhere brought up, whereas for some time there were few purchasers. Whence it is easy to imagine that numbers of men might be reclaimed if pardon were granted to those who shall repent."

ISAIAH CHAPTER XLIX.

Translated from the Greek or Septuagint Version.

BY CHARLES GARDNER.

1. Listen to me, O ye Islands, and attend, O ye nations; through a long time it shall stand. From my mother's womb He hath called my name.

2. And he hath appointed my mouth as a sharp sword and he hath hidden me under the protection of his hand. He hath appointed me to be a chosen arrow and he hath hidden me in his quiver.

3. And he hath said unto me, O Israel thou art my servant, and in thee I shall be glorified.

4. And I said I have labored in vain. I have given my strength to vanity, and nothingness, therefore my trial is with the Lord, and my labor is in the sight of my God.

5. And now thus saith the Lord, the one who moulded me from the womb, a servant for himself, to lead Jacob to him and Israel. I shall be gathered together and I shall be glorified in the presence of the Lord, and my God shall be strong for me.

6. And he hath said to me, it is a great thing for thee to be called my child, to establish the tribes of Jacob and to return the dispersion of Israel. Lo! I have given thee for a covenant of a race, for a light of Nations, that thou shouldst be for salvation unto the end of the earth.

7. Thus saith the Lord, the One who hath rescued thee—the God of Israel. Sanctify ye the one who makes little of his life, the one who is abominated by the Nations—the servants of rulers. Kings shall see him and rulers shall stand up and worship him on account of the Lord. Because the Holy One of Israel is faithful and I have chosen thee out.

8. Thus saith the Lord, In an acceptable time I heard thee and in a day of salvation I came to thy cry, and I have given thee for a covenant of Nations that thou shouldst establish the earth and shouldst inherit desolate inheritances.

9. That thou shouldst say to those in bonds, Come forth; and to those in the darkness, Be ye revealed. In all their ways they shall feed, and in all their paths their pasturage shall be.

10. They shall not hunger, nor shall they thirst, nor shall the hot wind smite them, nor the sun: the one who compassionateth them shall comfort them; and shall lead them between fountains of waters.

11. And I will make every mountain a way and every path for a feeding place for them.

12. Lo, these shall come from afar, these from the north and from the sea. But others from the land of the Persians.

13. Rejoice ye, O ye heavens; and let the earth be glad, let the mountains break forth with joy because the Lord hath compassionated his people and hath comforted the lowly of his people.

14. But Zion hath said, the Lord hath forsaken me, the Lord hath forgotten me.

15. Shall a woman forget her child? Shall she not have mercy upon the offspring of her womb? Yea a woman might forget them, but I will not forget thee, saith the Lord.

16. Lo! I have engraved thy walls upon my hands; and thou art ever present with me.

17. And thou shalt be quickly built up by those by whom thou wast torn down, and those who laid thee waste shall come forth from thee.

18. Lift up thine eyes round about and see them all, lo they have been gathered together and they have come to thee, as I live, saith the Lord, thou shalt put them all on as an ornament, and thou shalt put them around thee as a bride doth a thing of beauty.

19. Because thy desolate and destroyed and smitten places shall now be too narrow, by reason of inhabitants, and those who drink thee down shall be far from thee.

20. For thy sons whom thou hast lost, shall say in thine ears, the place is narrow for me, make for me a place in order that I may dwell.

21. And thou shalt say in thine heart, who hath begotten these for me, for I was childless and a widow, and who hath brought these up for me, for I was left alone, and these of mine, where were they?

22. Thus saith the Lord Lord, Lo! I raise my hand unto the nations, and I raise my signal unto the isles; and they shall bring thy sons in their bosom, and thy daughters they shall carry upon their shoulders.

23. And kings shall be thy foster-fathers, and their female rulers shall be thy foster-mothers; upon the face of the earth they shall bow down to thee, and they shall lick the dust of thy feet; and thou shalt know that I am Lord. and those who wait for me, shall not be ashamed.

24. Who shall take spoils from a giant? and if one be taken captive unjustly shall he be saved?

25. Yea, thus saith the Lord, if any one doth take a giant captive, he shall take spoil for himself, but the one who receiveth from one who giveth strength shall be saved. For I try thy trial and I will rescue thy sons.

26. And those who have troubled thee shall eat their own flesh and drink their own blood, as new wine, and they shall be drunken, and all flesh shall perceive that I, the one who rescueth thee, am the Lord, and the one who defendeth the strong one of Jacob.

IS IT ESSENTIAL TO BELIEVE THE TRUTH CONCERNING MAN IN DEATH?

M. JOSLIN.

It certainly is. The God of the Bible has taken infinite pains to impart the truth on this subject. He is too wise to have done this without a purpose, as it is not like him to do it for our amusement merely. He had a nobler end in view—a more beneficent purpose to execute.

Said Jesus; "Search the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life." John v. 39. The word of Jesus for it then, we have to obtain eternal life through, or by means of the Scriptures.

The truth on our subject forms a part of those Scriptures, and depend upon it, eternal life is connected with it. But what is the truth? Answer "The dead know not anything." Eccl. ix. 5. "His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth; in that very day his thoughts perish." Ps. cxlvi. 4. "There is no work nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave whither thou goest." Eccl. ix. 10. "The dead praise not the Lord." Ps. cxv. 17.

Not to believe the truth thus plainly stated, is to believe something else in preference to it.

In opposition alike to it and their own experience, men believe they will not die; and that these Scriptures are a truthful description of only the case or shell they live in. As they do not believe God, they are unbelievers; It does not help their case to say: "Our bodies die—our bodies go to the grave—our bodies do not praise the Lord," for they believe the very opposite of this about their own proper persons—themselves.

Besides this, on their own hypothesis, their bodies never did know anything or praise the Lord—these are the peculiar functions of the immortal soul! There is no mistaking their position on this subject, for they sing:

"Then in a nobler, sweeter song,
I'll sing thy power to save,
When this poor lisping stammering tongue,
Lies silent in the grave."

So, according to this, they are saved without the body—saved while this poor old organic body is silent in the grave! Then of course they are well rid of it. They do far better without it.

It must have been a mistake to have loaded them with it at all. It would be cruel to encumber them with it again. The resurrection is a most stupendous blunder.

Said H. W. Beecher, "Some believe that the bodies will rise again, but not I. Good bye, old body, good bye!" This is the serpent's lie in a new dress, but still the lie. It is sugar-coated but as poisonous as ever, for it induces men to discard the only way to life—a resurrection.

But reader, men do die—they do need a resurrection—they need life; and this is precisely what God's only Son, offers them. Says he: "I am the resurrection and the life." This is a proposition from him to be our resurrection and life. He knows what to offer, because he knows what we need. But it is only an offer. It is not forced on us. There are conditions stated in the immediate context. "He that believeth on me, though he were dead, yet shall he live." It is literally impossible to believe in Jesus as the resurrection and the life, while we believe we do not go to the grave—do not lose our life. How important then is the truth concerning the death state? It is only when we see that know-nothing, do-nothing, be-nothing state awaiting us, that we can appreciate the sweet words of Jesus—"I am the resurrection and the life."

For the hope of the resurrection of the dead, Paul was called in question. Acts xxiii. 6. He could not cherish a hope for others, omitting himself. He had believed what God said about man's nature, and the death state. He expected to die himself. He saw there was no life beyond without a resurrection.

He laid hold of this as the hope set before him. This is how he laid hold upon eternal life.

Listen to this same Paul again: "If, after the manner of men I have fought with beasts at Ephesus, what advantageth it me if the dead rise not? let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die."

Did he know what he was talking about—did he speak the truth—was he speaking for God?

What! no advantage to him if the dead rise not? What! not believe that at death he would go immediately to heaven, while his body would be silent in the grave?

